Keep Enforced School Attendance As Long as Segregation, GEA Asks

Constitution Sat. 1-12-57 Atlanta, Ga.

P. 1

A proposal to junk Georgia's compulsory school attendance laws ran into opposition Friday from school teachers who want them to remain in force so long as the public schools remain segregated.

Repeal of mandatory attendance laws is one of a series of new anti-integration proposals drafted by the Georgia Education Commission for submission to the General Assembly.

Frank Hughes, executive secretary of the Georgia Education Assn., said his group feels amendment—not repeal—of present laws would accomplish the commission's aim.

The GEA-suggested amendment would continue to require compulsory school attendance as long as the schools remain public and segregated. Under the plan, compulsory attendance would not be required in integrated schools.

"This amendment would accomplish the same thing the commission wants to do and at the same time preserve the good features of the law," Hughes said.

State School Supt. M. D. Collins said the GEA proposal "sounds like a good, common sense idea."

And a key member of the Education Commission, who asked not to be identified, said he personally would "not oppose an amendment of that kind."

Both Hughes and Collins warned that the end of mandatory attendance laws—and with them the state's corps of "visiting teachers"—would result in lowered enrollment and average daily attendance.

This, in turn, would reduce state money for teachers and other school operations which is geared to school attendance under the Minimum Foundation Program.

Collins estimated that 10 per cent of the school children "would drop out entirely" if attendance laws were abolished. Average daily attendance last school year in Georgia was 747,012.

"It would take less to operate the public schools but it would cost more to operate the courts because juvenile delinquency would increase," the veteran school leader said.

Both Collins and Hughes emphasized that they were talking about public segregated schools.

State law now requires school attendance for all children between seven and 16. Compulsory attendance was enforced in earnest starting in 1945 with the initiation of visiting teachers—new style truant officers.

Hughes said a group of GEA leaders met earlier this week to discuss the proposal to repeal compulsory attendance. He said the group has received "sympathetic" consideration for their proposed amendment from some legislators.

A large gathering of Atlanta School Board officials, parents, teachers, and friends, Sunday attended the formal dedication of the new Caroline Ferguson Harper Elementary School.

The beautiful and modern $117,000 educational edifice, located at 180 Poole Creek Road S. W., in the Atlanta-Hapeville area, replaces an old four room shack known as the Hapeville School of that community.

The new school will function as an Atlanta school under the Plan Of provement which was voted into effect in 1952, with classes operating from the kindergarten level through the seventh grade According to the Principal, Mrs. Rubye Goss Bennett, the present enrollment is 212 students

Located on a five and a half track of land originally owned by the former slave after whom it was named, the Caroline Harper School has eight rooms, Cafetorium kitchen, and clinic all well cipal, eight Teachers, Clerk, Janitor, Maid, cafeteria manager, and helper.

Opening the dedication ceremonies Devereaux F. McClatchey, President of the Atlanta Board of Education, noted that in most area schools are given numbers, but in Atlanta schools are named after individuals who have lived the high ideals of the community.

Teresa McBride a student at the school, and Norman W. Coffee, a relative of Mrs. Harper, followed Mr. McClatchey with responses, and Mrs. Bennett read a life history of D. W. Heidecker, area Supt., traced the history of the school from 1910 to the present. He also praised the citizens of the community. Mrs. T. R. Miles, President of the Parent-Teachers Association gave thanks to the Board, and emphasized that the task was ahead; that the parents and teachers would work together for the good of the children.

Dr. Ira Jarrell, Supt., of the Atlanta Public Schools, told the audience that the Board was proud of the building, but was doubly proud of "what goes on in this building". She praised the Principal and Teachers saying that "there is evidence here today of what a fine job they are doing.

"We must stress character", she said, "we hope to give boys and girls a good opportunity". I'm proud of this school, its name, and its faculty.

Integration Bill Is Introduced

Times-Picayune New Orleans, La.

ATLANTA, Jan. 29 (AP)—A bill to authorize the state to subsidize migration to other states of persons who desire to attend integrated schools has been introduced in the Georgia house.

The proposal, by Rep. David C. Jones of Worth county, would create a Georgia integration commission and appropriate an initial sum of $5 million to finance its operations.

It would authorize grants to persons who have been residents of Georgia for 10 years or more who so desire to send their children to integrated schools provided they agree that the children will attend integrated schools outside the state of Georgia.

The commission would be composed of the governor, lieutenant governor, speaker of the House, the attorney general, state school superintendent, "and three upright, intelligent citizens of Georgia of the Negro race."

U.S. Rejected On School Aid By Georgia

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 2-26-57

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25 (AP) — Georgia sent word to Congress today the state wants no help from the federal government with school construction because it fears federal control of education.

Four officials connected with a 288 million dollar Georgia school construction program appeared today before a House education subcommittee considering legislation for federal aid to meet the country's need for an estimated 159,000 new classrooms.

George Whitman, Atlanta businessman, was asked by Rep Bailey (D W. Va), chairman of the committee, whether Georgia would accept school funds from the federal government if the law omitted integration restrictions.

Whitman replied:

"We would like all the money we can get to educate our children whether it be for teachers' salaries, school buildings, transportation to and from school, textbooks or any other part of their education.

"The majority of the people in Georgia are not willing to take federal money if it means federal control of our schools.

"We feel if we took federal money it would mean federal control."

He also said he'd been advised the Georgia members of Congress would not give much, if any, support to federal aid school construction legislation even if integration is left out of it.

"Who controls the pocketbook, controls the operation" is the Georgia attitude, he added.

He said even if Congress wrote legislation Georgians could accept because of assurance it would not control schools there, the Georgians still would fear control by administrative act

He said the state has not forgotten "that federal highway funds were cut off because you didn't like the governor down there."

Whitman invited the committee "to come look at" new Georgia schools, which he described as "totally inadequate."

Whitman, chairman of the Georgia School Building Authority and of the State Board of Education, said 54 per cent of a 200 million dollar school construction program now underway in Georgia or under contract is for Negroes who make up one third of the Georgia population.

Asked by Bailey whether teachers trained in Georgia go to Florida and North Carolina because of higher salaries, he said the state does lose some teachers that way and does need more teachers.

Whitman said Georgia needs 19,801 classrooms of which 14,461 are underway.

Dr. Claude Purcell, assistant school superintendent; John Sims, director of the State School Building Authority; and Arthur Howell, authority counsel, also testified.

"A Fitting Memorial"

New Clara Pitts School Dedicated

Located on a ten acres of land at 2210 Perry Boulevard, N. W. the school has been occupied by its present 1277 student population since the beginning of the present term in September.

Tues 3-26-57

Numerous school officials, clergymen and laymen participated in the dedicatory program which in part paid homage and honor to the late Georgia Educator for whom the beautiful edifice was named.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, board member in whose ward the Pitts school is located, expressed happiness in the day of dedication and the completion of the school in his welcoming remarks.

Devereaux F. McClatchey, board president, followed explaining the real meaning behind the board's policy of naming schools after outstanding citizens. "Names must inspire," he said, "in naming this school, we hope it will be like a beacon of light to the children and the people of this community."

The Rev. Homer C. McEwen, in reviewing the life of Mrs. Pitts, said that she was of that generation who passed through the bloody fiery period of reconstruction undaunted. This period did not destroy her, he said, but purified her character and made her strong. "This school is a fitting memorial but is inadequate to honor her."

Mrs. Mae Maxwell Yates, daughter of Mrs Pitts formally presented the school. She told the audience that naming the school after her mother placed a task on the benefactors of living up to the principles she laid down, namely, honesty and integrity. "We hope that you who are the instructors and pupils will receive inspiration," she said.

Daily World

Billie Simon, president of the student council, followed with the response by saying...."we pledge our loyalty, service and cooperation at all times." Dr. A. J. Odom rendered a prayer of dedication.

George B. Hollingsworth, school principal said, that the aim was to graduate pupils who had been thoroughly taught the fundamentals of elementary education, and to develop a socially adjusted child who could live in the school and community.

Tues. 3-26-57

Dr. Ira Jarrell, Superintendent of Atlanta Public Schools, had high praise for the new school but said her interest was more in the pupil than the building. "What goes on in the building is the important thing," she said.

Edward Davis, president of the PTA pledged total cooperation from his organization in keeping the school beautiful.

The school has 35 teachers, two clerks, two cafeteria workers, an auditorium, and 19 clers rooms. Plans for the addition of 15 room await the outcome of the Bond Issue.

Commission Votes Money To Advertise Segregation In Ga.

Daily World p. 1 Atlanta, Ga. Sat. Feb. 23

ATLANTA, GEORGIA (SNS) — In a move to further promote segregation, the Georgia Education Commission has agreed to spend approximately $376,000 to maintain bias, it was disclosed Tuesday.

The Commission, headed by Governor Marvin Griffin took steps to set up an advertiising plan in-order to promote "The Georgia Way Of Life."

In an executive session at the Capital City Club, the group met with advertising representatives and approved the idea of spending about $126,000 this year and $250,000 next year.

Roy Harris, subcommittee member denied that this amount would be spent on the program. He said the figures of the above amount were discussed but denied this amount would be spent.

BY JOEL W. SMITH

Plans have been completed for the dedication of the Clara Maxwell Pitts Elementary School 2210 Perry Boulevard, N. W., which will be held on Sunday, March 24, 3:30 P. M., with J. Austin Dilbeck, chairman, Building and Grounds Committee, Atlanta Board of Education, presiding.

14d(1)

Also representing the Board of Education on the dedication program will be President Devereaux F. McClatchey and Dr. Rufus Clement, of Atlanta's Third Ward. Making the presentation will be Mrs. Mae Maxwell Yates, daughter of the late Mrs. Clara Maxwell Pitts.

Pitts Elementary and the Samuel Howard Archer High School, dedicated on February 24, were built by the Board of Education under the 1954 bond issue, to accommodate children living in the Perry Homes Housing Project and nearby areas Erected by the Atlanta Housing Authority in the Old Sweat Road area Perry Homes was opened for occupancy on January 26, 1955, with 1,000 family dwelling units.

Other new schools built under the 1954 bond issue include Anderson Park Elementary School, to be dedicated on April 14, and the Caroline Ferguson Harper Elementary School dedicated on Jan. 27. Funds from the 1954 bond issue were also used for additions at the Lena Jean Campbell and Alonzo F. Herndon elementary schools.

HONORS EDUCATOR

Pitts Elementary School is named in honor of the late Mrs. Clara Maxwell Pitts, a pioneer educator. A native of Athens, Ga., she was reared and educated in Atlanta. A graduate of the Old Atlanta University, the late Mrs. Pitts taught in the Atlanta Public Schools, both day and evening school and for more than 30 years served as head of the Carrie Steele-Pitts Home for Children, on Roy Street, SW.

Constructed at a cost of approximately $450,000, Pitts Elementary School is located on a site of approximately ten acres on Perry Boulevard, NW. It was opened for occupancy last fall and the current enrollment is 1 277 with a faculty of 36.

UNIQUE LAYOUT

The architectural design gives an outward appearance of a separate roof enclosure for each classroom of the building. On entering from the front, the building is divided into wings, and the open space betwee them forms a patio or semi outside lawn.

All of the 9 classrooms are centrally located within one wing, while the office teacher's lounge, auditorium and cafeteria are located within the other wing with the library serving as a connecting unit.

The principal, George B. Hollingsworth, is a graduate of Morris Brown College and received his masters degree from Atlanta University. After serving as coach and instructor in Social Science, in the Rome City School System, he joined the Fulton County School System as a teacher of Social Studies at East Point Junior High School, now South Fulton High.

Mr. Hollingsworth later served as principal of the Palmetto Elementary School and became a principal in the Atlanta Public School System during the transition under the Plan of Improvement. Before taking over his present position at Pitts, he served as principal of the South Atlanta Elementary School, now Lena Jean Campbell, for six years.

ARCHER OPENED LAST FALL

Archer High, with a current enrolment of 842 and a faculty of 42, including the principal, was also opened last fall. Construction began in October 1955 and was completed in January, 1957. The cost of construction for $787,00 and cost of equipment, $77,536.98.

One of the most modern equipped high schools in Atlanta, Archer has 38 classrooms a clinic, cafeteria, library, office suite and gymnasium. It serves pupils from Perry Homes, Herndon Homes, Rockdale Park, Scott's Crossing, Blantown, Howell Station, Carey Park, Marietta Road and Riverside.

ALSO HONORS EDUCATOR

Archer is named in honor of the late Dr. Samuel Howard Archer also a distinguished educator and former president of Morehouse College. Making the presentation at the dedication program was one of his three sons, Samuel Howard Archer, Jr., administrative assistant at Washington High School.

The principal, Arthur H. Richardson attended the Atlanta Public Schools and is a graduate of Georgia State College, now Savannah State. He received his masters degree from Atlanta University.

After serving as principal of the Winder Junior High School, Mr. Richardson joined the faculty at Washington as an instructor of Mathematics. He later taught Mathematics at Turner High and before taking over his present position at Archer served as principal of the Georgia Avenue Elementary School.

State School Board Decides Today Whether To Fight or Favor U.S. Aid

Constitution Thurs. 3-21-57 P.4

Atlanta, Ga.

Two resolutions, one favoring federal aid to education and one [illegible] opposed, will be thrashed out Thursday by the State Board of Education.

A majority of the board apparently was ready to adopt the favorable resolution Wednesday morning. Action was deferred at the request of William T. Bodenhamer of Ty Ty.

Bodenhamer, also executive secretary of the States Rights Council of Georgia, later passed out copies of a "substitute" resolution which he will offer Thursday.

Mrs. Bruce Schaefer of Toccoa read the resolution which urged Georgia congressmen to work for passage of a federal aid bill.

Her proposal specifically asked that the congressmen fight any bill with "strings," such as a requirement for integration or federal supervision of curriculum.

It noted that an "unprecedented birth rate" has caused the state to be short 5,000 classrooms in 1957. Minimum for constructing the rooms, she said, is $88 million.

Bodenhamer's resolution took a completely different point of view. It alleges that a federal aid plan would: 1. Force Georgians to pay for schools in other states, 2. weaken state sovereignty, 3. threaten integration, and 4. break down the separation of church and state.

Much of the board's activity Wednesday was taken up by a lengthy and heavily attended debate on a proposal by Sen. James S. Peters of Manchester that school district limitations be removed and that state-aid money "follow the child."

The plan was praised as "a bill of rights for the school children" on the one hand and condemned as an invitation to "chaos" on the other.

Nearly a score of county school superintendents and board attorneys testified, mostly in opposition.

Peters apparently will not push for a vote on his plan. He said he mainly wanted an open debate so the problem would be brought to light.

School Aid Is Dodged By Griffin

Constitution Mon. 3-29-57

Atlanta, Ga.

Gov. Griffin wasn't saying much for the record Monday on the federal aid to education issue.

He declined to comment directly on an accusation by former Georgia Education Assn. President Kankakee (Buck) Anderson that the state's Congressmen are "trading" school-aid votes to help kill civil rights legislation.

He said nothing about the GEA resolution strongly endorsing federal aid. P.15

CONFIDENCE IN WISDOM

All Griffin would say on the subject was that he had confidence in Georgia's congressmen to act wisely on the federal aid bill. 14d (1)

But the governor did express appreciation for two resolutions of commendation, one adopted by the GEA and one by the Georgia Assn. of School Administrators. Both groups lauded Griffin's handling of the education program.

MENTAL HEALTH CENTER

In one other matter at his morning press conference, Griffin said he doubted the old Piedmont Hospital building would make a good state mental health center.

A legislative committee including Sen. Charlie Brown of Atlanta is studying possible conversion of the building.

Griffin said he has studied the idea. "They've got a lot of obsolete equipment down there," he declared. "I don't think the fire marshal would approve it," he added.

South's Politicians Vie With Educators

Thurs. 4-4-57 P.4

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—Georgia congressmen are convinced that the GEA and other school folks back home are being unrealistic in their support of federal aid to education. It is the height of naivete, the congressmen say, to believe that federal aid will not inevitably bring federal controls.

If there is one thing the Georgia lawmakers up here are certain about, it is that the overwhelming majority of their constituents want to maintain racially segregated schools.

They are equally firm in their belief that the federal government would use an aid-to-education law to force integration on any state that accepts the money. Any contrary belief, they contend, is merely wishful thinking. Like trying to have your cake and eat it too.

The Powell amendment to the school aid bill to ban such assistance to segregated schools would not be necessary, the congressmen point out. All that would be needed to impose such conditions on the money would be a simple executive order from the White House or the administrative agency handling the funds.

And despite President Eisenhower's insistence that he doesn't want the racial issue to get mixed up with school aid, his administration already has shown its determination to break down segregation in all walks of life.

Georgia educators have argued that no integration strings have been attached to federal aid for lunchrooms and vocational education and to federally impacted areas.

However, Rep. Phil Landrum of Jasper points out that these are small programs compared to the proposed school construction bill he says goes to the very heart of the educational system.

Federal school construction inevitably would be followed by federal maintenance and operation controls, Landrum declares.

Georgia congressmen look upon themselves as being on the firing line in a fight to preserve Southern customs against federal decrees. They feel this may seem far away to people in Atlanta or Macon. But it seems very real to them.

The congressmen point out there is a vast difference in the climate of opinion in Georgia and the atmosphere in the racially integrated national capital. Southerners on Capitol Hill point out that they day after day have to maneuver against powerful demands from Northerners for civil rights legislation and compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation rulings.

They further note that here the voice of the NAACP is influential, and the newspapers, preoccupied with the racial issue, belabor the South day in and day out editorially and in much of the handling of news concerning racial disputes.

Georgia congressmen believe the folks back home don't feel this pressure but that Southern congressmen and their attaches feel it strongly every day.

Youngsters Leave For Washington

Daily World Fri. 5-3-57 P.1

Atlanta, Ga.

A multitude of happy, excited youngsters left for Washington, D. C. Thursday afternoon aboard the Safety Patrol Special which pulled out of the Atlanta Terminal Station at approximately 3 p. m. after many goodbyes were exchanged with anxious parents and well wishing friends.

14d (1)

There were 2,100 Safety Patrol youths who will represent Atlanta Saturday in a mammoth parade when youths from all over the United States will be showing off the best they have to offer.

Two hundred of the youths were Negro patrol members, and they boarded three coaches under the watchful eyes of a team of officers and nurses headed by A. J. Lewis, Principal of Thomas H. Slatter School.

The Terminal Station, always crowded when the annual trip is being staged was no less so yesterday. Hundreds of parents were busy giving last minute instructions to children, many who had never been out of the city before, and others who were travelling alone for the first time.

There was the usual and expected noise of excitement, and confusion as happy youngsters pranced about the station, a few of them getting into light mischief despite close observations.

Daily World

The Negro unit, headed by Mr. Lewis was formed of the following people: Patrolmen Claude Dixon and J. E. McKinney; Mrs. Leola McKinney, registered nurse; and Policewoman Rosa Allison, Geraldine Arnold and Gladys Smith.

The group arrives in Washington this morning, where they will immediately be taken on a sight seeing tour. The remainder of Friday will be spent in settling in housing quarters and more sight seeing during the afternoon and evening.

The parade will be staged Saturday morning, and the patrollers will board a train for Atlanta Saturday at approximately 6:15 p. m. DST, arriving home about 9:40 a. m. Sunday.

The trip is attended also by officials of the Atlanta Police Department, who will take part in the parade. Atlanta often has the first spot in the long parade, and has often walked off with first honors.

Chicago committee set to work for integration

Pro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 1-5-57

CHICAGO—A city-wide committee will be organized to bring about racial integration in Chicago's public schools, it was announced here this week by Willoughby Abner, president of the Chicago NAACP branch.

Mr. Abner disclosed that such action was decided upon on Dec. 15 at a meeting attended by representatives of civic community, church, labor, fraternal, and other organizations.

The group voted to organize a Citizens Committee for Integration in the Chicago Public Schools.

SOME OF THE organizations represented at the meeting, in addition to the NAACP, were: The Chicago Urban League, the Chicago Teachers Union, PTA groups, the United Automobile Workers AFL-CIO, the United Packinghouse Workers AFL-CIO, the Baptist Ministers Conference of Chicago, the Japanese American Citizens League, and the Masons.

Mr. Abner explained that the conference was "spurred by the conditions revealed in a survey by the education committee of the Chicago NAACP, which concluded that there are not equal educational opportunities for colored children in the public school system of Chicago."

The NAACP branch, Mr. Abner noted, earlier had called upon the Chicago Board of Education formally to adopt and implement a policy of racial integration within the city's public schools.

Our Opinions

Are Chicago Schools Integrated?

Defender Sat. 3-16-57

The New York Board of Education has adopted two highly significant reports by its subcommissions on integration. The first report recommended the re-zoning of school districts to encourage desegregation. The second called for the re-assignment of experienced teachers.

Chicago, Ill.

The re-assignment was thought necessary in view of the practice of dumping an abnormally large number of inexperienced teachers in schools that are in underprivileged areas.

Sat. 3-16-57

The re-zoning envisioned by the first report would mean that school district lines would be drawn "in such a way as to encourage integrated instead of segregated schools." This would apply especially to "fringe" areas, neighborhoods made up of several racial groups.

Included in the two reports, was a recommendation for "permissive zoning." By "permissive zoning" is meant that a child attending a segregated or non-integrated school, could, if his parents so desired, be transferred to an integrated school elsewhere.

We commented on these developments some weeks ago when the New York Board of Education first took under advisement the suggestions made to it by the National Urban League and other similarly interested organizations.

We pointed out in this column the urgent need for an immediate program of integration of our Chicago schools. We thought surely that our school board would have taken the hint and that by now the machinery for such a program would have been well established. Up to this moment, there is no evidence that the Board of Education here is giving any serious consideration to this important matter. Perhaps the Superintendent of schools is not interested in such a program and has, therefore, no plans for integration? Despite the NAACP's bitter criticism of the Board's unpardonable indifference to the agitation for desegregation, our school officials have been conspiciously silent.

Maybe a commission on integration composed of interested parents and civic leaders should be set up by the City Council. The function and purpose of this commission would be, of course, to formulate plans by which integration of our schools might proceed without the hampering negativism of segregated-minded school officials.

Pro-American Sat. 3-30- Baltimore, Md.

CHICAGO (ANP) — Construction began last week here on a new $900,000 elementary school to be named after the late Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, noted educator.

The new school, an addition to the Bethune elementary school at 44th and St. Lawrence Avenue, will accommodate 2,000 students of the 7th and 8th grade levels.

Excavation on the new school began following ground breaking ceremonies attended by several prominent personages.

AMONG DIGNITARIES attending ground-breaking ceremonies were Alderman Ralph Metcalfe, 3rd ward Democratic committeeman, Illinois Assemblyman Corneal Davis, Forrestville school principal, A. John Brinkman, Mrs. Evelyn F. Carlson, district superintendent, Mrs. Mame M Higgins, former Bethune Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Fla., official, and Mrs. Clare McIntyre, 1957 chairman of the Alumni United College Fund.

The new addition to Bethune Elementary School, will feature a modern educational program providing for varying abilities and the needs of adolescent pupils, according to principal Brinkman.

The school is being erected on the site of the portables, now dismantled, of the old Dunbar Vocational High School.

CARBONDALE, Ill. — (ANP) — School integration has finally reached another southern Illinois community. Two grade schools at Colp, one for Negroes and the other for whites, will be consolidated under one roof for the next school year.

The move was recently approved by the Colp grade school board, which operates both the Attucks and Standard grade schools. Four Negroes and three whites are on the school board.

It is proposed that there be complete integration of both pupils and teachers, with all teachers in both schools to be retained.

Colp students of high school age all attend the Herrin high school.

The Jackson County branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People presented citations of merit to the members of the Colp grade school board for the integration action. The awards were presented by Rev. Lewis Dawley on behalf of the NAACP.

Chicagoans Find Race Discrimination In Their Schools

Globe & Independent
Nashville, Tenn.
Fri. 4-5-57

CHICAGO.—The campaign of the Chicago NAACP branch for racial integration of the city's public schools has been carried to the Illinois General Assembly.

Willoughby Abner, branch president, announced this week that the NAACP unit will give "all our support" to a measure affecting school integration in Chicago, which has been introduced in the state legislature.

Provisions of the measure include the following:

---Amendment of a section of the State School Code to require that the Chicago board of education "change or revise existing sub-districts or create new sub-districts in a manner to most effectively eliminate the segregation of children in public schools because of color, race or nationality."

---Requirement that in "erecting, purchasing or otherwise acquiring buildings for school purposes, the (Chicago) board shall do so in a manner which will most effectively eliminate the separation of children in public schools because of color, race or nationality."

--Requirement that all (Chicago) board records pertaining to school zones and to construction of school buildings be open to the public.

Mr. Abner said bills probably will be introduced in the state legislature to amend sections of the School Code which apply to school districts outside Chicago, requiring district and county school boards throughout Illionis to follow a policy of racial integration.

He estimated that approximately 100,000 Negro children in Illiinois attend all-Negro or predominantly Negro schools, pointing out that outside Chicago there still are seven high schools and 73 elementary schools in 16 counties which have all Negro student bodies.

Mr. Abner said no racial figures are available on Chicago schools, but he estimated that more than half of Chicago Negro children attend all-Negro or predominantly Negro schools.

Two girls in the booth next to mine in a Washington restaurant were talking so loudly that their neighbors had no choice but to overhear.

Said one: "We aren't allowed to say 'phone' where I work. We're always supposed to say 'telephone.'

Asked the other: "Where do you work?"

The answer: "At the phone company."

MARION, Ill.—(INS)—The boycott of the integrated grade school in Colp (Ill.) by white students continues.

Russell Emery, Williamson county superintendent of schools, said that none of the estimated 40-50 white students were in attendance at the school Friday, Aug. 30.

The boycott, which began at the opening of the fall term, Aug. 26, is the result of the Colp school board's July 8 decision to integrate the pupils in the town's two grade schools.

Approximately 100 students from the first to the eighth grade were expected to attend the opening of the fall semester at the Colp school last Monday. Three Negroes comprise the teaching staff there.

Parents of the white pupils have petitioned to be taken into the nearby Carterville district following the integration vote by the Negro-dominated school board in Colp.

The Williamson county board of school trustees approved the petition, but the move has been challenged in a court suit by the Colp school board, with National Association for the Advancement of Colored People backing.

Superintendent Emery said Friday that his main aim is to "keep the kids in school, no matter where they attend." He added that all the boycotting white students are "apparently" complying with the law by attendance at grade schools outside Colp.

The petition for consolidating into the neighborhood Carterville school district may be placed on the circuit court's September docket, reported Emery, and he indicated that no action will be taken until a court decision is handed down.

New segregation twist charged

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill.—The Illinois Conference of the NAACP has charged that efforts to maintain segregation at Centerville School in District 187 have taken a new twist.

Protesting parents have sought the support of the NAACP because a double shift system is in operation at the school— white children attending classes in the morning and colored pupils in the afternoon.

The present arrangement, according to school authorities was necessary because of construction on the Canot School has been delayed.

Colored pupils use the same class rooms as the white pupils, but parents complain the colored children have to pile their books etc. on the floor

Integration Of Two Grade Schools At Colp, Ill. Set

CARBONDALE, Ill. — (ANP) — School integration has finally reached another southern Illinois community. Two grade schools at Colp, one for Negroes and the other for colored whites, will be consolidated under one roof for the next school year.

The move was recently approved by the Colp grade school board, which operates both the Attucks and Standard grade schools. Four Negroes and three whites are on the school board.

It is proposed that there be complete integration of both pupils and teachers, with all teachers in both schools to be retained.

Colp students of high school age all attend the Herrin high school.

The Jackson County branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People presented citations of merit to the members of the Colp grade school board for the integration action. The awards were presented by Rev. Lewis Dawley on behalf of the NAACP.

They Flunk The Test

A 4 to 3 decision of the Colp, Ill., school board to integrate resulted last week in a boycott of the schools by 45 white pupils.

Colp, a coal mining town 100 miles southeast of St. Louis, has a population of 250, more than half of whom are colored.

The school board is comprised of four colored members and three white. And the majority supported the move to abolish segregation.

New Integration Dodge In Southern Illinois

By ROBERT L. BIRCHMAN

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. — Efforts to maintain school segregation has taken a new form at the Centerville School in District 187 located a few miles from here.

While the school is supposed to be integrated a double shift system is in operation with white children attending classes in the morning and Negro pupils in the afternoon.

Protesting parents in the area have sought the advice and support of the NAACP and have engaged Atty. Billy Jones, chairman of the Legal Redress Committee of the Illinois Conference of Branches of the NAACP, to represent them in negotiations with the school authorities.

Many of the children are transported to the school by bus, with the same bus picking up the white children in the morning, returning them at home at noon and then picking up the Negro children for the afternoon classes.

At least, in part, the bus travels the same route for both trips and passes Negro children in the morning and homes of white children in the afternoon.

The present double shift arrangement, according to school authorities, was made necessary because construction on the Canot school has been delayed.

It is claimed that school facilities are being used until the new building is completed.

Negro pupils attending the afternoon shift use the same class rooms as the white students in the morning, but have to pile their books and other materials beside the desk on the floor.

Residents of the area protesting the Home Improvement Associa- the segregation have organized as H. W. Hoover, principal of the Centerville school, denies that there is any discrimination.

The NAACP claims that it is segregation.

There are also grounds for believing that the boundaries for the Canot school now under construction were drawn so as to make the school a predominantly Negro school.

School Boycott by White Parents Bars Integration in Illinois Town

Special to The New York Times.

COLP, Ill., Sept. 1—An attempt to effect integration of the grade-school pupils in this southern Illinois community has been met by stubborn resistance on the part of the parents of white children.

The move to end segregation was ordered by the local school board, of which Negro members are in a majority.

The order has been met by a refusal of white children to register in their own school district.

Colp has a population of about 250, about half of whom are Negroes. It is 100 miles southeast of St. Louis, Mo.

When school opened last week, not one of the forty-five white pupils registered.

Instead, many of them enrolled on a tuition basis at near-by Carterville, several moved in with relatives in Carterville and several others enrolled in a Roman Catholic parochial school at Herrin, Ill.

The Colp School Board voted last May to close a grade school attended by white children and consolidate classes in the Attucks School, previously attended by about sixty Negroes.

Four Negro members of the school board voted for the consolidation and three white members opposed the move.

In an attempt to override the action, parents of white pupils petitioned the Williamson County Board of School Trustees, asking that the school district lines of Carterville be revised to include the area of Colp in which they lived.

The petition was granted, but a court action by the Colp School Board, supported by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has delayed the proposed annexation to the Carterville district and left in effect the Colp Board's decision.

The Colp School District does not maintain a high school, but sends its pupils to the Consolidated High School at Herrin, which is integrated.

William Hatchett, president of the Colp School Board, said he had no plans to call a board meeting.

SCHOOL RACIAL DISPUTE

Integration Link Sought in Blast

COLP, Ill., Oct. 1 (AP)—Investigators turned up no evidence today linking the bombing of a night club operated by the Negro president of the Colp School Board with a school integration dispute here.

Motive of the unknown dynamiters was a mystery.

The explosion last night knocked out part of a rear wall of the New Orleans Room, heavily damaged the interior and shattered windows in the neighborhood. Six patrons in an adjoining bar escaped injury.

The blasted room, frequented by both Negroes and whites, normally is used only on weekends. No one was in the room at the time.

"There is nothing at this time to point to the blast stemming from the integration dispute," said Lt. Earl Pogue of the Illinois state police.

William Hatchett, operator of the club and one of four Negroes on the school board, merely shrugged when asked by newsmen whether he had any idea as to the identity of the bombers.

He expressed doubt it resulted from the integration dispute, which has resulted in the resignation of the three white members of the board. "Tempers got pretty hot sometimes, but I don't think it was that serious," Hatchett said.

The school board voted last summer 4-3, along racial lines, to consolidate the two Colp grade schools formerly operated on a segregated basis.

Suit Already Filed

An estimated 40 white pupils have boycotted the school here, having enrolled in nearby all-white schools. The 53 children attending the Colp school all are Negroes.

A group of Negroes has filed suit in Circuit Court challenging a ruling by the Williamson County School Board permitting white pupils to attend an all-white grade school at nearby Carterville. Colp High School children of both races attend an integrated school at Herrin.

Local authorities asked the state crime laboratory to send a bomb expert to help out in the investigation.

Hatchett indicated he does not plan to continue the night club in operation.

About half of Colp's 450 residents are Negroes. The town 125 miles southeast of St. Louis once was a coal mining center. The mine was abandoned years ago and Colp now is a night life center for communities in the southern Illinois area. It has eight night clubs and taverns.

Southsider Gets Post At Hayes

Miss E. Josephine Fulton, 4740 S. Greenwood ave., recently was appointed assistant principal of Hayes school, 258 N. Leavitt.

Miss Fulton has been in the Chicago school system for seven years, having been assigned as a school teacher in 1950. Since that time, she has served as a master teacher and as an adjustment teacher.

In commenting on the appointment, Dr. Benjamin C. Willis, general superintendent of schools, observed that Miss Fulton had "demonstrated qualities of leadership in school and community affairs."

Dr. Willis commented that these qualities gave assurance that she would continue, what he termed, the "high standards" she had established at the Hayes school.

Besides a bachelor of science degree from the University of Illinois, Miss Fulton holds a master of Arts degree from DePaul university. In addition, she studied at the Lafayette college (Pa.) seminar held in Africa, Asia and Europe in 1952.

She has also been a participant in an international living experiment sponsored in Europe by the World Council of Churches. Active in civic affairs, Miss Fulton is a member o fthe Urban League — the National Council of Negro Women and is a past Board Member of the NAACP's Chicago branch. She is also a member of Good Shepherd Congregational church.

White Pupils Boycott School In Illinois Racial Protest

Home P.I. Talladega Ala.

COLP, Ill. (AP) — School officials are waiting to see if white pupils will continue their boycott against integration in Colp's grade school.

Not a single white pupil showed up yesterday, although 40 to 45 had been expected for the first day of classes. There were about 80 Negroes.

Colp is a town of about 250 in the southern tip of Illinois 80 miles southeast of St. Louis and 40 miles from the Kentucky line. About half the residents are Negroes.

"It is not my intention to make anyone do anything he doesn't want to do," said William Hatchett, the Negro who heads the school board. He said he had no intention of calling a special meeting.

"I don't believe the boycott was organized," said Archie Moseley, the school's principal and also a Negro. "I didn't expect a 100 per cent turnout, but I did think there would be a few who wouldn't be so prejudiced."

There are four Negroes on the seven-man school board and it voted 4-3 about two months ago to integrate the town's two grade schools. Classes were scheduled in the building used for the Negro school.

Parents of the white pupils petitioned for annexation of their school by the nearby Carterville School District. The board of school trustees for Williamson County approved the petition. The Colp school board challenged it a month ago in a suit backed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Filing of the suit delayed the annexation by Carterville and put into effect the consolidation of the two Colp schools.

High school pupils in Colp, both Negro and white, attend the consolidated high school at nearby Herrin.

3 School Board Posts Open

Defender, Chicago, Ill. P.20

Sat. 11-2-57

COLP, Ill. — This small southern Illinois town spilt over problems of integration, will have to select by write-in ballots three members of the school board to replace those who resigned from the seven-member board.

No candidates filed before the deadline last Friday according to Williamson County Schools Superintendent Russell Emery.

WHITES QUIT

The special election on Nov. 6 was made necessary by the resignation of the three white members of the board. The four remaining members are Negro. The three white members resigned over what they termed "outside interference" in Colp school affairs.

Last spring the seven members of the school board split with the four Negroes voting in favor and the three whites against consolidating the two schools in the district. One, Attucks, was attended only by Negro children. The other, the Standard, only by white children.

CHANGE DISTRICT

More than 200 whites then filed a petition with the Williamson County School Board requesting a division of the district and the annexation of a part of it to the all-white neighboring Carterville district. The proposed division was such as would continue segregation. The Williamson County school trustees granted the petition.

The majority members of the Colp District School board appealed this decision to the Williamson County Circuit Court. A hearing and decision are not expected until early in 198. The action of the four Negro members of the Colp School Board is being supposted by the Illinois State Conference of Branches of the N. A. C. P.

Meanwhile since the beginning of this year's school term, the town's white students are attending schools at nearby Carterville, where no Negro students are enrolled. High school students, both white and Negro attend the nearby Herrin high school.

Say Chicago Schools Most Segregated Outside Of South

NAACP Says Public Schools Practice Race Discrimination

By ROBERT CRAM
United Press Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, Nov. 30 (UP) — Officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged today that Chicago public schools are the most segregated of any major city outside the Deep South.

Robert L. Birchman, Illinois NAACP director, said in many ways the Chicago public school system practices racial discrimination "more than they do in Little Rock."

Jackson, Miss.

He and other NAACP officials served notice they will start a campaign, probably this December, to force the Chicago Board of Education to declare itself on the segregation issue.

Spokesmen for both the NAACP and the school board agreed that Chicago's "Black belt"—the teaming Negro area on the city's South Side — results in schools attended only by Negroes. Schools tend to be completely white in other parts of the city, they said.

OTHER CHARGES

The NAACP added other charges, however. In Chicago, officials said:

Dec. 12-1-57

New schools are built in white neighborhoods, while Negro area schools merely get "additions."

Negro schools are so packed children have to attend classes in shifts, although class rooms stand vacant in white schools.

White children get the city's best teachers, Negro students the second-raters.

A spokesman for the board of education denied the charges and insisted the Chicago school system is entirely free of racial bias.

He said the proportion of new school buildings to additions in 1956 and 1957 is higher in the "black belt" than in any other area. The school system's "master teachers" are concentrated in Negro neighborhoods and on the West Side, he said, and most special service teachers are also sent to the two areas.

The spokesman did not deny Negro neighborhood schools are jammed. But so are the neighborhoods themselves, he said. Negroes are migrating to Chicago by the thousands, the spokesman said, and in one elementary school the enrollment tripled in just a few years.

Birchman retorted that "segregation is flourishing more than it ever did before and shows signs of snow-balling in the future."

The NAACP does not charge that the Board of Education practices segregation intentionally, Birchman said. But he added "we want to know whether they are pro or con segregation and what they plan to do about it in either case."

An NAACP expert on Chicago schools, a white teacher who preferred anonymity "for the safety of my very job," said the Board of Education has "developed the strange habit" of building a new school if one in a white neighborhood gets overcrowded but merely making an addition if the same thing happens in a Negro area.

"The results," she said, "is that Negro schools — and that phrase shouldn't even exist — have become monstrously overcrowded. Even to the point where 40 per cent of the children have to attend classes in shifts — like an assembly line."

WORST OUTSIDE DIXIE

NAACP Says Whites Get New Buildings And Best Teachers

By The United Press

CHICAGO, Nov. 30. — Officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged Saturday that Chicago public schools are the most segregated of any major city outside the Deep South.

Robert L. Birchman, Illinois NAACP director, said in many ways the Chicago public school system practices racial discrimination "more than they do in Little Rock."

Spokesmen for both the NAACP and the School Board agreed that Chicago's "Black Belt"—the teeming Negro area on the city's south side—results in schools attended only by Negroes. Schools tend to be completely white in other parts of the city, they said.

NAACP Charges

The NAACP added other charges, however. In Chicago, officials said:

The school system's "master teachers" are concentrated in Negro neighborhoods and on the west side, he said, and most special service teachers are also sent to the two areas.

Negroes Migrating

The spokesman did not deny Negro neighborhood schools are jammed. But so are the neighborhoods themselves, he said. Negroes are migrating to Chicago by the thousands, the spokesman said, and in one elementary school the enrollment tripled in just a few years.

Birchman retorted that "segregation is flourishing more than it ever did before and shows signs of snow-balling in the future."

Birchman said a recent NAACP survey showed there were 297 empty classrooms in white area schools, but that those in Negro schools were "jammed tight."

Asks Check On State Aid To Segregated Schools

Defender, Chicago, Ill. p. 5
Sat. 12-7-57

JOLIET — The Illinois Conference of NAACP Branches called upon Vernon L. Nickwell superintendent of public instruction for Illinois, "to investigate the validity" of all claims for state aid to schools coming from districts in Illinois where there are still all-Negro schools," to determine if the laws banning segregation are being adhered to in every respect and to the fullest possible extent."

14d(1)

The demand was made in a letter to Nickell from Dr. L. H. Holman, president of the Illinois NAACP who asked that claims by each school district as certified by the county superintendent of schools be investigated.

Reports of the Illinois Commission on Human Relations state that there are still 70 elementary and seven high schools in 14 counties in Illinois outside the city of Chicago with all-Negro student bodies.

The NAACP submitted a list by name and number of students involved for 60 of these schools and said, "each of these schools must be investigated to insure that public funds are not being misappropriated to districts violating the state law banning segregation in public schools."

These schools are located in 35 different Illinois communities in the following counties, Alexander, Champaign, Cook, Jackson, Jefferson, Kankakee, Madison, Marion, Massac, Pulaski, Randolph, St. Clair, Vermillion and Williamson. A total of 15,629 students attend the 60 schools listed.

The NAACP noted that by November 30 county school superin- office the claims for state aid tendents must certify to Nickell's from school districts in their counties and that Nickell has until January 25, to certify to the Auditor of Public Accounts, that these claims for state aid should be paid.

...ifications of claims for state aid include an affidavit by the county superintendent of schools that districts within his county are abiding by Illinois laws banning segregation in p u bli c schools.

The legal staff of the Illinois NAACP is investigating the possibility of filing perjury charges and other actions against district and county superintendents in cases where school segregation is still practiced.

N.A.A.C.P. Likens Conditions to Little Rock—Plans a Campaign on Integration

CHICAGO, Nov. 30 (UP)—Officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged today that in many ways public schools in Chicago practiced discrimination "more than they do in Little Rock."

Robert L. Birchman, Illinois director and other N. A. A. C. P. officials served notice that they would start a campaign, probably in December, to force the Chicago Board of Education to declare itself on the segregation issue.

14d(1)

They said that Chicago's public schools were the most segregated of any major city outside the deep South.

All-Negro Schools

Spokesmen for both the N. A. A. C. P. and the school board agreed that Chicago's teeming Negro area on the city's South Side led to schools attended only by Negroes. Schools tend to be completely white in other parts of the city, they said.

The N. A. A. C. P. added other charges, however. They included these:

¶Negro schools are so crowded that children have to attend classes in shifts, although classrooms are vacant in whit schools.

¶White children get the city' best teachers, Negro student the second-raters.

Charges Are Denied

A spokesman for the Board of Education denied the charges He insisted that the Chicago school system was free of racial bias.

He said the proportion of new school buildings to additions in 1956 and 1957 was higher in the Negro section than in any other area. The school system's "master teachers" are concentrated in Negro neighborhoods and on the West Side, he said, and most special service teachers are also sent to the two areas.

The spokesman did not deny that Negro neighborhood schools were crowded. But so are the neighborhoods themselves, he said. Negroes are migrating to Chicago by the thousands, the spokesman said, and in one elementary school the enrollment tripled in just a few years.

But Mr. Birchman retorted that "segregation is flourishing more than it ever did before and shows signs of snowballing in the future."

The N. A. A. C. P. does not charge that the Board of Education practices segregation intentionally, Mr. Birchman said. But, he added, "we want to know whether they are pro or con segregation and what they plan to do about it in either case."

'Strange Habit' Cited

An N. A. A. C. P. expert on Chicago schools, a white teacher who preferred anonymity "for the safety of my very job," said the Board of Education had "developed the strange habit" of building a new school if one in a white neighborhood got overcroweded but merely made an addition if the same thing happened in a Negro area.

"The results," she said, "is that Negro schools—and that phrase shouldn't even exist—have become monstrously overcrowded, even to the point where 40 per cent of the children have to attend classes in shifts, like an assembly line."

Mr. Birchman said that a recent N. A. A. C. P. survey showed there were 297 empty classrooms in white area schools, but that those in Negro schools were "jammed tight."

He said teachers in Negro schools were inferior to those in others because they were not so well educated and because "nobody wants the job."

"In Chicago's earlier years," Mr. Birchman said, "the different European nationality strains more or less kept to themselves. But today they have intermingled.

"There is a new kind of grouping now, however. Call it de facto segregation—which means that city expansion policies, whether by intent or not, have resulted in segregation."

"Negro tolerance of de facto segregation has worn thin," Mr. Birchman warned.

"The old oh-well-it's-better-than-the-South feeling is no good anymore," he said. "Segregation exists in Chicago's public schools—just as it does in Mississippi."

Illinois governor asked to desegregate schools

Afro-American - p. 19
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 12-7-57

CHICAGO—Gov. William G. Stratton last week was called upon to "meet with concerned leaders, colored and white," to discuss and develop plans to end actual segregation in Illinois public schools.

The request was made to the governor by Gerald D. Bullock, president of the Illinois State Conference of NAACP Branches.

Mr. Bullock pointed specifically to "segregation practices in Colp, Phoenix and Centerville." He charged that these cases "are typical of an all too general condition."

WHILE FIGURES are incomplete, the NAACP spokesman estimated that over 100,000 colored children are attending all-colored schools in some 16 Illinois counties.

It was further stated that there are seven all-colored high schools and more than 70 all-colored elementary schools outside of Chicago, noting that 15,000 children are enrolled in these schools.

There are an additional 3,200 pupils in all-colored schools in seven suburban communities in Cook County, the NAACP spokesman claimed.

THE LETTER to the governor also pointed out that a recent survey reveals that an approximately 6,500 pupils attend four all-colored high schools in Chicago, plus 2,200 at Dunbar Vocational School.

"Negotiation with local authorities has been futile," Bullock said, adding that the people now have only two courses toward redress and relief — the governor and the courts.

School Bias Bill Passes Committee

Defender P.6
Sat. 4-27-57
Chicago, Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — The Education committee of the house of the Illinois General Assembly voted a "do pass" recommendation for HB 474 at a hearing last Wednesday. By a vote of 22 to 2, the committee advanced the bill for consideration in the near future on the floor of the House.

The bill would require the Chicago Board of Education to change, revise or create new school districts "in a manner to most effectively eliminate the segregation of children in public schools because of color, race or nationality," and to adopt the same policy in the erecting, purchasing or otherwise acquiring buildings for school purposes.

The measure also provides that all board records relative to school districting and the acquisition of or building new schools be open to the public.

Testimony in support of the bill was presented by Mrs. Rita Phillips and Mrs. Jean Washington, members of the Education Committee of the Chicago Branch of the NAACP.

They pointed out graphically with the use of maps how numerous Chicago school districts could be altered to secure a larger measure of integration of students if such a policy were followed by the Board of Education.

They noted that as a whole the school districts on the South Side of the city followed a north to south pattern resulting in a maximum of all-Negro schools whereas if the districts followed an east to west pattern a greater measure of integration would result.

On the west side districts now generally follow an east to west line but a north to south pattern would result in more integrated schools.

The bill was introduced by State Representatives Charles F. Armstrong, Joseph L. De La Cour, Corneal A. Davis, Richard A. Harewood, James Y. Carter, Cecil A. Partee, Kenneth E. Wilson, and Paul Simon.

Boycott Continues At Colp

MARION, Ill. — (INS) — The boycott of the integrated grade school in Colp (Ill.) by white students continues.

Russell Emery, Williamson County superintendent of schools, said that none of the estimated 40-50 white students were in attendance at the school last Friday.

The boycott, which began at the opening of the Fall term, Aug. 26, is the result of the Colp school board's July 8 decision to integrate the pupils in the town's two grade schools.

Approximately 100 students from the first to the eighth grade were expected to attend the opening of the fall semester at the Colp school last Monday. Three Negroes comprise the teaching staff there.

Parents of the white pupils have petitioned to be taken into the nearby Carterville district following the integration vote by the Negro - dominated school board in Colp.

The Williamson county board of school trustees approved the petition, but the move has been challenged in a court suit by the Colp school board, with NAACP backing.

Superintendent Emery said that his main aim is to "keep the kids in school, no matter where they attend." He added that all the boycotting white students are "apparently" complying with the law by attendance at grade schools outside Colp.

Chicago, Ill.

The sixth annual science fair for Chicago students will be held in Stanley Field Hall of the Chicago Natural History museum from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, May 18. The fair is sponsored by the Chicago Teachers Science association.

Contestants may come from the sixth through the 12th grades and may be representatives of any public, private or parochial school or youth organization.

Projects must be the work of the contestants, and although group science projects are accepted, individual projects are recommended.

First prize in each category will consist of certificates from science supply houses, so that winner may secure additional science materials and equipment.

A copy of the information bulletin and application blanks may be obtained by writing to: Secretary, Chicago Teachers Science Association, 4527 N. Tripp.

Miss Alice Bauer, association president, stated:

'We hope we may be of some help in locating and encouraging young people with science and technical talent."

White Students Boycott School In Illinois

COLP, Ill. — (INS) — White students at the Colp, Ill., grade school have boycotted opening day classes because of racial integration.

The fall semester began Monday, Aug. 26, with 60 Negro pupils on hand, but the white students, between 40 and 45, stayed away. Classes were held for the Negroes.

The Colp school board, composed of four Negroes and three whites, voted four to three last June 26 to integrate the town's two elementary schools, with classes to be held in the building previously used by Negroes.

William Hatchett, Negro president of the board, said:

"I don't believe the boycott was organized.' I didn't expect a 100 per cent turnout, but I did thin there would be a few who wouldn't be so prejudiced. The next move is up to the school board."

Colp high school students, both white and colored, attend a consolidated school at nearby Herrin. Colp is a coal mining town of around 250 residents located in southern Illinois. About half the population is Negro.

COLP, Ill.—White pupils numbering about 45 boycotted the previously all-Negro grade school at the scheduled start of desegregation here. Sixty Negro youngsters are attending. Not one of an expected 40 to 45 white pupils showed up for the start of the fall semester. Classes proceeded for the school's 60 Negro pupils.

The board voted, 4 to 3, last June 26 to integrate the pupils in the town's two schools, with the classes to be held in the building operated last spring as an all-Negro school.

Claim Jim Crow Schools Here Outstrip Arkansas

Defender, Chicago, Ill. P. 5 Sat. 10-5-57

Gov. William G. Stratton was called upon this week "to meet with concerned leaders, Negro and white," for a thorough discussion and development of plans to end de facto (actual) segregation in the public schools of Illinois.

The request was made in a letter from Gerald D. Bullock, president of the Illinois State Conference of Branches of the NAACP.

Bullock called to the governor's attention "deplorable conditions involving deliberate segregation of colored and white children and teachers in the schools of the State of Illinois."

He added, "we believe we express the opinion of millions of Illinois citizens when we say these conditions have become intolerable in the light of our long established State laws and in the context of recent events in other States which have claimed national and unfortunate international attention."

The governor was called upon to use the perogative of his executive authority "to see that justice is done and orderly progress encouraged."

Gov. Stratton's attention was specifically called "to segregation practices in Colp, Phoenix and Centerville, which have been receiving attention, statewide, from the press lately, but only to emphasize that these particular cases are typical of an all too general condition."

NAACP spokesmen noted that there are more Negro children attending what are in fact segregated schools in Illinois than in Arkansas.

While complete figures are not available, the NAACP estimates that well over 100,000 Negro children are attending all-Negro schools in Illinois.

These schools are located in 16 different Illinois counties. Outside of Chicago there are seven all-Negro high schools and more than 70 all-Negro elementary schools attended by more than 15,000 pupils. More than 3,000 children attend all-Negro schools in seven suburban communities in Cook county.

RECENT STUDY

A recent study on the extent of segregation in the Chicago public schools compiled by the Education committee of the Chicago NAACP estimated that approximately 6,500 students attend four all-Negro academic high schools in Chicago, bar Vocational school.

The NAACP estimated that 73 of An additionl 2,200 attend Dun the elementary schools in Chicago were predominantly Negro (90 per-cent or more Negro pupils). It is estimated that 87 percent of the over 117,000 Negro elementary pupils attend these predominantly Negro schools.

Bullock noted that "Negotiation with local school authorities has been futile.

Higher state officials concerned with the administration of our schools have taken no positive action in these situations, the law being so phased that it is questionable whether they have the power to act."

Bullock said the "Commission on Human Relations, which has noted and deplored these same conditions in report after report, has not the authority or the financial wherewithal to effect a positive change of local attitude and practise."

In callng upon the governor to call a conference on the ssue, Bullock said "only two courses toward redress and relief lie open to the people; to ask for executive intervention from your office or go into the courts.

"We should consider the latter course only as a last resort because of the unpleasant and indeed, international derogatory publicity entailed thereby."

The extent and effect of racial segregation and discrimination in the Chicago public schools will be revealed and studied at a workshop conference called by the Chicago NAACP branch Saturday, Aug. 24 at the Washington Park YMCA, 5000 Indiana ave. The sessions begin at 10 a.m.

The results of a recently completed survey of the degree of segregation in the elementary and high schools of the city will be presented. Sat. 8-24-57

Panel discussions will portray the effects of wide spread racial segregation in the public schools of the city and the resulting inequalities of educational opportunity for minority group children.

There will be consideration of the formation of an intergroup committee to secure the adoption and the implementation of a policy of racial integration by the Board of Education.

The conference will also consider questions of teacher assignment policies, pupil transfer policies, and discrimination in vocational and apprenticeship training.

Educators and members of the Illinois General Assembly will participate in the panel discussions.

Mr. Whiteside

Hamiltonians well remember one of their own — James Whiteside — who several years ago was a Golden Glove and State AAU champ. Today he has just been appointed a teacher in Gary, Ind., public schools.

Mr. Whiteside is a June, 1957 graduate of Central State College, Wilberforce. He received a BS degree in education.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Whiteside, 906 S. Front st. He spent three years in the armed services, 30 months overseas.

Starts New Career In Education At Age 60

First grade opened this month in Indianapolis for a 60year old former World War II WAC.

She's Mrs. Ruth C. Quinn and she's a first grade teacher.

It's been a long educational road from 1948 to her present teaching position. Her quest for a college degree was interrupted several times because of ill health resulting from service-connected disabilities suffered by Mrs. Quinn during her two years of World War II service in the Army Air Force.

Last year, she finally received a Bachelor of Science degree in education from Indiana university. Her studies had been financed under Public Law 16 — the Vocational Rehabilitation Act for disabled veterans.

QUIT AT 14

The elementary school teacher had an unusual educational background before her college training. She was compelled to quit school at the age of 14 when she had completed about two years of high school work.

Mrs. Spencer Gets Degree From Drake; To Teach in Des Moines School System

MRS. MABEL SPENCER

Mrs. Mabel Spencer, wife of John I. Spencer, and mother of a 19-year-old son, Jerry, received her Bachelor of Science in Education Degree Monday, June 3, in the Drake University Commencement exercises. She has signed, already, a contract to teach elementary education in the Des Moines public school system, beginning this fall.

Reared in West Des Moines, Mrs. Spencer attended the elementary schools there and was the first Negro girl graduating from Valley High School in 1936.

Realizes Desire

From her early childhood, she has held a desire to become a public school teacher. She was married and began to rear her family.

When World War II broke, Mrs. Spencer's husband had begun his four-year military services in the army. Mrs. Spencer joined him in 1942 at Fort Sill, Okla., where she spent two years, working in the U. S. O.

The American Institute of Business began its War Secretaries and Typists classes for the government and Mrs. Spencer become a student, made the honor roll, and, was sent to Dayton, Ohio, where she worked as a clerk-typist and bookkeeper at Wright and Patterson Air Fields. She returned to Des Moines in 1946 when she secured a position at the State Employment Service as a claims' taker, receptionist and PBX operator.

It was during her service at the employment office that she decided to begin her college work in 1950, attending the Drake Community College in the evenings, and Saturday classes, for two years.

'Not Happy'

"I was not happy at this arrangement. It seemed that getting a degree was so far off," Mrs. Spencer recalled.

"My husband kept asking me—'why don't you quit your job?' I finally got around to it and began as a full-time student at Drake during the summer of 1955."

Work on Masters

Mrs. Spencer began summer classes this week at Drake. She already has completed some hours on her Master's Degree.

Her son, Jerry, who was graduated from high school in 1956, attended Simpson College at Indianola last fall. Her husband is employed at Marquette Cement Co.; and, her mother, Mrs. Minnie Potter, resides with them.

"To all of them, I am grateful," Mrs. Spencer said.

She is a member of Corinthian Baptist Church, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Mary Church Terrell Club No. 2, and is a former member of the entertainment committee of the NAACP.

Integration Rises A Bit In Kentucky Classes

25 Pct. of School-Age Negroes Attend Mixed Insitutions In 94 Districts

By ALLAN M. TROUT
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 6.—Racial integration in the public school system of Kentucky registered a moderate gain in the 1957-58 term.

According to information released Wednesday by the State Department of Education, here is the three-year showing since the Supreme Court ordered a stop to compulsory segregation in the public schools of 17 Southern states:

This term, 10,897 Negro pupils and 133,182 white pupils are attending mixed classes in 262 schools in 94 districts.

Last term, 8,017 Negroes and 120,307 white pupils attended mixed classes in 233 schools in 91 districts.

In 1955-56, the starting term of compliance, 313 Negroes and 16,688 white pupils attended mixed classes in 41 schools in 30 districts.

In summary: About a fourth of school-age Negroes are attending mixed classes. They, together with their white classmates, comprise about a third the enrollment of Kentucky.

Forty-four school districts have no Negro children of school age. Hence the 94 districts with mixed classes this term represent 55.3 per cent of the districts with biracial population. Last term it was 50.8 per cent, and in 1955-56 it was 16 per cent.

More Negroes Teach

Negro teachers employed in schools where classes are mixed total 172 this term, as compared with 113 last term, and two the term before.

The detailed report of progress was prepared by Sam B. Taylor, State supervisor of secondary education. It was assembled from questionnaires filled out by the 216 local superintendents after their 1957-58 term opened.

Dr. Robert R. Martin, superintendent of public instruction, released the report without comment. Dr. Martin explained he feels the report speaks for itself.

The report shows that this state has made infinitely better progress toward integration than can be found anywhere in the deep South where, after three years, noncompliance is still the rule.

It shows that Kentucky has made as good, if not a better record than any of the other so-called border states.

From the outset, the basic premise in Kentucky has been that the Supreme Court decision was a mandate to be obeyed, not evaded. But this policy has been tempered with the Supreme Court's own recognition that, due to local conditions, integration can proceed faster in some places than in others.

Massed behind this basic policy have been such segments of public and private power as:

1. Dr. Martin and his State Department of Education.
2. Governor Chandler and his Administration as a whole, dramatized by the Governor's use of the National Guard last year to preserve order during integration at Clay and Sturgis.
3. The State Board of Education, Kentucky Education Association, Parent-Teacher Association, leadership at the State institutions of higher learning, and scores of local school boards and civic organizations.

Louisville Makes Impact

Integration figures for the city of Louisville make a massive impact on the state-wide totals. Louisville shows 7,647 Negro pupils and 28,147 white pupils attending mixed classes.

But Louisville is the only place in Kentucky where the figures work in reverse. That is because 96 white pupils attend seven large Negro schools where the combined enrollment is 4,424 Negro pupils.

Excluding these seven schools, the record for the rest of the state shows 6,473 Negroes and 133,086 white pupils attending mixed classes in 255 schools in 94 districts.

These seven Negro schools in Louisville also account for 153 of the 172 Negro teachers in mixed-class schools this term. There is no white teacher on any of these seven Negro faculties.

There are four major classifications of school districts:

1. Those with no school-age Negroes.
2. Those with a plan of integration adopted, but without mixed classes thus far.
3. Those without either a plan or mixed classes.
4. Those with mixed classes.

Here are the districts without

The county districts of Boyd, Campbell, Carter, Crittenden, Elliott, Estill, Grayson, Jackson, Johnson, Leslie, Lewis, Magoffin, Marshal, Martin, McCreary, Menifee, Morgan, Owsley, Rockcastle, Rowan, Trimble, and Whitley.

Fairview Is Included

The independent districts of Fairview, Bellevue, Cold Sprigns, Dayton, Fort Thomas, Silver Grove, Southgate, Ravenna, Raceland, Russell, South Portsmouth, Anchorage, Paintsville, Van Lear, Beechwood, Ludlow, Vanceburg, Benton, Stearns, Science Hill, Mount Vernon, and Corbin.

In the second group, these have adopted plans of integration, but none has occurred yet:

The county districts of Anderson, Barren, Boyle, Calloway, Edmonson, Garrard, Harlan, McCracken, Nelson, and Warren.

The independent districts of Bardstown, Carrollton, Central City, Dawson Springs, East Bernstadt, Harlan, Jenkins, Liberty, Providence, and Stanford.

In the third group are these which have neither a plan nor integration:

The county districts of Allen, Ballard, Bath, Bourbon, Butler, Caldwell, Carlisle, Carroll, Casey, Christian, Clay, Cumberland, Fulton, Grant, Graves, Greenup, Hickman, Jessamine, Knox, Laurel, Lee, Letcher, Lincoln, Livingston, Lyon, Metcalfe, Monroe, Montgomery, Muhlenberg, Nicholas, Ohio, Owen, Shelby, Simpson, Taylor, Todd, Trigg, Washington, Webster, and Wolfe.

Louisville Remains Calmly Integrated

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 11—While the battle to maintain segregation rages in cities south of here, this week Louisville quietly entered its second year of school integration.

Integration so far has been accomplished only part way. It falls short of what some Negroes would like and goes beyond what segregationists want. However, it has been carried through without major difficulties from either side.

Before integration was started the city had fifty-eight white schools and fifteen Negro schools. Today in all but twelve white schols and nine Negro schools there are pupils of both races.

The city, however, has one less intetgrated school than it had last year. This indicates a trend among some Negro students who entered white schools to go back to segregated schools. Their reasons have been both academic and social.

Under Louisville's integration plan all schools have assigned residential districts. But in practice the school authorities permit students to transfer outside their district to schools predominantly of their own race.

Because there has not yet been any integration of faculties there is still a clear line between schools that are considered Negro and those considered white. It seems clear that most students prefer to attend schools with teachers of their own race.

This year two white schools that had three Negro students each last year no longer have any. One Negro school has lost the few white students it had last year.

On the other hand, one white junior high school has Negro students for the first time this year. And one Negro elementary school has its first white students.

Louisville had 54,821 white students last year and 12,720 Negro students. This year's enrollment figures are not complete, but so far there has been no indication of any mass movement by Negroes into the white schools.

In only one formerly white school, the California Elementary School, are there more Negroes than white students registered. And in only one other, the F. T. Salisbury School, is the number of Negroes almost equal to the whites.

There are three major reasons for the comparative slowness with which Negro students have moved into the white schools now open to them.

In the first place, there has been no organized effort by the Negro community to encourage such a move. In fact, there has been considerable pressure to discourage it.

Negro teachers, for instance, fear loss of jobs if the enrollment of Negro schools declines substantially. Moreover, often the students shifting to white schools have been the best ones in the Negro schools. The teachers and administrators of those schools have not been eager to lose their best students, while retaining the poorest ones.

Another factor has been the higher academic demands of the white schools. This was established by achievement tests given before the schools were integrated.

This has created a situation in which only the best Negro students with a strong desire to achieve higher standards have wanted to remain in the white schools. The others have asked to return to all-Negro schools.

The reverse, some of the poorer white students have been attracted to the Negro schools, because they did not find the work so difficult.

The third factor deterring Negroes from moving into white schools has been the lack of social opportunities. Requests from Negroes to return to all-Negro schools often have listed this as the reason.

In schools with a fairly high proportion of Negroes this factor does not operate so strongly.

Central High School, the city's only Negro high school, has had eleven of its students transfer to white schools this year. Some of these were seeking special courses available at white high schools such as Reserve Officers Training Corps, technical courses and trade training.

There were nineteen Negro students, however, who transferred back to Central High School after a year in integrated schools. Some came seeking the special courses offered at Central. But most returned because they wanted greater social opportunities.

Morganfield Shows the Way

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

WE SUGGEST that those white parents who do not want Negroes to attend school with their children consider what has been done in Morganfield, Ky., and do likewise.

Sat. 10-5-57

In Morganfield, the Union County Citizens Council leader announces the opening of a privately owned all-white school at nearby Grove Center with "more than 150" pupils.

14d(1) p. 8

Sponsored by segregationists, the seven-room school serves pupils from the area served by the Sturgis High School which now has 18 Negro pupils in attendance.

We think this is the honorable, sensible thing for white segregationists to do if they want their children kept separate from Negroes, instead of chiseling on the other taxpayers while insisting upon dictating the manner of administering publicly supported education.

The segregationists have been robbing the other taxpayers for so many years that most of them honestly believe that they have some right to say who shall and who shall not get public education paid for by all of the taxpayers.

Exclusive instruction is not a civil right, so those who want it should be willing to pay the price of prejudice and build their own schools just as the Morganfield Negrophobes have done.

Desegregation Increases In City, County

Defender Louisville, Ky.

Accordinfi to the latest reports from the Louisville and Jefferson County Boards of Education, a greater percentage of city and county students are attending integrated schools as the second year of desegregation begins.

The city schools showed an increase of 4.6 percent integrated over last school term. The figures last year was 33,753 pupils attending mixed schools out of 45,841 in comparison to 35,974 out of 46,022 at the beginning of this term.

11 Per Cent Increase In County

The breakdown of the county schools showed that there has been an increase of 11 per cent over last term. There are 19,006 students in integrated situations out of a total of 40,386. Last year there were 13,276 out of 36,308.

Superintendent Carmichael's report revealed that there are 10 all-white schools, eight all-Negro schools, and 57 mixed schools in the city, compared to last year's 11 all-white, 9 all-Negro and 55 mixed. Defender 10-10-57

There are 28,302 white students and 7,672 Negroes in mixed schools, 4,930 in all-white schools and 5,118 in all-Negro schools.

Schools with the most evenly divided student bodies are california with 182 Negroes and 111 whites, and F. T. Salisbury with 288 Negroes and 213 whites. Both of these schools were formerly all-white schools. Defender

The county has mixed 20 schools out of 54 this year compared to 12 mixed last year.

Out of the 19,006 county pupils in mixed schools, 389 are Negroes. Twenty-nine county schools are all-white and five are all-Negro.

In closing his report, Superintendent Carmichael said: P. 2

Appreciation

"In reporting that the program of desegregation continues to go well, I record again with appreciation the very fine work of princi pals, teachers and other workers.

"Their alertness in discovering incidents and their wisdom in handling them keep group problems from developing. Their respect for the individual, their concern for human values and good human relations and their loyalty and cooperation keep the program going smoothly.

Citizens Council sets up white school near Sturgis

MORGANFIELD, Ky., Sept. 18 —(AP)—An all-white elementary school sponsored by the Union County Citizens Council began classes on a limited basis today.

W. W. Waller Sr., whose son heads the council, said no enrollment figures were available yet but that the school expects at least 150 pupils. Waller said the school was opened to meet the demands of parents who did not want their youngsters to attend the newly-integrated Sturgis High School.

Eighteen Negroes have been attending classes at the Sturgis High with some 258 white pupils since Sept. 3.

"We have a few teachers now and expect to add more daily," Waller said. "We plan to file for accreditation by the state before Oct 10."

Mrs. Mary Baxter Starts 2nd Year

By Clarence L. Matthews

In September of 1956, without fanfare or publicity and in the midst of school integration flare-ups across the South, Mrs. Mary Baxter, a Louisville resident, began teaching the 3rd grade at a former all-white West Point, Ky., elementary school.

Thus, Mrs. Baxter became one of the few Negro teachers in the South teaching in an integrated situation and sharing the same teaching privileges as her white co-workers.

Worked Out Fine

Reflecting back to last year, she remarked, "I didn't know what to expect prior to my teaching at the school, but things have worked out fine." The school is the West Point Independent Elementary School. Enrollment is 200 pupils with 30 of them being Negro children. W. B. Ray is principal.

When pupil integration took place last September, Mrs. Baxter was integrated into the former all-white teaching staff. Said Mrs. Baxter, "There is no difference at the school. We (the teachers) use the same facilities and they are wonderful to me."

A teacher for over 33 years

Mrs. Mary Baxter

Mrs. Baxter confessed that she had wanted to be a teacher from early childhood. She was born in maced Ky., in a family with 11 children. Her secondary education was completed at Maceo and Owensboro before she attended Kentucky State College. She has done further study at Louisville Municipal College and Indiana University.

Teaching For 25 Years

Most of her teaching career has been in Hardin County. Her first placement was at the Nolin Elementary School, in Glendale, Ky. She had been instructing Negro children at West Point for 25 years prior to 1956.

At the West Point school, Mrs. Baxter is employed as a home-room instructor. Her class includes 21 white and 3 Negro students. Some of the children at the school are sent over from nearby Fort Knox.

Mrs. Baxter said that all her experiences at the school have been wonderful. She revealed how a group of parents went to the principal when it seemed that she might be transferred to another class in the school. The parents told the principal they wanted Mrs. Baxter to remain instructing their children in the third grade.

Summing up her past year of working, Mrs. Baxter said, "It has been a very pleasant experience for me. I think if other districts tried to integrate teachers it would be just as fine. We are not teaching colored or white children, but just teaching children."

Mrs. Baxter and her husband, Forrest, are both regular church goers.

Webster County Planning To Open All Classrooms To Negroes In September

14d(1) Ky.

By The Associated Press

Scott County elementary schools will be integrated next September, completing integration in the County system.

The date was set in an order on file yesterday in United States District Court in Lexington. A suit had asked immediate integration in the elementary schools.

At Georgetown, Superintendent M. L. Archer said about 140 Negro pupils would be affected. They now attend Ed Davis School in Georgetown, operated jointly by the City and the County.

Integration of high schools began this year, with about 45 Negro students enrolled in Scott County High.

Six Negro children in the second, third, and fourth grades and their parents brought suit in November, charging the children had been denied admission to a white school and the board refused to integrate elementary schools.

Ask Dismissal of Suit

The Scott School Board, its members, and superintendent, in their answer, asked that the suit be dismissed. The answer explained that an advisory committee recommended that Grades 9-12 be integrated this year and elementary schools be integrated "as soon as the board felt it was feasible."

The court order provided that the request for immediate integration in Scott County be denied and that the case remain on the docket until orders of the court are complied with.

A plan for the integration of Webster County schools has been prepared and is expected to be filed with the clerk of the United States District Court at Owensboro within a few days.

The board's plan was served on James A. Crumlin, state attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Louisville.

The plan says all Webster County schools will integrate next fall and will accept all students, regardless of color or race.

The plan says integration will be on a "voluntary basis."

Crumlin said he did not know what the board meant by "voluntary basis."

He added that he would adopt a "wait-and-see policy" on what the board actually means.

It was learned that students in Webster County will be able to attend the school of their choice in that county, regardless of what section of the county they live in.

Webster County became a hotbed of racial turmoil last September when Negro students enrolled briefly at Clay. The National Guard had to be called out to restore order in the community.

Negroes Withdraw

The troops departed after the Negro students had left Clay and returned to the all-Negro school at Providence.

After the disturbance, Crumlin brought suit to force the Webster Board of Education to make plans to enroll Negro students.

The plan, prepared by the Webster County Board of Education and its attorney, was requested by Federal Judge Henry L. Brooks several weeks ago. Brooks asked that the plan be ready when the February term of court opens at Owensboro February 4.

Judge Orders County To Have Plan March 25

Paducah, Ky., Jan. 15.—Federal Judge Roy M. Shelbourne has ordered racial segregation abolished in McCracken County schools.

14 d(1)

The Paducah chapter, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has been awarded a default judgment in its suit against the McCracken County Board of Education.

The N.A.A.C.P. sought an injunction to prohibit the County School Board from maintaining segregated schools.

Federal Court has directed the School Board to file by March 25 a comprehensive plan for abolition of segregated schools.

City Schools Desegregate

A week ago the School Board filed a motion to dismiss the suit, but made no further defense after Judge Shelbourne overruled the motion.

The N.A.A.C.P., through attorney Joseph Freeland, then asked for a default judgment. The suit was brought last September in the name of Garfield Green.

Paducah City schools were completely desegregated in September.

The County School Board, noting there was only a small number of Negro children of school age outside the Paducah city limits, made no move to desegregate the system. The N.A.A.C.P. suit came a short time after the fall term opened.

Integration In U. S., India Is Gaining, Visitor Says

As he sat in a Louisville classroom yesterday and watched white and Negro children work together, Hans Raj Vohra's mind traveled thousands of miles and dwelled on millions of Indian "untouchables."

"I went to watch the integration," said the senior economic reporter for The New Delhi Statesman, "because we have a similar problem in my land." He was interviewed as he visited The Courier-Journal building.

Vohra compared the withdrawal of segregation's barriers to India's efforts to erase the status of the untouchable, low man in his country's caste system. For generations, a member of a higher caste was considered unclean if touched by an untouchable.

"We have passed legislation that makes untouchability illegal," Vohra said. "Like your Supreme Court decision on segregation, this does not solve the problem by itself. It must be solved in due course. Legislation only points the way."

Vohra said integration of the untouchables is "as far along" as integration of the Negro in America. He said the Indian legislation and our Supreme Court decision came about the same time.

"Certainly there is no visible resistance in India," he said. "But in practice the old thing continues—although at a diminishing rate."

In F. T. Salisbury School, 2204 Magazine, Vohra also found no "visible resistance."

"It impressed me very greatly," he said. "Integration here was beautifully planned and it lays the basis for the complete solution. Children brought up together cannot conceivably part company again."

Puts hope in children

The 46-year-old, British-educated journalist is touring the country under auspices of the International Educational Exchange program of the State Department. He will leave today for Knoxville.

Vohra predicted that India's integration may come faster and smoother than America's.

Turned Away From Restaurant Here

"The contrast is greater in the South," he explained. "Your Negro started from slavery just a few generations ago.

"Many untouchables are great lawyers, doctors, administrators. Some helped draft our young nation's constitution. Acceptance comes as a less drastic thing."

Vohra watched the school children with special personal interest yesterday. "Your color problem was brought home to me when I arrived on Sunday," he said.

That night, Vohra entered a downtown cafeteria, but he was turned away near the door.

"We do not want mixed races here," a cafeteria official told him.

"I cannot let that incident outweigh the hospitality I have been shown in Louisville and elsewhere in your country," he said. "What I will remember is what I saw in your schools. What I know is that there will be no color bar in a generation. I have seen your children."

Vohra smiled a happy smile and said: "I have seen too much that is good to ever make a song out of my brief visit to the cafeteria."

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ANP) — "They can take me to court and send me to jaill, but I'm not going to send my children to school with any colored children," declared a white woman here last week afer a colored pupil was enrolled in the junior high school attended by her two teenage children.

112 Negro Teachers Accepted In Schools With White Students

Daily World Sun. 1-27-57 Atlanta, Ga.

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Kentucky students, parents, and other teachers have accepted 112 Negro teachers who are now in schools with white students, but Kentucky lost 27 qualified Negro teachers as a result of desegregation. That is the report of consultants and officers of the Kentucky Council on Human Relations, who gathered information from Kentucky school districts.

Indicative of the progress noted by the Council was the statement from one principal who said "..... the two (Negro) teacners are highly competent and have no difficulties with pupils or parents."

Of the 27 qualified teachers whose dismissal was traced to desegregation, 17 have left Kentucky, and 10 are still in the state, but are unemployed or working at a job which does not utilize their training.

A total of 46 qualified Negro teachers received dismissal notices last Spring as a result of desegregation plans in 19 Kentucky school districts, but 16 of these teachers were later rehired in their same district. Seven of the teachers were hired in other Kentucky districts. Present employment of two former teachers was not reported.

In June the State Board of Education called for the retention of qualified Negro teachers when it urged all local boards to "... give due consideration to all qualified persons;;;" as professional personnel. That action came after reports that part of a group of 60 Negro teachers faced dismissal because of pupil desegregation plans.

Ten Negro teachers were transferred to previously white schools in four districts as a part of complete local plans for desegregation which will lead to integration. Most of these teachers are temporarily assigned to non-teaching duties. The other 102 Negro teachers in two districts are teaching in previously all Negro schools which are now attended by whites pupils.

The Council report concluded, "The desegregated pupil will not be integrated until he has an equal chance for employment. He will not be inspired to be a better pupil if he witnesses the dismissal of his qualified teachers just because of their race or color... Most encouraging of all s the knowledge that several other districts plan to begin teacher desegregation at an early date."

The goal of the Kentucky Council is "....to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all people in Kentucky."

Two Counties Get Integration Order

Star

OWENSBORO, Ky., Feb. 9 (AP) —Federal Judge Henry L. Brooks yesterday ordered the integration of all Hopkins County schools and high schools in Union County at the start of the September term.

He also approved Webster County's plan for desegregating all its schools next fall.

Both Hopkins and Union Counties had proposed that integration be on a gradual basis, but Judge Brooks said this was not in compliance with the recent Supreme Court decision.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed suit against Webster and Union school boards after Negroes were refused admittance to white schools last year. Gov. A. B. Chandler sent National Guardsmen into both areas to quell racial disturbances.

The NAACP filed suit against Hopkins County when its school board announced a program that would require 12 years to complete integration of its schools. The board later revised the 12-year plan to four, but the NAACP held this still was unsatisfactory.

LEXINGTON, Ky.—A United States District Court ruling was issued Thursday ordering the integration of Scott County elementary schools in September, completing desegregation of the county school system.

The order was issued in answer to a suit requesting immediate integration in the county's elementary schools filed by the parents of six grade school pupils in November.

The Scott County High School is already integrated, with about 45 colored pupils enrolled. School Superintendent M. L. Archer said that about 140 pupils will be affected by the elementary school ruling.

A PLAN FOR the integration of Webster County Schools, the scene of violent racial clashes in September requiring the calling of the National Guard to halt disturbances at Clay, has been prepared in keeping with a court order issued by Federal Judge Henry L. Brooks several weeks ago.

The plan is expected to be submitted when the court reconvenes for the February term at Owenboro on Feb. 4.

James A. Crumlin, state attorney for the NAACP, which filed the Webster County suit, says that the plan calls for integration of all Webster County schools in September also.

All students will be accepted under the plan without regard to race or color, and integration is slated to be on a "voluntary basis."

Mr. Crumlin said that the plaintiffs would wait to see just what is meant by "voluntary basis."

MCCRACKEN COUNTY schools were also ordered to desegregate in a default judgment handed down against the McCracken County Board of Education by Federal Judge Roy M. Shelbourne sitting at Paducah.

The suit was filed by the Paducah branch of the NAACP and sought an injunction to ban operation of segregated schools by the county.

The Paducah city schools were integrated last September, but county officials, claiming that there were only a few colored children living in the county, failed to move toward integration.

The suit was filed in September in behalf of Garfield Green by Joseph Freeland, attorney for the NAACP.

A WHITE LOUISVILLE couple who took tw oof their children out of Southern Junior High School last month because the school was integrated, have been summoned to appear in Juvenile Court.

A warrant was taken out against the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Dupin, by Lewis P. Morris, assistant director of pupil personnel.

School and court officials said that the case will be treated "like any other case involving refusal of a parent to send a child to school."

James E. Thornberry, assistant county attorney, said:

"It's not a question of integration. It's a question of these people not having their children in school."

Mrs. Dupin declared:

"Whenever a court tells you what to do, it's not a free country. They're bringing those Hungarians over here to the very thing they left behind.

"I'll go to jail, but I won't let them force me to send my children to school with colored children."

Classrooms In Kentucky 40% Unfit

House Inquiry Hears of Needs

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13 (AP).—Kentucky school officials told a House Educaton subcommittee today that nearly 40 per cent of the state's 18,700 classrooms are not fit for students to use.

They also testified that 80 per cent of the schools lack central heating and that 38 per cent of Kentucky children attend schools withoutdoor toilets.

The subcommittee is studying various proposals under which the Federal government would help the states finance school construction. They include President Eisenhower's plan to spend $1,300,000,000 over four years on school construction, and a Democratic program to spend $3,600,000,000 over six years.

Ask No Integration Tie

Robert P. Martin, Kentucky's Superintendent of Public Instruction, appealed to Congress not to inject the integration controversy in the school building bill. He said he referred specifically to the proposal by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, L.-D., N. Y., to bar funds to school districts that defy the supreme court's integration order. Mr. Martin said Kentuckians have accepted the court's order and the state is moving to carry it out.

Also testifying were J. Marvin Dodson, executive secretary of the Kentucky Education Association, and Adron Doran president of Morehead State College, Ky.

Kentucky Integration Ordered

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C.

OWENSBORO, Ky., Feb. 9 Federal Judge Henry L. Brooks yesterday ordered the integration of all Hopkins County schools and high schools in Union County at the start of the September term.

Brooks also approved Webster County's plan for desegregating all its schools next fall.

Sun, 2-10-57

Both Hopkins and Union counties had proposed that integration be on a gradual basis, but Judge Brooks said this was not in compliance with the recent Supreme Court decision.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People filed suit against Webster and Union school boards after Negroes were refused admittance to white schools last year. Gov. A. B. Chandler sent National Guardsmen into both areas to quell racial disturbances.

The NAACP; filed suit against Hopkins county when its school board announced a program that would require 12 years to complete integration of its schools. The board later revised the 12-year plan to four but the NAACP held this still was unsatisfactory. Judge Brooks agreed.

Court Rules Against 5-Yr Desegregation

Louisville Courier-Journal Sat. 1-26-57

LOUISVILLE, KY. — Although the United States of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, recently ruled against an attempt of the Tennessee Board of Education to delay complete desegregation of a school for five years, Judge Shackelford Miller Jr. of Louisville, dessented against the ruling and called the five-year plan a good-faith solution.

The court, by a 2-1 decision, reversed a decision by U S District Judge Marion Boyd of Memphis, Tenn, in which he refused to enjoin the officials of Memphis State College from refusing admission to five Negro students.

Judge Boyd had approved a plan in 1955 by which the college would achieve total desegregation in five years.

The appeals-court majority opinion granted the Board of Education the right to limit admission but stated that it has no authority to do so on the basis of color.

In his dissent, Judge Miller asserted that there had been no abuse of discretion on the part of Judge Boyd and that "the district judge expressly found that the time is absolutely necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner.'

Say they'll work it out if let alone

Baltimore Md. Sat. 2-9-57

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — "Community programs for classroom desegregation could be enhanced by a clear policy of let youth alone so that they can have a chance to work it out."

That was the conclusion of a panel of six high school pupils — six teenagers from Louisville schools — here last week, a city that began a large scale desegregation program last September.

The panel also agreed that in local schools that had carried out some classroom integration there had been many opportunities to understand each other's problems and to help remove barriers to harmonious race relations.

The panel expressed its views in discussing the topic, "How Does Youth Meet Desegregation?" on the New York Times Youth Forum, televised in Louisville over WHAS-TV.

DOROTHY GORDON was moderator of the show which originated here because of widespread interest in this city's efforts as a major one in the South to comply with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

A kinescope of the program will be shown in NYC over Station WABD-TV Feb. 17 for the opening of National Brotherhood Week, network officials said.

Similar kinescopes of the program will be distributed throughout the country to local chapters of the National Conference of Christians and Jews for telecasts in other cities, it was said.

Pupils on the panel were Gordon Gibson, 17, Atherton High School: Mary K. Wong, 17, Du Pont Manual High; Susan Sprous, 17, Eastern High; Carl Frey, 17, Trinity High; Carol Smith, 15, Shawnee High, and Ursula Parrish, 17, Male High School.

All of the pupil panelists are seniors except Carol Smith, who is a sophomore. Dr. Omer Carmichael, superintendent of city schools, was adult guest on the program.

DR. CARMICHAEL has directed the Louisville desegregation program in which various patterns of racially mixed and separate schools have resulted in accordance with previous planning that permitted a defined range of voluntary selection.

In describing the procedure followed in Louisville's program for compliance, Dr. Carmichael emphasized the value of broad based community preparation and clearcut support by public leadership groups.

Carl Frey reported that 80 per cent of the pupils at his school had voted in favor of classroom desegregation. He added that he personally felt "it is a very good movement."

Gordon Gibson, who pointed out that three colored pupils had enrolled at his school, one later moving from the city and the other two transferring to an all-colored school, said he felt the transfers were due to "family pressure."

The moderator noted that in a full sociological sense, neither Gibson nor Frey had truly experienced an integrated situation.

URSULA PARRISH and Carol Smith, both colored pupils with good sociological grades, agreed that they had made the "adjustment" to integrated schools without too much difficulty and that "things are going well now."

Both Dr. Carmichael and the pupil panel were in complete agreement in the view that the colored students' capacity to learn is no different than that of the white student.

The completely integrated studio crowd, composed largely of school pupils, evidenced enthusiastic support for the several points stressing the need for "good will and mutual respect" in making desegregation work.

Women threaten to sue Henderson School Board

HENDERSON, Ky. (ANP)—A four-woman delegation last week told the city school board here to "speed up" integration or be faced with court action.

The action by the women came after they decided that public school integration here was going too slow. The delegation was composed of Mesdames Martha Swann, spokesman; Willie Brown, Frank O. Johnson and Allen Glass.

The group told the city school board that the present plan is a handicap to colored children scholastically. They insisted that the board make a speed-up decision by its next meeting or face court action. The next meeting is June 26.

LAST YEAR, the city decided to integrate the first grades and then move upward as rapidly as possible. Since then, however, the program has not been furthered.

This city last year was the scene of a boycott of schools by white students in protest of colored pupils who were admitted to Weaverton School.

The women's delegation told the city school board that the colored high school lacked adequate courses in geometry, music, physical education and shop.

New Chapter Is Starting In Story Of School Integration In Kentucky

Status Varies Over State

H'Earl Evans, the principal of the high school, refused Sunday night to say anything about the situation—even the time the schools open, whether they would open, or the name of the County superintendent of schools.

(But Sturgis Mayor J. B. Holman said, "It is all right so far. I think everything will go along all right.")

In the nearby community of Clay, in adjoining Webster County, the National Guard also had to intervene last year when disorders developed over the attempt of two Negro children to go to the consolidated school.

Ruling Obeys U. S. Order

This year the County is under an order from Federal District Court at Owensboro to integrate all its schools. And the County School Board has passed a ruling, complying with the order, permitting any Negro students who wish to do so to attend white school.

But it promises to be an integration on paper only. The County will continue to pay the tuition for Negro students to attend the Providence school.

Mrs. Irene Powell, principal of the Clay consolidated school, knows of no Negro students who are considering trying to enter the school this year.

Mr. and Mrs. James Gordon, who tried last year to enter their son and daughter at the Clay school, moved to Fort Wayne, Ind., in March.

Loses Job In Sturgis

Gordon, an automobile mechanic, lost his job in Sturgis at the time of the incident. Mrs. Gordon said yesterday that he had been unable to find a job within a radius of 75 miles of their former home. Finally he found work in a Fort Wayne steel mill, 310 miles away, and this fall their children will attend integrated schools in that city.

The pattern of permissive registration of Negro students in white schools, accompanied by little or no exercise of the privilege, is something that emerged in 1955 in Lexington and is finding wide application this fall among schools claiming to comply with the Supreme Court's decision.

Of the 2,800 Negro students in the Lexington schools, only 25 chose to enter white schools in 1955 and only 35 did so last year.

Same Situation Likely

Dr. John M. Ridgway, the Lexington superintendent of schools, said he expected the situation to be about the same this year.

The presence of the few Negro students in the white schools has caused no difficulties, he said, although he admitted that a mass attempt to enter white schools could cause trouble.

The Lexington pattern is being applied this year for the first time in Anderson, Hopkins, McCracken, and Marion counties, as well as the City schools of Lebanon, the Marion County seat, which is a separate district.

Mrs. Emma B. Word, superintendent of Anderson County, said the board had opened grades 10, 11, and 12 in the white high school to Negroes who wish to attend.

Now Attend Lincoln

But she said none of the 22 Negro high-school students, who now attend Lincoln Institute in adjoining Shelby County, had indicated they would try to register.

Hopkin County High School held registration last week and no Negroes applied, according to the office of Superintendent Compton Crowe. The grade schools register today.

Leon Smith, superintendent of McCracken County schools, said Negroes were free to register at white schools if they choose—but none had appeared during registration last week and none are expected when schools open today.

Hugh Spalding, superintendent of Marion County schools, said the board had decided to accept Negroes in the white high school.

'Problem' Is Doubted

He said he had been told two or three of the 25 students who go to the Negro high school in Lebanon were planning to enter the white school, but he said, "I don't think it will create any problem."

Mrs. Lillian B. Johnston, superintendent of the Lebanon City schools, said the white high school would be opened this year to Negroes who wish to attend and that this had been publicized in the local newspaper.

She said she understood one or two Negro students were interested, but most would continue to attend the Negro school.

Ky. integration gains expected for fall term

FRANKFORT, Ky.—Continued steady, "but not spectacular," gains in Kentucky public school integration during the 1957-58 school term were predicted last week by school officials.

Dr. Robert R. Martin, state superintendent of public instruction, said that it will be October before his department will be able to give any figures on how much new integration has been brought about this year.

At that time, he said, a district-by-district check will be made.

OF THE 21 school districts in existence last October, 44 had no colored population and 93 were integrated to some degree. Integration in 233 schools resulted in mixed classes of 120,307 white pupils and 8,01[illegible] colored.

Districts in which lived 75 per cent of the state's colored pupils either had started integration or had adopted legal plans to do so.

gration or had adopted legal

Since two additional districts, Caverna Independent District, serving part of Barren and Hart Counties, and the City of Frankfort, have announced plans for further integration this fall.

CAVERNA PLANS full integration of its Horse Cave and Cave City schools. Frankfort plans full integration at the high school level.

Pilot integration at Frankfort worked so well last year that the school board decided to close Underwood High School and enroll its pupils in the previously all white school.

Five counties are also under court orders to integrate this fall. They are Adair McCracken, Union, Webster, Scott, and Hopkins.

500 FROSH AT NCC

DURHAM, N.C. — Mrs. Frances M. Eagleson, registrar, last week said that some 500 freshmen are expected to enroll at North Carolina College this fall, adding that NCC expects a combined enrollment of 1,600 by Sept. 30.

New Chapter Starting In School Integration

Status Varies Over Kentucky; Atmosphere In Areas Ranges From Indifference to Fear

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

© New York Times News Service

Another chapter in Kentucky's story of school integration begins today in an atmosphere ranging from indifference to fear.

This is the fourth school year since the United States Supreme Court decided separate schools for whites and Negroes could not be equal.

And in Kentucky, where the traditions of the South merge with the customs of the North, the progress of implementing that decision has been marked by both harmony and riot.

No Negroes In 44 Areas

Of the state's 221 school districts, 44 have no Negroes. In the remaining 177 districts, 92 have already achieved some sort of integration of white and Negro students.

The degree of this integration varies widely, however—from that in Louisville, where students may attend the school in the area where they live, to that in Lexington, where only a handful of Negro students attend white schools.

No Sign of Trouble

There are 63 districts where there has been no step toward integration and 14 where desegregation is but a plan for the future.

In eight districts with a total of 23,876 white students and 1,819 Negro students there will be this year for the first time some form of integration, varying from the complete merger of segregated schools to a paper decision apparently signifying nothing in reality.

(Kentucky has 605,488 students, approximately 7 per cent of them Negroes. Most of them live in the Louisville area.)

In the Caverna district, a rural area just to the east of the Mammoth Cave National Park, a new consolidated school will be opened today, and the antiquated frame schools formerly attended by Negro students will be closed.

It is a small district, with only 761 white students and 128 Negro students last year. But integration is being carried through from the first grade to the 12th in a single year and without any indication of trouble.

At the other end of the state, and at the other extreme of the situation this year, is Union County. Last year, when eight Negro students attempted to enter the high school at Sturgis, in that county, it stirred such passions that the National Guard had to be called out.

Principal Won't Talk

This year the county is under an order of Federal District Court to open its white schools to Negro students. The white community is hostile, there have been warnings of trouble, and yet some Negro students have declared they intend to try to register at the school.

Whites Refuse To Withdraw Their Children From Schools Previously Designated "Colored" But Even In Liberal Bluegrass State Desegregation Has Caused Loss Of Jobs For 27 Men And Women, According To Careful Survey

LOSS OF 27 NEGRO TEACHERS TRACED TO DESEGREGATION

Reports from six Kentucky school districts, where 112 Negro teachers are in schools with white students, indicates that a successful beginning of teacher desegregation has been made in the first four months of the 1956-1957 school year. First hand reports from the districts show that no trouble has arisen, and that the Negro teachers involved have been accepted by students, parents, and other teachers.

Ten Negro teachers were transferred to previously white schools as a part of complete local plans for desegregation which will lead to integration. These teachers are in four districts, most of which began pupil desegregation last year. In one district, 100 Negro teachers are in six schools which have 87 white students and 2,963 Negro students. Integration plans in this district did not include beginning teacher desegregation this Fall, but acceptance of the Negro teachers in these schools is considered significant because parents had the expressed right to request transfer of their children from the schools. In the sixth district, two Negro teachers teach desegregated classes in one-room schools.

Under the plan in one school system, five Negro teachers were placed in previously all-white schools as assistant librarians. One of these assistants was assigned as acting librarian for the rest of the year, when a vacancy occurred. In such capacities, the Negro teachers serve all children of a school.

An indication of the smoothness of teacher desegregation comes from one district where the teacher involved reports that she "doesn't know that she is colored." She is in a school with less than 30 Negro students, and with 275 white students, and 19 white teachers. Desegregation of pupils and teachers in that district was begun and completed in the Fall of 1956.

Eight of the ten teachers desegregated by plan are at the elementary level. Four of them are teaching regular classes and six have remedial reading and other non-teaching assignments. Both of the high school teachers are serving as assistant librarians. Most of these teachers are expected to return to the classroom as integration comes.

Comments from the districts which desegregated teachers included the following: "According to all observations, the situation there is excellent. There has been no adverse reaction from either pupils, parents, or other teachers." "Students and teachers are happy over the success of integration in their school." "The principal and supervisors are pleased with the job that she (the Negro teacher) is doing." "The five principals are enthusiastic about the Negro teacher assigned them."

ers who they felt would adjust and be accepted most easily. Four had been elementary classroom teachers and one was an elementary principal. In the new schools all were assigned as assistant librarians, but their principals were given considerable latitude as to their work.

In one large school, the teacher has given all the eye tests and hearing tests and keeps the health records. In another school, the teacher is giving intelligence and achievement tests to all students who have not had them. Three of the five teachers have done classroom teaching in their new schools for portions ofg a day, as substitutes for the regular teachers.

Without exception, the five principals are enthusiastic about the Negro teacher assigned them. Each was highly complimentary of the teacher's competence, her social adjustment, her cooperativeness, and her relations with teachers, parents and students. Each seemed to feel that he was especially fortunate in the particular teacher assigned to him, and that just any Negro teacher might not have fitted in so well. In four of the five shools the principal stated that his other teachers all welcomed and liked the new teacher and had accepted her as a full-fledged staff member in every way. In the fifth school, it appeared that a few teachers did not like the assignment of a Negro teacher, although none had been discourteous to the teacher. The principal stated that the Negro teacher already has gained the professional respect of 100 per cent of the staff and that personal acceptance of her is growing.

The Negro teachers were equally unanimous in expressing their satisfaction with the new assignment and their gratification at their reception by principal, teachers, parents, and children. None seemed unhappy in her duties or insecure about her position or the future. However, each had had some doubts, fears, and insecurity about the assignment before it began. Several reported a struggle with themselves before deciding to accept it, and one or two had inquired about jobs in other school systems. Most agreed to the assignment in a sense of duty; but looking back, they felt there had been no reason for worry. In evaluating their reception, all praised their principals, and several expressed particular gratification at having been treated "naturally" and not given special treatment that would make them conspicuous or self-conscious.

No principal could recall any instance where a parent or anyone else had protested the assignment of the Negro teacher in the roles she occupies, although some parents had asked before school started if there would be Negro teachers, and stated they wouldn't have their children assigned to a Negro teacher. Some of these have since asked for special help from the Negro teacher for their child. With one minor exception, each teacher reported that there had been no instances where a teacher, parent, or child had said anything negative to them about their presence, although some had heard reports of negative comments made by some parents to some other people. Each teacher reported a number of positive contacts with parents and stated that parents had voluntarily made complimentary remarks to them. Each felt that her acceptance by the students was 100 per cent.

These five teachers were reassigned to the new schools with the thought that they would eventually be given a classroom assignment. Responses from the teachers and school administrators indicate that progress has been made toward this goal, but circumstances will determine when the teachers will be assigned to a regular classroom. All five teachers expressed satisfaction with their present assignment and seemed in no hurry for a class.

Citizens Council Urged Transfer

Responses from the district where white children entered previously Negro schools have been comparable with those from districts where teachers were desegregated last Fall by plan. The Negro principal and teachers in a school with more than fifty white pupils said they have had "heart warming experiences with pupils and their parents.

Carmichael Replies: Wait A Year On Desegregating Instructors

A plan of teacher desegregation here "to accompany student desegregation" has been requested by the Louisville branch of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

In a letter to the Louisville Board of Education, attorney J. Earl Dearing, branch president, said the branch "goes on record as being vigorously opposed to the policy and practice of teacher segregation as now promulgated by the Louisville Board of Education."

City School Superintendent Omer Carmichael said the School Board has no plan for desegregating faculties in the coming school year.

Discusses It With Board

He added that he personally wishes "another year for the consolidation of desegregation among pupils." He has discussed the question informally with the board and he believes the board concurs in wanting to continue another year with segregated faculties.

Carmichael said he favors delay because "integration of faculty creates a number of problems not created by integration of pupils. I believe in solving one major problem at a time."

The superintendent has said he believes integration of faculties is a logical step to follow pupil integration.

Expresses Dismay

Dearing's letter expressed dismay that "no public statement has been made indicating that a plan of teacher desegregation is remotely within the contemplation" of the School Board.

"The failure and refusal to desegregate public-school teachers blurs the picture of public-school desegregation in Louisville as portrayed by the publicity surrounding the many honors received by Mr. Carmichael, and is inconsistent with the impressions that this publicity has created in places outside the city of Louisville.

"Of course, the recent decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation . . . appertains to the pupils. However, the legal reasoning supporting the decision, as well as the moral implications inherent therein, are of sufficient sweep to apply to the public-school teaching force."

Says 2 Asked Employment

The School Board's "attitude," the letter said, "places young Negro teachers of this community in a pitiful plight. This was shown this spring when two Negroes applied to teach in summer school and were refused employment because the board would not place them in a desegregated situation."

In September, 1956, there were 1,340 white and 347 Negro teachers in City schools. This was a decrease from 1955, when there were 1,401 white and 393 Negro teachers.

Replacements Not Hired

Carmichael noted that the percentage decrease in Negro teachers was 11.9 compared with a 4.37 decrease in the number of white teachers. The overall decrease was caused by cutting out kindergarten and home instruction.

Fewer Negro teachers were needed, Carmichael said, because more Negro children transferred to schools previously all white than white children to previously all-Negro schools.

No teachers were fired, but replacements were not hired for some who resigned or retired.

Carmichael said he will refer Dearing's letter to the board at its next meeting August 5.

County School Superintendent Richard Van Hoose said there are no plans to desegregate County-school faculties this fall.

Henderson May Change Six Grades This Fall

Henderson, Ky., July 9 (AP)—The City Board of Education, reversing a previous decision, has offered to integrate the first six grades of City schools next fall.

The proposal was made last night to the Colored Integration Committee, which had appeared before the board recently and demanded that complete integration become effective immediately.

City schools have been operating under a "progressive integration" plan put into effect last year, whereby one grade a year would be desegregated.

Force Is Opposed

The board's latest proposal adopted a recommendation made two weeks ago by a City-school-integration committee composed of 15 whites and 10 Negroes.

Members of the Negro integration group assured the board last night their committee was opposed to any force or compulsion and would do everything in its power to keep force from entering into a solution to the integration problem.

They did not say whether the board's latest solution was acceptable.

All Schools To Be Opened To Negro Pupils

By The Associated Press

Owensboro, Ky., Jan. 21. — The Webster County Board of Education formally notified United States District Court today it would end segregation in all schools next September.

The announcement was made in reply to a suit filed by James A. Crumlin, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, after racial trouble erupted in Webster and Union counties last fall.

Crumlin's suit asking that Union County open its school doors to Negroes is still pending here.

To Be on 'Voluntary Basis'

The Webster County board asked that Crumlin's complaint be dismissed, saying the board "will open all of its schools to all students regardless of color or race on a voluntary basis." The term "voluntary basis" was not explained.

No Negroes now attend schools

National Guard troops were in Webster County, but are enrolled at a Negro school at Providence in Union County. School Superintendent Wilbur Collins ruled the Negroes were enrolled illegally since the school boards had not made plans for integration.

After the Webster suit was filed, U. S. Judge Henry L. Brooks notified the board to have a plan ready when the February term of court opens here.

County School Doors Are Opened To Record-Breaking 39,421 Pupils

Courier-Journal Louisville Ky. Wed. 9-4-57

Some In City To Enroll Today

By JEAN HOWERTON

Jefferson County schools opened their doors yesterday to a record-breaking 39,421 pupils—an increase of 3,544 over the comparable figure for last year.

And County school officials think they'll hit their prediction of 40,675 before the year is out.

Roman Catholic elementary schools also began classes yesterday, but no enrollment figures were available.

City schools will open today, with all junior and senior high pupils new to the schools and all elementary children registering. Tomorrow, old junior- and senior-high pupils will enroll.

Lack Some Teachers

County schools started out yesterday lacking "10 or 12" teachers, said John Ramsey, assistant County school superintendent. Substitutes were employed to serve until permanent teachers can be found.

City schools still need 11 teachers, and also will use substitutes, said Sam V. Noe, assistant City school superintendent. If regular teachers can't be found and substitutes don't want to teach full time, "substitutes for the substitutes" will be employed, Noe said.

Valley and Southern High schools yesterday inaugurated double sessions with 10th- through 12th-graders attending from 7 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and seventh through ninth-graders in class from 12:40 to 5:40 p.m.

Confusion at Minimum

St. Clement Elementary School on Johnstown Road and St. Rita on Preston Highway both have single 7 a.m.-to-12:30 p.m. sessions. This is because their pupils ride County school buses going to the double-shift schools.

At Southern, the shift changed at 12:30 with a minimum of confusion. Departing pupils were directed out certain doors, and incoming students entered through different doors.

The early shift begins eating lunch at 10:30. The afternoon shift has a milk break in the afternoon.

Four high school students at Southern, who live within walking distance, said they like the early shift. It enables Garland Fulner, 18, of 6594 Patricia Way, to hold down an afternoon job as a mechanic from 1 to 6 p.m. He will work every day after school and on Saturdays.

So will Jim Haag, 17, of 1022 Elaine. He will clerk in a store directly across from Southern from 1 to 6 p.m.

Judy Buisson, 15, of 6141 Cherry Hill Court, had this to say about the first shift:

"It's awfully early but I prefer it to the second shift." She noted that "it was pitch dark" when she got up at 5 a.m.

Bob Smith, 16, of 1001 Elaine, president of the Beta Club, already is working on plans for an all-school dance.

"We don't want the younger kids to feel left out," he said. "At the dance we can get acquainted with them."

Haag said he hadn't heard anybody complain about the double sessions.

'Haven't Slowed Down Today'

Fulner's sister, Linda, 14, goes to the afternoon shift. Their mother works in the daytime and their father works at night, "so we'll get together only at supper, I guess," Fulner said.

Southern Principal T. T. Knight said he is "supposed" to have 2,350 students but "we haven't slowed down today to count them." Thirty-four buses take early-shift pupils to Southern and St. Rita, and 24 deliver the afternoon group.

Knight was cheerful about remaining on duty from 7 a.m. to 5:50 p.m. daily. Teachers will work only one shift.

Valley Elementary School now has an annex—two portable buildings on the Valley High School grounds. A total of 235 fifth- and sixth-graders go to class in the annex. Another 500 first-through-fourth graders are in the elementary-school building.

Six New Buses Conk Out

The County school system got "a bad break" when six new buses conked out and had to be put away for repairs.

County School Superintendent Richard Van Hoose said one bus had a bad radiator, two caught fire while being driven here from Fort Valley, Ga., one has bad brakes, one has a faulty muffler, and one has something wrong with its manifold.

Van Hoose thinks he can get by without them this week, because many parents drive children to school the first week.

Most County school enrollment estimates were "on the nose." But one, the new Ninde S. Wilder School on Herr Lane, has 644 pupils instead of the 552 expected.

School Chairman Quits Over Integration Issue

Courier Journal P. 1 Sec. 2

Says 2 New Richmond Buildings Instead of 1 Would Be Harmful to Desegregation Work

Richmond, Ky., Oct. 11 (AP)—Charles H. Coy said Friday he had resigned from the City School Board because of a building plan that he said would not be best for racial integration.

Coy, who was board chairman, resigned Thursday night after the board, over his dissenting vote, approved a plan to build two elementary schools in the near future.

"Would Bring Disadvantage"

"When a new elementary school building is built in the western end of town, a few Negro children . . . will undoubtedly attend," he said. "Similarly, when a school building is erected in the eastern end of the city, the white children will be in a minority in that school.

"To have a small minority of either race in either school will place that minority at a disadvantage.

"My position has been that the Board of Education should erect one school building in a central location in the city which all children of elementary school age could attend."

Coy said this plan would "eliminate the problem of a small minority and integration of our school system would be accomplished effectively and painlessly."

No sites have been announced for the schools.

LEXINGTON CALM OVER INTEGRATION

New York Times

School Project Starts Slowly —Faster Gains Expected

N.Y. 5-11-57

This is the third of several articles on the integration of Negro and white students and teachers in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision.

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 11—Integration has been introduced in this Southern city on a limited scale. It can best be described as a "token" step toward desegregation.

Of the 8,200 students in the public school system, 2,800 are Negroes. But only thirty-five Negroes are found in mixed classrooms. Twenty of these are in a junior high school, four in a senior high, and the rest in two elementary schools.

About one-third of the 340 teachers are Negroes. So far not one Negro teacher has been assigned to a school with white children.

There is little intermingling of the races in the parent and teacher groups. The Parent Teachers Associations are kept separate with the Negro groups belonging to one central council, the white to another. The teachers have their own city-wide associations, but amalgamation has taken place in the state-wide organizations.

However, despite the apparent lag from integration, action has been taken by the Board of Education to comply with the Supreme Court's ruling of May 17, 1954. In the fall of 1955 the board voted to open all schools to Negro and white children alike. It stipulated only that the children should go to schools in their own neighborhoods.

Following the board's action, twenty-five Negroes entered the formerly all-white schools. This dent in the wall of segregation did not create any incident.

This fall another slow step toward integration took place. Thirty-five Negro children enrolled in the white schools. Now, at the end of the academic year, the community apparently has accepted calmly this further breaching of the color line.

Officials here still feel that they are skating on thin ice. A day after the Supreme Court's desogration decision, a fiery cross was burned on the lawn of Dr. John M. Ridgway, Superintendent of Schools, and damaged his house. However, the police acted quickly to stem further violence. None occurred.

"I get an anonymous call now and then, but that is all," Dr. Ridgway observed. "That doesn't intimidate me any."

What is the outlook for full-scale integration in this horse racing, society-conscious center of Kentucky? Dr. Ridgway does not believe that large numbers of Negro students will apply to the white schools. He bases this view on two assumptions:

First, that the Negro schools are as good, and in some cases even better, than the schools for white children.

Second, that the Negroes live in a homogeneous housing pattern, which will keep most of them in schools within their own neighborhoods.

But what if the negroes do want to attend the white schools?

Wont' Turn Any Away

"We won't turn any of them away," Dr. Ridgway answers, but "substantial numbers of colored children in the all-white schools may cause considerable community resentment."

The president of the Board of Education, Dr. Francis Massie, is not as sure as the superintendent that the token integration will be continued indefinitely.

"The real trouble is ahead of us," he believes. "I would guess that within ten to fifteen years we will see large numbers of Negroes in mixed schools. When that happens, we may find community opposition."

But, he insists, the school board plans to stand firm.

"We will not turn back," he maintains. "We intend to obey the law of the land."

There is a noticeable trend toward increasing the pattern of integration. Policy conferences between the associations of Negro teachers and white teachers have envisioned toward amalgamation. Spokesmen for both groups expect the merger to take place within a year or two.

Similarly, a move is under way to consolidate the Parent Teacher Associations.

Acceptance Growing

The limited integration is operating smoothly. The Negro children are accepted both in the classroom and in the extra-curricular activities. They are on the athletic teams. A Negro boy had the leading role in a school play. Several Negroes are in the glee club and band. Recently white and Negro cheerleaders locked arms as they encouraged their basketball team—the city's first integrated team.

"It was a moving sight," a school official said. "I wouldn't have believed it possible to see white and colored girls holding hands, leading the student body in songs and cheers."

In the Johnson Elementary School, the fifth graders were preparing a report on local history when this reporter entered.

"Let's make Ayon our chairman," someone proposed. "She's nice and smart."

"That's a good idea," the children agreed. "She'll know how to be a good leader."

So 10-year-old Ayon Embry, was chosen as class chairman. Her eyes flashed happily as she came to the head of the class. Plainly, she was the class' favorite.

Ayon, who has not decided whether to be an actress or a teacher, came here in January from Biloxi, Miss. As the only Negro in a class of thirty-eight white pupils she had to make a sharp adjustment. Similarly her white classmates have had to adjust to the experience of going to school with a Negro child.

'We Play Together'

"I like school very much," Ayon confided. "We play in the yard together. Everyone is nice to me. Gaile is my best friend."

Blond-haired Gaile Ginn, 10, who also wants to be a teacher, nodded in assent.

"Ayon is my best friend too," she said. "We always play together during recess."

The difference in color seems to be forgotten. Nor does it influence their teacher, Mrs. Cleone M. Watts. She has taught for twenty-eight years, but never before with a mixed class.

"I don't mind it at all," she said. "Really, I never think of Ayon as colored. She's just a lovely child, one of the nicest and most popular in our class."

Not a ripple of excitement has taken place at the Lexington Junior High School, formerly all-white, which now has the largest number of Negro students. Although there are only twenty Negroes among the 582 students they are evident in the classrooms, during lunch periods and at the after-school activities.

In a civics class, two girls gave a report on citizenship. One was a Negro, the other white.

"We found," began Gwendolin Emerson, 14, who is attending a white school for the first time, "that people are different. Not only physically, but mentally and emotionally too."

Her partner, Betty Brandenburg, 14, who never before had sat in a classroom with a Negro, continued the joint report:

"In a democracy we find all kinds of people. We have to learn to be good citizens."

Gwendolin, one of four Negroes in the class of twenty-two, likes her new scholo. She came here this year from the all-Negro junior high.

"I was nervous at first, but that soon wore off," she said. "When I first came here some of the girls called me names. But everyone is real nice to me now."

"I've been in a Christmas play and a concert," said Lummie Farris, 15, who also came from the all-Negro school. "The studies seem harder here than in the other school. But I plan to come back this fall."

"The teachcers treat us the same as anyone else," said Eleanor Jones, 13, another Negro pupil. "I asked my teacher if my color bothered her. She said she never gave it a thought."

Teacher Adapting

The civics teacher, Miss Pearl Davis, has accepted her mixed class, but concedes it was not at first. She pointed out that she had been a teacher for thirty-four years, and it had taken time to break lifelong habits.

"Frankly, at first I resented having Negroes in my class," she said. "I thought I'd have discipline problems. I soon found out I was wrong. I'm not conscious of color any more."

The white children in the elementary schools accept their Negro classmates much more readily than do the white students in junior high school. The younger children play ball together in the school yard and walk off arm-in-arm to the clasroom when recess ends.

Are Negroes able to keep up with their classmates intellectually?

Complete Integration Due At Cave City, Horse Cave

Caverna Board Ready To Open $310,000 School

Special to The Courier-Journal

Horse Cave, Ky., Aug. 15.—The School Board of the Caverna Independent District, embracing parts of Hart and Barren counties, after final inspection, Thursday accepted a fireproof $310,000 school plant built this summer on U S 31-W midway between here and Cave City.

At the same time the board announced complete racial integration of Horse Cave and Cave City schools will become effective with opening of the schools September 3.

The tan brick structure with 12 classrooms, two laboratories, and a large multipurpose room will accommodate an anticipated 350 junior and senior high-school students. They heretofore have attended separate sections of the school here and at Cave City.

Expect 525 Pupils

Two elementary schools for Grades 1 through 6 will still be maintained in the old school plants in the two towns four miles apart. About 525 pupils are expected to enroll in these.

Board members said the new school will greatly relieve overcrowded conditions that have delayed full racial integration in the system.

Early last lear a committee of prominent citizens of the district was named to study problems related to integration. Both white and Negro members of the committee recommended integration on the high-school level beginning last September and for the elementary and junior grades this September.

Urged Orientation Program

The citizens' committee also recommended that teachers under the new setup be employed on the basis of tenure and qualifications, with regard to the ratio of white to Negro pupils, and that an orientation program for all teachers precede the change-over.

Finally, the committee asked that "the people of the district be oriented to the legal, moral, and economic necessities for integration."

School officials and board members said they believe that "pupils and patrons of Caverna are prepared to accept integration in a spirit of good will and mutual co-operation. The parent-teacher organizations, the churches, civic and service clubs, the school faculty, and the students themselves all have done much to bring about this adjustment in the Horse Cave and Cave City communities."

Expect 36 Negroes

A total of 308 white students and 36 Negroes are expected to enroll in the junior and senior high school, with 457 white children and 66 Negroes in the two elementary schools.

Ralph C. Dorsey will continue as superintendent. R. D. Reynolds, Jr., is assistant superintendent and principal of the junior and senior high school. Wilbur W. Smith is principal of the elementary schools.

Board members are W. F. Moss, Jr., chairman; Dr. J. T. Payton and E. C. Neville, all of Horse Cave, and W. Ray Scott and Wilson Edmunds, both of Cave City. The 3-to-2 ratio of board members alternates between the two towns.

Only Negro addition to the faculty is Newton S. Thomas, teacher, coach, and principal of the Horse Cave High School for 21 years. He will teach elective courses in mathematics. Thomas, 45, holds a master's degree from the University of Kentucky.

Another Negro teacher, Miss Clara Anderson, Cave City, was eligible for a faculty post because of tenure, but she resigned to take a similar position at Park City.

Conference of the Methodist Church, Crumlin charged teachers still are segregated.

"We would like to say to you that if you come here and apply for a job as a teacher you will be happy," he told the 60 delegates. "But that isn't true. Our teachers are still not integrated. They say "We're not ready yet.'"

However, Crumlin noted there has been progress toward racial integration in Louisville.

Louisville and its school superintendent, Omer Carmichael, have been lauded nationally for the progress made in integration here.

impressions that this publicity has created in places outside the city of Louisville.

"The school board's attitude places young colored teachers of this comunity in a pitiful plight."

In September, 1956 there were 347 colored school teachers in City schools here as compared to 1,340 white teachers. In 1955, there were 393 colored teachers.

Last year, 233 schools were integrated, enrolling 120,307 white students and 8,017 Negroes.

This year, says the State Department of Education, school districts containing 75 per cent of the Negro student population either have started integration or adopted plans providing for it. School districts containing the other 25 per cent of the Negro student population have taken no steps toward integration.

tion integrated programs and workers, and if there are medals, plaques and honors to bestow on someone it should be in the field of recreation. If complete integration can work in recreation, certainly it can work in the school system.

All the Negro asks or wants is a chance to live, make an honest living and be respected as a first class citizen.

Look upon them as any other citizens with the same desires and ambitions.

Louisville urged to mix teachers

Afro-American Sept. 7-20-57

LOUISVILLE, Ky.— Stating that the branch "goes on record" as being strongly opposed to the city's current practice of teacher segregation, the NAACP here requested the immediate integration of teachers within this city's school system here last week.

The action and request for integration came in the form of a letter to the Louisville Board of Education. The letter pointed out that "colored face a "pitiful plight" as a result of the school board's "attitude."

NAACP Branch president J. Earl Dearing dispatched the note to the school board and expressed a desire for integration to be achieved in "another year among pupils."

SCHOOL SUPT. Omar Carmichael stated that no plan for teacher desegregation was under consideration for the coming school year.

He added that many problems not manifested by pupil integration will be created by teacher desegregation. Consequently, Carmichael said he favored a delay in the NAACP plan for a combined teacher and pupil integration program.

Carmichael said he will refer Dearing's letter to the board at its August 5th meeting.

The letter took issue with the fact that no mention or "public statement" pertaining to teacher desegregation had yet been made.

Second Year of School Integration

All's Quiet in Kentucky

Herald Miami Fla. Tues 9-3-57

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — (AP)— This state starts its second year of school integration Tuesday, with officials keeping a watchful eye on last year's trouble spots — Clay and Sturgis.

The mayors of both communities said, however, they expect no recurrence of the disorders that kept National Guardsmen on duty in the area 18 days last September.

Negroes enrolled in white schools in Clay (Webster County) and Sturgis (Union County) withdrew after the attorney general's office ruled th were ineligible to attend at at time. A federal judge later ordered both counties to admit Negroes this year. Similar orders went to Adair, McCracken, Scott and Hopkins Counties.

"It's as quiet as a little mouse, and I guess it will be when school opens," commented Mayor Herman Clark of Clay.

At Sturgis, Mayor J. B. Holman said he didn't have any ideas but added:

"It is all right so far. I think everything will go along all right."

Kentucky's Negro student population represents approximately seven per cent of the state's total 605,488 students.

For More Integration

Courier-Journal

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

For a number of years we have been living in an age of selfishness and greed, of industrial and political corruption, engendered by the false conditions which have prevailed. As a result, many people have lost a large measure of their faith—faith in the God of our fathers, faith in our government, and faith in our fellowman.

We are passing through a new renaissance. We realize that the world of tomorrow which we are entering will be different from the world of today and vastly different from the world of yesterday; that our ambitions and ideals are not the same as the ambitions and ideals of our fathers; that our preparation to meet tomorrow's problems must be different from the preparation our fathers had. In these changing times, in the chaos created by the crashing of ideals and established customs, we need to unite our godly forces and have a better relationship with all people.

Reading in a current issue of the desegregation dispute between the Negro teacher and the Board of Education in Louisville reminds me of the story of the cow giving good milk and kicking it over.

The intellectual ability of getting along with people is the primary requirement of a teacher. Realizing this is true, why put the intelligence of a child superior to that of a teacher? Meaning if a child can get along on an integrated basis, what is wrong with the teacher doing likewise?

I wonder about the conscience of individuals who are honored because of supposed, successful desegregation. Until desegregation is done in its entirety, and that includes the teachers and the Board of Education, Louisville deserves no honors whatsoever for its integration of its schools.

Many of us have overlooked the fact that desegregation in the city of Louisville's recreation is in its entirety—and that cannot be denied.

We will find in every division of the City Recrea-

PARIS, Sept. 27 (AP)—Senator John Sherman Cooper today condemned racial discrimination and efforts to prevent school integration in parts of the United States.

The Kentucky Republican upheld President Eisenhower's decision to use Federal troops in Little Rock, Ark.

"I am sure that this decision will be approved by a great majority of the American people."

His statement was distributed in French by the United States Embassy. Mr. Cooper, former Ambassador to India, is here on a visit. Anti-United States criticism has swept the French press in the wake of the Little Rock incidents.

27 Lose Jobs, Report Shows

Defender Sat. 2-9-57

Chicago, Ill.

14d(1)

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Kentucky students, parents, and other teachers have accepted 112 Negro teachers who are now in schools with white students, but Kentucky lost 27 qualified Negro teachers as a result of desegregation.

That is the report of consultants and officers of the Kentucky Council on Human Relations, who gathered information from Kentucky school districts.

P. 20

Indicative of the progress noted by the Council was the statement from one principal who said "... the two (Negro) teachers are highly competent and have no difficulties with pupils or parents."

Of the 27 qualified teachers whose dismissal was traced to desegregation, 17 have left Kentucky, and 10 are still in the state, but are unemployed or working at a job which does not utilize their training.

A total of 46 qualified Negro teachers received dismissal notices last spring as a result of desegregation plans in 19 Kentucky school districts, but 10 of these teachers were later rehired in their same district. Seven of the teachers were hired in other Kentucky districts. Present employment of two former teachers was not reported.

In June the State Board of Education called for the retention of qualified Negro teachers when it urged all local boards to "... give due consideration to all qualified persons..." as professional personnel. That action came after reports that part of a group of 60 Negro teachers faced dismissal because of pupil desegregation plans.

Ten Negro teachers were transferred to previously white schools in four districts as a part of complete local plans for desegregation which will lead to integration. Most of these teachers are temporarily assigned to non-teaching duties. The other 102 Negro teachers in two districts are teaching in previously all Negro schools which are now attended by white pupils.

The Council report concluded, "The desegregated pupil will not be integrated until he has an equal chance for employment. He will not be inspired to be a better pupil if he witnesses the dismissal of his qualified teachers just because of their race or color. ... Most encouraging of all is the knowledge that several other districts plan to begin teacher desegregation at an early date."

The goal of the Kentucky Council is "... to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all people in Kentucky."

Court Tells 3 Counties To Integrate

Courier-Journal Sat. 2-9-57

Louisville, Ky.

N.A.A.C.P. Wins Hopkins, Union, Webster Cases

By HARRY BOLSER

Courier-Journal West Kentucky Bureau

Owensboro, Ky., Feb. 8.—The National Association for The Advancement of Colored People today won three Western Kentucky school-desegregation cases in Federal Court here.

14d(1)

District Judge Henry Brooks ruled the white schools of Hopkins and Webster counties and Union County high schools must be opened to Negroes in September.

Had Been Turned Away

The three separate decisions ordering complete integration of the schools at the start of the next schol term were asked in suits filed by the N.A.A.C.P. The actions were taken for Negro parents in behalf of their children, who had been turned away from the all-white schools.

Only the Morganfield and Sturgis high schools were involved in the Union County case.

In deciding the three cases, Judge Brooks accepted the Webster County Board of Education integration plan and rejected plans submitted by the Hopkins and Union school boards.

Gradual Plans Rejected

Webster County's School Board said it will open all of its schools in September to all races on a voluntary basis. The other two counties said they wanted to adopt plans calling for gradual desegregation of the schools over periods ranging from three to five years.

Officials of both the Hopkins and Union school boards stated today they would follow the Webster County plan, indicating they did not plan to appeal the district court's decision.

This means the Hopkins County school system and the Morganfield and Sturgis high schools will be opened to Negroes in September.

Will Have Choice

The voluntary integration plan that the three school boards plan to follow merely means that they will continue to maintain Negro schools after September. Henceforth, Negroes will have the choice of attending Negro or white schools. Similar plans are in operation in Louisville, Paducah, and other Kentucky school systems.

James A. Crumlin, N.A.A.C.P. attorney who brought the school suits, objected to the inclusion of the word "voluntary" in the judgments to be prepared in the cases.

Crumlin said he could detect a possible maneuver by the schools through which they might circumvent the Supreme Court's school-desegregation decision.

In explaining his point, Crumlin cited the Webster County plan. He told the court that the some 60 Negro students in the Webster County system are transported to Rosenwald Negro School at Providence, an independent school district in Webster County.

Sat. 2-9-57

Under the Webster School Board's voluntary integration plan, the bus will continue to make the daily run to Rosenwald School and pressure may be put on Negro parents by white citizens to continue to send their children to the Negro school, Crumlin argued.

Judge Brooks overruled Crumlin's objection and remarked:

"I don't think you should be looking out and grasping for something that doesn't exist."

P. 12

Then the court held that in his opinion the Webster School Board had submitted "promptly, a reasonable plan, and acted in good faith."

However, the court ruled that all three cases will remain on the docket. This means that subsequent orders will be entered in the cases if the school boards fail to comply with the court's decisions.

Follows Decision

In rejecting the gradual integration plans proposed by Hopkins and Union counties, Judge Brooks said he followed the January 14 decision of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Ruth Booker against the Tennessee Board of Education.

That decision reversed a Memphis district-court opinion holding adequate a Memphis State College five-year integration plan.

"This court is bound and guided by the law of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals," Judge Brooks said.

The United States appellate court held that the college's reasons for gradual integration—lack of facilities and finances to handle the influx of new students—were not valid, Judge Brooks advised the Hopkins and Union school boards.

The court noted that integration plans submitted by both Hopkins and Union counties were similar to the Memphis State College plan.

Proposed 12-Year Plan

Hopkins County originally proposed to integrate its school system over a 12-year period, starting with the first grade. Judge Brooks ordered the School Board to prepare a new plan. The board came back today with a four-year plan.

Union County's School Board proposed a three-year plan, which provided for the integration of the ninth grade of Morganfield and Sturgis schools in September.

Both school boards based their proposals for gradual desegregation on overcrowded conditions in the schools and necessity of educational and social adjustments.

Crumlin brought suit against the Hopkins School Board several months ago following the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregated schools. The Union and Webster cases grew out of racial troubles in Sturgis and Clay last September.

Kentucky National Guard troops escorted eight Negroes to Clay Elementary School after white citizens had turned them away from the schools.

'OVER-EAGERNESS' CITED

Kentucky School Head Blames NAACP For 'Chaos' In South

Wed. 2-20-57

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Feb. 19 (AP) — Omer Carmichael, Louisville, Ky., school superintendent, today blamed the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for Southern "chaos" over desegregation.

14d(1)

He told a luncheon meeting of the Education Writers Assn.:

"I do onot think we would have the chaos we have in the South if the NAACP had recognized the magnitude of the Supreme Court victory and had given things time to come to a head.

"Our turmoil in the South comes from the over-eagerness of the NAACP to push too fast. It will take two or three years for public opnion to catch up with the court ruling."

Carmichael's Louisville schools were desegregated last fall.

Asked if whites had no part in creating tension in the South, Carmichael replied:

"There unquestionably was white agitation, too. But a lot of the white group's activity would not have developed except in response to what appeared to them to be over-aggresiveness by the NAACI."

In New York, NAACP Executive Roy Wilkins said that immediately after the 1954 Supreme Court desegregation decision, NAACP leaders in the South were advised:

"It is important that calm reasonableness prevail, that the difficulties of adjustment be realized and that, without any sacrifice of basic principles, the spirit of give and take characterize the discussions. Let it not be said of us that we took advantage of us that we took advantage of a sweeping victory to drive hard bargains or impose unnecessary hardships upon those responsible for working out the details of adjustment."

Advertiser

Wilkins added in a statement:

"It is in this spirit that the NAACP has operated. It has been met by rebuffs, calumny and violence. The 'chaos' which Dr. Carmichael cites stems not from our activity but rather from the open defiance of some Southern spokesmen who declare that the South will never, never comply wit the ruling of the nation's highest court."

Kentucky school officials told a House Education Subcommittee yesterday that nearly 40 per cent of the state's 18,700 classrooms are not fit for students to use.

They also testified that 80 per cent of the schools lack central heating and that 38 per cent of Kentucky children attend schools with outdoor toilets.

The Subcommittee is studying various proposals under which the Federal Government would help the states finance school construction. They include President Eisenhower's plan to spend $1.3 billion over four years on school construction, and a Democratic program to spend $3.6 billion over six years.

Robert R. Martin, Kentucky's superintendent of public instruction, appealed to Congress not to inject the integration controversy in the school building bill. He said he referred specifically to the proposal by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) to bar funds to school districts that defy the Supreme Court's integration order.

Martin said Kentuckians have accepted the court's order and the state is moving to carry it out.

The National Farmers Union, in a statement submitted by its president, James G. Patton, said that thousands of school districts are faced with "educational slums" and have no financial means of curing them.

Patton said rural districts have had one of the hardest school problems: "Farm areas have had to educate more children with less of the Nation's material resources than the other areas of the country."

Fulton School Board Fails To File Plan as Directed, Records Indicate

By HARRY BOLSER
The Courier-Journal West Kentucky Bureau

Paducah, Ky., May 3.—The Fulton Board of Education (City) has failed to submit to Federal Court a school-integration plan as ordered by District Judge Roy M. Shelbourne, according to records in the deputy clerk's office here.

Judge Shelbourne ordered the Fulton board to file by March 25 "a comprehensive plan for the abolition and elimination of alleged unconstitutional practices" complained of in a suit filed in Federal Court here January 31.

No Plan Located

A check of the records failed to show such a plan.

The court acted in a suit brought by the parents of 16 Negro students who claimed they were denied admission to Fulton High School September 5, 1956.

The students were listed as Louella Wilburn, 16; Sandra Lee Guthrie, 14; Patsie E. Kerney, 15; Mildred Burton, 16; Sandra Noonan, 17; Agona Kerney, 16; Janice Newbern, 16; Laura Patton, 14; Earl Lee Gordon, 15; Anna Jackson, 17; Ellis Jackson, 17; Ruby Locett, 15; Edmond McGowan, 14; Andrew Haley, 17; Barbara Pearson, 14, and Katie McGary, 16.

N.A.A.C.P. Helps

The suit is similar to those involving McCracken, Webster, and Union counties.

As in the other cases, attorneys for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People helped prepare the Fulton complaint.

The attorneys are James A. Crumlin and J. Warl Dearing, Louisville, and Jack Greenberg, New York City. Associated in the case is attorney Joseph S. Freeland, Paducah, who prepared the McCracken County integration suit.

Named defendants in the Fulton suit are W. L. Holland, superintendent, and members of the School Board, Fred Beadles, chairman; Dr. R. W. Bushart, Joe Jall, Felix Gossum, Jr., and E. J. McCollum.

Refused 'Because of Race'

The complaint claims that the 16 Negro students presented themselves at Fulton High School last September 5 and all were refused admission "solely because they were of the Negro race and color."

The petition also claims that the School Board "refused to desegregate the only high school within its jurisdiction and refused to adopt an adequate plan for desegregating the high school."

Won Default Judgment

In the McCracken County case, the N.A.A.C.P. won a default judgment. The School Board later filed in Federal Court a so-called voluntary integration plan similar to the one put in operation last September in the Paducah City school system.

The McCracken County School Board complied with a Federal Court order.

Under the voluntary integration plan, the school board opens the schools to pupils of all races, but continues to maintain its Negro schools for students who wish to attend them.

City's Integration Will Be Filmed

Louisville, Ky.

Europe, Africa, Asia To See It

The story of integration in Louisville public schools will be filmed here this week and next for showing in Europe, Asia, and Africa.

A crew of film and television men from New York yesterday began recording interviews with school officials and others at the Louisville Board of Education Building, Fifth and Hill.

The 30-minute film will be one of a series called, "Report From America." The series is produced for the United States Information Agency by the National Broadcasting Company. The reports are shown first in England on British Broadcasting Company television, then elsewhere.

Louisvillians to be interv[illegible]ved include City School Su[illegible]tendent Omer Carmichael; Charles H. Parrish, Jr., sociology professor at the University of Louisville; James A. Crumlin, attorney for the local chapter of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, and Albert F. Reutlinger, president of the Louisville Urban League.

Films will be made at Frederick Douglas, Western Junior High, and Louisville Male High schools. Parents, teachers, and pupils will be interviewed.

Educator Says Future Will Shame U. S. Over Integration

LOUISVILLE, KY.—(ANP)—"We will be ashamed of the hysteria we have shown over the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools in the future, according to a Berea College board member who stated that the ruling "caught us short on information about white and colored people in this country."

The speaker was Dr. W. D. Weatherford, vice-chairman of the board of trustees of Berea College, Berea, Ky., and the author of some 16 books. Dr. Weatherford addressed the Kiwanis Club at the Brown hotel here.

He stated, "the Civil War was fought to free the Negro from political and economic bondage but we have well nigh fastened on the Negro a social and religious bondage for the past 100 years."

The educator said that before the Civil War there was nothing strange about seeing Negroes and whites worshipping side by side in the same church. He declared that in 1842 the Walnut Street Baptist Church here had a membership of 509 Negroes and 297 whites.

He added, "if America wants to maintain its world leadership we have got to see to it that every man has a real chance."

Dr. Weatherford said we will be ashamed of the "hysteria we've shown over the U. S. Supreme Court decision when we get further away from it.

New Orleans School Officials Not Planning To Integrate

News & Courier Wed. 6-19-57 P. 3-A

Charleston, S. C.

NEW ORLEANS, June 18 (AP)—New Orleans school officials have no plans to integrate public schools despite an adverse action by the U.S. Supreme Court.

And a legislative segregation leader said if necessary, Gov. Earl K. Long would be asked to call a special session of the Legislature to pass new school segregation laws.

The Supreme Court yesterday declined to review a lower court decision holding Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional. The Supreme Court action leaves the lower court ruling in effect.

However, President Theodore M. Shepard Jr., of the New Orleans School Board, said "there is no planning being done for any integration of the schools this fall."

Sen. W. M. Rainach, chairman of the Joint Legislative Segregation Committee and president of the State Assn. of Citizens Councils, said legislative leaders plan to "come up with new legislaton" to preserve segregation in the schools.

"Our plans are to exhaust all our remedies and come up with new legislation," Rainach said. "If necessary, we will call a special session of the Legislature to pass new laws."

The New Orleans School Board is under orders from U.S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright to desegregate schools "with all deliberate speed."

Wright ordered the board to arrange for entrance of pupils in criminatory basis, but set no time for this to be accomplished.

School Board Plea Denied By Judge

Times-Picayune Sat. 7-6-57

A U. S. District Court Wednesday denied a motion by the Orleans Parish School Board to have an injunction against segregation in public school set aside.

Gerard Rault, special attorney for the school board, argued before Judge J. Skelly Wright, that the plaintiffs, a group of Negroes, had failed to post a bond required by the terms of the injunction and by the rules of civil procedure after he had filed the motion.

Rault argued that "Actually and factually no injunction has been issued. However, Judge Wright said this was an irrevelant matter since the injunction will not go into effect until after all appeals had been exhausted. The United States supreme court only last week refused to hear the school board's appeal.

Fighting until the last "legal obstacle" has been used and in a "face-saving but foolish-money spending" effort, the Orleans Parish school board has asserted that there would be new appeals in the case. In the meanwhile all public schools in the city will remain on a segregated basis.

gia, and John R. Brown of Texas.

Major points covered by Rault's argument were the contentions that the suit brought by the Negroes is in reality a suit against the state of Louisiana and citizens may not sue the state without its consent; that the Negroes have failed to exhaust their administrative remedies under the state's school assignment law, and that the assignment law is not a segregation measure.

Says Integration Aim

Carter countered by telling the court that the "only semblance of an argument" advanced by Rault was the question of the exhaustion of administrative remedies. He devoted the major portion of his argument to this point.

At the outset of his argument Rault claimed that the Negroes are not merely asking desegregation, but that they are seeking to have the school board revamp the entire school system to provide integrated schools.

The school board is appealing a decree issued Feb. 17, 1956 by

At this point Judge Tuttle asked if the constitutional provision upon which the assignment law is based does not require segregated schools.

The school board attorney answered that the assignment law is unconnected with the constitutional provision of segregated schools. "It is not a segregation act," he asserted.

Judge Brown then asked, "If the superintendent ordered a Negro to a white school, wouldn't he go to jail under the penalties provided in the state law for persons who violate the constitutional provision?"

Can't Foresee Action

Rault answered, "I don't know, maybe he would. I don't think we can assume what a superintendent is going to do. They can take that matter to the courts."

Rault then argued that identical school assignment laws in Maryland, North Carolina and South Carolina have been upheld by the courts, but Judge Brown asserted that he has not been able to find any provisions in these laws providing punitive provisions for persons who violate them.

In support of his point that the Negroes are seeking more than merely desegregation, Rault called attention to a Texas segregation case deciedd earlier Wednesday by the fifth circuit in which it is pointed out that in the school of his choice, whereas in Louisiana the law is entirel ydifferent. "The courts do not require you to exhaust administrative remedies where it would be futile," he asserted.

Integration—'Not Required'

"Under the present law in Louisiana the superintendent of schools could not permit a Negro child to go to any other but a Negro school because he could not break the segregation law," Carter argued.

He told the court that he agreed with Rault that the Supreme Court does not require integration and that if the people of New Orleans want to have segregation it must be completely voluntary. "But if one person does not want to be segregated, he has the right to come to court."

Carter ended his argument by claiming that the Orleans school board has made no effort to comply with the law as expressed by the Supreme Court.

City School Case Given Court

Move To Set Aside Desegregation Order Heard

New Orleans, La.

The United States fifth circuit court of appeals took under advisement Wednesday the plea of the Orleans parish school board that it set aside a lower court decision ordering the desegregation of New Orleans public schools.

Thre judges of the court of appeals heard brief arguments by Gerard A. Rault, special attorney for the school board, and Robert L. Carter, New York, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The case was heard by Judges Richard T. Rives of Alabama, Elbert Tuttle of Georgia, and John R. Brown of Texas.

Judge J. Skelly Wright, ordering the desegregation of the public schools of the city and an injunction issued at the same time restraining the school board from continuing its policy of segregation.

The most glaring error committed by the district judge, Rault argued Wednesday, was in failing to hold that the Negroes who brought the suit had not exhausted their administrative remedies under the Louisiana school assignment law. He contended that under that law the Negroes can appeal school assignments administratively and then to the state courts.

Denies Law Segregation Act

"The act does not give school superintendents any powers he did not have before. It does not mention race," Rault said.

the United States Supreme Court, in its original school segregation ruling, "forbids any state action requiring segregation of children in public schools solely on account of race; it does not, however, require actual integration of the races."

Says State Law Differs

In a 15-minute answer to Rault's argument, Carter claimed that Judge Wright's decree and injunction were in line with the Supreme Court's ruling and that the Louisiana school assignment law is entirely different from the assignment statutes in the other states cited by Rault.

He argued that under the Maryland, North Carolina and South Carolina laws it is possible that a Negro child may go through the administrative procesnes and eventually wind up

School Mixing Appeal Filed

Advertiser Sat. 7-20-57

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19 (AP)—The New Orleans school board has filed an appeal to wipe out a federal injunction that requires integration of city schools.

The appeal is based on a technicality. Gerard Rault, attorney for the board, said Negroes asking an end to school segregation had not filed a $1,000 bond in time.

Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright, who issued the injunction, overruled Rault's objection to the timing of the bond payment. Rault yesterday appealed this overruling to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judge Wright issued the injunction, which sets no definite time limit for an end to segregation, after he declared Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional. The Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Wright's ruling and the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review the case.

LEGION TO FIGHT VA INTEGRATION

Times-Picayune New Orleans, La. Sun. 8-25-57 P. 22

SHREVEPORT, La., July 20—Louisiana Legionnaires at their annual convention in Monroe next week end are expected to seek federal legislation to bring operation of Veterans Administration hospitals into conformity with state laws on segregation.

A special committee headed by Hal Burgess of Mansfield, retiring fourth district commander of the American Legion, has drafted a resolution condemning the present VA practice of integrating races in hospitals and calling for an amendment to the 1935 federal statute which created the Veterans Administration.

The committee was appointed by state legion commander M. C. Gehr of Alexandria at a department executive committee meeting in March after Burgess presented a resolution adopted by fourth district Legionnaires condemning mixing of white and Negro patients in three VA hospitals in Louisiana.

VA integration practices were brought to public attention last fall by C. D. Broughton, Homer Legionnaire, who charged in a letter to a Shreveport newspaper that he had been denied treatment in the Shreveport VA hospital after refusing to accept it on an integrated basis.

The Homer post subsequently launched a drive in protest to this practice, and 14 Legion posts and seven units of the VFW in North Louisiana went on record condemning integration.

Appeal Lost, N.O. Schools Must Comply With U. S. Law

Wuflip Sat. 6-22-57 P. 7

New Orleans

The United States Supreme Court on Monday, June 17, refused to review the decision of United States Judge J. Skelly Wright, ordering the Orleans Parish School Board to desegregate the public schools of New Orleans "with all deliberate speed."

The decision of Judge Wright was first appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans. On March 1, 1957 the Court of Appeals affirmed the decision of the district court and held that the Constitution of the state of Louisiana requiring segregation of the races in public schools was unconstitutional.

The Appellate court also held that the pupil assignment law passed in 1954 was also invalid because it did not set up any given standards by which pupils would be assigned, and further, the assignment law was passed for the sole purpose of perpetuating segregation in public education in violation of the 14th amendment of the Constitution.

Every effort of the Orleans parish school board to maintain segregation by law was defeated in the case filed by Negro parents on behalf of the minor children.

Over 93 children were represented in the suit which declared invalid Louisiana's school segregation law.

When the case was argued before Judge Wright in the United States District Court at New Orleans last February, he granted a preliminary injunction stating at that time that parents of school children had made several efforts to desegregate the schools of this City, and that he considered their efforts in this direction as a complete exhaustion of their administrative remedies, a point the school board attempted to deny. He said:

"As a practical matter, plaintiffs (parents) here have exhausted their administrative remedies. They have petitioned the Board on three separate occasions asking that their children be assigned to nonsegregated schools. The Board not only has refused to desegregate the schools, but has passed a resolution noting the existence of the present suit and stating, 'it is not only to the manifest interest of this Board and in accord with its expressed policy, but also in furtherance of the public welfare of this community that this suit and any others that might be instituted with the same objective be vigorously, aggressively, and capably defended.' To remit each of these minor children and the thousands of other similarly situated to thousands of administrative hearings before this Board, to seek the relief to which the Supreme Court of the United States has said they are entitled, would be a vain and useless gesture, unworthy of a court of equity. It would be a travesty in which this Court will not participate."

In upholding Judge Wright, the Court of Appeals said:

"Whatever may have been thought heretofore as to the reasonableness of classifying public school pupils by race for the purpose of requiring attendance at separate schools, it is now perfectly clear that such classification is no longer permissible, whether such classification is sought to be made from sentiment, tradition, caprice, or in exercise of the State's police power.

From what we have said the conclusion is obvious that the state constitutional provisions as to maintaining separate schools for white and colored children is in direct conflict with the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment and is void and of no effect."

The Attorney General of Louisiana joined the Orleans parish school board in its effort to maintain segregation in the public schools of New Orleans, but his efforts were in vain, the Court ignoring his contention that the suit was against the State of Louisiana and could not be maintained without the State's consent, which consent it refused to give. The Orleans parish School board employed Gerard Rault of New Orleans, Louisiana, as it's attorney paying him a fee of $25,000.00 a year to handle the case. He was asssted by W. Scott Wilkinson of Shreveport, Louisiana.

Negroes Ask Board to Find Site for New School Building

Make Request in Face of Melrose Refusal

Times-Picayune

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

LAKE CHARLES, La., Sept. 12—Negro parents have requested that the Calcasieu parish school board find land for a new Negro school in northeastern Lake Charles in face of the school board's refusal Thursday to turn the Melrose school over to them.

New Orleans Sat. 9-14-57 P. 24

The board also instructed Supt. H. A. Norton to take legal action to return Negro children to school if parents refused to end their boycott of the bus to St. John school.

C. J. Drost, president of the school board, told a 10-member Negro delegation that Melrose school was "financed as a white school, built as a white school and will continue to be a white school."

Drost said he was speaking for the school board, and it was his recommendation that Melrose remain white.

Parents requested the board to find land to build a Negro school in the Fisherville area in northeastern Lake Charles. Norton said the school board had been seeking land in that area for five years but property owners refused to sell, mainly for tax reasons.

Negro parents have sought since the opening of school to have Melrose designated Negro and staged two marches on the school. Both times they were turned away by school officials.

With school in its second week Negro parents of some 97 students have still refused to send their children to St. John school, about 10 miles away. They claim the bus ride is too long.

Drost said this was the first year that Negro students have been shuffled from one community to another. He said white students have been transported great distances for several years because of the rapidly growing school population in this area.

He said he felt confident that the school board would do everything it could to provide additional school facilities in the Fisherville area, even to the point of taking money from the general fund. However, he added that even if land could be found to build a school it would be impossible to complete it in time for the school year.

Supt. Norton said the finding of land has been difficult but said the school board had the power to expropriate and would do so if necessary.

Norton said that there is an average of 35 white students to each elementary classroom and 31 Negroes. On the high school level there is an average of 22 white students per classroom and 23.6 Negro students.

A Wise Decision

Segregationists are hailing the fact that parochial schools in New Orleans will again open next week on a segregated basis.

Catholic American

They have read into the decision a sharp setback for Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel, who in 1955 announced plans to begin integration in Catholic schools, and then postponed the move until this fall. P. 4

But their glee could be premature.

Catholic segregationists, violating the laws of the church, by - passed their archbishop to appeal directly to Pope Pius in their frantic effort to halt the march of Christianity and human progress.

Sat. 9-14-57

They asked the Pope to stop integration in churches and schools and to rebuke Archbishop Rummel for holding segregation to be a mortal sin.

Further, they promised to comply with whatever edict His Holiness issued.

Baltimore Md

Until Pope Pius gives his answer, the archbishop is wise in holding integration plans in abeyance.

It's wise because when the Pope rules, there will no longer be an excuse not to obey.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS ASK REHEARING

Times-Picayune

Petition Filed in Segregation Ruling

Sun. 3-24-57

Attorneys for the Orleans parish school board Saturday filed a petition for rehearing in the United States court of appeals for the Fifth District in the school segregation case.

The board is the appellant and Earl Benjamin Bush et al are the appellees.

Gerard A. Rault and W. Scott Wilkinson, board attorneys, requested an en banc rehearing, namely that all the active judges of the court be convened.

The attorneys alleged that the court erred in holding that this is not a suit against Louisiana when the injunction would require affirmative action by Louisiana, and that the court erred in holding that the plaintiffs were not obliged to exhaust the administrative remedies provided under Louisiana's school assignment act.

They said the court erred in holding unconstitutional the provisions of Louisiana's Constitution and the laws of the state providing for segregation in public schools under the police power of the state and in holding Louisiana's school assignment law unconstitutional.

They said further that the court erred in holding the entire act 555 of 1954 unconstitutional, particularly since only one section had been challenged by the pleadings, and that the court erred in not remanding the case to be tried by a three-judge district court.

Finally, they said the court erred in asserting that the 14th Amendment was adopted by the people of the United States.

9180 Children Get Only Half A Day's Schooling

Weekly New Orleans p. 8

Sat. 4-6-57

NEW ORLEANS -- A total of 9,180 Negro children of the public schools are on (platoon) half day time in the city public schools, according to an announcement of Dr. James F. Redmond, superintendent. Of these there are 7,044 in grades 1 to 6 and 2,136 in high schools. Only two high schools have half day classes. Andrew J. Bell High School has 964 on half day time and J. S. Clark Senior High School 1,172.

In three elementary schools there are more than one thousand children on half day classes. These are Lawless with 1,379, Macarty with 1,457 and Moton with 1,667.

The superintendent's report also revealed that the average size of classes in white elementary schools was 31.0 while the average size in Negro schools was 37.4. He also showed that there were 25,381 white children in elementary grades and 30,820 Negro children in these same grades. The report showed there were forty-five white elementary schools and thirty-four Negro elementary schools. No white children at all are on (platoon) half time in the city. Kindergarten schools are not included in this number.

New Orleans Loses Segregation Appeal

Advertiser 4-6

Sat. 4-6-57

NEW ORLEANS, April 5 (AP)—The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals today refused to grant a rehearing on its decision ordering the desegregation of New Orleans public schools.

In its order, the court had upheld a decision by Federal District Court Judge J. Skelly Wright.

Judge Wright had ordered the city schools desegregated "with all deliberate speed" and declared Louisiana's segregation laws unconstitutional.

The Orleans Parish (County) School Board had filed the rehearing petition, which was turned down today by the Appeals Court.

Segregation Laws Unconstitutional

Weekly Sat. 4-27-57

New Orleans La.

Last week U. S. Federal District Judges Herbert Christenberry and J. Skelly Wright once again ruled that Louisiana segregation laws aimed at defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in the public schools were unconstitutional.

In the opinion written by Judge Wright he said, "This litigation concerns another attempt by the Louisiana Legislature to preserve, by law, segregation in the educational institutions of the state. This attempt while more subtle than its predecessor (the court referred to the Orleans School Board Case), nevertheless fails because the 14th amendment of the Constitution nullifies sophisticated as well as simple minded modes of discrimination."

Temporary injunctions were issued enjoining the administration of LSU, McNeese State College, Southeastern Louisiana College, and South Western Louisiana College, and Southwestern Institute 'from refusing to admit any applicant for the purpose of pursuing a course of study, 'because of the failure of the applicants to present eligibility certificates. A number of Negro students are now unperturbly studying at these institutions.

Despite the fact that 'sophisticated and simple minded modes of discrimination' used in attempts to circumvent the U. S. Supreme Court decision have been ruled unconstitutional State Senator Rainach the White Citizen Council 'watchdog' of segregation states he will try again to have the State legislature pass more such laws.

At the same time that Rainach and his followers are exploiting the segregation issue for whatever gain they might achieve they are likewise attempting to deny equal educational opportunities to a considerable segment of the population. This they are doing while Communist Russia is vigorously educating every educable in Russia. This they are doing while Russia gains on the USA in producing more scientists, chemists and engineers.

This legal merry-go-round of "you will—I won't" cannot continue much longer. This fact was made quite clear by Atlanta University President Rufus Clement recently when he observed thusly 'any nation which suffers a part of its population to determine which laws it will obey and which laws it will not observe is courting disorder and chaos.'

Above the din of the segregationist's, rabble rouser's and bigot's shrill-screams of defiance the intelligent, law abiding, christian and democracy loving Negro is quietly going about his business of getting the best education possible, of making his fullest contribution as an American citizen, of intelligently using the ballot for the best public office candidate, of loving thy neighbor as thy self and asking forgiveness for the frustrated and tortured souls who thrive on race hatred.

Such decisions as rendered last week boost the morale and reassure the unshakeable faith in our democratic heritage so much so that anything Rainach or Gremillion say is of little consequence. They are like empty barrels—they make a lot of noise but nothing else.

Integration Appeal Denied School Bd.

Weekly New Orleans, La.
Sat. 4-13-57

NEW ORLEANS (ANP) -- The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals this week denied the Orleans Parish School Board a rehearing on a decision of the court that desegregation in public schools of New Orleans must begin at once.

Three judges acted in the denial. They were Judges Elbert Tuttle, Richard Rives and John R. L. Brown. The board says it will go to the U. S. Supreme Court, whence came the original decree for them to integrate.

Judge J. Skelly Wright issued the original order here for the integration in New Orleans schools to get under way.

School Bd. Must Obey 'Law Of Land

Weekly New Orleans
Sat. 3-9-57

Desegregation of schools in Orleans Parish with all "deliberate speed" has been ordered following the affirmation of a judgement handed down on Friday by District Judge J. Skelly Wright of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Three federal judges of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Elbert Tuttle of Ga., Judge Richard T. Rives of Ala., and Judge John R. Brown of Texas, handed down a decision here last week declaring that the Orleans Parish School Board must comply with the demands of a lower court, the Fifth District Federal Court, which said that the board must proceed as fast as possible with the integration of schools in New Orleans.

State Attorney General Gremillion gave immediate notice of a further appeal to the United States Supreme Court in Washington, D. C.

Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright had issued an injunction against the Orleans Parish School Board prohibiting them from desegregating Negro children in schools and has asked for integration in the quickest possible time. This case was started in 1952 with Attorney A. P. Tureaud representing Earl Benjamin Bush who was suing for himself and for all persons similarly situated.

The Orleans school board asked for an appeal on the following grounds: (1) This was a suit against the State of Louisiana and such prohibited by the constitution. (2) The complainant had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. (3) The law against integration of races was constitutional.

The court, in its 21-page opinion, struck hard at the core of all arguments by the state.

Judge Elbert Tuttle of Georgia wrote the opinion with concurrences by Judges Richard T. Rives of Alabama and John R. Brown of Texas.

On presentation of the school board's appeal, the State Attorney General appeared and filed a brief as a "friend of the court."

Judge Tuttle wrote: "If in fact the laws under which the board here purports to act are invalvid, then the board is acting without authority from the state and the state is in no wise involved.

"That a federal court can entertain a suit where such a situation is alleged has been recognized."

The court contended that the plaintiffs did all required to seek relief in view of the fact that the state charged that Negroes had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

The court further ruled that "as patrons of the Orleans Parish School Board system, Negroes are undoubtedly entitled to have the district court pass on their right to seek relief."

Striking hard at state laws to use police powers to enforce segregation with regard to the constitutionality of the Louisiana segregation laws, the opinion stated, "Appellant no where in its brief undertakes to explain the process of reasoning by which it seeks to have this court conclude that racial segregation in the schools is any less segregation because of race merely because the states basis of adhering to the policy is in the exercise of the state's police power.

Summing up the case the judges said as follows: "We find no basis for the appellant's attack on the order entered by the trial judge. The able and experienced trial judge gave full recognition of the administrative difficulties attendant upon changing schools of the Parish of Orleans from the established pattern of segregation on account of race."

Leading state segregationists have been up in the air on account of the ruling. Some say they should seek an appeal, seek a writ of certiorari or even take an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court which sent out the original order to integrate. All of these have been said to be but delaying action tactics.

'Part-Time' Education Is Disgrace

Weekly New Orleans
Sat. 4-20-57

Dr. Stanly Fitzpatrick, director of research, census and planning for the Orleans Parish School Board, announced last week-end that some 11,000 Negro children are now attending school on a half-day basis in New Orleans. The shortage in classrooms is accountable for the "part-time" education program which only Negro children are victims of according to the report.

Fitzpatrick further stated, which is of no astonishment to Negro parents and leaders, that "This is the largest number of half-day students in the system's history."

A further study of "platooning of students" has indicated according to attendance reports that in elementary schools there are some 30,000 Negro pupils as compared to only 25,000 white students. With a reported classroom shortage affecting some 225 classes of Negro children, there are 45 white elementary schools as compared to only 34 elementary schools for Negro children. The average classroom for whites is 30, while the average for Negores is 37.4.

According to the above figures it is "seemingly easier to educate Negro children than white." Compliance with the U. S. Supreme Court ruling would certainly assist the over-loading of classrooms and would end this "Frankenstein monster Platooning" which was created by the old "separate but equal theory."

The Orleans Parish School Board indicatd that 8,681 pupils in grades one through six and 2,136 in grades seven - 12, a total of 10,817 are now on "platoon." Schools on platoon hold classes in two shifts, one from 8 A.M. to noon and from nooon to 4 P.M.

Platooned children during winter months are compelled to leave home while dark and return home after dark. While the city administrators are expressing concern for the ever increasing rate of juvenile delinquency, nothing is being done to assist in reducing this menace through "full time education for all children."

Schools and the number of pupils involved are: Johnson, 268; V. C. Jones, 424; Johnson Lockett, 2000, Macarty, 1457, McDonogh 6, 129; McDonogh 38, 471; McDonogh 40, 492; Moton, 1527; and Nelson, 240.

The most overcrowded schools are found in the 9th Ward below the industrial canal in Lawless and Macarty, along with the Lockett and Moton schools serving the 1860 family units of the Desire Street Housing Project. The school board recently announced that sixteen portable classrooms have been approved for construction at Lawless before September to accomodate approximately 600 children, which will still make platooning necessary.

Although the Orleans Parish School Board and city fathers are trying to build schools, which have been well-placed in highly Negro populated sections of the city, there is no relief to be seen to the present problem until 1959 in most areas, which will be of no assistance to the children now on platoon. Negro taxpayers should concern themselves more about the type of "education facility defraud" and exploitation now being forced on them by political bosses of New Orleans.

Many Negro parents have expressed concern about the already approved school for children of high "I. Q's." The question has been asked "Just what will be done about Negro children who meet the set standard?" Here seemingly would be an easy group to integrate-children of high mentalities-for they should be able to get along together with a minimum of friction. The accelerated program prepares children to take places in industry, the field of chemistry and electronics, along with other areas necessary to our national growth and defense.

It is admitted by authorities that Communist Russia today is out producing the United States in highly skilled technicians in the fields of engineering, electronics and chemistry, all vital to this Atomic Age and World Power. Will the United States stand by and permit a few "die-hards of the South," to continue to deny a segment of the people of this great democracy - "THE NEGRO" - the opportunity of parcitipating and shaping the destiny of this Nation, as a World Power -- is the question.

Pro-Segregation Resolution Tabled At Convention

LAKE CHARLES, La., May 4. —(UP)—The Louisiana Parent-Teacher Association Saturday tabled a proposed resolution which called for retention of segregation in the public schools.

Delegates said their lack of action did not mean that the state P-TA favored integration. The resolution was set aside without a floor fight.

The state organization came under fire several weeks ago for failing to take a strong stand against public school integration.

The convention ended about noon after adopting a series of resolutions. But the board of managers remained in session after the convention closed.

Mrs. George Walther Jr. of Lake Charles surprised most delegates when she made no move to resign. Her resignation had been expected from many quarters following her opening address Thursday, which was interpreted as a farewell address by many conferees.

Rule against Louisiana placement law doesn't mean Alabama's is doomed

News B'ham, Ala. Sun 3-10-57 P. 29-A

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, March 9—(AP)—The recent Federal Court decision knocking out Louisiana's school placement law has focused new attention on a similar pro-segregation statute in effect in Alabama.

But the ruling by the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which also has jurisdiction over this state, doesn't necessarily mean the court would hold the Alabama law unconstitutional if asked to rule on it.

In the nearly two years since it was enacted by the Legislature, the placement formula has gone unchallenged in court. But if a test suit ultimately is filed in U. S. District Court, it may get to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

DESPITE THE SIMILARITY in purpose—to keep Negroes out of white schools—there are clearly marked differences in the Alabama and Louisiana laws that could make a difference in how the court would rule.

In Louisiana, for example, the statute was passed by the Legislature in 1954 shortly after the voters in that state had ratified a constitutional amendment reaffirming the traditional policy of separate schools.

As amended, the Constitution required classroom segregation "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order of the state, and not because of race."

THE PLACEMENT ACT itself empowered parish county superintendents to say which school individual pupils must attend. But, as the Circuit Court said, the law provided no admission standards "other than those . . . for separation of the races."

Thus the court held that the placement act as written in Louisiana was nothing more or less than an attempt to bypass the Supreme Court's decree holding school segregation laws invalid.

The Alabama law, although it gives local school boards almost unbridled authority to determine the placement of pupils in school, nevertheless does contain a long list of standards to guide the board members.

It spells out the following factors among those to be considered:

Available room and teaching capacity; the availability of transportation; the effect of admission of new pupils on established curricula for particular pupils and the adequacy of the pupils' preparation; the scholastic aptitude and intelligence or mental energy and the psychological qualification of the pupil; the psychological effect on the pupil; the threat of friction or disorder and the possibility of community ill will or economic retaliation; the home environment, morals, conduct, health and personal standards of the pupil.

Nowhere in the law is there any mention of race or color although sponsors of the legislation made no secret of its intent while it was pending in the House and Senate.

Likewise, in contrast to the Louisiana law, all segregation mandates have been taken out of the Alabama Constitution and a "freedom of choice" amendment substituted which gives parents the right to say whether their children attend segregated or integrated schools.

THUS, ALABAMA'S school laws are designed now to preserve segregation without saying in so many words that it must be done.

If the Negroes do challenge Alabama's placement law, they will have to contend, of course, that its purpose or effect is to discriminate against them in defiance of the Supreme Court decision.

What the federal courts would decide remains to be seen. But the Circuit Court in throwing out the Louisiana law recognized there might be a difference under another statute.

It said: "Whatever might be the holding as to the validity of an administrative pupil assignment containing reasonably certain or ascertainable standards to guide the superintendent . . . the Louisiana law is not such a statute."

Louisiana School Decision Focuses Eyes On Alabama

The recent Federal Court decision knocking out Louisiana's school placement law has focused new attention on a similar prosegregation statute in effect in Alabama.

But the ruling by the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which also has jurisdiction over this state, doesn't necessarily mean the court would hold the Alabama law unconstitutional if asked to rule on it.

In the nearly two years since it was enacted by the Legislature, the placement formula has gone unchallenged in court. But if a test suit ultimately is filed in U. S. District Court, it may get to the Circuit Court on appeal.

DIFFERENCES IN LAW

Despite the similarity in purpose — to keep Negroes out of white schools — there are clearly marked differences in the Alabama and Louisiana laws that could make a difference in how the court would rule.

In Louisiana, for example, the statute was passed by the Legislature in 1954 shortly after the voters in that state had ratified a constitutional amendment reaffirming the traditional policy of separate schools.

As amended, the Constitution required classroom segregation "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order of the state, and not because of race."

NO STANDARDS SET

The placement act itself empowered parish (county) superintendents to say which school individual pupils must attend. But, as the Circuit Court said, the law provided no admission standards "other than those. . .for separation of the races."

Thus the court held that the placement act as written in Louisiana was nothing more or less than an attempt to bypass the Supreme Court's decree holding school segregation laws invalid.

The Alabama law, although it gives local school boards almost unbridled authority to determine the placement of pupils in school, nevertheless does contain a long list of standards to guide the board members.

FACTORS LISTED

It spells out the following factors among those to be considered

Available room and teaching capacity; the availability of transportation; the effect of admission of new pupils on established curricula for particular pupils and the adequacy of the pupils' preparation; the scholastic aptitude and intelligence or mental energy and the psychological qualification of the pupil; the psychological effect on the pupil; the threat of friction or disorder and the possibility of community ill will or economic retaliation; the home environment, morals, conduct, health and personal standards of the pupil.

Nowhere in the law is there any mention of race or color although sponsors of the legislation made no secret of its intent while it was pending in the House and Senate.

PARENTS' DECISION

Likewise, in contrast to the Louisiana law, all segregation mandates have been taken out of the Alabama Constitution and a "freedom of choice" amendment substituted which gives parents the right to say whether their children attend segregated or integrated schools.

Thus, Alabama's school laws are designed now to preserve segregation without saying in so many words that it must be done.

If the Negroes do challenge Alabama's placement law, they will have to contend, of course, that its purpose or effect is to discriminate against them in defiance of the Supreme Court decision.

DIFFERENCE SEEN

What the federal courts would decide remains to be seen. But the Circuit Court in throwing out the Louisiana law recognized there might be a difference under another statute. It said:

"Whatever might be the holding as to the validity of an administrative pupil assignment containing reasonably certain or ascertainable standards to guide the superintendent. . . (the Louisiana law) is not such a statute."

DESEGREGATION RULING UPHELD

School Board Appeal Rejected by Court

Times-Picayune Sat. 3-2-57

The United States fifth circuit court of appeals Friday affirmed a judgement of District Judge J. Skelly Wright which called for desegregation of the Orleans parish public schools "with all deliberate speed."

Judge Wright's ruling was in the form of an injunction restraining the Orleans parish school board from requiring and permitting segregation of the races. Suit for the injunction had been brought by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The appeal brought by the school board contended that the district court's action should have been reversed on grounds that the action by the Negroes was in reality a suit against the state of Louisiana and as such is prohibited by the constitution; that the suit failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted; that there was no irreparable injury; and that the district erred in holding invalid Louisiana statutes requiring assignment of pupils under the state's police powers.

Georgian Writes Opinion

In a 21-page opinion, the court of appeals struck down each of these arguments. The opinion was written by Judge Elbert Tuttle of Georgia and concurred in by Judges Richard T. Rives of Alabama and John R. Brown of Texas.

On the presentation of the school board's appeal, Attorney General Jack Gremillion appeared and filed a brief as a "friend of the court."

When informed of the appeals court action Friday, Gremillion said, "It is my suggestion that the matter be taken all the way to the supreme court of the United States, and the proper writs be applied for timely in order to accomplish this purpose."

Taking up each of the school board arguments, the opinion of the court first held without merit the claim that the federal court was without jurisdiction to try the case as being a suit against the state.

'Can Entertain Suit'

"If in fact the laws under which the board here purports to act are invalid, then the board is acting without authority from the state and the state is in nowise involved," Judge Tuttle wrote. "That a federal court can entertain a suit where such a situation is alleged has long been recognized."

Turning to the claim that the Negroes failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, the court held that the plaintiffs did all they were required to do administratively to seek relief. "As patrons of the Orleans parish school system they are undoubtedly entitled to have the district court pass on their right to seek relief," the court held.

As for the argument that there was no showing of actual or immediate irreparable injury, the opinion pointed out that the order of the district court contained no immediate compulsive features so far as relieving the plaintiffs of day by day injury and "inasmuch as they do not complain of the failure of the court to afford them immediate relief, it seems there is little ground for the board to do so."

Comment on Constiutionality

With regard to the constitutionality of the Louisiana segregation laws, the opinion stated,

"Appellant nowhere in its brief undertakes to explain the process of reasoning by which it seeks to have this court conclude that racial segregation in the schools is any less segregation 'because of race' merely because the stated basis of adhering to the policy is in the exercise of the state's police power.

"Nor does the brief filed by the attorney general of Louisiana discuss the issue. However, the affidavits introduced on the hearing for preliminary injunction make clear what the briefs do not. They deal with the alleged disparity between the two races as to intelligence ratings, school progress, incidence of certain diseases, and per centage of illegitimate births, in all of which statistical studies one race shows up to poor advantage.

"This represents an effort to justify a classification of students by race on the grounds that one race possesses a higher percentage of undesirable traits, attributes or conditions. Strangely enough there seems never to have been any effort to classify the students of Orleans parish according to the degree to which they possess these traits. That is, there seems to have been no attempt to deny schooling to, or to segregate from other children, those of illegitimate birth or having social diseases or having below average intelligence quotients of leaning ability because of those particular facts.

'No Magic' in Police Power

"Whereas any reasonable classification of students according to their proficiency or health traits might well be considered legitimate within the normal constitutional requirements of equal protection of the laws, it is unthinkable that an arbitrary classification by race because of a more frequent identification of one race than another with certain undesirable qualities would be such reasonable classification."

The court also held that the term "police power" works "no magis in itself." The opinion added "Undeniably the states retain an extremely broad police power. This power, however, as everyone knows, is itself limited by the protective shield of the federal constitution."

Judge Tuttle continued, "Probably the most clear cut answer to this effort by the state of Louisiana to continue the pattern of segregated schools in spite of the clear and unequivocal pronouncement of the supreme court in the school segregation cases is that this is precisely what was expressly forbidden by those decisions. Whatever may have been thought heretofore as to the reasonableness of classifying public school pupils by race for the purpose of requiring attendance at separate schools, it is now perfectly clear that such classification is no longer permissable, whether such classification is sought to be made from sentiment, tradition, caprice or in the exercise of the state's police power."

Concluding, the court said, "In sum, therefore, we find no basis for the appellant's attack on the order entered by the trial court. The able and experienced trial judge gave full recognition to the administrative difficulties attendant upon changing the schools of the parish of Orleans from the established pattern of segregation on account of race."

Gremillion Asks Dismissal of NAACP Suit

New Orleans, La.

A brief asking the dismissal of the lawsuit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to force integration of the New Orleans public schools was filed Friday in the United States fifth circuit court of appeals by Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion.

The appeals court has the suit pending and the attorney general filed the brief as a "friend of the court." The appeal is from a judgment and injunction issued by District Judge J. Skelly Wright ordering the New Orleans public schools to desegregate.

Gremillion, in his brief, argues that the suit is actually an action against the state rather than against the Orleans parish school board. He contends that it should be dismissed since the state cannot be sued without its consent. He also claims that the federal court lacked jurisdiction.

Although Judge Wright ordered the schools desegregated, he observed in his opinion that it did not have to take place "overnight, or even in a year or more."

Gremillion said that he was acting as a "friend of the court" to tell the court what the law is and how it should be guided. "The attorney general believes it incumbent upon him to advise the court of the great concern caused by the fact that the lower court has based its decision holding Louisiana's laws unconstitutional on evidence introduced in other cases with reference to segregated schools in the states of Kansas and Delaware, "the brief stated.

It added, "Furthermore, the attorney general of the state of Louisiana voices strong protest at the action of the lower court in discharging the statutory protection provided to the states by Congress, requiring that a three-judge district court determine the constitutionality of challenged state laws."

Integration Leaders Are 'Heroes' Says La. Priest

Delta New Orleans, La. Oct. 3-31-57

CHICAGO (SPECIAL) - A Roman Catholic priest from Shreveport, a cousin of Louisiana's attorney general who is violently opposed to integration, said in Chicago Monday, Negro leaders of the integration fight in Dixie are "heroes of our day" and will "play a great role in solving the race problem."

The Rev. Joseph B. Gremillion, pastor of St. Joseph's Parish, Shreveport, addressed the Human Relations Club of Loyola University.

Himself the grandson of a former Louisiana slaveholder and first cousin to Louisiana attorney general Jack P.F.E. Gremillion, said, "In most local communities of the South, the whites never thought the "Uncle Toms" would ever arise. The Negro was....viewed as a shiftless fieldhand, illiterate and compromising," he said.

Father Gremillion, born in Moreauville, La., said integration is not far off in the South. Its speed, he continued, would depend mostly upon the density of Negro populations in certain areas.

The Montgomery boycott, he said, "cause the Negro to be viewed in a new light. "Though the Negro is far from being accepted socially and in most other ways, he has projected himself into a position of one who will subsequently have to be dealt with on a plane other than servant or fieldhand.

Father Gremillion's parish is located in the residential suburbs of Shreveport with a population of approximately 160,000 people and typically Southern in racial and religious complexion. Some 33 per cent of the population is Negro; some 7 per cent Catholic.

Segregation Committee Plans Meetings with School Leaders

New Orleans La.

Law to Close Integrated Units Proposed

Mon 12-9-57

HOMER, La., Dec. 8 (AP) — Louisiana's legislative "watch dog" committee on segregation Wednesday opens a series of meetings with school officials on a plan to shut down public schools facing integration.

Sen. W. M. Rainach, committee chairman, said the group would meet at Ruston with school superintendents from the fourth and fifth congressional districts.

"This is the first of a series of meetings our committee plans to hold in the next seven months with school people over the state in arriving at a final draft of a comprehensive legal program to strengthen the state's position in the battle against racial integration," he added.

Blame on Court

The committee met last month with the board of directors of the Louisiana School Boards Assn. and the two groups agreed to plot means of substituting private schools for public schools that were integrated and provide incentives for school officials who would defy federal court orders to integrate.

"We know that anything that is not practical won't work," Rainach said. "We are seeking the advice and counsel of the people who are directly concerned with the operations of our schools, so that we will arrive at a strong, sensible and workable program."

Some school officials reportedly want to close negro schools from which students are transferred into white schools, in addition to shutting down the desegregated white school.

However, Rainach commented, "We wont anticipate closing very many schools. If we do close any school, the blame will rest squarely on the court that ordered integration."

The November joint meeting also approved a resolution not released to the press, but which has been mailed to all parish school superintendents, members of parish and city school boards, state education Supt. Shelby Jackson, members of the state board of education and the Louisiana Teachers Assn., which has sent copies to its more than 20,000 members.

The resolution directs the staff of the legislative committee to draft legislation for the 1958 legislature which would:

1. Pay per diem, salary or other benefits to state and local officials and school employes during the time spent away from their duties as a consequence of federal action affecting the public schools of Louisiana.

2. Close any racially mixed public school and make the government responsible for the action.

3. Protect teachers and school employes afected by the closing, both in pay and retirement benefits.

4. Give the governor power to reopen the school and operate it on a racially separate basis under the police powers of the state.

5. Provide for the operation of private schools to educate children deprived of an education as a consequence of federal or other action resulting in the permanent closing of a public school.

Negroes Denied White School In Louisiana

Montgomery Ala.

LAKE CHARLES, La., Sept. 12 (AP)—A school official today turned down a request by Negro parents that a white school be turned over for Negro use.

At the same time, C. J. Drost, Calcasieu Parish School Board president, named a committee to work with the Negro parents in seeking a site for a new Negro school in the Fisherville Community northeast of Lake Charles.

Melrose Elementary School is located in Fisherville but is used by white students. The Negro parents protested their children have to travel 10 miles across town to school and requested that the Melrose school be turned over for use by Negro children.

Spokesmen for the Negro group which is known as the Fisherville Community Club, has emphasized that its protests are not an integration move.

SUITABLE SITE

Drost said the school board has been seeking a suitable site in the Fisherville area for five years for a Negro school.

After today's meeting, the Negroes were asked if they were going to continue their boycott of the St. John School southeast of Lake Charles to which 97 Negro students from the Fisherville area have been assigned.

The Negroes said they would report later to H. A. Norton, parish school superintendent on their plans.

LEGAL ACTION

The school board authorized Norton to take legal action to return the Negro children to school if the boycott continues.

Mrs. Clara Rious presented a 10 point petition to the board today, repeating the Fisherville group's previous contention that the St. John School is too far and that carrying school children to the school by bus was a hazard to the children.

The petition also said the parents would not be able to take part in school activities such as P-TA meetings, because of the distance involved.

Negro Parents Granted Hearing

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

LAKE CHARLES, La., Sept. 4—The Calcasieu parish school board has granted a hearing next Thursday to Negro parents protesting the assignment of their children to a school across town from their homes.

The measure has at least temporarily halted demonstration marches on Melrose school, in the Fisherville community in northeast Lake Charles. Supt. H. A. Morton notified the parents of the hearing in a telegram sent to the Negro committee Tuesday afternoon.

At the opening day of school Friday and on Tuesday Negro parents attempted to register their chidlren, but were turned away. Eight students have bee nassigned to St. John's Elementary school, in southwestern Lake Charles, about 10 miles from Fisherville.

The parents protested the long bus ride for their children and said their move was not for integration. They said Fisherville is predominantly Negro and that Melrose school should be designated as a Negro school.

The Negro spokesman said Wednesday that the cancellation of that day's march does not mean that they have been called off permanently. He explained that the march was called off because "to do otherwise would seem unco-operative in view of the school board's granting our request for a meeting."

Negro Parents Protest Transfers

By the Associated Press.

LAKE CHARLES, La., Aug. 28.—Representatives of a group of Negro parents met today with a delegation from Calcasieu Parish (county) school board to protest reassignment of a number of Negro children.

Spokesmen said the children were assigned to a school 10 miles away from their homes, whereas a newly completed white school nearby will not be fully used. The Negroes said they are not asking for integrated schools, but want the Melrose school near their neighborhood to be turned over to them. They contend only a few white children will use the Melrose school.

Catholic Schools To Keep Segregation

New Orleans, La.

The announcement that segregation policies in New Orleans Catholic Schools would be retained this fall was met with great approval and jubilation by Senator W. M. Rainach, Chairman of the Legislative Segregation Committee and 'Master Baiter' of the White Citizens' Council.

The attitude of the Senator, in regard to the race mixing situation was once again voiced loudly and clearly when he termed the move as "in keeping with the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people of all faiths of this state."

Rainach said he was "highly pleased" at the announcement. He stated, in typical Dixiecrat fashion, that any decision to integrate would bring chaos in either a private or public school system.

Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel made the statement last year that integration in Catholic Schools would be postponed "at least until September, 1957.

The WEEKLY attempted to contact a number of prominent Negro Catholic leaders in order to get their reaction to this matter. Of the list of persons, only Clarence A. Laws, Field Secretary of the NAACP, was available for immediate comment. Mr. Laws statement follows:

"I am disappointed but not surprised at the failure of the Catholic Church here to integrate its schools. The announcement made last year to the effect that schools would not be integrated "before 1957" was really a tip off. Even if the schools are not integrated until 1997, the action would still be in keeping with the cleverly phrased announcement of 1956.

Sat. 8-31-57

"Integration of Parochial Schools in the South is really no longer a novelty. St. Louis, Baltimore, Raleigh and San Antonio are but a few of the cities where schools were segregated until recently.

"Let us face it. There can be no denying that continued segregation in Parochial Schools in the archdiocese of New Orleans reflects glaring contradiction and weakness in both Catholic leadership and followship."

INTEGRATION LAGS FOR NEW ORLEANS

Catholic Schools Expected to Remain Segregated at Least This Year

Sun. 8-25-57

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 24—The Roman Catholic schools of New Orleans apparently will not re racialy integrated in the coming schol year.

"There will be no change in the situation at this time," Msgr. Henry C. Bezou, archdiocesan superintendent of schools, declared today.

"If a change had been contemplated for this September," he said, "an announcement would have been forthcoming before now."

Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel, long an avowed proponent of racially integrated Catholic schools, said Aug. 5, 1956, just prior to the last school year, that integration would be postponed "at least until September, 1957. In the meantime he added then, "we hope to overcome difficulties and make necessary preparations."

Move Fought by Group

The move to integrate the 184 Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of New Orleans was fought bitterly last year by the Association of Catholic Laymen, Inc., which filed an appeal with Pope Pius XII.

Archbishop Rummel was reported by a chancery spokesman to be out of the city and unavailable for comment.

Msgr. Bezou estimated that there would be 77,000 Catholic children enrolled in Catholic schools below college level in this archdiocese for the coming school year.

He said that of the 77,500, about 12,500 were Negro pupils. Forty of the 184 Catholic elementary and high schools were for Negro children.

110,000 Enrolled in State

State-wide, Msgr. Bezou said, there are close to 110,000 children enrolled in Catholic schools in Louisiana. He could provide no breakdown in the numbers of white and Negro students in the state's other two archdioceses, those of Lafayette and Alexandria.

The Archbishop, who has denounced segregation as "morally wrong and sinful," said in his announcement last August that integration in the Catholic schools "will be organized gradually in one grade at a time of our elementary schools, and under moderate conditions which will be made known in advance."

Meanwhile, about 82,000 other New Orleans children in the city's public schools will continue to attend segregated schools. The Orleans Parish (county) School Board is appealing a decision of the Federal District Court here ordering the school board to procede to integrate the city's public schools.

'Violence' Seen Avoided

Louisiana Catholics Deter Mixed Schools

Herald Miami Fla. p 2-A Mon. 8-26-57

NEW ORLEANS—(UP)—A top Louisiana segregationist Sunday said the Roman Catholic Church avoided possible violence by its decision, announced Saturday, not to try to integrate parochial schools this fall.

"Integration of any schools, whether public or private, would bring about chaos within the system and in many cases violence," State Sen. William Rainach, president of the Louisiana Citizens' Councils Association, said.

The Rt. Rev. Henry C. Bezou, archdiocesan superintendent of schools, in his announcement confirmed reports that the church will not try to integrate parochial schools in New Orleans as previously planned.

The announcement was considered to be a reversal of policy by Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel of the New Orleans Diocese, who previously strongly indicated the schools would be integrated this fall at the latest.

"I'm happy to see the decision has been made although I would be the last person in the world to interfere with internal affairs of the Catholic Church," commened Rainach, who maps anti-integration strategy of the State Legislature.

"I know that any step toward integration of the parochial schools, however slight, would run contrary to the feelings and morales of the Louisiana people."

Observers believed recent threats of legislation to withdraw state contributions to the support of the parochial schools to have been a persuasive factor in the church's decision. Archibishop Rummel himself could not be reached for comment.

A year ago, the archbishop stirred a statewide controversy by reading at his Sunday services a statement which branded segregation a sin.

Bills were introduced in the Legislature, but never voted upon which would remove property tax exemptions from any organizations which sponsor integrated schools, and take school lunch and free text book benefits.

"I don't think the people of Louisiana want to subsidize integrated schools," Rainach commented.

Segregation aid incentive studied

News Birm. Ala. p 2d Mon. 11-4-57

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 4——Louisiana today planned legal incentives for school officials to defy federal courts, with closing public schools a last resort to avoid integration.

Sen. W. M. Rainach, chairman of the legislative "watchdog" committee on segregation, explained:

"We are interested in protecting public school officials and employes because some of them may decide they want to be in contempt of court. We want to provide an incentive in case they want to defy a federal court order to integrate."

The North Louisiana senator, also chairman of the Citizens Councils of America, did not elaborate. He hinted at "economic protection" for anyone sent to a federal jail.

RAINACH'S COMMITTEE met for almost four hours behind closed doors yesterday with the board of directors of the Louisiana School Boards Assn.

The two groups, the segregation leader said, unanimously adopted a resolution directing the committee staff "to conduct hearings and draft appropriate legislation . . . which would automatically close any public school which is integrated, whether by order of any court, military action or otherwise . . ."

THE RESOLUTION also directed "said legislation to provide for the continued education of the children and the protection of teachers and other public employes affected thereby."

The measure would be introduced in the 1958 Legislature or a special session if one is called before next May.

"I don't see that a special session is necessary," Rainach said, "although later developments may make it necessary."

He said President Eisenhower's intervention with federal troops in the Little Rock school integration crisis "is precipitating the act, but the overall situation demands it."

"We are a long way from closing our schools," Rainach added. "One intermediate step that has been suggested would be to close down a school that was integrated and let the governor reopen it under his police powers."

COMMITTEE COUNSEL W. M. Shaw said this was similar to a law recently enacted in Florida.

The 1954 school segregation law drafted by the committee in the weeks after the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation placed the maintenance of separate schools under the state's inherent police power.

These laws were knocked out in an integration suit involving the New Orleans school system. An order to integrate in New Orleans has been appealed and the case is pending in federal court.

The committee met last month with the board of directors of the Louisiana School Boards Assn. and the two groups agreed to plot means of substituting private schools for public schools that were integrated and provide incentives for school officials who would defy federal court orders to integrate.

"We know that anything that is not practical won't work," Rainach said. "We are seeking the advice and counsel of the people who are directly concerned with the operations of our schools, so that we will arrive at a strong, sensible and workable program."

Some school officials reportedly want to close Negro schools from which students are transferred into white schools, in addition to shutting down the desegregated white school.

Montgomery Ala. Mon 12-9-57

However, Rainach said, "We don't anticipate closing very many schools. If we do close any school, the blame will rest squarely on the court that ordered the integration."

The November joint meeting also approved a resolution not released to the press, but which has been mailed to all parish school superintendents, members of parish and city school boards, State Education Supt. Shelby Jackson, members of the state board of education and the Louisiana Teachers Assn., which has sent copies to its more than 20,000 members.

The resolution directs the staff of the legislative committee to draft legislation for the 1958 legislature which would:

1. Pay per diem, salary or other benefits to state and local officials and school employes during time spent away from their duties as a consequence of federal action affecting the public schools of Louisiana.

2. Close any racially mixed public school and make the governor responsible for the action.

3. Protect teachers and school employes affected by the closing both in pay and retirement benefits.

4. Give the governor power to reopen the school and operate it on a racially separate basis under the police powers of the state.

5. Provide for the operation of private schools to educate children deprived of an education as a consequence of federal or other action resulting in the permanent closing of a public school.

Parents Are Turned Down in Request for School Use

Effort to Register Children at White Unit Fails

LAKE CHARLES, La., Aug. 30 — About 150 Negro parents were turned away Friday morning in their attempt to register their children at the white Melrose elementary school here.

The Negroes had sought to have Melrose school designated a Negro school.

They were met by assistant school superintendent C. W. Hanchey, who said the Negro children were already assigned to St. John's, a school about 10 miles away, and that a bus was waiting for them. Members of the Negro delegation said Hanchey said the Melrose school was crowded; however Hanchey later denied saying this.

The group left the school after being refused enrollment and disbanded a few blocks away. Another mass meeting is slated for 7 p. m. Saturday at the Union Mission Baptist church.

Negro leaders said that they are not seeking integration of the school, only its use for Negro pupils. Their protest was against the long bus ride to St. John's school, all the way across Lake Charles.

Negro children in the Fisherville area, grades 5-8, have been assigned to St. John's, however none registered there Friday. A school bus was sent to pick up the children and several boarded it in the belief it was the Washington school bus. They got off the bus as soon as they found out it going to St. John's.

A number of mothers said at a mass meeting Thursday night that they were prepared to keep their children out of school until Sept. 12, the date of the next Calcasieu parish school board meeting, or until a solution to their problem is found.

The state compulsory school attendance law requires that children be enrolled within 10 days after the opening of the school term.

Mrs. Clara Rious has been appointed by the Fisherville community club to seek an early meeting with the school board to discuss the problem.

Prior to this year the children had attended Washington High school; however overcrowded conditions forced their move to another school. Grades 1-4 will continue to attend Washington.

The Negroes claimed "only a few" white children attended Melrose last year, and said the school was originally built for Negro youths. Hanchey said this school had 166 children last year and more were expected this year. The school capacity is 180 students.

Hanchey said the white students at Melrose could not be transferred elsewhere because all other schools were full.

At Thursday's meeting where plans were laid for the march, Rev. V. E. Washington, pastor of the New Sunlight Baptist church and a Negro civic leader, urged the group to be "orderly" in their demonstration.

The group was that and there were no incidents. After conferring with Hanchey the group left quietly.

NEGRO MARCH REBUFFED

Sought Use Of School In Their Community

LAKE CHARLES, La., Aug. 30. (UP)—School authorities Friday rebuffed a solemn band of Negro mothers who attempted to enroll their children at an all white school in a Negro community.

More than 150 mothers, led their children in an organized march to protest use of Melrose Elementary School, in the Negro community of Fisherville, a suburb of Lake Charles. They want Melrose to be designated an all-Negro school, but do not seek integration.

The woman said the Calcasieu Parish Board should turn Melrose over for exclusive Negro use. They said the board has ruled their children must go to St. John Elementary School, about 10 miles across town from Fisherville.

But Asst. School Supt. C. W. Hancey said the plan could not be altered and Negro students could not be accepted. Mr. Hancey stood at the entrance to Melrose when the Negro delegation called.

Louisianans Want School Near Homes

LAKE CHARLES, La.—A protest move, started to have white school located in a predominantly Negro area turned over to Negroes, is reportedly gaining momentum here following a futile demonstration Friday.

The movement, started by the Fisherville Community Club, is being led by the Rev. V.E. Washington, pastor of the New Sunlight Baptist Church.

Rev. Washington led a group of 150 Negroes on a protest march on all-white Melrose Elementary School which is located in a Negro community in an effort to have the school turned over to Negroes.

A Calcasieu Parrish school official reportedly told the group that Negroes could not enroll in the school because they had been assigned to another school. The Negro parents charged that the Negro school in question was ten miles away from their homes.

Leaders of the group are insisting that Melrose school be turned over to Negroes.

TEACHER FIRED IN BATON ROUGE

Political Intimidation Charge Heard

BATON ROUGE, Oct. 12 (AP)—The East Baton Rouge School Board last night fired Harold J. Frazier, Negro fifth grade teacher previously suspended, after a witness accused several board members of political intimidation.

The vote for dismissal on the recommendation of Supt. Lloyd Funchess was unanimous among the four members present. Last week, President Winston McVea, Vice President T. H. Montgomery and John Sheppard walked out of a hearing, charging the majority had prejudged the case.

Frazier, a 24-year teaching veteran, was ousted on charges of incompetency, willful neglect of duty and dishonesty.

His principal, Miss Corrine Maybruce, was chief witness against him. She charged the hearing "has been steered into a political battle and some members of my race are being used as a political battlefield."

In a long statement, she said McVea told her last June the case could involve Negro votes in a school board election, adding:

"During the conversation he told me that if the Negroes could be aroused to vote against anyone sympathetic toward the superintendent 'things would be better,' . . ."

In reply, McVea commented, "frankly, I whave never heard so many untruths in one statement."

Negro Parents Ask Reassignment of School

C. W. HANCHEY, Calcasieu parish assistant superintendent of schools, Friday hears the request of a delegation of Negro parents that the Melrose school in Lake Charles be designated a Negro school. The parents, who marched to the school in a group, contend that it is situated in a predominantly Negro neighborhood. Hanchey said any reassignment of the school would have to be made by the school board, which next meets on Sept. 12.

N.O. PUBLIC SCHOOLS HEARING IS REFUSED

Segregation Case Review Declined in High Court

New Orleans

The U.S. supreme court Monday refused to hear an appeal by the Orleans parish school board from a federal court decision declaring Louisiana's public school segregation laws invalid.

The supreme court made no comment in announcing its refusal to review the case.

A special three-judge federal court ruled the segregation laws invalid on Feb. 15, 1956, and issued an injunction restraining the school board from continuing segregation.

The school board lost an appeal from the decision in the U.S. fifth circuit court of appeals March 1.

'By No Means End of Case'

The supreme court's decision not to hear the case lets stand the ruling against 1954 Louisiana laws aimed at:

1. Requiring racial segregation in public schools.

2. Providing constitutional provisions for enforcing school segregation.

3. Providing a pupil placement arrangement under which the parish school superintendent has the authority to assign each pupil each year to a particular school.

Gerard A. Rault, attorney trying the case for the school board, said the supreme court's decision not to review the proceedings "is by no means the end of the case."

"We will avail ourselves of every right we have," he added.

Bond Is Issue

Rault pointed out that the school board has filed a motion in federal court here to have the injunction set aside. The motion will be heard June 26, he said.

The motion was filed on a technical point—that the plaintiff in the case failed to post a $1000 bond when the injunction was issued. The motion argues that such a bond is required under federal court rules.

Rault said the school board also may ask the supreme court for a re-hearing of the case, which he said is granted "under certain conditions."

Gratified—Tureaud

The suit was brought against the school board by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in behalf of a Negro minor, Earl Benjamin Bush, and some 95 other Negro minors.

A. P. Tureaud, chief attorney in the case for the NAACP, said he was "very gratified by the decision and I hope that it will be complied with.'"

Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright ordered the school board to put an end to its segregation policy "with all deliberate speed" as he issued the preliminary injunction.

The school board was ordered to stop segregation "from and after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children to . . . schools on a racially nondiscriminatory basis."

PLEA ON PUPIL PLAN LOST BY LOUISIANA

Times Pic. 6-C

WASHINGTON, June 17 (AP)—The Supreme Court let stand today a decision striking down Louisiana's pupil-assignment plan. The plan was adopted in 1954 after the Supreme Court had ruled against racial segregation in public schools.

The decision that the Supreme Court refused to review was given by the United States Circuit Court in New Orleans. It was appealed by the school board of Orleans Parish.

The Circuit Court in the same decision held invalid a 1954 Louisiana law calling for racial segregation in the state schools. The Circuit Court also said Louisiana's constitutional provisions to maintain segregated schools were invalid.

The Supreme Court made no comment in announcing its refusal to hear the case.

The Circuit Court decision said Louisiana's constitutional provisions and the 1954 law were in direct conflict with the equal-protection clause of the Amendment.

The pupil-placement law provided for the assignment of each pupil to a particular school each year by the parish superintendent. The Circuit Court said this law provided no standards for the superintendent to follow other than separation of the races.

Educators See 'Agitation' As Dangerous In Louisiana

Montgomery, Ala.

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 29 (AP)—The Clairborne Parish Principals Assn. told U.S. District Judge Herbert Christenberry yesterday that "continued harrassment of our school officials. . . by outside agitators and federal litigation" would drive the better teachers from the educational field.

The association, composed of school officials in the north Louisiana Parish (county), made public a letter mailed Judge Christenberry over the weekend.

The letter followed by 10 days an order issued by Judge Christenberry restraining Louisiana State University from requiring eligibility certificates of Negroes seeking to enter the school.

'NO COURTESY'

"Is it not true that even though you might have been in legal bounds in issuing this order," the letter asked, "the State of Louisiana should have been afforded the courtesy of answering the charges by four NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People) lawyers, who did not have the welfare of Louisiana at heart, before your decision?"

It also asked if it was not customary for a federal court to act slowly in issuing a restraining order contrary to state laws.

"It is the concern of this group that by continuted harrassment of our school officials, brought about by outside agitators and federal litigation, that our better talent will be driven from the educational field and leave our children under the guidance of educational scallywags," the letter said.

13 PERSONS SIGN

It was signed by 13 people, including Parish Superintendent F. C. Haley of Homer, Assn. President Henry Smith of Homer, and the rest of the nine princials in the parish.

Judge Christenberry issued the order on Jan. 17 restraining LSU from requiring eligibility certificates. The certificate of moral character called for the signatures of the student's school principal. A companion law would permit firing of any principal signing a certificate for a Negro student to enter a white school, with the signature proof that the principal advocated violation of state laws requiring segregation.

Supreme Court Refuses To Review La School Case

Lit. 6-29-57 Houston, Tex.

WASHINGTON, D C (NNPA) — Considerable doubt was cast upon the constitutionality of various laws passed by several southern states to maintain racially segregated public schools when the Supreme Court last monday refused to review the Orleans Parish (County) school segregation case.

The action of the Supreme Court leaves in effect the decision of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Louisiana holding invalid the Louisiana pupil assignment law and requiring New Orleans to desegregate its public schools.

THE LITIGATION involving the New Orleans schools has been in the Federal courts since Sept 5, 1952, when NAACP attorneys brought suit on behalf of a group of colored school children against the Orleans Parish School Board and the acting superintendent of schools to enjoin segregation in the public schools.

After the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, outlawing racial segregation in public schools, an amendment was adopted to the Louisana constitution making the operation of segregated schools wthin the exercise of state police power to promote and protect public morals, better education, and the peace and good order of the state.

THE AMENDMENT directed the legislature to enact laws to enforce the state police in this regard.

The legislature promptly passed provision compelling segregation in the schools and providing penalties to be imposed on local boards and individuals failing to obey its requirement.

It also adopted a state pupil assignment law. This law provides for the assignment of each pupil each year by the parish superintendent to a particular school. It also provides for appeals to the local board, then to the state board, and finally to the state district court.

AFTER ENACTMENT of these laws, the colored pupils, who had sued, asked the school board to take immediate steps to reorganize the schools on a nonsegregated basis. No reply was made to this request, but the board engaged counsel to defend it in the pending suit.

A special three-judge court was convened. It heard oral arguments on motions to dismiss and the application for a preliminary injunction.

The three-judge court held on Feb 15, 1956, that under the Supreme Court decisions in the school segregation cases, any provision of the Louisiana constitution which required or permitted segregation in public schools were invalid.

IT ALSO RULED that no serious constitutional question was presented and a three-judge court was not required. The two circuit court judges who had been designated to sit with the district judge withdrew from the case.

On the same day, Federal District Judge J Skelly Wright held the provisions of the Louisiana constitution and statutes which had been challenged, and some which had not been challenged, to be unconstitutional. He issued a decree enjoining the school board from requiring or permitting segregation in New Orleans schools.

On appeal, the Court of Appeals school segregation decisions.

1. That a Federal court can entertain a suit against the state where the laws under which a school board purports to act are invalid.

2. So long as assignments could be made under the Louisiana constitution on a basis of segregated schools, it would be a vain and useless gesture to require colored children to subject themselves to administrative hearings before a board for relief.

3. Any reasonable clasification of students according to their proficiency and health traits might well be considered legitimate within the normal constitutional requirements of equal protection of the laws, but it is unthinkable that an arbitrary classification by race because of a more frequent identification of one race than another with certain undesirable qualities would be subject to reasonable classification.

4. Attempts by law to give any official the power to assign students to schools arbitrarily, according to whim or caprice, are legal not permissible, especially if considered in light of the history of assignments made in a manner that has now been held to be unconstitutional and of the recently reaffirmed requirement of the state constitution reaffirming such unconstitutional standards, which is reinforced by the penalties against any official permitting a departure.

Supreme Court Ruling Casts Doubt On South's Last Ditch School Laws

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Considerable doubt was cast upon the constitutionality of various laws passed by several southern states to maintain racially segregated public schools when the Supreme Court Monday refused to review the Orleans Parish (County) school segregation case.

The action of the Supreme Court leaves in effect the decision of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Louisiana houldinginvalid the invalid the Louisiana pupil assignment law and requiring New Orleans to desegregated its public schools.

The litigation involving the New Orleans schools has been in the Federal courts since Sept. 5, 1956, when NAACP attorneys brought suit on behalf of a group of colored school children against the Orleans Parish School Board and the acting superintendent of schools to enjoin segregation in the public schools.

After the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, outlawing racial segregation in public schools, an amendment was adopted to the Louisiana constitution making the operation of segregated schools within the exercise of state police power to promote and protect public morals, better education, and peace and good order of the state.

The amendment directed the legislature to enact laws to enforce the state police power in this regard.

LEGISLATIVE ACTS

The legislature promptly passed an act repeating the constitutional provision compelling segregation in the schools and providing penalties to be imposed on local boards and individuals failing to obey its requirement.

It also adopted a state pupil assignment law. This law provides for the assignment of each pupil each year by the parish to a particular school. It also provides for appeals to the local board, then to the state board, and finally to the state district court.

After enactment of these laws, the colored pupils, who sued, asked the school board to take immediate steps to recognize the school on a nonsegregated basis. No reply was made to this request but the board engaged counsel to defend it in the pending suit.

A special three-judge court was convened. It heard oral arguments on motions to dismiss and the application for a preliminary injunction.

The three-judge court held on February 15, 1956, that under the Supreme Court decisions in the school segregation cases, any provision of the Louisian constitution which required or permitted in public schools were invalid.

It also ruled that no serious constitutional question was presented and a three-judge court was not required. The two circuit judges withdrew from the case.

On the same day, Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright held the provisions of the Louisiana constitution and statutes which had been challenged, and some which had not been challenged to be unconstitutional. He issued a decree enjoining the school board from requiring or permitting segregation in New Orleans schools.

DECISION AFFIRMED

On appeal, the Court of Appeals affirmed the decision It ruled:

1. That a Federal court can entertain a suit against the state where the laws under which a school board purports to act are valid.

2. So long as assignments could be made under the Louisiana constitution on a basis of segregated schools it would be a vain and useless gesture to require colored children to subject themselves to administrative hearings before a board relief.

3. Any reasonable classification of students according to their proficiency and health trait might well be considered legitimate within the normal constitutional requirements of equal protection of the laws but it is unthinkable that an arbitrary classification by race because of a more frequent identification of one race than another with certain undesirable qualities would be subject to reasonable classification.

5. The pupil assignment was further effort to stave off the effect of the Supreme Court school segregation decisions.

School Integration Plan Missing At New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS, June 18 (AP) — New Orleans school officials have no plans to integrate public schools despite an adverse action by the U.S. Supreme Court.

And a legislative segregation leader said, if necessary, Gov. Earl K. Long would be asked to call a special session of the legislature to pass new school segregation laws.

The Supreme Court yesterday declined to review a lower court decision holding Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional. The Supreme Court action leaves the lower court ruling in effect.

However, President Theodore M. Shephard Jr., of the New Orleans School Board, said "there is no planning being done for any integration of the schools this fall."

Sen. W. M. Rainach, of Summerfield, chairman of the joint legislative segregation committee and president of the state association of citizens councils, said legislative leaders plan to "come up with new legislation" to preserve segregation in the schools.

"Our plans are to exhaust all our remedies and come up with new legislation," Rainach said. "If necessary, we will call a special session of the legislature to pass new laws."

Rainach, a frequent critic of the Supreme Court's segregation rulings, said yesterday's court action came as no surprise.

"The decision was expected in view of the way the court acted originally when it threw out segregation in schools in violation of the law," he said.

The New Orleans School Board is under orders from U.S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright to desegregate schools "with all deliberate speed." 14 d(1)

Wright ordered the board to arrange for entrance of pupils in schools on a racially non-discriminatory basis, but set no time for this to be accomplished.

His order followed a ruling by a three-judge federal court holding unconstitutional the 1954 school segregation laws, including one which would allow parish school superintendents to assign each pupil each year to a particular school.

It was this ruling which the Supreme Court let stand.

Shephard said board attorneys will continue their legal battle to keep school segregation, and Gerald A. Rault, board attorney, said yesterday's Supreme Court action "is by no means the end of the case."

"We will avail ourselves of every right we have," Rault said.

He said the board already has appealed an injunction issued by the lower federal court prohibiting the board from enforcing the school segregation laws.

He said the board contended the injunction should be set aside because the plaintiff did not post a $1,000 bond as required by law. The court set June 26 for a hearing on the appeal.

New Orleans Schools Lose Race Appeal

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 3-2-57

NEW ORLEANS, March 1 (AP)—The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered New Orleans to discontinue "with all deliberate speed" segregation of pupils in public schools.

The order affirmed a ruling by Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright. The Orleans Parish School Board had appealed Wright's decision.

The appeals court did not set a specific date for the end of segregation.

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion suggested in Baton Rouge that the case should be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court. He said the state several weeks ago filed a brief as a friend of the court in the school segregation case.

The Appeals Court ruling declared Louisiana School Segregation laws unconstitutional.

The court overruled every objection raised by the school board.

Meanwhile, A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said a similar suit against segregation in Baton Rouge schools had been set for March 18 in U. S. District Court.

Appeals Court Backs Order Forbidding Segregation in Public Schools

Sat. 3-2-57

NEW ORLEANS, March 1 (AP)—A Federal Court of Appeals ruled today that racial segregation based on "sentiment, tradition, caprice, or in the exercise of the state's police power" was forbidden in New Orleans public schools.

The unanimous ruling by the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals called for integration of the schools. It backed up an order issued by Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright last year.

Since Judge Wright's ruling Louisiana has enacted new segregation laws.

Jack Gremillion, Louisiana Attorney General, declined to comment directly on the ruling, but he said he thought the school board should appeal "all the way" to the United States Supreme Court.

The Appeals Court, in a decision written by Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, said that Judge Wright required "immediate acceptance of the principle of non-segregated schools" but he permitted the Orleans Parish School Board time to put it into effect.

Classification Denied

The court ruled that "it is now perfectly clear that such classification (segregation) is no longer permissible, whether such classification is sought to be made from sentiment, tradition, caprice, or in the exercise of the state's police power."

At Knoxville, Tenn., John Gates, cafe owner, was arraigned on Federal charges of violating an injunction forbidding interference with integration at Clinton (Tenn.) High School. Segregation leader John Kasper was to be arraigned on the same charges but he did not appear.

Meanwhile, in Birmingham, Ala., Federal Judge Seybourn Lynn had under advisement motions filed by both the state and the city to dismiss a suit brought by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Baldwin, Birmingham Negroes, challenging segregated waiting rooms at trai nstations.

The Negro couple were charged with disorderly conduct for allegedly violating city segregation ordinances. Earlier this week th city dropped the charges without explanation and the state has said that any ruling by Judge Lynn would be "abstract" as no controversy now exists.

No Date for Trial Set

The arraignment of Mr. Gates at Knoxville came before Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor, who last year found Kasper in contempt of court on the ground he defied Judge Taylor's injunction by stirring up racial troubles at Clinton.

Judge Taylor indicated he would not set a trial date for Mr. Gates until an appeals court rules on Kasper's conviction and one-year prison sentence. Kasper was to be arraigned on a second charge of violating the injunction.

Kasper said in a written brief filed with the Federal appeals court in Cincinnati yesterday that his rights of free speech were infringed by the injunction.

In Atlanta, a state government official indicated that Horace Ward, a Negro, was again seeking admission to the University of Georgia Law School. Mr. Ward had sought for six years to gain entrance to the all-white institution, but when his case came to trial, a Federal judge ruled against him.

Segregation Laws Unconstitutional, Appeals Court Says

Washington D.C.

NEW ORLEANS, March 1 (AP)—The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals today declared Louisiana's school segregation laws unconstiutional and ordered New Orleans to desegregate its public schools "with all deliberate speed."

The court's opinion upheld a ruling by Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright. The Orleans parish (county) school board had appealed the ruling.

The appeals court, in an opinion written by Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, said the school board, if its shows good faith in accepting the principle of desegregation, would be allowed "such reasonable steps in the process of desegregation as appears to be helpful in avoiding unseemly confusion and turmoil."

The Appeals Court overruled every objection raised by the school board.

State Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion, informed of the ruling, said "it is my suggestion that the matter be taken all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States." The state several weeks ago filed a brief as a friend of the court in the school segregation case.

In it's decision the Appellate Court said:

"Whatever may have been thought heretofore as to the reasonableness of classifying public school pupils by race for the purpose of requiring attendance at seperate schools, it is now perfectly clear that such classification is no longer permissible (under the Supreme Court's school segregation decision) whether such classification is sought to be made from sentiment, tradition, caprice, or in exercise of the State's police power.

"From what we have said the conclusion is obvious that the state constitutional provisions as to maintaining separate schools for white and colored children is in direct conflict with the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and is void and of no effect."

Circuit Court Of Appeals Acts On Appeal

Sat. 3-2-57

NEW ORLEANS, March 1.—(UP)—A Federal District judge's decision ordering the de-segregation of New Orleans public schools was upheld Friday by the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The high court backed up last year's decision by Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright, but it did not set a time limit for de-segregating schools.

When Judge Wright ruled last year, his decision was interpreted as voiding Louisiana's public school segregation laws.

However, since his ruling, the State Legislature passed new laws to halt integration. The laws have not been challenged in court.

State Atty Gen. Jack Gremillion said he had no direct comment to make on the Circuit Court's decision. But he added that he thinks Orleans Parish should appeal to the Supreme Court.

Judge Wright's ruling came in a suit brought by Earl Benjamin Bush, Negro pupil, and others, against the Orleans Parish School Board. The Appeal Court decision was on the board's appeal of the Federal District Court ruling.

The appeal decision was written by Circuit Judge Elbert P. Tuttle with Judges John B. Brown and Richard T. Rives concurring.

Court of Appeals Takes Orleans School Case Under Advisement

Times Picayune, New Orleans, La. Sat. 1-19-57

The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals took under advisement the Orleans parish school board's appeal against a desegregation order after hearing a charge by NAACP attorney that the board has made no effort to comply with the law as expressed by the U. S. Supreme Court.

That was the action taken by Judges Richard T. Rives of Alabama, Elbert Tuttle of Georgia and John R. Brown of Texas. Representing the plaintiffs, Benjamin Bush and others, were Attorneys Robert L. Carter of New York, A. P. Tureaud and A. M. Trudeau, both of New Orleans. The board was represented by Gerard A. Rault.

In a stirring 15-minute argument in response to a question of the exhaustion of administrative remedies as advanced by Rault, Carter declared that Judge Wright's decree (root of the board's appeal fight) and injuction were in line with the Supreme Court's ruling and that the Louisiana school assignment law is entirely different from the assignment statutes in other states named by Rault.

He pointed out that under the Maryland, North Carolina and South Carolina laws, it is possible that a Negro child may go through the administrative processes and eventually wind up in the school of his choice, whereas in Louisiana the law is entirely different.

"The courts," the noted lawyer prefaced, "do not require you to exhaust administrative remedies where it would be futile.

"Under the present law in Louisiana, the superintendent of schools could not permit a Negro child to go to any other but a Negro school because he could not break the segregation laws, and not suffer as a result."

Explaining to the court that he agreed with Rault that the Supreme Court does not require integration, Carter said that if the people of New Orleans want segregation it must be completely voluntary. "But," he cautioned, "if one person does not want to be segregated he has the right to come to court."

During his arguments for the perpetuation of segregation through the so-called school assignment law, Rault encountered pointed questions from the jurists.

When Judge Tuttle asked if the constitutional provision upon which the assignment law is based does not require segregated schools, Rault pretended: "It is not a segregation act."

Judge Brown then wanted to know: "If the superintendent ordered a Negro to a white school, wouldn't he go to jail under the penalties provided in the state law for persons who violate the constitutional provision?"

Rault managed: "I don't know, maybe he would. I don't think we can assume what a superintendent is going to do. They can take that matter to the courts."

Ask School Board Again For Relief

Times Picayune New Orleans, La. Sat. 3-2-57

Parents of schools of the downtown area heard a New Orleans attorney refer to platooning as "A Frankenstein which will in the end destroy its creators." The statement was made by Attorney Earl Amedee to parents attending a Parent-Teacher Association meeting Thursday night at the Alfred Lawless Elementary School, 2330 Andry Street.

Attorney Amedee was one of a group of panelist to discuss panels "Evils of the Platoon System in the New Orleans Public Schools" and "What Can Be Done About It."

Invited to attend the meeting were parents of all schools in the downtown area with students on the platoon system. George Longe, principal of Lawless, reported that there were some 8,500 children on platoon. The breakdown of that number was: Andrew J. Bell, 985; Joseph S. Clark, 1180; Alfred Lawless, 1421; Johnson Lockett, 175; Robert R. Moton, 2,200; Macarty, 1418; McDonogh 40, 522; Nelson, 237; and V. C. Jones, 420.

Mrs. Shirley Vaughn, PTA President at Lawless, reported that on January 28 a petition addressed to Theodore H. Shepard, Jr., President, Orleans Parish School Board, Members of the Orleans Parish School Board and Dr. James F. Redmond, was presented requesting that effort be made to relieve platooning in downtown schools, which has been in practice for more than eight years.

The petition further stated that "platooning is continuously growing worse and the safety, health and well-being of our children and our teachers are at stake."

Following the first panel on the "Evils of Platooning" a mother stated that "My son is growing tired of going to school. It isn't that he is not interested and does not want to learn, but by platooning he has been forced into the company of bad boys normally he would not see."

Mrs. Vivian Crowley, a parent, stated that she had investigated the area around Andrew J. Bell school and found that the neighborhood sweetshops were the common hanging-out places for hoodlums. She further stated that "Children are molested by them going to and from school and are afraid to report the thugs in fear of bodily harm."

It was seemingly the opinion of all panelist that "Portable classrooms would be the immediate answer to the platooning of children." This recommendation, it was reported "Fell on deaf ears in the Superintendent's office." Portable classrooms were ruled out and the answer was in the construction of the Carver Junior-Senior School village, which will be constructed on the old Gaudet Industrial Normal School site recently purchased by the school board. No completion date has been announced for the opening of the schools.

"The area, below the Industrial Canal has witnessed rapid increase in population since the close of World War II. Attorney Amedee compared the position of inhabitants of that area with that of our early pioneers and settlers. "Like the makers, and developers of this great Nation, you came into a wilderness and with your own hands too, developed it into a thriving, habitable community," he said. The citizens of the Ninth Ward have had to fight every inch of the way for the necessary gains, lights, water, now enjoyed in most sections of the area. "Nothing has come voluntarily. We have had to fight through petitions and vote continuously," stated Mrs. Leontine Luke, president, Ladies Auxiliary, Ninth Ward Civic and Improvement League.

The Reverend George Burns, pastor, Church of God in Christ declared that "Children have become juvenile problems, delinquents, because of platooning." He pointed out that platooning is not the sole contributor to our juvenile problem, but it adds to it. Rev. Burns predicted that under a system of platooning our society in another ten years may be destroyed.

He further stated that the effect upon Negro children is beyond description. Rev. Burns said that children are now asking "Why must they be platooned when white children of the area are not platooned." To this the audience became still and silent for many of these platooned children had been compelled to attend the meeting with their parents and nothing was said that may have caused more "salt to be poured upon their wounds."

Mrs. Vaughn in closing announced to the parents that a meeting had been arranged on Monday night, February 25 at the Orleans Parish School Board meeting. She suggested that "Parents - mothers and fathers, march on the School Board in outward demonstration that we want platooning to end."

Others participating on the panel were Dr. Joseph T. Taylor, a parent of V. C. Jones and Dean at Dillard University, Mr. Oliver Bush, president, PTA of Macarty school. Rev. J. D. Brown was moderator.

Mrs. Ethel Young, president, PTA Council of New Orleans, spoke on Founders' Day of the Parent-Teacher Association.

New Orleans Gets U. S. School Order

NEW ORLEANS—(INS) — The Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Friday upheld a lower court decision ordering desegregation of New Orleans public schools and called on school officials to accomplish the integration "with all deliberate speed."

In its ruling, the three-judge court issued an injunction against the Orleans Parish (county) school board forbidding it to continue separating students on the basis of race. No date was set for putting the order into effect.

The Appeal Court ruling stemmed from a 1952 Federal Court decision ordering the school board to desegrate its schools.

The board, in its appeal, contended that the Negro plaintiffs could not sue the state of Louisiana; that they did not exhaust all legal means before bringing the case to federal court, and that the state's segregation laws are constitutional.

The appeal court ruled that the board had "no basis" for attacking the Federal Court desegregation ruling.

In turning down the board's arguments, the Appeal Court summed up its decision by saying:

"Therefore, we find no basis for appellant's attack on the order entered by the trial court. The able and experienced trial judge (at the original trial) gave full recognition to the administrative difficulties attendant upon changing the schools of the parish from a established pattern of segregation on account of race."

The court added that there are "matters of fundamental justice that the citizens of the United States consider so essentially an ingredient of human rights as to require a restraint on action on behalf of any state that appears to ignore them."

In Baton Rouge, Louisiana Attorney Gen. Jack Gremillion, when informed of decision, said that he would suggest that the case be taken "all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States."

Court Injunction Forbids School Race Separation

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — The Fifth U. S. Circuit court of Appeals upheld a lower court decision ordering desegregation of New Orleans public schools and called on school officials to accomplish the integration "with all deliberate speed."

In its ruling, the three-judge court issued an injunction against the Orleans Parish (County) school board forbidding it to continue separating students on the basis of race. No date was set for putting the order into effect.

The Appeal Court ruling stemmed from a 1952 federal court decision ordering the school board to desegregate its schools. The board, in its appeal, contended that the Negro plaintiffs could not sue the state of Louisiana; that they did not exhaust all legal means of aid before bringing the case to Federal court, and that the state's segregation laws are constitutional.

"NO BASIS" RULED

The Appeal Court ruled that the Board had "no basis" for attacking the Federal Court desegregation ruling.

In turning down the Board's arguments, the Appeal court summed up its decision by saying:

"Therefore, we find no basis for appellant's attack on the order entered by the trial court. The able and experienced trial Judge (at the original trial) gave full recognition to the administrative difficulties attendant upon changing the schools of the Parish from an established pattern of segregation on account of race."

HUMAN RIGHTS

The court added that there are "matters of fundamental justice that the citizens of the United States consider so essentially an ingredient of human rights as to require a restraint on action on behalf of any state that appears to ignore them."

Charge U.S. Court Erred In "Rulings"

New Orleans La.

Gerard A. Rault, New Orleans and W. Scott Wilkinson, Shreveport, attorneys for the Orleans Parish School Board Saturday filed a petition for rehearing in the Fifth District United States Court of Appeals in the school segregation case.

Sat 3-30-57

Principals in the case are the Orleans Parish School Board appellant and Earl Benjamin Bush et al the appellees.

In requesting a rehearing the attorneys for the appellant further petitioned an en banc hearing, which would require all seven judges of the 5th Circuit Courts of Appeals to convene for the rehearing.

The attorneys for the appellant contend that "The present case is one of special circumstance and quite obviously most important implication will result from the opinion issued herein by this court they may be stated as two-fold in nature, the first affecting the entire population of the City of New Orleans, both Negro and white."

It was further alleged that this case "will have devastating effects upon the public school system in the parish of Orleans."

They said that the court "erred" in the "the sovereignty of the State of Louisiana is being invaded," in its holding unconstitutional the provisions of Louisiana's Constitution and laws of the state which provide for segregation in public schools under the police power of the state and in holding that Louisiana's school assignment of pupils law unconstitutional.

The attorneys further contended that "factually and historically inaccurate assertion that the 14th Ammendment was adopted by the people of the United States."

While segregationists in Louisiana were attempting to circumvent or delay the "integration in its public schools," the United States Supreme Court in a per curiam decision on Monday dealt a "death-blow" to Virginia's policy of resistance.

The court rejected 8-0 Virginia's appeals from orders of lower federal courts enjoining enforcement of racial elementary schools had been ordered to desegregated as of last January 31 and high schools by next September. Both orders were not enforced allowing the exhaustion of appeals procedures.

Weekly 4-8

It has been expressed by both law abiding Negro leaders and liberal-minded whites that soon the "taxpayers of Louisiana will tire of the foolish spending of their tax-monies and take some action to restrain political-bigwigs who refuse to abide by the decision of the highest court of the land - "The United States Supreme Court."

Sat 3-30-57

Bond issues have been supported and voted by residents of Orleans parish for building of new schools, which has added an additional burden to the taxpayer, too. It is admitted that new schools are needed, but not as many would be necessary if immediate integration of pupils would be practiced.

Segregationists in Louisiana and throughout the South are "merely shadow-boxing with themselves and soon they, as well as their shadows, will grow arm weary and throw in the towel," predicated one well known political leader.

Lay Group Warns Of School Closure

Post & Times Herald P.7b

Sat. 3-2-57

AUGUSTA, Me., March 1 (AP) Catholic lay leaders stood firm today on their threat to close parochial schools unless the city changed its position and provided transportation for the pupils.

Washington D.C.

William H. Bean, a paper mill worker and father of six children, spokesman for the Catholic group, said 900 pupils would be shifted to public schools, already over-crowded, if the city refused to act.

City bus transportation for the parochial pupils was voted down last week by the City Council despite an advisory referendum in the last election which approved the move.

"This is not a pressure move," said Bean. "Augusta has been puting off this thing for nearly 20 years and the youngsters living on the outskirts of town need it."

He said that officials of the parochial schools would have no voice in the decision of parents to remove their children from parochial schools and enroll them in the public schools.

The Most Rev. Daniel J. Feeney, Catholic Bishop of the Portland diocese which includes all of Maine, said in Portland that he had no comment on the controversy.

Bean said that he interpreted the recent 2 to 1 vote of Augusta citizens in favor of public transportation for parochial school children as a mandate.

Mayor Lloyd H. Carey, who recently took office, said he would have no comment on the petitions until they were presented to him officially.

However, he indicated that he would not be averse to seeing the controversy brought to a legal test so the issue could be decided by the Maine courts—which so far have not ruled on public transportation for parochial students.

Court Bars Parochial Bus Riders

Post & Times Herald

Washington, D.C.

Tues. 5-7-57

AUGUSTA, Maine, May 6 (AP) A temporary injunction barred today public transportation for parochial school pupils here.

An opinion and the temporary injunction against spending any of the token $100 appropriated by Augusta's city government March 7 reached lawyer's desks this morning.

Kennebec County Superior Court Justice Harold C. Marden wrote that the injunction was issued because spending was proposed for a "purpose not authorized by the law."

Its constitutionality did not enter into the decision as proponents of such service had predicted. Justice Marden said, "It is not necessary to a decision" in the test case.

This city has been split into two camps since parents of some 600 of the 900 Catholic children in two parochial schools threatened to send their children to already crowded public schools to force the city to provide public school buses for 175 children needing transportation.

Both sides hired attorneys to plead their cases after the Catholic parents backed down on their threat.

A court hearing was held April 26.

There have been several court decisions on this and similar matters, including one by the United States Supreme Court upholding such spending as of benefit to the community rather than the private schools.

Several of the state's larger population centers particularly those with large Franco-American populations and predominantly Roman Catholic, already provide such service.

Attorneys for those favoring such transportation did not oppose issuance of the injunction, saying the original order was not precise enough for a real test.

Lawyers for the opponents, who said they wanted to see the opinion before commenting, indicated they would try for a permanent injunction.

Integration Foes Deplore Deale School Outbreak

DEALE, Md., Sept. 11—A leader of white parents protesting school integration today "deplored" window smashing violence at a newly desegregated school annex here.

Classes went on without interruption today after bricks shattered two front windows in a first-grade classroom in the early-morning hours.

The father of the single Negro boy enrolled in the 159-pupil Deale School said he will continue to send his 5-year-old son to desegregated first-grade classes. Anne Arundel County school authorities said they will go ahead with their graduated integration program, now covering the first four grades.

After school opened this morning, a delegation of five white parents called at the home of Dr. Harry N. Jones, a Negro physician whose son began attending classes at the previously all-white Deale School five days ago.

They asked Dr. Jones to withdraw his son from the school. He refused.

Mrs. Linwood Collins, a member of the delegation, said the white parents deplored" the brick-tossing and didn't know about it when they made their call. The visit to the Jones home came after a mass meeting of white parents last night.

Deale is a quiet residential community of some 2500 persons about 15 miles south of Annapolis on Chesapeake Bay. Many of the residents are Federal Government workers who commute 30 miles to Washington.

Dr. Jones, who also has offices in Washington at 1520 9th st. nw., has lived in Deale since 1952. He is the only doctor within five miles.

Last spring Dr. Jones registered his son at the Deale School annex within a quarter of a mile from his home. The nearest Negro school is about 5 miles away at Shadyside.

Under Anne Arundel County's graduated program of classroom integration, the first three grades in the 60 county elementary schools were integrated last year. The fourth grade was added this year, with the fifth and sixth grades scheduled for the next school year.

Mrs. Collins, the mother of a 6-year-old boy in the first grade at the Deale School, said the white parent group plans to take its protest against integration to the school board.

Asked what would happen if the Board rules the Jones boy should continue classes there, she replied:

"Nothing. We abhor violence, and we have nowhere else to send our children."

Because of overcrowding, the first-grade class attended by the Jones youngster and 25 white classmates has been meeting in a school annex in a former storeroom. Bricks were tossed through the two front windows of the annex and also two windows of the real estate office of Ruby Downs, who rents the space to the County Board of Education.

Downs said he connected the violence with a threatening telephone call he received last Saturday. He said the caller—whom he said he recognized by voice but refused to identify for newsmen—warned him "to get that black boy out of your building."

Anne Arundel County police took fingerprints from the bricks and footprints casts in the mud near the place where the bricks were stacked. A police cruiser was ordered to keep the school under watch tonight.

Negro Boy Scared Out Of School

News and Observer

DEALE, Md., Sept. 20 (AP)—Brick throwers, cross burners and threatening telephone callers scared a 5-year-old Nego student out of a white classroom today, apparently for the year.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin said those responsible are "misfits" and their actions are "moronic."

He declared sternly "to permit the panic that was planted in Arkansas to spread into Maryland would be a betrayal of our traditions of calmness, tolerance and respect for the law."

Violations of Maryland law, he said, "will not be condoned and there must remain no areas of even minor or implied rebellion against the Consitution of the United States."

The governor told state police to keep the situation in Deale under close surveillance "until the vandals and troublemakers are apprehended and the town returned to the peaceful calm of its custom."

Raleigh N.C.

The unwitting cause of the integation commotion in this fishing community 15 miles south of Annapolis is the son of the town's only resident physician, Dr. Harry N. Jones, a Negro. He said 60 per cent of his patients since he established practice here in 1952 are white.

Sat. 9-21-57

The doctor took his son out of the rented school room Wednesday after he reported a motorcade of whites paraded by his houses.

He made up his mind not to send the boy back after Mrs. Jones received a telephone call last night and two hours later a cross was suspended from a tree and burned.

"If these people have nerve enough to go up to my home after verbal support from the chief executive of the state and burn a cross, wouldn't they have nerve enough to do something else?" asked Dr. Jones.

The caller told Mrs. Jones "to buy a one-way ticket across the Mason-Dixon line for your family —we'll give you a week to get out."

Dr. Jones, 42, a native of Bluefield W. Va., and graduate of Howard University in Washington, said his son will be sent to another school Monday. He said he hadn't decided where or if the family might move.

The doctor expressed puzzlement over the protests.

Try To Bomb Md. Home Over Integration

EASTON, Md.—(INS)—A Home-made bomb, fashioned out of 10 sticks of dynamite, was discovered last week on the front lawn of the home of a Negro whose two children attend a formerly all-white elementary school in Easton.

Chronicle

Police said the bomb apparently failed to go off because of a defective fuse connection, but that it was capable of destroying three or four houses.

Sessions Boyd, a waiter, whose two children are attending elementary school in the Eastern Shore Maryland community for the second year, discovered the bomb.

Sat. 9-21-57

BAG SCORCHED

There was a seven - foot fuse which had burned down to within six inches of a detonator. The dynamite was in a cloth zipper bag and the inside of the bag was scorched.

Talbot County Atty. Henry Turner said he could not link the planting of the bomb with picketing of Manson Street elementary school last week, where three pickets were arrested.

Talbot County schools desegregated the first three grades of its elementary school last year, and added the fourth grade this fall.

Bomb Misfires In Front of Negro's Home

EASTON, Maryland— According to reports, the Maryland State police have joined the investigation of the attempted bombing of the home of Sessions Boyd, a head-waiter whose sons are attending an integrated school with 370 white students.

Courier

Boyd found the bomb—10 sticks of dynamite in a plastic bag—10 feet from his house Friday. Inside the house were his wife, Theresa, and their sons, Sessions, Jr., 7, and William, 6. A 7-foot fuse had gone out just 6 inches from the dynamite. A dynamite dealer said the home-made bomb was equal to a one-ton bomb. He expressed the belief that had it gone off it would have destroyed three or four of the houses in the vicinity.

Thurs. 9-19-57

The two Boyd boys are two of seven Negro students who are attending the Hanson Street Primary school, which started integration last year.

Some of the white students were kept home last year for two weeks in protest of the desegregation and about 30 adults demonstrated in front of the school at its opening this September. A man and woman carrying signs were arrested and held for the grand jury for conspiracy and another was held for jury trial on a disorderly conduct charge for using profanity.

MARYLAND PARENTS FIGHT INTEGRATION

Post & Times Herald

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 13—Attorneys of a group of parents have asked the Maryland Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, to force the Howard County School Board to maintain separate schools for white and Negro children as required under Maryland law.

In a brief filed this week they argued that the United States Supreme Court ruling under which the county began a partial desegregation of schools last fall was in error. The brief contended that the state's high court "has the residual power and right to aid in the correction of the decisions in the segregation cases."

Lower courts in Maryland have held in at least three cases that the Supreme Court ruling was the law of the land and that they had no power to uphold Maryland's law. This is the first such case to reach the Court of Appeals.

The suit was argued by George Washington Williams of Baltimore and C. Maurice Weidemeyer of Annapolis, attorneys and officials of the Maryland Petition Committee, which has been fighting the Supreme Court decision.

The attorneys contended that there had been many instances where lower courts had refused to enforce a Supreme Court decision and said Maryland's high court had authority to do so in this case. They further contended that the Supreme Court had acted "politically" and outside its legal sphere and urged the Court of Appeals to rule that the segregation decisions were illegal.

County Asks Approval of School Issue

Post & Times Herald
Washington, D.C.

Prince Georges County Commissioners moved yesterday to seek authority from the General Assembly to sell $15 million in school construction bonds and levy a county cigarette tax if the proposed state tax on tobacco is not approved.

Commissioners said $15 million would be adequate for school construction over a two-year period. The bill would also give the Commissioners full responsibility for the sale of school bonds. At present they share the administrative responsibility with the Board of Education.

The County Board of Education approved yesterday the request to the Legislature for enactment of the bond authority measure.

The stand-by cigarette tax proposal would leave the amount of the tax up to the County Commissioners. Members of the Board have indicated that the tax might amount to two cents per package of cigarettes.

Also included in the package of bills sent to the General Assembly is a proposal to double the present county tax on property transfers. This would increase the tax to $1.10. It was estimated that the increase would add $100,000 to County revenues next year.

County Commissioners dropped plans to ask General Assembly approval of a $5 tax on auto tags. They also abandoned proposals to seek a tax on racetrack admissions or a 1 per cent tax on gross receipts from betting. State law prohibits counties from levying such taxes.

Margaret M. Conant, president of the County Council of Parent-Teacher Associations, asked the Board to appoint a citizens' advisory committee to study school construction financing. Commissioners questioned the usefulness of such a group but promised to give "serious consideration" to the proposal.

Tax to Raise Teacher Pay Causes Split

ANNAPOLIS, March 26—(AP) The Senate and House started moving in different directions tonight on a pay raise for Maryland public school teachers.

The Senate approved using a 2-cent state cigarette tax and a cigar tax to finance the pay boost. The House Ways and Means Committee switched from an earlier stand on the sales tax and proposed paying for the increase through a ½ per cent boost in the income tax.

Maryland House tentatively approves mandatory 15-day suspension of driver's license after one speeding conviction. Page B9.

The House method contemplated raising salaries an average of $400 per teacher, and the Senate by a somewhat lesser amount.

The Senate Finance Committee actually stole a march on its House counterpart by reporting out its plan to the afternoon session. The Senate gave it speedy approval on voice vote, with the five southern Maryland senators and Sen. Northrop (D-Mont.) dissenting. The bill was set up for final passage Wednesday or Thursday.

'I Resented It,' School Chief Says As His Discharge Is Again Affirmed

Post & Times Herald
Wed. 4-10-57

By Ralph Reikowsky
Staff Reporter

Forbes H. Norris, ousted Montgomery County School Superintendent, yesterday accused School Board members of meddling with professional administration of the County school system.

"I didn't train to be a clerk," Norris said during an interview with newsmen. "The Board has stepped into my shoes. I surely have resented it."

Washington, D.C.

Norris' first public statement on his dismissal from the $14,500-a-year post came during a regularly scheduled Board meeting today at Rockville.

He said he does not plan to contest the Board's March 9 decision and has requested time off to find another job.

Discharge Reaffirmed

At the same time, Board members reaffirmed their decision not to renew Norris' four-year contract, which expires July 31, on grounds that they lack confidence in his administrative abilities.

Board President Lathrop E. Smith admitted that Board members "at times" stepped into administrative matters. He added, however, that "the Board found it necessary to take over too many of Dr. Norris' responsibilities."

The 59-year-old Superintendent appeared briefly before the Board at the opening of its meeting to disclaim any role in the hiring of a Silver Spring law firm to defend his interests. He also disassociated himself from efforts to get a "bill of particulars" from Board members on reasons for the firing.

Newsmen swarmed after him as he left the Board room and returned to his own office.

Encroachment Charged

Norris said his repeated clashes with Board members involved "administrative matters" tha, he said, "came within the purview of the School Superintendent rather than of the Board."

He cited a case in which Board members personally drove along a school route to determine whether traffic conditions were hazardous for school children rather than accept his staff's findings.

On this and many occasions, Norris said, "citizens' groups have pressured the oBard into administration of the schools. I resented it. I told the Board to slow down."

Norris conceder that there have been "shortcomings on the administrative side" but he blamed them on "inadequate staff."

End to Row

Yesterday's exchange apparently wrote an end to the row over Norris' dismissal. But it may have initiated a long-range county debate over Montgomery County's 5-year-old elective school board system.

Norris said a news story that appeared in the Washington Post on Sunday detailing Board crticisms of him "gave the best interpretation of the oBard's action so far."

It listed several controversial incidents that Board members felt Norris mishandled as superintendent.

Among them was last year's textbook censorship controversy; the 1955 transfer of 32 Negro pupils to Rollingwood Elementary School in Chevy Chase and suspension in January of seven Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School seniors for joining a fraternity.

Board members, in a separate press conference yesterday, elaborated on their reasons for Norris' dismissal.

"We have been forced to spend entirely too much time on Board matters," Smith said. "We don't know whether a new superintendent would correct this situation or not, but great care will be taken in choosing the new man."

Smith said he hoped to have a replacement for Norris on hand by July 31, when the Superinetndent's term expires.

Montgomery Schools Ask $33.4 Million

Post & Times Herald
Washington, D.C.
Wed. 1-9-57

By Hal Willard
Staff Reporter

Forbes H. Norris, superintendent of Montgomery County Schools, submitted a huge 1957-8 budget of $33.4 million to the school board yesterday.

The record-shattering figure is almost $8 million over what actually was appropriated for schools last year and $5 million more than a preliminary estimate made last week.

Norris' recommendations, if entirely approved would mean an increase of approximately 35 cents in thep resent county real estate tax of $2.03 per $100 assessed valuation, according to Budget Officer Newton F. Butts. However, the recommendations must stand the test of approval from the school board and the Montgomery Council.

Norris emphasized there were "almost no" luxuries in the new budget—that the money is needed to provide enough classroom space and teachers.

He cited the county's steady 5000 enrollment (increase) every year this decade and spiraling costs of building construction, land and educational equpment as the major reasons why the recommendations were "even higher" than he had expected.

The School Board hopes to finish examining the budget in detail by Jan. 21. Then, it goes to the County Council for consideration before the entire County budget is adopted April 15.

Yesterday's school recommendations came in two gigantic chunks: $21,093,900 for current, or operating, expenses and $12,300,572 for capital expenditure.

About $15.2 million of the total would come from County funds—about $3.7 million would come from State funds and about $985,000 from the Federal Government. The capital budget is 35.8 per cent above last year's and is primarily for constructing additions to schools and for two . . . or perhaps three . . . new schools.

Norris warned that the "deletion of any item" from the capital budget "will mean double sessions or sub-standard teaching conditions."

The operating budget is 27.4 per cent above last year's appropriation and includes a gigantic slice of $13,798,591 for teachers' salaries, $2,685,934 more than last year. This would be sepnt for 284 new teachers and special instructors at an average annual salary of $4628.

The cost per pupil is estimated at $334.63—or about $40 more than last year, Norris said.

The biggest single item in the budget, teacher salaries, includes raises which have been authorized but not implemented.

Other operating expenses increased over last year from 40.5 per cent, for administration, to 16.9 per cent, for transportation.

The capital budget recommends money for additions to 18 elementary schools, 10 secondary schools, Montgomery Junior College and a $1.5 million administration building.

Norris asked for about $425,000 to construct a new 10-classroom elementary school at Aspen Hill rd. and Viers Mill rd. and $1.7 million for a junior high school in Gaithersburg and $185,000 for an addition to Somerset School.

Last Saturday, Norris, working from incomplete estimates, said he thought the final budget would be about $28 million, but that figure was boosted by last-minute estimates on higher costs.

Some Maryland Parents Fighting For Segregation

Bystander
Des Moines Iowa
Thurs. 5-18-57

Annapolis, Md.—(CNS)—Though the lower courts in Maryland have held that the Supreme Court ruling is the law of the land and many schools are already integrated—particularly in Baltimore—a group of parents are maintaining that the Maryland Court of Appeals should force Howard County School Board to have separate schools for white and Negro children.

This is the first such case to reach the Court of Appeals—highest court in the state. In the briefs as filed by the attorneys for these white parents, they are arguing that the United States Supreme Court ruling was "in error."

They further contend that the state's high court "has the residual power and right to aid in the correction of the decisions in the segregation cases."

Residual Power

Behind the parents are lawyers of the original Maryland Petition Committee which has been fighting the Supreme Court decision all along. They claim that in many instances the lower courts have refused to enforce a Supreme Court decision and said Maryland's high court had authority to do so in this case. Now that theirs is the first case to reach this level, they are expecting victory.

Prince Georges County Keeps Gradual Pace In Integration

Post + Times Herald P. 47
Wed. 5-15-57
Washington D.C.

The Prince Georges County Board of Education agreed yesterday to continue for another year its "gradual, permissive" desegregation policy.

In doing so, the Board rejected a plea by the Prince Georges Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to speed up desegregation by assigning Negro students to all white schools in the County.

Hester King, president of the Chapter and head of a delegation from the NAACP, said "there has been too little integration" under the Board's present policy. Of the 6785 Negro children enrolled in county schools, 153 are now attending 17 formerly all-white schools.

Under the Board's policy, every student may attend the school nearest his home or his present school. His parents must make formal application for a transfer.

School Superintendent William S. Schmidt said only about 10 Negro students had been refused transfers during the current year. He said they had wanted to attend a school that was on double sessions. The school they had been attending was on a full-time basis, Schmidt said.

Schmidt told the delegation that racial incidents have been avoided because of the Board's "orderly and gradual desegregation plan."

He said there is no plan to place Negro teachers in all-white or mixed schools. "The Supreme Court decision applied only to students and no mention was made of teachers," he said.

'63 Date Set For Schools To Integrate

Fri. 6-14-57

BALTIMORE, June 13 (AP)—A plan calling for complete integration of Harford County schools by 1963 has been approved by Federal Judge Roszel C. Thomsen.

P. 2-A

Eleven elementary schools will be open to both Negroes and white pupils next fall, with the remaining seven elementary schools scheduled to be added to the list by September, 1958. The target date for full integration of high schools is September, 1963.

The high school classes are due to be integrated in the order in which the students graduate from desegregated elementary schools. However, Negro pupils may apply for admission to all high schools next month for the fall term.

The Negro students will be admitted only if their applications are approved by a special educational board.

Charles W. Willis, superintendent of county schools, told the judge yesterday the board would consist of five persons, including the principals of schools from which the pupil came and to which he wanted to switch. Other members would be county educators.

Willis said decisions of the board would be based on the "probability of success and adjustment of each individual pupil." He said standardized intelligence and achievement tests would be used by the board.

The proposal by Harford school officials was in answer to Judge Thomsen's April directive that the county make a recommendation for stepping up integration. The first three grades of two schools were opened for integration last fall and 15 of 60 Negroes who applied were accepted.

Maryland Counties Raise Teacher Pay

Post + Times Herald
Thurs. 6-27-57
Washington D.C.

BALTIMORE, June 26 (AP)—Most Maryland counties have taken steps to give their public school teachers a raise by next September. For some teachers it will mean as much as $600 more annually.

P. 10-B

A survey today showed that of the 23 counties and Baltimore City, 19 will have boosted their minimums, action is pending in four, and one, Wicomico, has rejected an increase.

What effect these pay raises are having on signing teachers for next school year or recruiting new ones isn't readily apparent. The State Department of Education says it does not yet have detailed reports from the counties on that.

Grounds for Rejection

Most Maryland counties have taken the bull by the horns—so to speak—since Gov. Theodore McKeldin vetoed a bill passed by the legislature earlier this year. It would have granted a $400 across-the-board raise and supplied the $10,400,000 needed through a cigarette tax.

McKeldin rejected the bill on grounds that such pay raises were the responsibility of the counties and not of the State.

At present, the State guarantees a $2800 minimum salary, but the counties and Baltimore City are well ahead of that.

Within a matter of weeks after McKeldin's veto, many counties had raised their school teachers' pay as much as $400. Others granted a 1-year raise or bonus averaging about $200 in hopes that the Legislature will overturn the Governor's veto next January.

A report released by the State Department of Education shows that some teachers in Frederick and Talbot counties can expect an additional $600 in their pay checks next year. Actually, the scales in those counties were boosted by less than that but it will take fewer years to reach the maximum.

Examples

For instance, in Frederick, beginning teachers will get $3600 in stead of $3200 and after 15 years will receive $5400 instead of $4800. The previous high was $5000 after 17 years.

In Talbot, the hike is from $3200 to $3480 for instructors in their first year, and from $4600 to $5200 for those in their 14th. The maximum used to be $5000 after 17 years.

Baltimore City, Baltimore County and the Washington suburban areas of Montgomery and Prince Georges counties traditionally have set the pace. However, action on proposed $400 raises in Baltimore City and County are still hanging fire. In both the present range is from $3600 to $6100.

The Montgomery County Council has raised its minimum from $3604 to $3800 and maximum from $5777 to $6000 after 15 years. In Prince Georges, the scale went from $3600 to $3800 for beginners and $5500 to $5800 for those with 21 years' service.

In addition to Baltimore City and county, action is pending on proposed raises in Worcester and Somerset counties. In Worcester, the Board of Education has asked for $400 more and in Somerset, $200.

Fight For Segregated Schools Losing Out

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Sat. 4-20-57

Annapolis, Md. Although the lower courts in Maryland have held that the Supreme Court ruling is the law of the land and many schools are already integrated — particularly in Baltimore—a group of parents are maintaining that the Maryland Court of Appeals should force Howard County School Board to have separate schools for white and Colored Children.

This is the first such case to reach the Copft ofg Appealsc reach the Court of Appeals—highest court in the state. In the briefs as filed by the attorneys for these white parents,, they are arguing that the United States Supreme Court ruling was " in error." They further contend that the state's high court "has the residual power and right to aid in the correction of the decisions in the segregation cases."

Behind the parents are lawyers of the original Maryland Petition Committee which has been fighting the Supreme Court decision all along. They claim that in many instances the lower courts have refused to enforce a Supreme Court decision and said Maryland's high court had authority to do so in this case. Now that theirs is the first case to reach this level, they are expecting victory.

Harford Urged To Action on Desegregation

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Fri. 4-19-57

BALTIMORE, April 19 (AP).—Federal udge Roszel C. Thomsen gave the Harford County School Board another chance yesterday to speed its process of desegregation.

"I have no desire to run the school system of Maryland or Harford County," he said, "but I've got to give people their constitutional rights."

So for the secon dtime he hesitated to issue an order to the school board to admit Negroes to the Harford schools at a faster pace.

Instead, he told attorneys to go into a huddle and try to agree on more speed.

Judge Thomsen called Harford's present plan "too vague" and at another stage told the Harford County representative "you've done practically nothing."

Last year, Judge Thomsen told Negro parents seeking the speed-up order to take their case first to the State Board of Education. The State board upheld the county in the subsequent action.

Charles H. Willis, Harford school superintendent, told the judge this was the plan of integration: Lower classes in two schools are integrated. Eleven more elementary schools will be integrated next fall, three more in 1958 and the last four in 1959.

Integration will take place in junior high by 1960 and in the high schools by 1963.

"Beyond the fall of this year, there is no plan the court can accord any legal effect," replied Judge Thomsen.

Teacher Lunch Bill Irks School Head

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Mon. 3-25-57

By Staff Reporter

ANNAPOLIS, March 20—A ranking Maryland school administrator sharply criticized today a bill to guarantee all State teachers an uninterrupted half-hour lunch period.

Prince Georges County School Superintendent William S. Schmidt termed the measure "an attempt to administer the public school system of the State from Annapolis." It was tentatively approved today in the House.

Schmidt said the bill's sponsors, Prince Georges Dels. Carlton R. Sickles and Ernest A. Loveless Jr., should have checked with school authorities "to find out what the bill would mean to school administration."

At present, said Schmidt, Prince Georges County has no funds to relieve teachers of lunch-time supervisory duty.

"Many of our students, as well as teachers, do not have half-hour lunch periods because of crowded conditions," the County educator said.

The one-sentence bill says merely:

"Teachers shall be guaranteed an uninterrupted lunch period of not less than one-half hour with no supervisory duty during that time."

Pupils in Montgomery Surpass National Norm

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Sun. 4-21-57

Montgomery County pupils are continuing to score higher than national norms in achievement tests, Maxwell Burdette, director of County educational services said yesterday.

He said results of a recent Nation-wide battery of tests used mainly to point up defects in the school program, revealed "a very creditable performance compared to national standards."

About 12,000 third, sixth and ninth grade students were given examinations last October in six subjects, and results were compared with 200,000 test scores across the country. Subjects tested were reading vocabulary, reading comprehension, arithmetic reasoning, arithmetic fundamentals, mechanics of English and spelling.

Third graders rated an average of five months ahead of the national norm. Sixth graders were 3½ months and ninth graders six months ahead on the average.

The lowest score was recorded by sixth graders in arithmetic fundamentals. Their medium score was even with the national norm.

Burdette said this "weakness" was due to the emphasis on problem-solving in Montgomery schools rather than teaching "the mere manipulation of symbols."

The sixth graders were three months ahead in arithmetic reasoning, he said, and ninth graders ranged 13 school months ahead in reasoning. He added the schools will continue to work to strengthen fundamentals.

Always the Victim

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Sat. 4-20-57

Governor McKeldin has used doubtful logic in some of his arguments justifying his veto of the teacher pay raise bill. The bill, passed by the recently adjourned Maryland General Assembly, was admittedly imperfect. But the Governor was pretty sweeping in insisting that Maryland communities must first make "every effort" to increase salaries locally, and then if they fail "maybe it will be time for the state to do something."

It is widely acknowledged that many of Maryland's teachers are woefully underpaid. State assistance is one hardly novel way of helping hard-pressed local communities. Of course, some Maryland communities are doing less than they should locally. But is it wise to penalize communities where local resources are strained to the limit for the failings of their neighbors?

Governor McKeldin is on sounder ground in pointing out the inequities of the proposed 3-cent-a-pack cigarette tax. Because this flat amount would have been added to local taxes, the result might have been unequal cigarette prices among the counties, thus encouraging bootlegging. But the teacher pay bill, flaws and all, was one of the few achievements of an otherwise uninspired legislative session. Wouldn't it have been better if the Governor had swallowed some of his objections, signed the bill, and urged modification in next winter's Assembly session? As it stands, there is the prospect of an ugly political brawl between the Governor and Assembly—with Maryland's teachers still caught in the middle.

Harford Offers Plan for Pupil Applications

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Wed. 6-12-57

BALTIMORE, June 11 (AP) Harford County school administrators today offered for Federal Judge Roszel Thomsen's approval a plan for admission of Negroes to junior and senior high.

Jack Greenberg, lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, entered a protest to the plan. The NAACP has been trying to make Harford County speed up school desegregation since last fall.

Today's proposal is an answer to a directive by Judge Thomsen in April that the county school officials make a recommendation for stepping up integration.

The proposal is for Negro students, who want to attend two upper schools restricted to whites next September, make applications between July 1 and July 15.

The two school principals would pass on the applicants.

Greenberg protested this would subject Negro applicants to "intelligence and achievement tests" which are not required of white students seeking school transfers.

Montgomery School Integration Spurred

Education Board Votes to Follow Scheduled Pace

Evening Star Washington D.C. June 5-7-57

Montgomery County's gradual integration program, the pacemaker for Maryland's 23 counties, will continue at its scheduled pace in the 1957-8 school year with at least 227 colored pupils transferring from segregated schools to join 686 colored pupils integrated in the last two years.

The county board of education voted last night to continue its policy of integrating colored pupils when space and programs are available in the schools nearest their homes.

One small amendment was made in the basic program. A transportation restriction was imposed which will in effect discourage colored students from requesting admittance to segregated schools when integrated schools are closer to their homes.

This, said Fred L. Dunn, jr., chairman of the system's Professional Committee on Desegregation, will affect very few pupils and will reduce a number of lengthy bus trips necessitated to transport pupils from down-county areas to up-county segregated schools.

Petitioners Present

The school board meeting attracted about 50 spectators, none of whom had sought permission to speak in advance of the Thursday deadline set by the board. Among the spectators were a dozen members or supporters of the Maryland Petition Committee, which has opposed integration in the county.

Only one of seven board members opposed the program. Harrison C. King declared the board is "going too fast and too far" in its integration program. He protested against what he called the lack of a full investigation of the program already in effect.

Mr. Dunn said that space will be available in schools next year to permit the transfer of as many as 430 colored pupils into integrated schools. He added that he expected only 227 would seek transfer, which must be done through parents by June 3.

Kindergarten Affected

The program will have these effects:

Kindergarten will be available to greater number of colored students, particularly in up-county schools. Mr. Dunn said he could not estimate the numbers which would be enrolled in kindergarten classes.

Three new schools will be completely integrated. They are: Potomac, expected to enroll 11 additional colored students; Glen Haven, 6, and West Rockville, with 14. Space will be available to integrate compeltely at Hillandale School if 37 colored pupils all seek enrollment there.

The shifts will release about 12 colored teachers now in segregated schools for possible assignment in integrated ones.

Three new elementary schools will enroll colored students for for the first time. The schools and probable colored will enrollment are: Weller Road, two; Wingate, five and Sherwood, which, Mr. Dunn said, will get "a few" colored pupils.

School May Be Eliminated

The program also spelled the doom of the county's last big substandard school structure, the Lincoln Junior High School in Rockville. With the transfer of colored high school students to integrated schools, enrollment at Lincoln and at Carver High School in Rockville is expected to shrink by September, 1958, to the point that the two schools can be combined, using the Carver facilities.

In effect, the program almost completes integration in the down-county area with the major integration yet to be accomplished up-county.

Mr. Dunn listed possible additional enrollment in both elementary and high schools.

Estimated Enrollment

The schools, the number of colored students now enrolled and the possible additional enrollment in September are as follows:

Colesville, 4 and 14; Burtonsville, 11 and 19; Fairland, 5 and 7; Damascus Elementary, 2 and 27, plus Gaithersburg, 8 and 31; Germantown, 9 and 4; Glen Haven, 14 and 6; Hillandale, 14 and 37; Laytonsville, 10 and 18; Olney, 14 and 62, and Potomac, 24 and 11.

Weller road, 0 and 2; Wyngate 0 and 5; West Rockville, 0 and 14. The figures do not include kindergarten pupils.

On the secondary level, comparative figures are:

Rockville junior, 3 and 32; Richard Montgomery, 7 and 20; Bethesda-Chevy Chase, 10 and 4; Montgomery Blair, 27 and 4; Belt junior, 1 and 1; Western junior, 28 and 8; Wheaten high 1 and 14; Damascus, 3 and 25; Sherwood, 19 and 60; Poolsville 16 and 63; North Bethesda, 1 and 9, and Northwood, 33 and 2. Mr. Dunn noted that he expected only 25 transfers out of the 63 possible transfers.

Board Continues Gradual School Integration Policy

Evening Star Washington D.C. June 5-7-57

The gradual integration of Prince Georges County Schools will continue next fall under the voluntary desegregation plan adopted two years ago by the board of education.

The board, at a meeting in Upper Marlboro yesterday, approved the plan it said "has resulted in an orderly and gradual program of desegregation." The plan is based on Negro students' written requests for transfer to previously all-white schools.

In recommending the plan, School Supt. William S. Schmidt said 153 Negro students now are studying in 17 mixed schools. The county has a Negro enrollment of 6,785.

Under the program, Negro children wishing to transfer to previously all-white schools from one they are attending or are assigned by boundary must state their reasons in a transfer application signed by their parent or guardian. Applications must be received in the superintendent's office by June 14.

Availability Involved

The resolution continuing the plan, states that "the policy of enrollment in the public schools of the county shall be one of individual choice subject to the availability of building facilities, transportation services and to the approval of the board of education" on the county superintendent of schools.

The board, however, reserves the right, "during this period of adjustment, to delay or deny the admission of a student to any school if it deems such action wise, necessary and in the best interest of public safety and community welfare."

All reasons for delay or denial of the transfer will be made known to the applicant.

Mr. Schmidt said he could recall only eight or 10 transfer requests that were denied last year, and the reason was that the applicants sought admission to the seventh and eighth grades of High Point High School already on double shifts. A few other requests may have been turned down because they were received after the filing deadline, he added.

There are some 230 Negro teachers employed, none teaching in all-white or integrated schools.

Hampton Conway, one of an eight-member delegation from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People appearing before the board adopted its 1957-58 desegregation policy, questioned whether this assignment of Negro teachers was in compliance with the Supreme Court decision.

Schmidt Explains

"The decision applies only to the admission of students—that this not be denied on the basis of race," Mr. Schmidt replied.

He said he thought the board has been "very permissive" in following its desegregation policy. The approved transfer requests of several Negro students last year were never carried out by the applicants, he noted.

Mr. Schmidt said there have been no classroom disturbances owing to integration. He noted that white students also are entitled to file transfer requests if they want to leave a mixed school.

The questions of Mrs. Hester King, president of the Prince Georges Chapter of the NAACP, and others in the delegation were addressed to the superintendent and the board but answered only by Mr. Schmidt. He said he gave his own opinions and past board policy. None of the seven board members offered any comment.

Clerics hit state policy as inept

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

Richmonders expressed bitter resentment Tuesday over state plans to investigate the Richmond Ministers Association, an interracial group that criticized the state's "inept handling" of the school segregation issue.

The criticism was set forth in a 1,500-word statement adopted by the association Monday. The long-awaited statement was described as a credo around which Virginians who opposed the state policy on school segregation could rally.

Shortly after the credo was made public, Del. James Thomson, chairman of the Racial Activities Committee now investigating the NAACP, said he would study the ministers' statement to see if it violates recent law regulating organizations involved in racial activities.

THE ALEXANDRIA lawmaker said the ministers "may criticize all they want" but if they are "urging legislation to foster integration or segregation, they may be getting themselves in trouble."

The Richmond ministers adopted the credo with only one dissenting vote.

They called it a "statement of conviction on race." The statement severely criticized Governor Stanley and the Virginia General Assembly for "their exceedingly inept handling of the current racial situation."

Three months in preparation by the group's executive committee, the statement said the governor and legislature "coerced their own solution without due consideration of either moral or religious teachings . . ."

"The legislature has taken long strides toward a vindictive, dictatorial way of government, foreign to our traditions and guaranteeing years of tension, if not tragedy, among citizens of Virginia."

The ministers condemned the anti-NAACP bills hastily passed by the Virginia General Assembly, and said:

"They (the legislators) have taken an interracial problem and coerced a solution without even the courtesy of including in their study group members of both races.

"They have passed this legislem relating to the youth of Virginia and coerced a solution without seeking the mind of the maturer youth involved.

"They have passed his legislation in open defiance of the Supreme Court's interpretation regarding what is the right of an American citizen."

Some 60 ministers, most of them white, attended Monday's meeting in the Central YMCA.

Segregation Bloc Wars On Maryland Integration

Washington, D.C.

DEALE, Md., Feb. 13. — A group of Maryland segregationists plan to urge state legislators to introduce separate school legislation and work for defeat of civil rights bills already in the General Assembly at Annapolis.

Sixty members of the Anne Arundel County Chapter, Maryland Petition Committee, met here last night to begin a letter campaign to their representatives at the Statehouse.

Committee members are seeking introduction of five pieces of legislation drafted by C. Maurice Weidemeyer, Annapolis attorney, and defeat of integration legislation proposed by Dels. Cole and Hatchett, both D-Baltimore 4th.

He said two legislative proposals were "stop-gap measures" which would forbid any child from being compelled to attend an integrated school and provide that any child refusing to attend could receive $100 each from county and state toward his education in a private school.

The other three proposals are joint resolutions which would ask:

- The Legislative Council to prepare an amendment to the State Constitution which would permit the people themselves to introduce legislation.
- Congress to propose an amendment to the U. S. Constitution providing that no other amendment to the constitution be construed as requiring racial integration in schools.
- Congress to propose a strong States Rights amendment.

State Loan Fund To Aid Schools

Post and Times Herald

Washington, D.C.

By Laurence Stern

ANNAPOLIS, March 2—Senate President Louis L. Goldstein said today he will propose a $350-million state borrowing fund to meet all local school construction needs during the next decade.

The measure would enable counties, now plagued by soaring interest rates on construction bonds, to cut their borrowing costs by using the state's credit.

Under the program the state would issue 15-year construction money for each county on the basis of local population.

Montgomery County's share would be $36,729,887. Prince Georges could borrow $38,365,858, over the 10-year period, Goldstein said.

The borrowing plan is a sharply stepped-up version of a $75 million state school authorization bill enacted last year by the Legislature.

Participation by counties would be voluntary.

In announcing plans to introduce the measure Monday, Goldstein took a swipe at the "tight money policy" of the Eisenhower Administration.

The Calvert County Democrat said that despite the heavy cost of municipal borrowing under GOP cretid policy, "we have a direct obligation to construct these schools at once."

Maryland's population, Goldstein added, is growing at a greater rate than ever anticipated by the school authorities or other officials in State government

Goldstein's announcement capped a busy legislative week which saw these developments:

- Maryland motorists were relieved of any possibility of paying higher license fees when both houses easily overrode Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin's first veto of the session.
- The House Judiciary Committee killed a bill to lower the voting age from 21 to 18 after one legislator mused at the hearing that Elvis Presley "might be elected president" if the bill became law.
- The House Labor Committee took under advisement a bill to enact a $1 per hour minimum wage law.
- Budget Director James G. Rennie told the governor that state departments will return to the treasury $800,000 more this year than originally estimated. This will almost offset Comptroller J. Millard Tawes' warning that the sales tax yield had been over-estimated by $1 million.

takers, although Mr. Weidemeyer says he's "satisfied 85 per cent of the Legislature and a majority of the colored people are opposed to integration of schools."

Petition Right Sought

"Some of them (the Legislators) seem to value their $1,800 political jobs more than the good of the county," Mr. Weidemeyer said. "We've pretty well concluded that unless we get results we're going to fight them in next year's elections."

There were indications this week end that at least one of the M.P.C. bills might come in. It would give Marylanders the right to petition the Legislature to introduce bills no one would otherwise sponsor.

But to get such a piece of legislation before the Assembly at least 10 per cent of the number who voted in the last general election would have to sign a petition.

This bill would be an amendment to the State constitution and even if enacted by the Legislature could not go on the ballot for approval or disapproval of the voters before the 1958 general election.

Segregationists Blocked By Maryland Assembly

Sun. Mon. 2-25-57 p. 2-1
Washington, D.C.

ANNAPOLIS, Feb. 24 (AP)—While legislatures of other Southern States enact pro-segregation laws, Maryland segregationists have run into a stone wall in their General Assembly.

"They give us a sympathetic ear and agree with us, but none of them has guts enough to introduce our bills," C. Maurice Weidemeyer complained today.

Mr. Weidemeyer, an Annapolis attorney, has been active in the Maryland Petition Committee which has been trying all session to get a five-point program before the Legislature.

Its key point is a resolution to express disapproval of the Supreme Court decision which outlawed segregation in the public schools and ask Congress to enact a constitutional amendment leaving the issue up to States.

But the M.P.C. can find no

apply to any matter voters wanted to bring before the Assembly. It is called the "right of initiative" in midwestern States which now have such practices.

Even this would delay until 1959 or 1960 questions that the M.P.C. would want to bring before the Assembly.

Mr. Weidemeyer says what the M.P.C. is most interested in is local option on the question of segregation. In western Maryland, where Negro populations are small, counties probably are concerned with segregation. In southern Maryland and on the Eastern Shore, the situation is different, he contends.

The M.P.C. also wants to reintroduce two bills which failed in 1955: to amend the compulsory education law so that no child could be compelled to attend an integrated school, and to provide a county payment of $100 and State payment of $100 to any child wishing to attend a private school for this reason.

Mr. Weidemeyer considers the program a milder and more practical approach than that taken by some other Southern States.

Members of the M.P.C. from various counties have visited the Assembly on a number of occasions since it opened January 2 to urge their legislators to get behind the bills. They wore yellow tags saying "save our schools."

On one occasion, Majority Leader Turnbull demanded from the Senate floor that they be made to register with the Secretary of State as lobbyists.

Mr. Weidemeyer concedes that time is running short for the program—the Assembly adjourns April 1—but insists "we're going to keep trying."

Maryland Parents Argue 14th Amendment Invalid

Post Sun. 2-3-57 p 4a

Washington, D.C.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 2 (AP) The validity of the 14th Amendment was challenged yesterday in an appeal filed with the Maryland Court of Appeals by parents who want racial segregation continued in the public schools.

Twenty-eight parents and 44 children appealed from Judge James MacGill's dismissal of their suit filed in Howard County Circuit Court. The suit contended the County Board of Education was bound under the Maryland Code to maintain segregated schools.

The parents and children were represented by attorneys George Washington Williams and C. Maurice Weidemeyer and supported by the Maryland Petition Committee.

Among the 15 arguments in the printed brief presented to the appellate court were these:

- The 14th Amendment has never been properly ratified by three fourths of the states.
- The meaning of the Amendment has been distorted and erroneously applied by the Supreme Court in its rulings outlawing school segregation.
- State courts have the right to rule on segregation cases despite the Supreme Court order, if they believe the high court's decisions "destructively affect basic institutions of our Government."
- The Supreme Court, in its segregation rulings, usurped legislative functions and took on duties of a "constitutional convention" for political reasons.
- The court's decisions discriminate against white children.

The Court of Appeals was asked to "force a reconsideration of the 14th Amendment, and its meaning in the instant subject."

Wants six more years to integrate

Afro-American

Post 3-9-57

BALTIMORE

The Harford County Board of Education wants "six more years" in which to complete its gradual plan of integration.

This was one of the principal items to emerge from an all-day session on Wednesday before the State Department of Education, which was hearing complaints of discrimination filed by parents of children living in Havre de Grace, Bel Air and Edgewood.

The parents appealed to the board to admit their children to schools located near their homes.

The board took the request under advisement and announced that it would give a decision at a later date.

TESTIMONY AT the hearing indicated that children travel an average of 14 miles a day to attend school even though other schools are from a block to a mile away from their homes.

In defense of the present six-year plan, Charles W. Willis, county superintendent, said:

"A great influx of people from the South has made gradual desegregation necessary" in the county.

ANSWERING THE county's plan for gradual integration, Mrs. Juanita J. Mitchell, attorney for the NAACP, declared:

"There is nothing that would warrant six years for the Board of Education to complete integration.

"The constitutional rights of these students cannot yield to such local conditions as 'overcrowding.' If they (Harford County) have given inferior education to colored students, they cannot justifiably perpetuate it by segregation."

Referring to the testimony from county officials which favored the slow approach, Mrs. Mitchell said:

"Nothing has been shown to warrant a delay on integration on all levels."

MRS. MITCHELL, Tucker Dearing and Robert B. Watts, NAACP attorneys for the plaintiffs, charged "unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious discrimination against colored children" in Harford County.

The charges grew out of the county's actions in beginning integration in September of last year but only on a limited scale in the first three grades of two schools.

As a result of this policy only 15 out of 60 applications were approved from colored pupils who wanted to transfer to schools near their homes.

FOLLOWING THIS refusal, four of the parents filed a suit in Federal Court before Judge Roszel C. Thomsen who ruled they would have to take the matter to the State Board of Education, exhausting what he called "all administrative remedies" before the court could act.

It was with this background that the board hearing opened on Wednesday morning with some 30 persons in attendance.

Mr. Willis, the superintendent, admitted that he had rejected 45 out of 60 applications from colored children for transfers and then made a plea for "gradualism" as he said:

"We don't have racial tensions in the county and we have been trying to keep it that way."

MR. WILLIS then revealed that the County Board of Education had decided recently to extend integration in the schools already having partial desegregation, from grades one through six.

The two schools are the Edgewood Elementary School and the Halls Cross Roads Elementary School in Aberdeen, both located in areas with integrated housing.

"Children in these areas are already living in integrated housing, and the adjustments will not be so great as in the rural areas of the county where such relationships do not exist," Mr. Waller said.

WENDELL D. ALLEN, chairman of the State Board of Education, asked the plaintiffs whether in the matter of integration "there should be a half or part of a loaf, or a whole loaf distributed at one time."

He said that the "ship of integration" is "beset on one side by intolerance and on the other side by impatience," and asked the plaintiffs to "put yourself in the place where the board (Harford County) is."

In the final summation, Mr. Dearing, counsel for the plaintiffs, answered Chairman Allen:

"There has not been one iota of proof that there are hostile groups in Harford County.

"Their plan does not go far enough. Based on the social relationships, there should have been a whole loaf."

Montgomery Leading In Student Integration

Post and Times Herald

Montgomery County will admit 993 Negro pupils to 51 public schools when classes begin next week.

The suburban Washington county ranks first among the more populous counties of Maryland and Baltimore City in the percentage of Negro students assigned to mixed schools this year.

Montgomery's two-year-old desegregation program will be extended this Fall to nearly a third of the county's 3017 Negro pupils.

Only eight of Maryland's 23 counties—seven on the tradition-steeped Eastern Shore—have failed to begin desegregation.

Prince Georges County expects to enroll 230 Negro pupils in 20 schools this fall under its voluntary desegregation program. Last year 155 Negroes attended 20 county schools.

In 15 counties and Baltimore City (Garrett County is not counted because it has no Negroes in the public school system), desegregation is progressing "gradually but satisfactorily," said Dr. David Zimmerman, assistant state superintendent of schools.

At the start of the 1955-56 school year, 12,894 Negro students were attending previously all-white schools—11,903 of them in Baltimore City and 991 in the counties.

Last September, 20,936 Negro students were enrolled in mixed schools—19,209 in Baltimore and 1727 in the counties.

Starting next week, when the 1957-58 school year begins in most areas, estimated enrollments show more than 22,000 Negro students will be attending classes with white students—2385 of them in 14 counties and the indefinite balance in Baltimore City. The 22,000 represents about 19 per cent of Maryland's Negro school children, and is about 1064 more Negroes than had been integrated at the close of school last June.

Although eight counties have not admitted Negroes to classes with whites, Calvert County, where Negroes make up 51.8 per cent of the total school enrollment, remains the lone county without an announced plan for beginning integration.

Kent, Queen Annes, Caroline, Dorchester, Wicomico Worcester and Somerset counties all have said they will consider Negro applications for transfers to white schools at varying grade levels.

But with one exception, all say they have received no applications.

The lone exception is Wicomico County which for the second year received one application—from a student who was denied transfer to a white school last year and is expected to be denied it again this year.

Talbot, which admitted nine Negroes to the first three grades of two schools last September, lost three of them when one family moved out of the county. Three more transfers have been accepted for this year. So nine of the county's 1269 Negro students—32.7 per cent of the total school enrollment—again will be attending white schools. This year they will be spread over four grades instead of three (Cecil County, with 16 Negroes attending a school serving the integrated Naval Training Center at Bainbridge last school year, will have about 20 Negroes in white schools next week.

Calvert County has taken no public step toward desegregation since collapse two years ago of a plan for gradual desegregation in the spring of 1956.

No transfer applications have been received from Negro students. None has been asked for.

A total enrollment of 3683 is expected with than half, or 2154, Negroes.

The St. Mary's school board announced it would consider transfer applications for the elementary grades, one through six, where administratively feasible. The deadline for applications was July 1. Some were received. Some have been approved and Letti M. Dent, county superintendent, estimates less than a dozen Negroes will attend heretofore all white schools this year.

Charles County, with the second largest percentage of Negro students in the state, 45.5 per cent, will again have five Negroes in the Indian Head School—the same five who were accepted last fall.

Allegany, with only 270 Negroes in a total estimated school enrollment of 15,350 for September, is more than half way down the road to complete desegregation with 170, or 63 per cent of its Negroes, enrolled in mixed schools.

Anne Arundel had 77 Negro students in the first three grades of 13 desegregated schools last year. Dr. David S. Jenkins, county superintendent, says that until classes begin it will be impossible to tell how many additional there will be this year. The fourth grade has been added to the county's integration program.

Howard County, which approved nine Negro transfers in the first six grades last year will have nine again.

Carroll County started the 1955-56 school year with 16 Negroes in two schools, but nine left school. It will take five more this year for a total of 12 out of a county-wide Negro enrollment of about 560.

Frederick County has desegregated all but six schools and officials say the number of Negroes attending mixed classes this year will more than triple, 170 compared to 49 last year. The county expects a total enrollment of 13,330, including 1197 Negroes.

Washington County expects the same number of Negroes, about 155, to attend desegregated schools this year. The county has only 382 Negroes out of a school population of about 17,260.

Baltimore County, with 385 Negroes integrated in about 60 of its 90 schools last year, will extend its desegregation program to all but seven schools. It expects to have 633 Negroes in mixed classes, or about 28.7 per cent of the 4062 Negroes in an estimated total enrollment of 73,880.

Harford County, confronted by a Federal Court directive to speed up its integration is expecting between 35 and 40 Negroes in four grades of mixed schools this fall. Fourteen Negro students attended three grades in otherwise white schools last year.

Last year in Baltimore City's school system, 19,209 Negroes attended 80 mixed schools. This year there will be more Negroes in mixed schools, perhaps 500 more or as many as 2000.

The estimated total enrollment is 160,918, an increase of 5922 over last year and 5270 of the new students are Negroes. But school officials cannot honestly tell at this date how many additional Negroes will be in integrated schools.

The reason? Statistics are no longer kept according to race.

Held for Trial In Easton Integration

Post and Times Herald Washington D.C.

EASTON, Md., Sept. 6 (AP)—Two persons were held today for grand jury action on charges of conspiracy and along with another for a jury trial on disturbing the peace in connection with demonstrations against integrated school classes yesterday.

L. Francis Berry, 52, and Mrs. O. N. Andrew were held for the grand jury on three charges of conspiracy. Henry P. Turner, county prosecutor, asked for a trial by jury of them and Lester Chance, 39, of disorderly conduct charges.

Leonardtown Starts Integration in Schools

Post + Times Herald P. 13-A Wed. 8-28-57

LEONARDTOWN, Md., Aug. 27 (Special)—The St. Mary's County Board of Education announced today that four Negro pupils would be admitted to previously all-white schools when schools open Sept. 5.

Washington D.C.

The Board said its approval of the four requested transfers followed its policy of beginning voluntary desegregation in elementary schools this September and in high schools next year.

Two of the Negroes will attend Frank Knox School at Lexington Park, adjacent to the Patuxent Naval Air Station; the third will attend Great Mills School and the fourth Leonardtown School. All are sixth-graders.

The Board announced three requests by Negro high school students for transfer to white high schools had been rejected in accordance with the desegregation policy.

The Board had been under attack by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the parents of 66 Negro children who claimed last year the county had no plan for integrating its schools. The complaint was dismissed by Federal Court on July 9 last year on the grounds the NAACP ha dnot exhausted its right of appeal to State authorities. The St. Mary's Board of Education then announced its voluntary desegregation program on July 31 last year.

Anne Arundel Board Sticks to Integration

Post and Times Herald Wash. D.C.

ANNAPOLIS, Sept. 27 (AP)—The Anne Arundel County Board of Education today took note of segregation talk from Deale, Md., and said it "regrets the actions of the Deale citizens in their effort to interfere with the board's program and to violate the law of the United States."

The board's statement reaffirmed its policy of integration for Anne Arundel county schools despite the forced withdrawal of a 6-year-old Negro boy who enrolled in a white school at Deale. It expressed hope those responsible would be arrested and prosecuted.

Father Withdrawing Boy After Threats in Deale, Md.

P. C-3

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 18 (UP)—Dr. Harry N. Jones said Wednesday he was withdrawing his 6-year-old son from the Deale elementary school where the youngster was the lone Negro in the twenty-six-pupil class.

New York

Since the boy enrolled early this month, there have been threats of violence and classroom windows have been shattered.

Post 9-20-57

Mr. Jones maintained he was not withdrawing the boy because of fear but because he did not want to expose "my friends of both races" to repercussions.

He announced his decision after having conferred here with Wilbur Wade, county police chief, and other officials.

WINDOWS SMASHED IN ONE-ROOM SCHOOL

Maryland Board Pledges Negro Aid In Integration

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 19 (AP)—A school official said today if a Negro doctor sends his son back to an integrated school the board will do everything it can to prevent "any retaliatory action against him."

Dr. Harry N. Jones yesterday withdrew his 5-year-old son from a newly integrated one-room school at Deale.

His action came after windows at the school were smashed and a "motorcade" of white men drove by his home.

The Jones boy was the only Negro student in the 26-pupil first grade class which meets in a rented store.

Dr. Richard D. Weigle, president of the Anne Arundel County Board of Education, said today the board "takes a serious view of the action of intimidation upon the part of a small group of Dr. Jones' fellow citizens at Deale."

Weigle's statement said that should Jones decide to reinstate his son "the board wishes to assure him that it will use all means of its disposal to prevent any further disruption of the school's program or any retaliatory action against him and his family.

"Regardless of Dr. Jones' decision," the statement continued, "the board will do all in its power to apprehend the individuals responsible for damage to the rented school property. It will prosecute to the full extent of the law for obstructing operation of the county school system and for forcibly interfering with the orderly process of desegregation . . ."

Weigle said all the members of the board approved the statement.

After windows were smashed in the school, a delegation of three white women and two men called on Dr. Jones and asked that his son be removed from the school. Jones referred them to the Board of Education.

Yesterday he announced he withdrew his son from the school "for fear of repercussions against both whites and Negroes who supported the boy's right to attend the school."

Maryland Holds 3 Demonstrators For Grand Jury

EASTON, Md., Sept. 6 (AP)—Two persons were held today for grand jury action on charges of conspiracy and along with another for a jury trial on disturbing the peace in connection with demonstrations against integrated school classes yesterday.

L. Francis Berry, 52, and Mrs. O. N. Andrew were held for the grand jury on three charges of conspiracy. Henry P. Turner, county prosecuter, asked for a trial by jury of them and Lester Chance, 39, on disorderly conduct charges.

All three appeared before magistate Charles E. Wheeler without a lawyer. He had to transfer the conspiracy charges to the grand jury because the potential penalties are beyond his jurisdiction.

There was no demonstration this morning on the second day of classes at three integrated elementary schools. Henry A. Spies, president of the Talbot County Citizens Assn. which had formal opposed integration, said there are no plans for any.

Progress in Third Year

Integration Is Extended In Nearby Md. Counties

By Jean B. Jones
Staff Reporter

Schools in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties opened last week for their third year of integrated classes. For the third year, things went smoothly.

Integration was extended to more students and more schools this year following the gradual expansion plan of the past two years.

In both Counties some 344 Negro pupils are entering mixed classrooms for the first time. A total of 1183 Negro pupils are now attending formerly all-white schools. In all, 69 of 212 schools are integrated.

Montgomery County leads the State of Maryland in the percentage of Negro students assigned to mixed schools this year.

Here, about 963 Negro pupils are attending 51 of the County's 102 schools. Last year, 686 went to 49 schools. During the first year of the program, 490 Negro students attended 23 one-time white schools. Of 61,953 pupils in County schools this year an estimated 3017 are Negroes.

"All Quiet" in Poolesville

This year Poolesville School in Montgomery County reported "all quiet." This was the only school last year in the nearby Maryland area where active hostility toward integration cropped up.

In Prince Georges County, 18 of its 110 schools, 8 secondary and 10 elementary, will house 220 Negro students this year. An estimated 7000 of its 55,118 pupils are Negroes.

Two schools were added to those integrating last year, but one, Mount Rainier Junior High, had no applications this year. In 1956-1957, 153 Negro youngsters were in mixed classes; in the first year, 65 went to 8 schools for the first time.

Integration of teachers has moved slowly in Montgomery County and not at all in Prince Georges.

In Montgomery, the number has risen from 6, to 13, to 14 Negro teachers in mixed or white classes over the three years. Prince Georges reports no applications for transfer from Negro staff members.

From each County, the calm heralding integration in classes has been attributed to planning, consultation with administrators, teachers, parents and pupils, and carefully restrained expansion.

Slow in Prince Georges

Prince Georges County School Superintendent William S. Schmidt explains "integration has been slow and gradual with no attempt made to coerce either race into transfering or not transfering. In line with Board of Education policy, local feeling has been respected."

The Board of Education has "reserved the right to delay or deny applications for transfer where in its judgment it would work to the detriment of public welfare." Pupils seeking to transfer must now write to the Superintendent, who passes on each request.

In Montgomery County, a school official attributed a smooth operation to careful discussion of all plans with those concerned. Negro children may request transfer from one school to another in writing. This request is then reviewed by the Superintendent's Professional Committee on Desegregation and discussed with principals of schools involved in the transfer.

Applications are denied where schools are overcrowded or the instructional program offered is not suitable, the official said. The whole process was described as "a lot of work with P-TAs and in special conferences."

In both Counties, the School Board reserves a veto power on the Administration's decisions.

School Windows Smashed, Cross Burned

3 Detectives Assigned to Investigate Integration Disorders in Deale, Md.

Post and Times Herald

DEALE, Md., Sept. 23 (AP) Anne Arundel County's police chief said today three detectives have been assigned to this area in an effort to find out who was responsible for acts which forced removal of a 6-year-old Negro boy from a white school last week.

"We're going to get to the bottom of it," Chief Wilbur C. Wade declared. "I don't care how long it takes."

Wade made the statement in answer to criticisms that his department had been lax in attempting to solve the case.

He said George Wellham, captain of detectives at county police headquarters, and Lt. Max Muller and Cpl. Maxwell Frye have been assigned to the case.

Wade said they are attempting to learn who was responsible "if possible" for the smashing of windows in a first grade annex to Deale elementary school, the burning of a cross in front of the office of Dr. Harry N. Jones, and threatening telephone calls received by the Negro physician.

Dr. Jones withdrew his 6-year-old son from an all-white first grade last week as a result of the activities and said today he will enroll the boy in a District of Columbia school.

He said he had received no more threats from anonymous phone callers, but that he did get a number of calls last night and one this morning from someone who hung up the receiver when he answered.

Cross Burners Win Against Negro Doctor

Sun. 9-22-57

Constitution

DEALE, Md. (AP)—Dr. Harry N. Jones, bowing to the pressure of brick-throwing, cross-burning segregationists, made plans today to enroll his 6-year-old son in another school.

"It's hard to understand, but maybe one of these days it won't be this way," the 42-year-old Negro physician said of the events which had swirled around him since he enrolled his boy in a nearby white school Sept. 5.

He was talking on the telephone to Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin while newsmen waited in his office. Jones had withdrawn his son from a newly integrated schoolroom following a series of window-smashing, telephoned threats and the burning of a cross in his yard.

McKeldin promised him state police protection if he wanted to put the boy back in school and apparently was sympathizing for the turn of events. The governor proclaimed in a public statement that it was the "moronic" work of community "misfits" and would not be tolerated.

"It's just as shocking to me as it is to you, governor," Jones said. "I've been familiar with this area for 20 years. Up until the last five days I couldn't believe what was happening."

During that time:

1. Bricks smashed the windows of the rented store where Harry Jones Jr. attended first grade with 25 white children.

2. Threatening phone calls came to the Jones residence advising the family to "buy a one-way ticket" across the Mason-Dixon line" and you had better sit on the back seat of the bus."

3. A "motorcade" of whites drove past Jones' house late at night.

4. A kerosene-soaked cross was burned Thursday night by a tree in front of Dr. Jones' office.

5. He received a notice from Anne Arundel County zoning authorities yesterday that his two-year-old office was being operated in violation of zoning laws and he had 15 days to get a special exemption or close it.

Negro Doctor Removes Son From School After Threats

DEALE, Md., Sept. 20 (AP)—Brick throwers, cross burners and threatening telephone callers scared a 5-year-old Negro student out of a white classroom today, apparently for the year.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin said those responsible are "misfits" and their actions are "moronic."

He declared sternly "to permit the panic that was planted in Arkansas to spread into Maryland would be a betrayal of our traditions of calmness, tolerance and respect for the law."

Violations of Maryland law, he said, "will not be condoned and there must remain no areas of even minor or implied rebellion against the Constitution of the United States."

The governor told state police to keep the situation in Deale under close surveillance "until the vandals and troublemakers are apprehended and the town returned to the peaceful calm of its custom."

Sat. 9-21-57

The unwitting cause of the integration commotion in this fishing community 15 miles south of Annapolis is the son of the town's only resident physician, Dr. Harry N. Jones, a Negro. He said 60 per cent of his patients since he established practice here in 1952 are white.

Montgomery

The doctor took his son out of the rented school room Wednesday after he reported a motorcade of whites paraded by his house.

He made up his mind not to send the boy back after Mrs. Jones received a telephone call last night and two hours later a cross was suspended from a tree and burned.

McKeldin Castigates Deale Cross-Burners

Post and Times Herald

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin castigated cross-burners in Deale, Md., yesterday as "community misfits" and alerted State Police to guard the home of a Negro physician forced to withdraw his son from an integrated classroom.

The Governor's statement came after a 7-foot-high, kerosene soaked cross was burned on the front lawn of Dr. and Mrs. Harry N. Jones Thursday night.

The cross-burning followed a series of threatening phone calls and a brick-tossing since Dr. Jones enrolled his 6-year-old son, Harry, Jr., at the eDale Elementary School as the only Negro pupil. He withdrew him from school Wednesday.

Sat. 9-21-57

Yesterday, at McKeldin's invitation, Dr. Jones went to the Governor's office in Annapolis.

After the hour-long visit, the Ne gro physician reported McKeldin promised to use all the powers of his office to quash the anti-integration flareup in Deale.

Earlier, the Governor making his second statement in as many days on the Deale situation, scored the "moronic maneuvers" of a "few community misfits seeking a moment in the light of something—even the dim light of the symbol of prejudice and hatred."

State police, McKeldin said, would keep the Jones home and the nearby school annex—where two windows were smashed by bricks Sept. 11—under 24-hour surveillance.

Although McKeldin stressed that the anti-integration disturbances do not have "community approval," he said they were dangerous "to the extent that they could incite others of like mentality to join in the activities . . ."

A neighbor, Mrs. Charles Trigg, first spotted the cross burning on the Jones lawn about 50 feet in front of a new home the physician is building. The unfinished building blocked a view of the cross from the house where the Jones family now is living.

Deale, Md., embroiled in a school integration controversy that has drawn the fire of Gov. McKeldin, will be profiled by Staff Reporter Elsie Carper in a picture-story appearing Sunday in The Washington Post.

Easton Bomber Search Extends Into Delaware

P.A.11 Post and Times Herald

EASTON, Md., Sept. 17 (AP) The search for a bomber who planted 10 sticks of dynamite in front of a Negro home here has spread into Delaware, investigators said last night.

The bomb was found Friday on the lawn of Sessions Boyd, 57, whose two sons attend a newly integrated primary school. It was discovered after a seven-foot fuse had burned to within six inches of the dynamite before fizzling out.

City, county and state police said after a meeting last night they believed the bomb "was not a hoax" but misfired because of faulty mechanism.

"The investigation has revealed several suspects," they said, and added that more than 12 plainclothesmen working around the clock had extended the bomber hunt into several Maryland counties of the Eastern Shore, as well as into Delaware.

The FBI laboratory has been enlisted to examine component parts of the bomb," they said.

Fuse Fails To Set Off Dynamite

EASTON, Md., Sept. 13 (AP).—A Negro father of two children attending a formerly all-white elementary school found a home-made bomb of 10 sticks of dynamite on his front lawn this morning.

Sessions Boyd spotted a plastic picnic bag in front of his house. When he pulled the zipper, he saw the dynamite and called police.

A Maryland State Police sergeant dunked it in a bucket of water.

Pit. 9-14-57

FUSE WAS SET OFF

Thomas Messick, a dealer in dynamite, said the explosives had the potential force of a one-ton bomb and would have destroyed or severely damaged three or four of the frame row houses on Graham st., where it was found.

Messick said the dynamite probably failed to go off because of a faulty fuse. The inside of the bag was scorched, indicating the fuse had been set off.

Protests against integration of elementary schools in Talbot county have been made by a white citizens association. However, no demonstrations have been staged since school opened a week ago yesterday when three pickets were arrested.

The Boyds' two children are attending the Hanson street elementary school where the demonstrations were staged. Talbot county opened its first three grades to integration last year and expanded it to the fourth grade this year.

Philadelphia

CALLED 'LOCAL JOB'

Police Chief William H. Wilkinson said the attempted bombing "looked like a local job."

Boyd first saw the gunmetal gray plastic bag at 6:45 A. M. Police theorized it had been left on his lawn during the night.

Messick said he believed both the dynamite and fuse caps were old. They have a "life" of about two years, he said.

Boyd is head waiter at the Tidewater Inn, a widely known eating place on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

'A Dirty Deale' in Deale is question of minister

"I believe in integration as the moral right of every individual to be received by God and man according to his merits, not his color."

The Rev. Curtis Crawford, minister of the Annapolis Unitarian Fellowship, spoke thusly last week as he pegged his sermon to recent integration incidents in Deale, Md., which resulted in Dr. Harry N. Jones withdrawing his 6-year-old son from a white school.

The minister asked in his sermon, "A Dirty Deale?"

This question, he said, could only be answered by the people in Deale.

Afro American 14 Oct 57 Md.

"THUS FAR," the Rev. Dr. Crawford said, "their answer has been yes. They profess peaceful intentions but achieved their ends with the help of threats and intimidation.

"They complain that the Supreme Court and the Federal Government are unfair and demonstrate their conception of fairness by ganging up on a fellow citizen and driving him out of the community."

Baltimore Sun Oct 13 57

He said that if they would make their answer no, "they will renounce force and the threat of force in their fight against integration . . . make it clear they mean to see arrested those who destroyed school property, who burned the cross and who threatened Dr. Jones by telephone . . .

"Assure Dr. Jones that should he return the community wil ltolerate no violence t ohis family nor harrassment to his clients . . . (and) give those who admire Dr. Jones the same freedom from slander which they cherish themselves."

Dynamite sticks hid near house

EASTON, Md. — "My children are going to stay in school." Afro-American

This calm declaration came from a young mother of two robust boys attending an integrated school here after her husband discovered a plastic bag containing 10 sticks of dynamite in front of their home early Friday. p 1

Mrs. Theresa Boyd, a handsome and determined matron, told the AFRO, Saturday, she has no intention of transferring her children, Sessions Jr., 7, and William, 6, from Hanson St. elementary school, now in its second year of integration. Sat. 9-21-57

THE UNEXPLODED dynamite — enough to wreck several houses in the colored neighborhood — was found by Sessions Boyd Sr. A 7-foot, 4-inch fuse had burned to within 5 inches of the detonating cap.

According to Mrs. Boyd, four children attending the nearby integrated school reside in the immediate vicinity

Chief of Police William Wilkinson, who called in State Troopers to help investigate the case, said Saturday that no arrests had been made.

When asked by a reporter what precaution had he taken to protect the people in the area where the home-made bomb was found, Chief Wilkinson said: "We're keeping them under constant surveillance."

Baltimore

THIS COMMUNITY was the scene of a short lived demonstration by members of the Talbot Citizens Association when a total of seven children enrolled in two integrated elementary schools here on Sept. 5.

Three segregationists were arrested for violating a ban on picketing the schools on opening day.

"Yesterday I didn't feel anything," said Mrs. Boyd, explaining her reaction to the bomb scare.

"I was a little nervous, but I wasn't scared, I mean real scared. Any time somebody mentions dynamite you get a reaction from it. I believe it got to me more today than it did yesterday."

Mrs. Boyd said she was readying her boys for school when her husband told her of the discovery. Sat. 9-21-57

"When he found it they (the boys) were eating their breakfast and I was packing their lunch," she related. "And I continued to pack their lunch. I sent them right on out the back door. I sent them right on to school."

When asked whether the bomb-scare had any reaction on her boys, Mrs. Boyd replied, "None, whatsoever."

MRS. BOYD, a native of Virginia, has resided in Easton since she was nine years old and attended Moton High School here. Her husband is the head-waiter at the Tidewater Inn here.

When asked whether she was active in the Talbot County NAACP Mrs. Boyd's emphatic answer was, "Yes, indeed."

The Rev. H. E. Anderson, pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church and president of the local NAACP, said things in Easton were "calm at the moment."

The Rev. Mr. Anderson said many of the colored people in Easton "were pretty nervous" when the explosives were first discovered in front of the Boyd's home, a block from where he resides.

"We're not thinking about taking anybody out," said the Rev. Mr. Anderson. "That's the last thing were going to do."

The minister praised the police action in the bomb-scare incident.

"I think we have excellent protection," he said.

The Rev. Mr. Anderson explained that most of the people in the area know that he is president of the local NAACP.

"I've never been affronted at all," he related.

THIS COMMUNITY of 6,800 was the first Eastern Shore town to begin integrating the schools on a step-by-step basis.

Last year the first three grades were integrated and this year one lad, 9-year-old Charles (Peter) Tarrant, entered the fourth grade at Idlewild Avenue Elementary school.

Two persons were arrested and charged with conspiracy during the brief anti-integration demonstration here when the schools opened. They were L. Francis Berry, a warehouse operator, and Mrs. O. N. Andrew.

The case against the pair is expected to be presented to the grand jury when it convenes in late November, according to Chief Wilkinson.

A third man arrested during the demonstration, C. Lester Chance, was fined $25 and costs for disorderly conduct, a charge also facing Mr. Berry and Mrs. Andrew.

When the Hanson Street school was integrated, last fall, approximately 100 white pupils were kept out of school. They returned, however, in little more than a month.

This year no one expected any difficulty until after segregationist Bryant Bowles arrived here shortly before the school term started.

Will enroll son in D. C. doctor says

Afro-American p. 1 14d(1)

DEALE, Md. — Dr. Harry N. Jones, physician, has withdrawn his 6-year-old son, Harry Jr., from the formerly white public school here and says he will enroll him in Washington. Sat. 9-28-57

Dr. Jones withdrew the child from the first grade after receiving threats by telephone, mail, having a cross burned in front of his home and seeing 12 carloads of white men drive past his home with rifles.

Threats had been made to bomb the school. Declaring "There'll be no Little Rock in Maryland," Governor Theodore R. McKeldin offered the Jones police protection around the integrated school after the school building was damaged with bricks and his family was threatened.

Crosses were burned in front of the doctor's home and in front of Government House, the official residence of Gov. McKeldin, apparently because McKeldin had offered police protection to Dr. Jones and his family.

DEALE, Md., Sept. 20 (AP).—A flaming 6-foot cross was discovered last night in front of the home of Dr. Harry N. Jones, a colored doctor whose son was withdrawn from a newly integrated elementary school here.

Capt. Edward King of the Anne Arundel County police, said 20 State and county police were rushed to the scene about 10 p.m. when the oil-soaked cross was discovered by a neighbor, but reported that no trace of the cross-burner was found.

"We're keeping a check there, but the cross was planted between patrols," he said.

McKeldin Offers Aid

Earlier yesterday, Gov. McKeldin said county and State police would support Dr. Jones should he decide to reinstate his young son in the Deale Elementary School.

Dr. Jones withdrew his son David from school Wednesday after windows at the school were smashed and a motorcade of white men drove past Dr. Jones' home.

Gov. McKeldin issued his statement of support after the Anne Arundel County Board of Education promised to do everything it can to prevent "any retaliatory action" if the Jones boy returns to school.

Dr. Richard D. Weigle, board president, said the board "takes a serious view of the action of intimidation upon the part of a small group of Dr. Jones' fellow citizens at Deale."

Board Vows Action

"Regardless of Dr. Jones' decision," the statement continued, "the board will do all in its power to apprehend the individuals responsible for the damage to the rented school property. It will prosecute to the full extent of the law for obstructing operation of the county school system and for forcibly interfering with the orderly process of desegregation. . . ."

Dr. Weigle said all the members of the board approved the statement.

"Unlawful acts cannot, of course, and will not be condoned," Gov. McKeldin said. "Every effort will be made to apprehend the perpetrators, bring them to trial and punish them in accord with the law."

Earlier, Gov. McKeldin had said that "no member of the Maryland National Guard ever will be asked to cross his rifle at a schoolyard gate to bar the entrance of a little girl." That statement was made in reference to the use of Guard troops in front of an Arkansas school.

Deale, a small community on Chesapeake Bay, is about 15 miles south of Annapolis. Dr. Jones' son, Harry, was the only colored student in the 26-pupil first grade class. Other schools in the county have been integrateed.

Pepercussions Feared

Dr. Jones said he withdrew his son "for fear of repercussions against both whites and Negroes who supported the boy's right to go to the school."

The Jones home is one and one-half blocks from the previously all-white school. The nearest Negro school is six miles away.

The four front windows in the classroom and an adjoining office were smashed by bricks a week ago Wednesday night. A delegation called on Jones and his wife the next day to ask them to remove their son from school. Dr. Jones referred the delegation—two men and three women—to the county board of education.

The county board yesterday said it deplored the mob action and promised to do whatever it could to prevent "any retaliatory actions against him."

Mrs. Jones said they would re-enter their son at the Deale school only if they obtain promotorcade and would want a "definite promise from all concerned" that such incidents would not be repeated. She admitted such a promise was unlikely, "since police haven't made an arrest yet in the September 11 window smashing incident."

10 Sticks Of Dynamite Placed On Lawn Of Negro In Maryland—But Fuse Fizzles

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 9-14-57

EASTON, Md., Sept. 13 (AP) — A seven-foot fuse fizzled out today six inches from 10 sticks of dynamite in front of the home of two Negro boys who attend a newly integrated primary school.

Thomas Messick, a dealer in dynamite, said the latent explosive force was equal to a one-ton bomb. He expressed belief the homemade bomb would have destroyed or severely damaged three or four of the frame, duplex houses occupied by Negroes if it had exploded.

Messick theorized the failure was due to use of an old fuse.

Sessions Boyd, 57, found the dynamite in a plastic picnic bag 10 feet from his house this morning. Inside the house were his wife, Theresa, and their sons Sessions Jr., 7, and William, 6.

The boys are two of seven Negroes attending the Hanson Street Primary School with about 370 white children. The integration started last year and has been protested by the Talbot County Citizens Assn.

Two of the other Negro children live on the same block as the Boyds.

Last year, about 25 per cent of the white students in three elementary schools opened for the first time to Negroes were kept home for two weeks in protest.

About 30 adults demonstrated in front of the Hanson Street school at the opening of the present term on Sept. 5. A man and woman carrying signs were arrested and held for the grand jury on charges of conspiracy. Another man was held for jury trial on a disorderly conduct charge for using profanity.

Since then, there has been no demonstrative protest. Police Chief William H. Wilkinson, head of a seven-man force, said he heard the association has held two meetings in the past week, including last night.

The chief declared the bombing attempt "looked like a local job."

Negro Boy in Deale To Continue Classes

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Thurs. 9-12-57 p. 23-A

DEALE, Md., Sept. 12 (AP).—A Negro physician and his wife said yesterday that they would continue to send their 6-year-old son to a newly desegregated schoolroom where bricks were tossed through the windows on Tuesday night.

The two front windows were smashed in a former store serving as a first grade classroom in this Anne Arundel County community about 15 miles south of Annapolis.

Also broken out were the two front windows of the adjoining office of Ruby Downs, a Deale real estate agent.

Mr. Downs, who owns the building in which the classroom and his office are situated, said he was warned by telephone Saturday that he would "be sorry . . . if you don't get that black boy out of your building."

The only Negro among the 26 pupils using the classroom is Harry Jones, son of Dr. and Mrs. Harry N. Jones.

First Incident

This was the first reported anti-integration incident since the county began a program of gradual desegregation last September. The program began at the first grade level.

The boy, however, was the first Negro enrolled this fall at a county school of South River, which is about halfway between Annapolis and Deale. He was registered last spring. He joined his classmates last Thursday.

Mrs. Jones said a committee of three women and two men called on her and her husband yesterday and asked them to remove their son from the school.

She said the committee had told her husband that their visit was a result of a meeting held yesterday in the area.

Mrs. Jones said her husband had referred them to the Anne Arundel County Board of Edution.

Recognized Voice

Mr. Downs, a retired Washington police sergeant, said he also referred his caller to the school board. He said he had recognized the voice on the telephone but refused to identify it to newsmen.

Mr. Downs said the caller had told him:

"I'm giving you a tip. If you don't get that black boy out of your building at once, I wouldn't give you a damn nickel for the building."

Mr. Downs said he explained that he had rented the building as an annex to the Deale School in October, 1956, when there were no Negroes enrolled. He said an agreement that was made with the school board at that time had given him no choice but to rent the building as a classroom again this year.

The real estate man quoted his caller as saying:

"Just let me tell you that the feeling is running very high down heree. Do as you're told or you'll be sorry. Lock the damn door so they can't get in or tear down the building. You have plenty of money and don't need the building anyway. . ."

Damage Estimate

Mr. Downs estimated the damage to the windows at $360 and said lettering on the windows of his real estate office would cost an additional $65.

Capt. George Wellham, chief of county detectives, said his men had taken fingerprints from bricks thrown through the windows and made a thorough investigation into the incident. But he said he did not expect an immediate arrest.

Capt. Wellham said he had received no request to have police officers at the school today and did not plan to assign any there. "We hope there won't be any more trouble," he said.

Dr. David S. Jenkins, county school superintendent, said he had notified police that the school board wanted the responsible party apprehended and prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Mr. Messick said the dynamite probably failed to go off because of a faulty fuse. The inside of the bag was scorched, indicating the fuse had been set off.

Weigle's statement said that should Jones decide to reinstate his son "the board wishes to assure him that it will use all means of its disposal to prevent any further disruption of the school's program or any retaliatory action against him and his family.

"Regardless of Dr. Jones' decision," the statement continued, "the board will do all in its power to apprehend the individuals responsible for damage to the rented school property. SIGNS OF THE TIMES IN MARYLAND— Police Sgt. Bernard Kalnoske holds a charred wooden cross found burning early Sunday on a fence surrounding the Governor's Mansion at Annapolis, Maryland. The signs also were on the fence. Gov. Theodore R. McKeldi, a strong advocate of compliance with the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in public schools, was at home in the mansion but was not aware of the cross-burning at the time. (AP Wirephoto).

Cross Burned In Front Of Maryland's Mansion

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 6 (AP)—A cross was burned early today in front of the executive mansion of Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin.

The cross, measuring three feet high and two feet wide, was attached to an iron fence in front of the mansion. It was blanked by signs saying, "Down with traitor McKeldin!" and "Save our Southern way of life."

McKeldin, a Republican, has publicly criticized the actions of Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas in the Little Rock integration crisis and has blasted segregationists in his own state.

Issues Statement.

The governor later issued a statement in which he said the cross-burning apparently was the "bitter fruit" of the "seeds of intolerance" planted in Arkansas.

He said it created no sense of personal fear and would not change "either the commendable position of officialdom of the state and its civil divisions or the praiseworthy support of the general populace in the cause of human rights."

"To that extent, the cross-burning—whether the act of youthful pranksters, or the expression of intolerance by a handful of adults—was an empty gesture, completely wasteful in time and purpose.

"Much of the criticism, in which I have joined, of the situation created in the State of Arkansas was based on the certainty that the seeds of intolerance planted there would bear their bitter fruit in other places.

"This morning's occurrence in Annapolis gives substance to this ground," McKeldin added.

City and state police were investigating.

The flaming cross was spotted about 1:05 a.m. by William Clark, an 18-year-old sailor who lives in Annapolis and is a member of a volunteer fire unit. He ran to a nearby apartment, phoned city police and then helped them tear down the cross and extinguish the flames.

Burlap Cross.

The cross was rapped in burlap and soaked in oil, police said.

Two 4X5-foot cardboard signs, neatly lettered with red paint, flanked the cross.

One sign bore a verse from the state song, "Maryland, My Maryland." It read:

"Better the fire upon the roll
Better the shot, the blade, the bow!
Than crucifixion of the soul—
Maryland!"

Beneath the verse were the words, "Down with traitor McKeldin!"

The other sign read, "Save our Southern way of life! States' rights and segregation or secession."

A small Confederate flag was affixed to both signs.

McKeldin has publicy accused Faubus of inciting the violence at Little Rock. He also has bitterly denounced segregationists in Deale, Md., who forced the withdrawal of a 6-year-old Negro boy from a white first grade by throwing bricks at classroom windows and burning a cross in his parents' yard.

Capt. James W. Musterman of the Annapolis police, said the signs and cross, which were suspended from the top of the fence grillwork by coat hangers, will be sent to FBI laboratories in Washington tomorrow for checks on fingerprints and origin of the paper and paint.

The governor's bedroom is on the opposite side of the house from where the cross was hung and he said he was unaware of it until police informed him later in the morning.

The excerpt from the Maryland song written by James R. Randall, a Marylander who lived in the Confederacy during the Civil War, reflects bitter feeling following the passage through Baltimore of Union troops in 1861.

Maryland remained part of the Union when the South seceded but sympathies of Marylanders were split, brother fought brother and several battles were fought on Maryland soil.

M'KELDIN URGES U.S. TELL 'ALL IT KNOWS'

Wants Full Story Revealed On Faubus' Actions

HINTS ALL NOT GIVEN OUT

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO, Oct. 3.—Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland criticized the Governor of Arkansas Thursday and said the time has come when the Federal Government should reveal all that it knows about the integration trouble in Little Rock.

Governor McKeldin, a Republican, said Gov. Orval Faubus' calling out the Arkansas National Guard and upsetting the integration plan of the Little Rock Board of Education was "particularly obnoxious."

In a statement listing Governor Faubus' actions, Governor McKeldin concluded:

Seeks Inside Story

"I believe the time has come when the Federal Government should reveal all that it knows—all the information that it has—of events and maneuvers preceding the calling out of the National Guard on Sept. 2 and of all that happened behind the scenes in Arkansas after the Guard was withdrawn under an order of the court.

Asked by a newsman whether this information referred to an FBI report, Governor McKeldin declined to elaborate.

Governor McKeldin posed a series of questions which he indicated could be answered by such a release of information. These were:

"Who started the rumors of prospective violence on which the Governor (Faubus) based his original action?

"What forces excited the violence after the troops were withdrawn? Who provided its leadership?"

Challenges Faubus

Governor McKeldin then said, "Let all the facts be known to all the people of Arkansas and all the people of America. Then let Governor Faubus issue his threatened call for a session of the Arkansas Legislature."

Governor McKeldin read his statement to newsmen when he arrived for a session of the joint Federal-State Action Committee.

He was one of four Southern Governors who formed a special committee to work out a compromise plan under which Federal troops would be removed from Little Rock.

Governor McKeldin said Governor Faubus, a Democrat, "completely rewrote" the agreement reached with President Eisenhower under which the troops would be withdrawn and Governor Faubus would guarantee protection for nine Negro students attending Central High.

The joint committee was set up to make recommendations under which certain Federally aided programs would be returned to control of the individual states.

Southerners Absent

The chairman of the session, Republican Gov. Lane Dwinell of New Hampshire, said the Little Rock matter "was not on the agenda."

Absent from the meeting were two Southern Governors of the nine-man committee.

They are Democrats Price Daniel of Texas, and J. P. Coleman of Mississippi. Governor Daniel reportedly was unable to attend because of the press of state business, but was represented by C. Read Granberry, executive director of the Texas Legislative Council. Governor Coleman is recuperating from a recent operation.

Governors attending are Governors Dwinell, McKeldin, Republican Victor E. Anderson of Nebraska, Democrat George Docking of Kansas, Democrat George M. Leader of Pennsylvania, Democrat Dennis J. Roberts of Rhode Island, Republican Robert E. Smylie of Idaho, and Republican William G. Stratton of Illinois, who as chairman of the Governor's Conference is an ex-officio member of the committee.

They agreed in varying degrees that President Eisenhower had no other course but to send troops to Little Rock, except for Governor Docking, who limited his statement to the comment that "Faubus runs Arkansas, my problem is Kansas."

Teachers Feud With McKeldin

The latest row between Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin and the influential Maryland State Teachers Association climaxes a stormy, 7-year relationship.

Since his election in 1950, the Maryland chief executive has tangled repeatedly with the 15,000-member organization on the issue of raising salaries.

P A 9

When the Association refused its customary invitation to the Governor for its recent 90th conference, the action may have been the prelude to a 1958 salary battle in the General Assembly.

Vetoed 1957 Bill

Mon 10-14-57

Among issues facing Maryland lawmakers when they reconvene in February will be McKeldin's veto of a 1957 bill to grant teachers a $400 pay boost from proceeds of a 3-cent cigarette tax.

In rejecting the measure last April, McKeldin declared "the teacher salary problem is a local responsibility."

The Governor had demanded in an earlier budget message that "the constant pressure for greater state financial support (to schools) be brought to an end, lest this dangerous course lead to the complete abandonment of local school systems . . ."

This brought McKeldin into head-on conflict with Maryland educational leaders.

Governor's Record

To date, McKeldin has vetoed four teacher pay bills. There was no measure introduced in 1954 and in 1956 a bill calling for a $400 boost in minimum scales died in the Senate.

McKeldin in 1953 signed a bill proposed by the Governor-appointed Green Commission for increases of $300 to $600 in minimum scales over a seven-year period. The teacher group attacked the increase as inadequate.

Milson S. Raver, executive secretary of the teachers, annually has spearheaded the drive for higher pay. Under his leadership the Association has become a potent political force, which legislators have learned to reckon with.

Full Integration Up in Anne Arundel

Post + Times Herald

ANNAPOLIS, Aug. 15 (AP) The Anne Arundel County Board of Education will act Wednesday on a petition urging desegregation of all county schools by September.

The county desegregated the first three grades last year and has added the fourth grade for the coming year in a program of gradual integration.

Under its present program, the fifth and sixth grades are scheduled for desegregation in September, 1958, with junior high and high schools some time after that.

County Desegregation To Total 963 in Fall

Star Tue. 7-2-57 P. 1-b

Washington, D.C.

Three hundred and seven more Negro pupils plan to transfer from segregated to integrated schools in Montgomery County in September, bringing to 963 the number of Negro pupils in integrated classrooms.

Dr. Forbes H. Norris, superintendent of schools, releasing these figures today, said 32 per cent of the Negro pupils will be in integrated schools when the third year of the county's desegregation program starts this fall.

Two more schools will receive Negro pupils for the first time. They are West Rockville Elementary, expected to register 20, and Sherwood Elementary, expected to register upwards of 17. Forty-nine schools were integrated last year.

The forecasts were contained in a report given to the Board of Education by Dr. Norris. It was prepared by his Professional Committee on Desegregation.

Negro pupils of kindergarten age still will find difficulty registering in integrated schools near their homes, the report shows. Only 28 of 77 requests for such registrations were granted. The others were turned down because "space or program was not available."

Most of the shifts in Negro pupils will ta[illegible] in the up-county area, be[illegible] virtually all the down-county schools are completely integrated.

In another action, the board awarded a contract for supplying milk to the school next year to Chestnut Farms Dairy, after spokesmen for the dairy protested vigorously against methods used in the competitive bidding for the contract last week.

Mrs. Corelli David, school lunch supervisor, told the board she rejected all the bids, then made the bids public.

Jo V. Morgan, jr., attorney for the dairy, said the revelation jeopardized Chestnut Farms' chances of winning the contract on a second bid.

The dairy bid 5.84 cents for half-pints and 10.53 cents for pints. The contract, a dairy spokesman said, involves about $356,000 in sales during the school year.

Fees for School Use Forbidden in Maryland

FEE—L . . . . . .

A Montgomery County dispute has resulted in a statewide ruling prohibiting local school systems from charging rent for school facilities.

The Maryland Attorney General has ruled that school boards must permit free use of school facilities for gatherings and discussions by nonpartisan groups and for community social and recreational activities.

The question was raised by the Damascus Volunteer Fire Department's protest over a $62.50 bill for use of the Damascus High School. A legal ruling was asked when school officials denied a subsequent request by the department to use the building.

County school officials estimate that $54,000 in fees was collected last year. Roughly $34,000 went for janitors' overtime, and $20,000 for heat and light.

"It looks as if the taxpayer will have to pick up the tab," said David W. Zimmerman, assistant state school superintendent.

Zimmerman was unable to estimate how many local jurisdictions have been charging rent for school so he said he is advising all local superintendents to review their policy in light of the ruling.

The cause of the integration commotion in this fishing community 15 miles south of Annapolis is the son of the town's only resident physician, Dr. Harry N. Jones, a Negro. He said 60 per cent of his patients since he established practice here in 1952 are white.

The doctor took his son out of the rented school room Wednesday after he reported a motorcade of whites paraded by his house.

He made up his mind not to send the boy back after his wife received a telephone call last night and two hours later a cross was suspended from a tree and burned.

"If these people have nerve enough to go up to my home after verbal support from the chief executive of the state and burn a cross, wouldn't they have nerve enough to do something else?" asked Jones.

The caller told Jones' wife "to buy a one-way ticket across the Mason-Dixon Line for your family—we'll give you a week to get out."

Jones, 42, a native of Bluefield, W. Va., and graduate of Howard University in Washington, said his son will be sent to another school Monday. He said he hasn't decided where or if the family might move.

Jones said the boy had no idea of the happenings except to ask when he woke up in the morning, "Why can't I go to school?"

The doctor expressed puzzlement over the protests. He said he had received no indication of trouble before the boy registered.

DEALE, Md., Sept. 21.—The brick-throwers and cross burners have won the first round of a fight to retain segregation in Southern Anne Arundel County schools, despite such formidable odds as Gov. McKeldin and county school officials.

They drove a 6-year-old Negro boy from a school he entered September 5.

They may even have succeeded in persuading, or frightening the boy's father, Dr. Harry N. Jones, to leave the community entirely. P. 11-56

Integration foes say police will have to be kept on hand 24 hours a day if integration occurs. Evening Star

The bitter feeling that flared after young Harry Jones entered the previously all-white first grade classroom here are still smoldering. Washington, D.C.

Dr. Jones said he won't send the boy back to school here or to Shadyside, five miles away, which most colored students from this area attend.

He indicated the boy would be placed in school in Washington where the doctor maintains an office and a residence. And the physician believes he might move away entirely.

Even though he agrees with Gov. McKeldin's belief "there is nothing to indicate that the burners (of the cross) in Deale were more than a few community misfits," Dr. Jones is concerned about his son.

"We have an investment here," he said. "But, of course, it's not worth 3 cents. They are going to throw bombs through it and burn crosses on it."

He was speaking of the bricks that were tossed through the windows of the former store which the county is using for a firstgrade classroom and of the cross which was burned on his lawn Thursday night, after his son was withdrawn from school.

Segregation leaders in this waterfront community on Herring Bay, about 20 miles south of Annapolis, said everything would have gone smoothly after the boy withdrew from school if Gov. McKeldin had not issued a statement offering him protection if he wished to re-enter.

Miss Paulina Reney, who represents the 7th District on the Board of County Commissioners, said:

"I know these watermen and they're just not going to stand for it (integration). Everything was calm if Mr. McKeldin had just kept his mouth shut. It looks like he's just trying to stir things up."

The Governor called Dr. Jones by telephone yesterday to offer his "regrets" over the incident.

McKeldin Statement

He issued a statement in Annapolis later in the day saying, "There is no evidence of an active organization or of community approval or acceptance of the moronic maneuvers that have occurred in Deale since the opening of the school term." And the Governor said he has asked State Police to keep Deale under close watch until the "vandals and trouble - makers are apprehended."

He said the situation was no cause for alarm but:

"The violation of long-established Maryland laws will not be condoned and, in this State of orderly government, there must remain no areas of even minor or implied rebellion against the Constitution of the United States, which is spelled out in the Declaration of Rights of the Maryland constitution as the supreme law of the State."

The police have made no arrests either in the brick-throwing incident or the cross-burning.

Mrs. Raney said the community of several thousand not only has persons who have never had integration, but "we've got Washington people trying to get away from it."

"They can send State Police down here, but they're going to have to keep them here 24 hours a day," Mrs. Raney said.

"The situation has been closed, peacefully and without violence," she said.

"Tough District"

"If I knew who burned the cross and threw the bricks, I wouldn't tell you," she said. "This is a tough district. People down here are independent. They say what they mean and they fight for it."

She said she warned School Supt. David S. Jenkins there would be trouble if the colored boy entered the school, and she acknowledged she knew about the letter Dr. Jones received from the County Planning and Zoning Commission yesterday telling him his office is in violaton of county zoning laws and ordered him to stop using it.

The doctor called the letter "another way they're getting at me."

Alvin Parks, who led a delegation to Dr. Jones the day after the brick-throwing on September 10 asking him to remove the boy from the school, said most of the community is against integration and that there would be more trouble if any attempts at it are made.

Mr. Parks, who runs a fishing tackle pier and restaurant with a sign outside saying "white only," said he believes some helped in the demonstration against Dr. Jones, because "they don't like it because he wouldn't send his kids to school with them."

One of Dr. Jones' strongest backers is retired Washington police Sergt. Ruby Downs, who rents the store to the county for a classroom and uses the other side for his real estate office.

Keep Rifle Loaded

Mr. Downs, 74, sits with a loaded rifle by his desk "and 200 more rounds in his empty drawer" and tells visitors the trouble is caused by a "small group of idiots"—about 25, he estimates.

Mrs. Ruth Brennan, wife of a Navy officer from Edgewater and a veteran teacher in charge of the class which Harry Jones attended, thinks "most people here are dead set against it (integration), but I don't think the parents of my children would condone this," indicating the two broken front windows.

Dr. Jones, who works four days a week in his Washington office at 1520 Ninth street N.W., where he says 60 per cent of his patients are white, also is convinced the demonstrations were caused by a small group.

"The thinking people of the community are embarrassed by it," he said.

He said he felt the community has accepted him and that he has been working closely with the 7th District Squad at Shadyside.

He recalled the Memorial Day parade at Deale where 50 to 60 persons succumbed to heat prostration and were brought to his new office for treatment.

"They weren't throwing bricks through my window that day," he said.

Dr. Jones kept repeating he is not a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and that he is not a "crusader."

Block From Residence

He said he was merely doing "what I believe is right" and that the white school is more convenient. "This was just ideal," he said.

The temporary classroom Harry was sent to is about a block away from the Jones residence. Shadyside is about five miles away. The only other school in the 7th District at the southern tip of the county is a white school at Shadyside.

White high school students from here go to Southern High at Lothian, colored students to lates in Annapolis.

Dr. Jones said he moved to Deale in 1952 after having known and traveled in the area for 20 years.

He opened his office in front of his home last spring. It is still not completed. He is building it himself. The county adopted a gradual integration program last year in the first grades, and the fourth grade was added this year.

This, however, was the first attempt at integration south of Annapolis in the county.

Dr. Jones is a native of Bluefield, W. Va., and was graduated from Howard University Medical School in 1944. He is 44 years old.

The little boy who caused all the furor is being kept from the public by his parents.

"He doesn't know anything about it," Dr. Jones said.

"He just wants to know why he can't go to school. He wished this morning to go to school just one more day—just one more day."

Bowles Asks $3500 To Bar Negro Pupils

EASTON, Md., Aug. 29 (AP) — The president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People says he can get the Negroes out of Talbot County schools for about $3500.

The man who heads the NAAWP, chartered in Delaware, is Bryant Bowles of Beaumont, Tex. He spoke for about an hour last night at a meeting of the Talbot County Citizens Association, a group formed this year to fight racial integration in the schools.

Eleven Negroes attended Talbot County schools last year and are scheduled to return when classes begin next month.

The association claims a membership of 800. About 125 turned out for last night's session. Some money was collected toward the fund Bowles said was needed and about 20 persons stood up to volunteer as fund canvassers.

Bowles told the group, "I can get those niggers out but it's going to cost you money." He said it cost about $3500 to get 11 Negroes out of Milford, Del., schools in 1954 and would cost about the same here.

10 Sticks Of Dynamite Placed On Lawn Of Negro In Maryland—But Fuse Fizzles

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. P. 1 Sat 9-14-57

EASTON, Md., Sept. 13 (AP) — A seven-foot fuse fizzled out today six inches from 10 sticks of dynamite in front of the home of two Negro boys who attend a newly integrated primary school.

Thomas Messick, a dealer in dynamite, said the latent explosive force was equal to a one-ton bomb. He expressed belief the homemade bomb would have destroyed or severely damaged three or four of the frame, duplex houses occupied by Negroes if it had exploded.

Messick theorized the failure was due to use of an old fuse.

Sessions Boyd, 57, found the dynamite in a plastic picnic bag 10 feet from his house this morning. Inside the house were his wife, Theresa, and their sons Sessions Jr., 7, and William, 6.

The boys are two of seven Negroes attending the Hanson Street Primary School with about 370 white children. The integration started last year and has been protested by the Talbot County Citizens Assn.

Two of the other Negro children live on the same block as the Boyds.

Last year, about 25 per cent of the white students in three elementary schools opened for the first time to Negroes were kept home for two weeks in protest.

About 30 adults demonstrated in front of the Hanson Street school at the opening of the present term on Sept. 5. A man and woman carrying signs were arrested and held for the grand jury on charges of conspiracy. Another man was held for jury trial on a disorderly conduct charge for using profanity.

Since then, there has been no demonstrative protest. Police Chief William H. Wilkinson, head of a seven-man force, said he heard the association has held two meetings in the past week, including last night.

The chief declared the bombing attempt "looked like a local job."

Gradual Integration Hit

BALTIMORE, July 12 (AP)—A court-approved plan for ending segregation in Harford County schools over a period of six years has been challenged by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP asked United States District Court last June to order an immediate end of segregation in the county. But Judge Roszel C. Thomsen approved the School Board's plan which will begin with integration of 11 elementary schools in September.

Principally, NAACP attorneys object to a special educational board which would screen prospective Negro pupils who applied for admission to junior nad senior high schools. They say this places "a series of burdens" on Negro students.

They gave notice yesterday they would appeal to Federal Circuit Court.

School Integration Gains in Maryland

Assistant Superintendent Terms Progress 'Gradual, but Satisfactory'

Star Thurs. 8-29-57

Washington D.C. P. 19-A

By WILLIAM B. HARWOOD

BALTIMORE, Aug. 29 (AP).—About two-thirds of Maryland's counties will open desegregated schools next week.

Only eight counties—including seven on the tradition-steeped Eastern Shore—have yet to enroll Negroes in previously all-white classrooms.

In 14 counties and Baltimore City (Garrett County is not counted because it has no Negroes in the public school system), desegregation is progressing "gradually but satisfactorily," said Dr. David Zimmerman, assistant State superintendent of schools.

At the start of the 1955-56 school year, 12,894 Negro students were attending previously all-white schools — 11,903 of them in Baltimore City and 991 in the counties.

Last September, 20,936 Negro students were enrolled in mixed schools—19,209 in Baltimore and 1,727 in the counties.

Will Exceed 22,000

Starting next week, when the 1957-58 school year begins in most areas, estimated enrollments show more than 22,000 Negro students will be attending classes with white students—2,385 of them in 14 counties and the indefinite balance in Baltimore City. The 22,000 represents about 19 per cent of Maryland's Negro school children, and is about 1,064 more Negroes than had been integrated at the close of school last June.

Although eight counties have not admitted Negroes to classes with whites, Calvert County, where Negroes make up 51.8 per cent of the total school enrollment, remains the lone county without an announced plan for beginning integration.

Every other county, Garrett still excepted, now has a plan for integration, including Caroline, which at this time last year was a holdout.

The biggest strides toward complete integration have been taken in Montgomery, Baltimore and Allegany Counties.

Montgomery Leads

Among the larger county school populations, and including Baltimore City, Montgomery leads the way. Its desegregation program which began two years ago involved about one-third of its 100 schools and was confined to the lower, urban half of the county, particularly in the suburbs of Washington.

This year, the program embraces 51 schools and 31.9 per cent of the county's 3,017 Negro students and extends as far north as Burtonsville, Sandy Spring, Laytonsville and Damascus. It means that 963 Negro children will be integrated in 51 schools at all grade levels this year—651 in elementary schools and 312 in secondary compared to 686 in 49 schools last school year.

Notices were sent to parents of 432 Negro students notifying them their children had been recommended for transfer to integrated schools nearer their homes.

Notices were not returned from 54 of these Negro families. Ninety-four others did not want to leave all-Negro schools.

Of the 284 desiring transfer, all but 28 were approved. An additional 28 were transferred at the request of their parents and 23 more Negroes enrolled in kindergarten of schools nearest their homes.

Baltimore County, with 385 Negroes integrated in about 60 of its 90 schools last year, will extend its desegregation program to all but seven schools. It expects to have 633 Negroes in mixed classes, or about 28.7 per cent of the 4,062 Negroes in an estimated total enrollment of 73,880.

Allegany, with only 270 Negroes in a total estimated school enrollment of 15,350 for September, is more than half-way down the road to complete desegregation with 170, or 63 per cent, of its Negroes enrolled in mixed schools.

Prince Georges, with 155 Negroes attending 17 mixed schools last year, expects about 230 in 20 schools this fall. The county has about 7,000 Negroes out of a total estimated enrollment of 57,000.

No Progress East of Bay

But with the exception of Cecil County at the northern tip of the Eastern Shore, and Talbot — an island amid the Shore's still segregated seven—integration has not gained even a toehold east of Chesapeake Bay.

Kent, Queen Annes, Caroline, Dorchester, Wicomico, Worcester and Somerset Counties all have said they will consider Negro applications for transfers to white schools. This is the second year for such a policy in all but Caroline.

But with one exception, all say they have received no applications.

The lone exception is Wicomico County which for the second year received one application before the July 31 deadline from an elementary grade Negro. The same student was denied transfer to a white school last year, and school authorities are expected to reject it again this year.

Caroline has announced no plan. The school board there has made "no statement as to color line," according to County Superintendent Wilbur S. Hoopengardner.

Talbot, which admitted nine Negroes to the first three grades of two schools last September, lost three of them when one family moved out of the county. Three more transfers have been accepted for this year. So nine of the county's 1,269 Negro students—32.7 per cent of the total school enrollment—again will be attending white schools.

Segregationist Bryant Bowles, back on the Eastern Shore this week after a couple years' absence, announced the County Citizens Association has given Talbot school officials an ultimatum to remove Negro children from the school rolls.

Cecil County, with 16 Negroes attending a school serving the integrated Naval Training Center at Bainbrige last school year, will have about 20 Negroes in white schools next year. All but three will be in Bainbridge Elementary School.

These 29 Negro students in Talbot and Cecil Counties represent less than half of one per cent of the approximately 13,177 Negro public school children on the Eastern Shore.

In Southern Maryland, Calvert County—admittedly faced with the biggest problem percentagewise and having quite a few traditions of its own—has taken no public step toward desegregation.

No transfer applications have been received from Negro students. None has been asked for. School authorities are saying nothing publicly except that they estimate a total enrollment of 3,683 in the public schools next month. More than half, or 2,154, will Negroes, it is estimated.

Progress in St. Marys

St. Marys, southernmost of the State's 23 counties, has made progress. A year ago, county school authorities were faced with a Federal court suit in which the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People demanded a start on integration. A Federal court ruled the NAACP had not exhausted its remedies at the local and State level.

The St. Mary's school board has approved the transfer of four Negro pupils to previosuly all-white schools when schools open September 5. The transfers are in line with the board's policy to consider transfer applications for the elementary grades, one through six, where administratively feasible.

Charles County, with the second largest percentage of Negro students in the State—45.5 per cent—will again have five Negroes in the Indian Head School — the same five who were accepted last fall after the school board said it would accept applications for transfer to all grades.

Anne Arundel had 77 Negro students in the first three grades of 13 desegregated schools last year. Dr. David S. Jenkins, county superintendent, says that until classes begin it will be impossible to tell how many additional there will be this year.

No Change in Howard

Howard County, which approved nine Negro transfers in the first six grades last year, will have nine again. There have been no new applications, according to John E. Yingling, superintendent.

Carroll County began the 1955-56 school year with 16 Negroes in two schools, but nine left the New Windsor School, leaving only seven Negroes enrolled in the 531-pupil Union Bridge School last year. It will take five more this year for a total of 12 out of a county-wide Negro enrollment of about 560.

Frederick County has desegregated all but six schools and officials say the number of Negroes attending mixed classes this year will more than triple, 170 compared to 49 last year. The county expects a total enrollment of 13,330, including 1,197 Negroes.

Washington County expects the same number of Negroes, about 155, to attend desegregated schools but expects the number to jump considerably in 1959 with completion of a building program. The county has only 382 Negroes out of a total school population of about 17,260.

Hartford County, confronted by a Federal court directive to speed up its integration, is expecting between 35 and 40 Negroes in four grades of mixed schools this fall, according to David G. Harry, jr., president to the school board.

Fourteen Negro students attended three grades in otherwise white schools last year.

McKeldin Pledge To Aid Integration Hit

Deale, Md., Sept. 20 (AP)—A County official Friday accused Governor Theodore R. McKeldin of "trying to stir something up" with his promises of State-police support if a 6-year-old Negro boy would re-enroll in a white school.

"Everything is calm if Mr. McKeldin will just keep his mouth shut," said Mrs. Pauline W. Remey, who lives at this Bayside fishing village and represents the Seventh District on the Board of Anne Arundel County Commissioners.

"I've known these watermen all my life, and they're not going to take it," she continued. Governor McKeldin can issue all the edicts he wants to, and they can send State and County police, but they'll have to stay here 24 hours a day."

Mrs. Remey indicated she thought McKeldin's statement Thursday hight have had something to do with the burning of a cross in front of the office of Dr. Harry N. Jones Thursday night.

Dr. Jones, a Negro, the only resident physician in this community, 20 miles south of Annapolis, took his son out of school Wednesday after threatening phone calls, and the passing of a motorcade in front of his house, and the throwing of bricks through school windows.

McKeldin had issued a statement promising State police protection if Dr. Jones wanted to re-enroll the boy.

McKeldin issued another statement Friday, calling those responsible for the cross burning "misfits" and their actions "moronic." He told State police to keep the situation under close surveillance "until the vandals and troublemakers are apprehended and the town returned to the peaceful calm of its custom."

The Governor said that "to permit the panic that was planted in Arkansas to spread into Maryland would be a betrayal of our traditions of calmness, tolerance, and respect for the law."

Dr. Jones, 42, said the threats against his family and the reaction against his son's enrolling in the first grade of Deale Elementary School, a block and a half away, are from a minority of Deale citizens. He said he was "not crusading for anything" and just wanted the boy to go to a good school close by. The Negro school is six miles away.

Dr. Jones said 60 per cent of his patients since he established practice here in 1952 were white.

Punishment of Terrorists Promised

McKeldin Pledges All-Out Support If Negro Returns to Deale School

ANNAPOLIS, Sept. 19 (AP)—Gov. Theodore McKeldin promised county and state law enforcement support today if a Negro doctor wants to send his son back to a newly-integrated school.

Dr. Harry N. Jones withdrew his five-year-old son yesterday from the one-room school annex in a rented store.

The doctor expressed fear "of repercussions against both whites and Negroes who supported the boy's right to attend the school" at Deale, 15 miles South of the state capital.

Bricks were thrown through windows of the school on Sept. 11 and five whites called on Dr. Jones to urge his son's withdrawal. The doctor refused. A motorcade went by his house Tuesday night. The next day the doctor withdrew the boy.

McKeldin and Dr. Richard D. Weigle, president of the county school board, both issued statements deploring actions of what they called a few and assured there will be full efforts to prosecute them.

Mrs. Jones said her son would return to school only if definite promises were made "the same things won't again." She expressed they could be made police haven't made an et" in the Sept. 11 ing.

es said he "appreci- ooperation and con- displayed but had ate plans to reenter n the white school.

Dr. Jones, who spent the day in his Washington office, said he wanted to confer with his wife in Deale before making any decision. He expressed surprise that McKeldin had entered the case. "I didn't intend to get the Governor involved," said Dr. Jones. "All this over a little six-year-old boy!")

McKeldin said "few instances of violence, near violence" or threats of violence" over integration in Maryland were "intolerable as affronts to the essential orderliness of our society and the high respect in which law is held by our citizenry."

The "unlawful acts" of a few persons, he said, "will not be condoned. Every effort will be made to apprehend the perpetrators, bring them to trial and punish them in accord with the law.

"Marylanders, I believe, strongly favor organized and orderly government and will not accept the actions or threats of criminals, either singly or in mob strength, as a substitute for law."

Dr. Weigle, who also is President of St. John's College, said the County School Board "takes a serious view of the actions of intimidation upon the part of a small group of Dr. Jones' fellow citizens at Deale."

Regardless of whether Dr. Jones returns his son to school, Dr. Weigle said "the Board will do all in its power to apprehend the individuals responsible for damage to the rented school property and will prosecute them to the full extent of the law for obstructing the operation of the county school system."

The Jones boy was the first Negro to attend a school with whites south of Annapolis. There are 25 white pupils.

Total now stands at 78 units

Effective next September, the names of 25 Baltimore County public schools will be added to the 53 currently listed as racially non-discriminatory, the County Board of Education has announced.

Colored children residing in the attendance districts for the newly-listed schools may enroll in these schools for the school year 1957-58 provided the physical capacity of the buildings permit," the announcement stated.

Named to be racially non-discriminatory next school year are the following elementary schools; Carroll Manor, Catonsville, Chase, Edgemere, Fullerton, Gray Manor, Hebbville, Kingsville, Lansdowne, Martin Boulevard, Parkville, Stoneleigh, Westchester and Westowne.

Secondary schools listed include the Carroll Manor, Dumbarton and Towson junior high schools and the Towson Senior High School.

Also the Riverview, Norwood and Inverness elementary schools, currently under construction and scheduled to be opened next September.

Rounding out the elementary-school list are the Elmwood, Glenmar and Hampton elementary schools, all under construction.

STUDENT BODIES for the above-listed facilities, it was further explained, will be housed on a part-time basis, starting next September, with enrollments of the Fullerton, Victory Villa and Lutherville elementary schools, respectively, pending completion of their home schools.

Twenty-five county public schools were placed on the racially non-discriminatory list last September including the following elementary schools: Bear Creek, Campfield, Dundalk, Edmondson Heights, Franklin, Hawthorne, Lutherville, Middlesex, Owings Mills, Parkville, Patapsco Neck, Perry Hall, Pikesville, Randallstown, Relay, Riderwood, Victory Villa, Wellwood, Woodlawn and Woodmoor.

Also: the Franklin and Sudbrook junior high schools; the Franklin and Milford Mill senior high schools; and the Ridge School, a special unit for the instruction of mentally-retarded youngsters.

The 25 county public schools established as racially non-discriminatory in September 1955 were as follows:

Arbutus, Back River, Baltimore Highlands, Berkshire, Chesapeake Terrace, Cockeysville, Colgate, Essex, Fifth District, Fort Howard, Halethorpe, Loch Raven, Maiden Choice, Merritt Point, Mars Es- Rosedaye, Seventh District, Sixth District, Sparks, Sussex and Villa Cresta elementary schools;

Also, Hereford Junior High and senior high schools at Catonsville, Dundalk, Hereford and Kenwood.

IN SUMMARY, it was explained that colored pupils may apply for admittance, next school year, as new entrants or transfer students, at any of the above-listed 78 county public schools, up to the physical capacity of the facilities designated.

It was further explained that colored students, as well as white students, are required to reside within the attendance districts of these various schools in order to be eligible for enrollment.

The announcement concluded by saying that "in exceptional cases individual requests for the enrollment of colored children in schools not yet established as racially non-discriminatory will be considered by the (school system's) pupil personnel service."

Southerner Says Segregation Fight Based on Mix-Up

Williamstown, Mass., Feb. 21 (AP)—Southern newspaper editor Thomas R. Waring said here tonight the campaign to break down racial separation in public schools is based on misunderstanding of the problem.

Waring, editor of The Charleston (S. C.) News & Courier, spoke at an assembly of students and faculty at Williams College here.

Waring was invited to explain the South's position on race relations.

For 25 years, Waring said, only one side of the present controversy over Southern racial customs has reached the bulk of the Northern people.

"If the people of the country as a whole understood thoroughly what is being done in the false name of 'civil rights,'" Waring said, "they would demand that constitutional government be restored."

He said that the same methods now being used to integrate schools by judicial force in the South might be turned on other regions in other causes.

Negro Slugs 2 Teachers In Detroit

DETROIT, Sept. 20 (AP) — A policeman patrolled the halls of two Detroit schools today after two teachers were slugged by a Negro youth.

Irene Sokoran, 14, and Delores Talberg, 15, said they were on monitor duty in the hall at Central yesterday when the youth attempted to engage them in conversation. He failed to produce school identification and John Hornkohl, 30, a counselor, asked the Negro to leave. Police said the youth knocked him to the floor and slugged Thomas Wolf, 52, a teacher.

The girls and teachers are white. The schools are located in a mixed neighborhood and many of the students are Negroes.

Detroit Police Guard Schools

DETROIT, Sept. 20 (AP)—A policeman patrolled the halls of two Detroit schools periodically today after two teachers were slugged by a Negro youth.

Police Inspector Leroy Dickenson revealed that Central High School and adjacent Durfee Junior High have been under police surveillance for the past 10 days because of reported strongarming of students by teen-age non-students.

Police Lt. Gideon Tukacs said the patrolman on duty in the neighborhood was instructed to walk through the halls and grounds of the two schools at regular intervals after the two faculty members at Central were felled yesterday by an unidentified Negro youth. Neither was seriously hurt.

Irene Sokoran, 14, and Delores Talberg, 15, said they were on monitor duty in the hall at Central yesterday when the youth attempted to engage them in conversation. They requested his school identification and asked him to leave when he could not produce any.

John Hornkohl, 30, a counselor, then asked the Negro to leave. Police said the youth knocked him to the floor and slugged Thomas Wolf, 52, an education teacher, who came to Hornkohl's assistance. The youth fled.

The girls and the teachers are white. The schools are located in a mixed neighborhood and many of the students are Negroes.

Detroit Majority Found Favorable To Desegregation

DETROIT, MICH.—Special—Dr. Henry Sharp, professor at the University of Michigan has made a survey to find out what the sentiment in Detroit is on integrating colored children in the public school of that city. He finds that fifty-six per cent of Detroiters are in favor of integration.

The Detroit Tribune, a leading colored weekly of Michigan's metropolis analyses the university professors report as follows:

"Detroiters found that fifty-six per cent of the persons questioned by the professor's staff felt that Negroes should be integrated into white schools.

"The study, results of which were made this week, was taken in 1956, before the intense controversy arose on the issue in the South.

"University staffers queried persons in Wayne, Macomb and Oakland areas. A little more than one third felt that Negro children should attend different schools. One out of ten said Negro children should attend same schools but in different classrooms.

"Interviewers also asked the question: Would the parents mind if a six year old white girl brought her Negro classmate home to play.

"Thirteen per cent said that they would not approve. Four of ten said they would favor the children playing together and a slightly higher proportion said they would approve only of them playing together at school, not at home.

"Dr. Sharp said some parents were not concerned about the children playing together but what the neighbors would think.

"Less than a quarter of Southern born whites disapproved of the children playing together."

Ed. Note. School integration in Detroit, it is well known already exists. It is the law in Michigan. The survey of Dr. Sharp seems to have been made to find out how the parents liked the system. It is recalled that Secretary of Defense Wilson the former head of the General Motors Corporation recently commented upon integration. He named a colored man, with whom, as a boy, he attended school sixty years ago. Mr. Wilson said he didn't think that either he nor his colored school mate suffered from having gone to school together. This was further proof of the contention that going to school together--white and colored, does not disturb white folk who "have got something" in the least.

Maybe the famed minister Dr. Norman Vincent Peale has a contribution that sheds light on the uprising in Little Rock, Nashville and other places. In answering a question of a man who said he was disturbed over the way a priest and a preacher were lambasting each other's churches, Dr. Peale had an answer. He told the men: "You must remember that even a minister and a priest, being human, can have unresolved inner conflicts and hates. The fact that they speak in a holy place and with religious words does not alter the fact that prejudice, which is a form of insecurity and inferiority, can govern them the same as other persons."

More Than Third White Detroiters For Segregation

DETROIT, Oct. 7 (AP) — A majority of the white persons of Greater Metropolitan Detroit favor school integration while a little more than a third oppose it, the University of Michigan reported from a survey today.

The University, announcing findings of a cross-section survey conducted in the spring of 1956, said there was a "consistent and strong" relationship between education and racial attitude.

The University' Survey Research Center conducted the study in cooperation with Detroit's Commission on Community Relations.

A number of variables were discovered. However, the report said:

"A convincing majority (56 per cent) of the white residents of Greater Detroit feel that the Negro children should be completely integrated into the formerly all-white classes.

"Only one out of every 10 persons believes that Negroes should come to the school but be in their own classes.

"A little over a third of the whites advocate complete segregation of the two races in different schools."

$6,185,373 School Funds Allocated in Mississippi

Money from $10 Million Bond Issue

(Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 25 — The state educational finance commission Monday said $6,185,373 in allocations for school construction under the state's Negro school program have been approved.

All the new allocations came out of a $10 million state general obligation bond issue sold recently by the state bond commission for the school program.

The projects were part of a backlog of construction fund requests accumulated by the EFC during a period from May through October when the commission was out of available funds.

$5 Million in Funds

More than $5 million of the funds allocated by the commission went for Negro school buildings.

Allocations for Negro schools were as follows:

Benton county, $280,000; Grenada county, $200,000; West Point municipal separate school district, Clay county, $225,000; Calhoun county, $235,000; Kemper county, $370,000; Clarksdale municipal separate, $250,000; Greenville municipal separate, $95,000; Jackson municipal separate, $550,000; Rankin county, $400,000; Copiah country, $475,000.

Sharkey-Issaquena counties line consolidated district and Anguilla line consolidated, $325,000 (joint project); Wilkinson county, $575,000; Walthall county, $440,000; Forest municipal separate, $140,813; Richton municipal separate, $588,000; Simpson county, $275,000; Quitman consolidated district Clarke county, $325,000; Picayune municipal separate, $100,000 and Brookhaven municipal separate, $90,000.

Other Allocations

Allocations for white schools were: Hancock county, $178,560; Ocean Springs municipal separate, $165,000; Moss Point municipal separate, $82,500, and city of Jackson municipal separate, $350,000.

The commission also announced the following bid dates for previously approved projects:

Jan. 10 — Campbellville elementary school, Holly Bluff line consolidated district, $91,875; Gibbs elementary school, Yazoo county, $150,000; Oak Park High school in Laurel municipal separate school district, $600,000.

Jan. 14—Fulton High school, Itawamba county, $142,000; Prentiss High, Jefferson Davis county, $452,443.

Jan. 23—Belzoni High, $255,000.

ACTION TO SAVE SCHOOLS URGED

Miss. Governor Says State 'Legally Naked'

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 18 — Gov. J. P. Coleman told the Legislature Monday the state has been left "legally naked and legally defenseless" against school integration under present constitutional and statutory provisions.

The governor, making a renewed plea to the lawmakers for favorable action on a constitutional convention in the special session now underway, gravely spoke publicly for the first time on "pitfalls" in the state's present segregation strategy.

He said recent federal court decisions in Virginia "whether we like it or not, leave the state of Mississippi without any enforceable school provisions whatever."

Mississippians, he said, "are perfectly willing to close the schools, but are not willing to see all schools closed because one school has to be closed."

Coleman told the joint session of legislators the strategy the state must work on is to "save the overwhelmingly major portion of the system."

OPPONENTS REMARK

One opponent of the constitutional convention — Sen. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton — later charged that Coleman's remarks impressed him as being a "compromise to accept just enough integration to satisfy the NAACP."

Another opponent — Sen. Hayden Campbell of Jackson —called Coleman's address "political poppycock" which he said was used as "mere subterfuge to force the Legislature to give him a constitutional convention."

Coleman said that a constitutional convention offers the only remedy for preventing "our entire public school system from tumbling down the first time we are attacked."

The state, he said, "must wipe the school slate absolutely clean" and adopt new constitutional provisions and statutes which would prevent the same segregation attacks which are being successfully used in other states.

"I think all we should have to say about schools in the new constitution would be that any school district within this state is authorized to own and operate a public school system," he said, adding that the Legislature could also be authorized to "contribute" public funds to them.

'FREE FROM ATTACK'

Such a constitutional provision, Coleman observed, "would be absolutely immune to attack in the federal courts and would keep our public school system alive anywhere in the state regardless of what might happen to any other district."

Coleman ruled out the possibility that the state could switch to a private school system supported directly or indirectly with public funds as a "last resort" plan for segregation.

"If we are basing our hopes on negative thinking about a publicly subsidized private school system then we are leaning on a broken stick," he asserted.

A host of court decisions, he said, would not permit the state to "do indirectly that which is prohibited directly."

VEILED WARNING

Coleman gave a veiled warning that as chairman of the state bond commission he may put an embargo on any further bond issues for the Negro-white school building program unless the Legislature opens the way to rewrite school provisions.

"This is money which the people will have to repay even if their schools are destroyed and the buildings stand empty, monuments of our mismanagement," he asserted.

"I am deeply troubled about this," he said. "I do not want to put the people in debt for buildings which may be used for only a short time."

Virginia's pupil assignment law and other segregation provisions have been stricken down by the federal district court and by the US supreme court as being unconstitutional on their face.

Among the reasons cited by the judge for ruling out the laws as a group, Coleman said, were the adoption of an interposition resolution by Virginia, a specific admission by the governor of Virginia in submitting the school assignment law that it was for preserving segregated schools and provision that the state can cut off funds from mixed schools.

LEGAL PITFALLS

"The legal pitfalls affecting Mississippi schools are exactly the same as was true in Virginia," Coleman declared.

"We adopted an interposition resolution, we have more stringent school closing provisions than had Virginia, we provide for abolition by state action, and the legislative history as reflected in the (legislative) journals is identically the same," he added.

The state must acquire some "elbow room," Coleman said, "in which legally to exercise any and all legitimate educational reasons."

His plan of shifting the responsibility of operating schools to the local districts, and removing race as a legal standard, he said, would require applicants to file individual lawsuits rather than "class suits."

Upholding of the validity of the school assignment law in North Carolina by a special federal court has proven that "an effective method has already survived attack in the United States supreme court."

Five Points

Coleman said he felt Mississippians are agreed on five points:

"1. For the best interests of all races, integration shall be prevented. 2. Public education is a necessity in modern times. 3. Our educational system must be improved. 4. The only way to defeat a school integration order by the courts is to abolish the public school affected, and 5. That integration cannot be defeated by the use of force, either by the use of the National Guard or by mob violence."

Switching to Negro voting barriers, Coleman said the state is "not prepared to cope with the voting onslaughts" it will experience under the new federal civil rights act.

He called for a three-member voter registration commission in each county instead of the present county registrar who is the circuit clerk.

Mississippi's present educational requirements for voters, he said, would meet federal court tests, but the method of administration of the provisions could be "a very fatal pitfall."

If county registrars mishandle the educational tests prescribed by laws or become "pressured into registering all those who ask for registration in order to stay out of trouble," Coleman added, "we will soon be engulfed by wholesale voting of unqualified persons in Mississippi."

Coleman proposed that particular days on which persons can register be set aside, such as the second and fourth Tuesday of each month. Applicants would be notified by the board of registrars if they passed or failed the written examination now required by law.

Six Months Wait

"We should provide that if one fails this educational test he shal not be eligible to take it again for six months," he added. Present law, he said, does not prohibit a voter from taking it over and over again.

Coleman implied in his talk that he does not approve of the plan proposed by Rep. Karl Wiesengurg, Jackson county that the legislature, the governor and lieutenant-governor serve as the constitutional convention.

"I believe the only sound approach is to allow the people to elect their delegates and then submit the finished product to the vote of the people," he said.

He intimated, however, that he will not reject any compromise to the administrative bills which have been introduced.

"If the Legislature in its wisdom can make improvements on the bills which have been introduced, everyone would welcome those improvements," he said.

The Senate is slated to take the first floor action Tuesday on the administration's bill calling for a September 2, 1958 constitutional convention with 158 delegates.

Coleman said at the end of his message to the joint session Monday that he hoped both branches will vote on the convention issue "this week" so that the people "can know where they stand and what to expect."

Stennis Urges Mississippi To Keep Equalization Plan

FRENCH CAMP, Miss., Oct. 24 (AP)—Sen. John Stennis (D-Miss) today urged Mississippi to continue its program to equalize Negro and white schools as the "only hope for modification" of the U.S. Supreme Court order outlawing public school segregation.

Stennis spoke extemporaneously on the school issue, deviating from his prepared talk on the history and progress of the Natchez Trace Parkway at the annual convention of the Natchez Trace Assn.

The senator said the education equalization program is essential "if we are to sell our case to the nation."

"The only hope for modification of the court order is to sell our case to the nation. We could make no worse mistake than to abandon our present school program. It's permanent and it's positive. We must not turn our backs on it. If we do, we have no foundation on which to base our cause."

The school program has been stalled for lack of funds due to high interest rates on bonds.

Discussing the Natchez Trace Parkway, Stennis read a telegram from Secretary of Interior Fred Seaton assuring Mississippi its 316 miles of parkway would be completed in 1966.

The project was estimated at 66 million dollars, Stennis said, adding he plans to seek more money for expanded and additional recreational facilities along the historic route.

REORGANIZATION OF SCHOOLS ENDS

Times-Picayune

Mississippi Trims Districts Down to 151

Wed. 6-19-57

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., June 18 — A three-year job of trimming Mississippi's school districts from more than 2000 to 151 was completed here Tuesday by the state educational finance commission.

New Orleans La.

Reorganization of all school districts in the state was phase two of the state's 20-year plan to equalize Negro and white educational opportunities and upgrade all schools.

The first phase was completed when Mississippi two years ago put into effect a teacher minimum salary schedule giving minimum guarantees to all teachers regardless of race.

The EFC Tuesday put final approval o nreorganization plans submitted by Bolivar, Yalobusha and Panola counties, completing all 82 counties.

The counties had until July 1 to have their reorganization plans approved by the state commission or face the loss of state aid for support and construction. A year ago only 11 counties had been approved.

Ends Discrimination

The consolidation of school districts was a major feature of the broad Negro-white school plan drafted by the Legislature in 1953 under Gov. Hugh White to wipe out admitted discrimination in the allocation of school funds between the daces.

It was the first time a school reorganization was ever undertaken and accomplished from the state level. In 1953, the joint legislative education study committee revealed Mississippi had 2193 school districts, far more than other Southern states.

The EFC was set up as a result of the committee's planning to administer both the reorganization of districts and the construction of schools. The program contemplates spending $120 million during the next 20 years.

The state had decided to proceed with the program to establish an "equal but separate" school system for the races despite the 1954 supreme court decision which outlawed school segregation by law.

Completion of the EFC school district reorganization came despite heavy criticism of the program for legislators during the 1956 Legislature and repeated attempts to postpone the deadline for reconstituting school districts.

Coleman Opposed

Gov. J. P. Coleman opposed measures to retard the progress of the school program and warned he would veto any measures aimed at defeating the reorganization deadline.

The commission's broad powers also weathered a state supreme court test in a case arising from a one-district plan it approved for Adams county.

Louis Alford of McComb for the past year headed the commission, moving up from vice-chairman to succeed Tally Riddell of Quitman, who resigned after being named to another state board by Gov. Coleman.

In the past few months the commission has worked into the night, including Saturday nights, to complete hearings on arguments presented by opposing sides of reorganization plans. Commission members draw only per diem for days in session.

Other members of the commission include Luther Pullen of Kosciusko, J. Keith Worrell of Carrollton, David Miles of Lexington, T. M. Williams Jr. of Meridian and J. W. Pope of Richton.

Approval of the Bolivar, Panola and Yalobusha districts Tuesday brought the total school districts under the new program to 151. Oddly, the six districts approved Tuesday for Bolivar was the largest number given any one county under the new plan.

T. N. Naylor, executive secretary of the commission, said the body's main task now is to pass on long-range building plans brought in by each county and approve construction contracts.

CLAY COUNTY PUPILS ASK FOR TRANSFER

Want To Attend School In Webster County

SEEK BETTER FACILITIES

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., July 8.—The Educational Finance Commission has taken under advisement a decision on a petition to transfer certain Clay County students to Webster County, a move witnesses in a hearing here Monday called the first step in reorganizing Clay County into one school district.

Under the school reorganization law, the Finance Commission can rule only on the petition. It cannot order reorganization of any county unless the county requests it and the reorganization is efficient and economical.

Testimony Heard

The commission received testimony Monday from representatives of parents of 137 children in the Pheba-Cedar Bluff areas of southwestern Clay County. The witnesses said the parents wanted their children to attend West Point schools so they could get a nine-month term and better facilities.

They contended the facilities at Montpelier attendance center, where the reorganization of Clay County ordered them, were less than the Pheba School had under the old system.

Finding it impossible to transfer to West Point, the parents succeeded in calling an election seeking to abolish the county district. The election failed.

The parents then petitioned the County School Board for permission to send their children to the Cumberland attendance center in Webster County. When the board rejected that petition, the parents appealed to the state Educational Finance Commission.

Noel Malone, attorney for the Clay County School Board, told the commission that transfer of the 137 students would "strip the district" of students and funds and would tend to destroy the efficiency of the district.

Eligible Students

There are 386 eligible students in the county school district, Mr. Malone said.

Joe Strickland, testifying for the parents, said their "ultimate goal" was "reorganization of the county [illegible] West Point municipal [illegible]"

Mississippi Builds More Negro Schools

Birmingham Ala.

BRANDON, Miss. — (ANP) — In an apparent effort to circumvent integration and at the same time satisfy Negro demands for better schools, this state has planned to erect four new schools for Negroes in Rankin County, it was disclosed last week.

Of the $2 million school building program planned for Rankin County, the school board states that the following four schools will be erected for Negroes. They are:

1. Carter School, a new institution which will accommodate 1,100 students at a total cost of $490,000.

2. McLaurin School to be built north of Star to accommodate 1,000 pupils at an estimated cost of $454,000.

4. Pelahatchie school at a cost of $85,000.

Editor Urges Co-operation With Negroes Over Schools

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 25.—A ten-point program for "the day when an effort will be made to integrate the schools of Mississippi" was outlined Friday by Oliver Emmerich, editor of the McComb Enterprise-Journal.

Commercial Appeal

The editor, former member of the board of trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning, asserted that "When that time comes, as is inevitable, all fortifications built on negative thinking will crumble."

"Negroes must be assured that they can look with dignity to a future growth in Mississippi—not merely a continuation of the master-slave relationship," he said.

Memphis Tenn.

"White leadership, even though belatedly, must seek ehe co-operation of Mississippi Negro leadership, a large segmentt of which stands ready to co-operate for the best interest of both races," editor Emmerich said. "White leadership commits an unfortunate blunder when it denies leadership at home and compels Negroes to seek leadership elsewhere."

Decries Violence

The editor said that "violence, heated tempers, night morches, bitter words, aroused passions, stimulated racial hatred may for a brief moment provide a morbid sense of self-expression but in the end will prove to be nothing short of calamitous to Mississippis' own cause."

"Applying economic pressures to the Negro people of the South will do nothing other than stimulate economic aid to Negro people from outside the South and further injure Mississippi's cause, Mr. Emmerich said. "Abolishing public schools to defeat integrotion will in the long run settle no problems whatsoever but will on the contrary create even larger problems."

He said laws enacted by the Legislature to curb the advance of school integration "will prove to be ineffective."

Asserting that "Mississipi must launch a forward looking program for Mississippi Negroes," Mr. Emmerich said "success in the short run can be re-inforced through friendly relations between the white and Negro people."

He said "success in the long run depends upon drastically needed reforms within our electoral college system" as outlined in the Mundt-Coudert Amendment for election of presidential electors by Congressional districts and the state at large.

Points Outlined

Other points outlined by Mr. Emmerich included—

1. "Stop letting political writers of the East goad us into anger with statements purposed to drive us to panic, build adequate Negro schools instead of merely promising them. 2. be honest with ourselves and admit to ourselves that good Negro schools have been postponed far too long—and that other racial injustices within the South have contributed to our current debacle.

4. Recognize that the power of education is a constructive force and when applied adequately to our Negro people will raise the standard of all of our people and remove Mississippi from the category of the lowest income state in the nation. 5. recognize that the United States Supreme Court has not outlawed segregated schools nor ordered the Federal Government to integrate them.

6. "Understand that many Mississippians, irritated by integrationists, have violated the friendship of hundreds of thousands of good Mississippi Negroes who have indicated no interest whatsoever in integrated schools, 7. capitalize upon the sincere friendship which most of the Negro people hold for our white people. 8. recognize that hundreds of thousands of Negro parents prefer schools for their children as eagerly as white parents prefer their schools. 9. lend encouragement to the idea of voluntary separation of the schools of iMsissippi and establish a workable basis of co-operation between our white and Negro leaders."

No Funds Available for Private Schools

Oklahoma Eagle
Tulsa, Oklahoma

JACKSON, MISS. — (ANP) — Because no funds are immediately available for private school education, Mississippi's plan to abandon its public school system as a last resort against desegregation has been reported incomplete by State Supt. of Education J. M. Tubb.

Tubb said last week that although the state has drawn up plans to junk the public school system, no provision has been made for financing the private schools. There was no indication that such funds would be made available shortly.

However, Tubb sounded a warning to authorities. He said that action such as has taken place in Little Rock requires that they should prepare for a fight. "The President has set a rpecedent that may in time affect every state in the nation," he said. He referred to President Eisenhower's action in calling out Federal troops to halt mob action and enforce court-ordered integration at Little Rock's Central High school.

Regarding the obtaining of funds for private schools, Tubb said:

"I don't know how the state could transfer taxes to the new private school system to finance operations. There has been no provision made for that. I think there should be some planning on finances."

J.P. Would Change Segregation Plan

Daily News, Jackson, Miss.
P. 1 Mon. 11-25-57

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The West Point Daily Times Leader says the 1958 Legislature will be asked to make possible abolition of schools on a district-by-district basis.

The purpose, the newspaper said in an editorial, will be to save the rest of the state's public school system if integration attempts result in abolition steps in one area of the state.

A 1955 Constitutional amendment permits abolition of public schools to forestall their integration. The Daily Times Leader editorial indicates fear in official quarters that the amendment and supporting laws as now written do not allow piece-meal application.

Gov. J. P. Coleman has been holding a series of closed-door meetings with legislators and others in which he reportedly is telling them how he hopes to bulwalk the state's defenses against school integration and Civil Rights legislation.

Coleman speaks at Carrollton Monday, at Holly Springs Monday night, at Lexington Tuesday noon and at Canton Tuesday night.

The Daily Times Leader editorial was evoked by one last week in the McComb Enterprise-Journal urging that Negroes be given assurance that "they can look with dignity to a future of growth in Mississippi—not merely a continuation of the Master-slave relationship."

Agreeing with this, the Times Leader added that segregation will be continued in Mississippi "because it is desired by the masses." The editorial said:

"During the approaching regular session of the state legislature, one thing will be done which both races must understand. A recent ruling which authorizes the abolition of all public schools in Mississippi will be changed to make possible the abolition on a district-by-district basis. The reason is obvious. Should the NAACP, working with a minority group of Negroes in Mississippi, ever create an unpleasant situation in a certain school, then the means must lie made available to abolist that one school without hurting the entire educational system of the state. This would afford protection to both white and Negro schools."

EQUALIZATION FUNDS TOTAL $6,185,373

Part Of Mississippi Effort To Delay Integration

MOST GOES TO NEGROES

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 25. — New allocations totaling $6,185,373 under the Negro-white public school building equalization program were announced Monday by the State Educational Finance Commission to bring the total thus far under the plan designed to discourage integration to $27,337,522.

In addition, T. H. Naylor director of the Commission, said dates for bids on other projects totaling $2,812,336 were set on allocations previously approved.

Ultimate Cost

Ultimate cost of the equalization effort has been estimated at 120 million dollars.

Until the recent sale of 10 million dollars in bonds, the second of that amount under the program, projects have been at a standstill for lack of funds. Following the October sale of the bonds the Commission began processing the backlog of applications.

Latest allocations were made for 23 projects in 23 districts with all except $776,060 being for Negro schools.

Allocations for white schools, which will be supplemented with local funds, follow—

Hancock County, $178,560; Ocean Springs Municipal Separate District in Jackson County, $165,000; Moss Point Municipal Separate District in Jackson County, $82,500, and City of Jackson Municipal District in Hinds County, $350,000.

Negro Allocations

The allocations for Negro schools follow—

Benton County, $280,000; Grenada County, $200,000; West Point Municipal District in Clay County, $225,000; Calhoun County, $235,000; Kemper County, $370,000; Clarksdale Municipal District in Coahoma County, $250,000.

Greenville Municipal Separate in Washington County, $95,000; Jackson Municipal District in Hinds County, $550,000; Rankin County, $400,000; Copiah County, $475,000.

Sharkey-Issaquena Counties Line Consolidated District and Anguilla Line Consolidated District (joint project), $325,000; Wilkinson County, $575,000; Walthall County, $440,000; Forest Municipal District in Scott County, $140,813; Richton Municipal District in Perry Conuty, $58,500; Simpson County, $275,000. Quitman Consolidated District in Clarke County, $325,000; Picayune Municipal District in Pearl River County, $100,000, and Brookhaven and Brookhaven Municipal District in Lincoln County, $90,000.

Bid Dates

Bid dates set on previously approved projects follow—

Jan. 10 — Campbellville Elementary School in Holly Bluff Line Consolidated District, $91,875, Gibbs Elementary School in Yazoo County, $150,000; Oak Park High in Laurel, $600,000.

Jan. 14—Fulton High in Itawamba County, $142,000; Prentiss High in Jeff Davis County, $452,443.

Jan. 16—LeFlore County High School, $77,400, and Greenwood High School, $489,993.

Jan. 17 — Carver Elementary School at Raymond in Hinds County, $248,625.

Jan. 21—Central High at Ruleville in Sunflower County, $305,000.

Jan. 23—Belzoni High in Humphreys County, $255,000.

New Negro Schools Planned In Yazoo

Daily News
Jackson, Miss.

YAZOO CITY — Yazoo County Negro children will soon have two new schools and the now existing negro high school in the eastern part of the county remodeled.

This announcement was made by W. C. Martin, superintendent of education. Plans were drawn this week and the two new schools have been approved by the State Educational Finance Commission.

The new Gibbs elementary school at Bentonia will have a capacity of 550 students and the Holly Bluff school will take care of 300 students. The Linwood School for negroes, the only county negro high school at present, will take care of 1100 students. In the planning stage still is an elementary school for 400 negroes to be located at Midway.

Aspect Of School Effort To Be Discussed

Special to The Commercial Appeal

SENATOBIA, Miss., Jan. 18.—The overall aspect of the new public school equalization effort will be discussed at the Second District meeting here Tuesday of the Mississippi School Boards Association, president Jack Stuart of Morton, said Friday.

Featured speaker at the night session will be Boyd Campbell of Jackson, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and a leader in the state school movement. J. L. Wilson of New Albany, is district vice president.

Boyd Golding, state auditor, will discuss the financial aspect of a school board member's responsibility, with Perrin Purvis of the Tupelo School Board outlining the preparation and operation withi nthe school budget in the afternoon.

Architectural phases of the new school building program will be discussed by oJhn H. Pritchard of Tunica.

A panel on the school board members' responsibility in Mississippi's new school program will be handled by J. Keith Worrell of Carrollton, member of the state Educational Finance Commission which is handling the new building program.

Members on the panel will be G. J. Cain, statistician of the state Department of Education; Tommy Naylor and W. D. Neal of the Educational Finance Commission staff, and James Kendall of Jackson, attorney for the commission.

Sessions will be held at the junior college here.

Those invited, other than members of the association, include school trustees, county superintendents of education, superintendents of schools, school board office workers and others interested in schools.

Mr. Stuart said the meeting is "designed with the ducation of school board mmbers in mind and is not limited to the reorganization program."

MARSHALL TO BUILD NEW NEGRO SCHOOLS

CONSOLIDATION PLANNED

Memphis, Tenn.

By LOIS SWANEY

Special to The Commercial Appeal

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Feb. 6. — Homer Appleton, Marshall County superindendent of education, announced Wednesday the county is planning to build four schools for Negroes at a cost of about $700,000.

P. 29

The schools will be equal to any in the county, he said.

Forty schools will be consolidated into the four school centers.

Expects State Money

The county will buy the building sites but expects to receive state money for the buildings without a bond issue. A four-year Negro high school will be built in Byhalia and will include 28 rooms, a cafeteria, gymnasium and an auditorium. About 1,600 students will attend this school, which will be consolidated from 14 other schools.

A junior high school of 16 rooms will be built near Mt. Pleasant and will have a cafeteria and auditorium combined. There are 1,000 children in this vicinity who would attend this school.

Other Schools

Near Chulahoma, an eight-grade school that will take care of 400 students will be built. There will be eight rooms plus a cafetorium and principal's office.

A six-room grammar school will be built in Potts Camp and will have a cafetorium and principal's office. All the buildings will be of brick, concrete and steel.

Modern transportation will be furnished to all the schools. The county is also planning to build a countywide school bus repair site at the county farm.

Negro School To Resume Classes

Post Herald Ala. 2-27-57

LAUREL, Feb. 26 (U.P.)—More than 600 Negro students of a high school levelled by a $250,000 fire Saturday night may return to classes this week while local law enforcement officers continue their investigation of possible arson in the blaze.

B'ham, Ala.

Chief of Police Wayne Valentine said there were indications that arsonists entered a window of the Oak Park School, a one-story frame building and started two fires in different parts of the structure. Several teen-age Negro boys who are not students at the school were to be questioned.

P. 15

Mayor A. S. Scott said that classes will be resumed in nine buildings which are a part of the school plant, and a church.

'Be Part Of Answer, Not Problem,' Teachers Told

Memphis Tenn.

PROBLEMS AHEAD SEEN

Fri. 3-15-57

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 14.—Mississippi school teachers were admonished Thursday to be a part of the "answer and not the problem" in the transition of the educational system under a 1953 reorganization to equalize opportunities between the races.

It was made by J. M. Tubb, state superintendent of education, who shared the first general session of the 71st annual convention of the Mississippi Education Association with Dr. Tennyson Guyer of Findlay, Ohio.

"We are on the threshold of a program of education where boys and girls who have been confined to a narrow curriculum will have the opportunity of studying a wider selection of subjects necessary in this day of such a complex civilization," Superintendent Tubb said.

Big Undertaking

He said the program which calls for reorganization of the more than 800 schhol districts into about 120 "is a tremendous undertaking that poses one of the greatest problems we have ever had in Mississippi."

"Mistakes will be made in the reorganization program, but I am sure those mistakes can be corrected by the people and the Legislature in the future," Mr. Tubb said. "We, the teachers and administrators, must be a part of the answer and not a part of the problem in this great transition period."

The school official said the program will be an answer to the "dreams of our people of a time when every child who attends school will have equal opportunities under teachers trained in the art of teaching and who are able to inspire a child to dream and then to give him the fight to make those dreams come true."

Mr. Tubb said district reorganizations in 63 of the 82 counties have been approved by the Mississippi Educational Finance Commission and that all will be completed before the July 1 deadline.

"This program will provide equal educational opportunities for all the children of all the people and at the same time preserve the dual program of education as we have known it throughout the years in our state," he said.

President's Message

Miss Margaret Hutchinson of Jackson, the president, gave her message at the night session along with reports from various committees.

A. A. Roebuck of Aberdeen, elevated to the presidency in Wednesday's election, will take over after the convention.

Mrs. Lina Sartor of Pachuta, president of the classroom teachers division of the 10,400 member organization, was named vice president to succeed Mr. Roebuck. She is in line for the presidency next year under the elevation system followed for years. Mrs. Sartor is the wife of state Representative Havis Sartor of Jasper County.

About 40 sectional groups held meetings during the day and will be in session Friday.

The final general session will be a pageant at Murrah High School Friday night.

SCHOOL DISTRICTING FOR PANOLA DEBATED

Commercial Appeal P. 27

Board Urges One, Citizens Propose Two Units

Wed. 3-20-57

HEARING IS AT JACKSON

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 19.—Deep feelings of Panola Countians in a proposed reorganization of their public schools were demonstrated here Tuesday in a hearing before the Mississippi Educational Finance Commission. Several hundred citizens of the county attended the hearing in the Woolfolk State office building.

Before the commission was a recommendation of the county school board for reorganization of the xisting districts into a single county unit as recommended by a private survey team.

A counter-proposal has been submitted to the commission by citizens calling for two consolidated school districts following the lines of the two existing judicial districts of the county, with Batesville and Sardis as county seats.

Under Advisement

Both proposals were taken under advisement by the commission since two of the five members were absent. A decision was delayed until the issue is considered by the full board headed by Louis Alford of McComb.

Proponents of the two district judicial line plan said it would be more equitable and would preserve the educational tranquility of the county. They said it would allow a high school at Batesville and Sardis, as recommended by the survey team. They also favor two Negro high schools in the same setup rather than one as recommended by the survey group.

Opponents of the single unit plan expressed fear that the county board might change plans for the high school in the Sardis area and locate it between Como and Crenshaw.

In actions by the commission, the Copiah County plan for two districts — county unit and Hazlehurst municipal separate — was approved, along with county units for Claiborne and Franklin Counties.

Action Deferred

Earlier the commission deferred action on proposed reorganization of the Oktibbeha County districts pending settlement of a transfer tuition problem between Starkville ad and the county. When that is worked out, two districts will be approved, the Starkville municipal separate and the other area of the county in a countywide district.

Choctaw County was approved as a county unit with a recommendation that French Camp be continued as an attendance center as long as it meets the averments.

In turning down a two-district plan submitted by Tippah County, the commission recommended two consolidated districts be mapped and submitted later by the board. Such a plan was recommended by Panola Countians for their county.

Also rejected were plans submitted by Wayne and Greene Counties. An issue over a line school district must be settled.

MISSISSIPPI TO OFFER EQUALIZATION BONDS

Commercial Appeal P. 14

School Series To Be For $10,000,000

Sat. 4-27-57

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., April 26. — First general obligation bonds under Mississippi's Negro-white school building equalization program will be offered purchasers May 29, the State Bond Commission announced Thursday.

Memphis Tenn.

The first series will be for 10 million dollars of a 1956 legislative authorization of 60 million. Under the act, the state may issue an unlimited amount of general obligation bonds so long as those outstanding do not exceed 60 million dollars.

Notice of the proposed sale and the bonds are being issued "to provide funds for the purpose of making loans or advances to school districts under the school building program." Thus far, allocations in excess of 17 million dollars have been approved by the State Education al Finance Commission, with about 80 per cent for Negro schools.

The commission allocates the funds to schools on a per student basis and permits the districts to issue bonds up to 75 per cent of what their allocations will be in 20 years. Allocations to white schools are $12 per student and for Negroes, it is $15 per student.

Ultimate cost of the building equalization effort has been estimated at $120,000,000.

The bonds to be issued will be paid from earmarked sales taxes of six million dollars annually. The state has been setting aside $550,000 monthly in sales taxes for the past two years for the program.

The bonds carry a 16-year maturity, with annual payments on an installment basis.

SCHOOL ALLOCATIONS TOLD IN MISSISSIPPI

$1,009,506 Is Provided For Fulton, Greenwood

Tues. 4-23-57

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

Memphis, Tenn.

JACKSON, Miss., April 22.—The State Educational Finance Commission Monday announced allocation of $1,009,506 for school buildings at Fulton and Greenwood under Mississippi's Negro-white equalization program. The allocations brought the total under the progra mto more than 17 million dollars.

W. D. Neal, finance officer of the commission, said $192,506 was allocated to the Fulton white Junior High School in Itawamba County.

The four allocations for Greenwood schools in Leflore County were:

North Greenwood white Elementary School, $50,475, plus $31,920 in local funds; Greenwood white High School, $439,518, in addition to $370,692 local funds to be spent.

Stone Street Negro Elementary School, $206,205, in addition to $73,000 local funds, and addition to Broad Street Negro High School, $120,802, plus $29,197 local funds.

School building contracts approved by the commission headed by Louis Alford of McComb, included:

Crawford Negro Elementary School in Lowndes County, to D. S. McClahanan and Son of Columbus, $102,790, and West Lowndes white Elementary School, same contractor, for same amount.

Hollandale Negro High School in Washington County, Sullivan and Ramsey Material Co. of Kosclusko, general contract for $257,199; plumbing and heating to Central Plumbing and Heating Co. of Jonesboro, Ark., $34,623; electrical to J. M. Hoff, Inc. of Lexington, $33,620, and kitchen equipment to Heuse-Bond Co. of Memphis, $3,990.

Webster County Training School for Negroes, to Lockett Lumber Co. of Grenada, $201,555, and Cumberland white High School in Webster County, same contractor, for $96,975.

Today's Meeting Is First Since Rejection Of Plan

Memphis, Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

SARDIS, Miss., May 5.—The Panola County School Board will hold its first meeting here Monday since the state Education and Finance Commission rejected the board's recommendation of a county unit school system for Panola County.

The state commission April 6 recommended a two district system for the county with boundary lines of the two districts to conform as nearly as possible with boundary lines of the two existing court districts.

The state group's action followed a public hearing in Jackson. Hill Jarratt, attorney for the Panola County School Board, said the four to two vote was the first split vote by the commission.

Mr. Jarratt said he thought the county board might resubmit the rejected proposal with additional supporting data.

However, C. M. Randolph, board president, said he could see nothing to be gained by another public hearing.

Five County School Heads Hit By Court Action

Wed. 6-12-57

JACKSON, Miss., June 11.—(UP) — State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said Tuesday he "would not rush headlong" into possible state action against a group of county school superintendents whose jobs were apparently taken away by a Supreme Court ruling Monday.

Mr. Patterson pointed out that Kemper County School Supt. J. Chandler Land has 15 days under law to file a suggestion of error to the court decision and possibly longer if the court should grant extension.

Mr. Land was declared unqualified for his post by the court which ruled that the state legislature has the authority to prescribe requirements.

Mr. Patterson said that before he considered any action in the case he would consult with the Department of Education to determine what should be done.

He said Monday, however, that he wished to clear the matter up before the convention of the 1958 legislative session so that the lawmakers "may take such further action as they may deem necessary."

In addition to Mr. Land, at least five others are now serving as county school superintendents without the required Class A certificate. They include M. F. Clay of Clay County, Frank Hurst of Noxubee County, Otho R. Cross of Lawrence County, Evans Martin of Greene and Leroy Belk of Lee County.

A. C. Bilbo of Jackson County was erroneously reported by the United Press Monday as failing to hold a Class A certificate according to department records. A second check, however, showed that he received such a certificate in January of 1955.

Not affected by the ruling was Supt. J. E. Aldridge of Hinds County whose post was made appointive rather than elective under a 1954 local and private bill.

State Completes Reorganizing School Areas For Equalization

JACKSON, June 18 (AP)—Mississippi completed today a major step in a broad program to equalize its segregated public schools.

The state, which admitted discrimination against Negro students until the program got under way, completed the reorganization of school districts in all counties. The last to be reorganized—Panola, Yalobusha and Bolivar Counties—were approved by the Educational Finance Commission.

Equalization steps already complete include putting Negro and white teachers on the same salary basis, with take-home pay determined solely by college training and experience. In 1951 the average Negro teacher was paid $918 a year compared with $1865 for white teachers.

A major step not complete but under way—in which the Negro children will be the main beneficiary—is an immense building program to equalize the schools themselves. Through April, of $17,916,309 in school projects approved, 76 per cent or $13,671,194 has been for Negro schools.

There is no disposition among Mississippi's public officials to feel that the equalization program is too late. Despite the U. S. Supreme Court's 1954 school integration ruling, all schools in Mississippi remain segregated, as the state law demands. There has been little apparent pressure to erase the color bars in schools.

The aim of the school district reorganization program is to do away with the smaller, inefficient districts organized in days of poor roads and communications. The number the districts has been reduced from about 2500 to 151.

Monday and will continue the four-a-day sessions through Friday when they present a concluding concert.

The group leaves Saturday by charter bus for San Francisco.

Mississippi's representative in the international contest won first place in 1955 and was last year's runnerup.

NEW NEGRO SCHOOL — Classes begin here tomorrow for 1,600 Jasper county Negro students in a new 12-grade building that cost $361,352.67. The one-story modern structure was described by state school officials as "one of the finest school buildings in the nation."

OFFICIAL INSPECTION — This group of school board members look over the center wing of a three-wing portion of the Southside Negro High School. One wing each serves the primary, elementary and high school departments. In addition there is a gymnasium-auditorium cafeteria, library and administrative section, plus commercial, home economics and sciene sections.

SHOWN ON TOUR THIS WEEK

New Jasper County Negro School Will Open Monday

By PHIL STROUPE
Daily News Staff Writer

HEIDELBERG, Miss. — Some 1,600 East Jasper county Negro school children will ride buses to school Monday for the delayed opening of the 1957 fall term.

They will attend a modern, brand new building just completed this week at a cost of $361,358 and described by state school officials as "one of the finest school buildings anywhere in the South."

It's the Southside Negro High School, located about two miles north of Heidelberg. In the North end of the East Jasper County School District at Rose Hill a new elementary school will open. The Northside Elementary School for Negroes cost $99,783.

I went to Heidelberg to see for myself what kind of new school buildings the state is providing for Negroes under the school equalization program.

FUNCTIONAL, USEFUL

It's not an elaborate oddity, but a functional and useful modern 12-grade school.

Located on a 40-acre site with plenty of trees and playground space, the one-story structure has 24 classrooms, equipped with new desks from the Abe Martin School Supply Company of Jackson.

Green blackboards, tile floors, an abundance of window space for lighting and ventilation, modern heating system, plenty of wall cabinets and storage space, accoustical ceiling, and just about everything needed to induce learning.

A modern home economics department is equipped with the latest refrigerators, stoves, sinks. A commercial department is prepared to teach typing and bookkeeping.

A beautiful library and a modern gymnasium and auditorium combination, equipped with a stage and basketball court, are ready.

In addition there is a cafeteria where hot meals will be served to the students who ride to school in buses, from their homes.

H. F. Holmes, superintendent of the East Jasper School District, conducted a tour of schools this week. Included on the tour were the two new Negro schools and two existing white schools.

GO ON TOUR

Accompanying Supt. Holmes were members of the State Educational Finance Commission, the state agency which approves school building plans and allocates funds for construction.

T. H. Naylor, William D. Neal, Luther Pullen of Kosciusko, T. Marvin Williams of Meridian and J W. Pope of Richton represented the EFC.

Polk Construction Co. of Columbia built the school and Bill Archer of Meridian was the architect.

Dirt moving began last February and school opening was delayed this fall until the building was completed.

Naylor said the building cost about $5.35 per square foot, "a very reasonable price".

THREE LONG WINGS

The school has an administrative section and the auditorium up front, and springing from that are three long wings, one for the primary, elementary and high school departments.

State Superintendent of Education J. M. Tubb made the tour. He said, "It appears the people of Jasper county are making preparations adequately to serve the needs of all the children, and these buildings we've seen here today are some of the finest school buildings, not only in the South, but in the United States."

Naylor called the new Negro high school, "one of the best programs from a cost standpoint to be found anywhere."

Many locals officials toured the schools, including members of the Jasper County School board, the East Jasper board and the West Jasper board.

John D. Lyon, mayor of Heidelberg, is chairman of the East Jasper County School board.

The tour included a visit to the white high school at Heidelberg which is several years old but in good condition.

An oil well pumped on the school's campus as football Coach Glen Wells worked out his team on a nearby playing field.

An adequately equipped high school band practiced its music for the Jasper County Fair and football games.

G. F. Sandifer, principal of the Heidelberg white high school, said 413 students are enrolled in the school. Another white school at Rose Hill in the north end of the district has 140 students.

SCHOOL EQUALIZATION HITS FINANCIAL SNAG

'Slowed To A Snail's Pace,' Mississippian Reports

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 12. — (AP)—Mississippi's gigantic 120-million-dollar program to equalize Negro and white schools "has slowed to a snail's pace," an Educational Finance Commission spokesman said Monday.

William D. Neal, director of finance for the agency which oversees the big program, said the slowdown results from a lack of money.

The State Bond Commission tried several weeks ago to sell 10 million dollars in "full faith and credit" EFC bonds but the low bid of 3.15 interest was rejected as too high.

Interest rates have climbed still higher since then. The building Commission on Wednesday will try to sell $3,920,000 in State Building Commission bonds for college and institutional projects. EFC authorities will watch the attempt with great interest.

When the school equalization program was enacted in 1954, officials estimated it would take 20 years to complete the job. The state's schools districts already have been reorganized and streamlined.

As of July 31, the EFC had approved school building projects totaling $19,528,318. Of that amount, $6,774,469 has been paid out to jobs already under contract. That leaves $12,753,849 in projects approved by the EFC but for which the agency cannot now allot money.

The only source of funds for the equalization program—until bonds are sold—is the $555,000 per month set aside each month from the state's three per cent state sales tax.

"That won't go very far," Neal said.

NEW PRINCIPAL — William Berry is principal of the Southside High School. He's a graduate of Rust College at Holly Springs and received his master's degree from Jackson State College for Negroes in Jackson. The high school principal is Ira W. McCullen, who was educated at Alcorn A and M and Jackson State College.

Mississippi School Law Is Hit by New Challenge

Times-Picayune p. 26

Sun. 7-14-57

Kemper County Official Fights for Job

New Orleans La.

By TIM PARKER

JACKSON, Miss., July 13 (AP)—Mississippi's law setting professional standards for county school superintendents came under persuasive attack again this week.

The state supreme court upheld the law's constitutionality on June 10. But it was a split decision in which both presiding justice William G. Roberds and chief justice Harvey McGehee dissented.

Challenge Raised

The constitutional challenge is raised again in a 47-page "suggestion of error" filed with the court this week by attorneys John D. Guyton of Kosciusko and Helen J. McDade of DeKalb.

They are lawyers for Kemper county Supt. J. Chandler Land, who was technically ousted from office by the June 10 decision because he did not have the certificate of eligibility required of candidates for the post.

Also at stake, because they did not obtain the certificates, are the jobs of Supts. M. F. Clay of Clay county, Evans Martin of Greene county, Otho R. Cross of Lawrence county, Leroy Belk of Lee county and Frank Hurst of Noxubee county.

Land, 43, had the bachelor's degree required by the 1953 law but was unable to qualify for the "Class A" certificate required of candidates. The law requires five years' administrative school experience, which Land did not have.

Land's Arguments

Land's attorneys' main arguments are:

1. The Legislature made an unconstitutional delegation of power in providing that the state department of education should establish "the rules and regulations" under which the certificate would be granted. The 1890 constitution says qualifications for superintendents "shall be prescribed by law"—and, by implication, not by administrative regulation.

Justice W. N. Ethridge Jr. wrote the majority opinion holding the law constitutional. By coincidence possibly, Guyton cited a 1948 opinion by then-justice George H. Ethridge—a distant cousin of the present justice—saying the 1890 constitution intended "to preserve this office to the control of the legislature."

2. The law is unconstitutionally discriminatory in its "grandfather clause" which exempted incumbents as of Dec. 28, 1953, from the more stringent qualification. It was on this point that chief justice McGehee dissented vigorously.

Land's attorneys also argued that, by chance, about the only other person in Kemper county eligible for the office is the incumbent whom Land defeated for re-election in 1955.

The suit which ousted Land was brought by the Mississippi Education Assn., in the name of Atty. Gen. Joe Paterson. Both Patterson and the MEA emphasized their purpose was not to get Land's job but to establish whether the law is constitutional.

Ruling Asked

There is a possibility the law's constitutionality can be upheld without Land losing his job. The state department of education this week asked for an attorney general's ruling whether administrative experience acquired while holding the superintendent's job without a Class A certificate counts toward the five years requirement. The attorney general declined to rule because the Land case still is before the court.

Also operating in Land's personal favor is the strong June 10 dissent by justice Roberds, who argued it was unfair to remove Land under "quo warranto" proceedings.

Under quo warranto, courts are given unusual discretion, and Roberds argued the court should have taken into account Land's large margin of victory in the election, his considerable experience, and the fact he had obtained an attorney general's opinion which he interpreted to mean he was eligible.

The Public Schools Of Jackson

Daily News

Sun. 9-8-57

Schools are opening this week in Jackson and throughout the city's separate school district.

An army of 825 teachers will go to work in Mississippi's biggest, best and busiest city. The enrollment at the beginning will be not less than 22,000 and it will swell to 24,000 before the end of the school term, not including fully 1,000 adults who will be attending sessions of night schools.

Daily News P. 10-A

The Jackson public school system is by far the largest business in our city. It has an operating cost of $4,800,000 per year, not including operation of the cafeteria system costing about $1,000,000 each year.

The Jackson separate school district has an assessed valuation of $212,000,000, and the total investment in school property is well above $20,000,000.

Our faith in the future is evidenced by the fact that the bonded debt for schools is $14,700,000, on which sinking fund and interest charges amount to $1,500,000 per year. Practically all the bonded debt has been assumed during the past five years. Construction of new school buildings now underway involves a cost of $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

If you are a patron of our public schools these figures ought to make you feel important. If you are a taxpayer you ought to feel proud that you are supporting such a splendid institution.

School bells are ringing—or would be if school bells had not gone out of style—throughout the nation. Within the current month 40,000,000 boys and girls will be enrolled in our elementary and high schools. Cost of the maintenance of these schools is well above $12,000,000,000 per year.

Don't get the idea in your mind that children go unwillingly to school. Except in few instances, there has rarely been any truth in that idea. Most children are glad to get back to school, renewing old friendships, making new ones, and with definite beliefs in their minds that education is something important and well worth while.

School principals, of course, are having their usual worries, one being the shortage of teachers and another the problem of providing seats for all who enroll.

However, it is a fortunate fact that, no matter how many handicaps or worries they face our schools keep right on keeping on. Regardless of how many problems education creates, the people in Jackson and this nation generally are always ready to spend whatever may be needed in the way of money and effort to meet these problems. They realize that the cost of education is steadily mounting. School teachers ask, and in most instances deserve, better salaries. There is growing need for new buildings and construction costs go higher each year. Schools are often overcrowded, faculty shortages are acute and the threat of integration hovers like a dark shadow over the land, but the struggle to make our school system better with each passing year goes steadily onward.

To the 825 teachers in the Jackson schools the Daily News extends greetings and best wishes for a successful school year.

Teaching school is the most self-respecting business on earth.

No other profession offers more opportunity to be honest, humane, truthful and intelligent. All teaching is based on a program of making the world a better place in which to live.

Review the mill-run of humanity and you will find fewer immoral, shady, devious, unworthy or hypocritical persons in the teaching profession than any other calling, not even excepting the clergy.

The durable and worth-while satisfactions of life come faster, in greater variety, and stay longer for the live and progressive teacher than you will find among any other calling.

It is more honorable to be a first-class school teacher than to make millions, hold high office, or lead a conquering army.

To inspire first thoughts in young minds, to pour instruction into, to pour worth-while instruction into the brains of the boys and girls of our land, to breathe the enlivening spirit, to fix clean thoughts and generous purposes in oncoming generations, is the work we place in the hands of our school teachers. All honor, praise and glory to them!

ONE FROM MANY — The modern Black Hawk Negro Elementary School (top) in Carroll County, Miss., was created when 12 low standard schools were consolidated. The $70,000 structure was the first in the state to be built under the Legislature's 1953 Negro school equalization program.

Carroll First To Complete School Equalization Setup

CARROLLTON, Miss., Sept. 2.—Carroll County can boast quite an accomplishment.

In spite of being one of the most sparcely populated counties in Mississippi, Carroll was the first county to complete its program of the state's Negro School Equalization Act.

Under the reorganization of the Carroll County School districts many scattered sub-standard schools have been brought under the roofs of three new schools.

The Negro Elementary School at Black Hawk was the first school in Mississippi to be completed under the program. Marshall School at North Carrollton and the Vaiden Negro High School followed. P. 23

67 Per Cent Negro

This accomplishment was achieved during the second term administration of Frank I. Lovell Jr., superintendent of education for Carroll County.

The population of the county is 67 per cent Negro. The number of Negro schools had been reduced from a total of 62 in the 1944-45 session to 27 in the 1954-55 session.

Today, these 27 have been reduced by consolidation to only three modern schools.

Twelve small frame schools were consolidated into the Black Hawk Elementary School. An eight grade school, it is a $70,000, 10-class room, building of concrete block and brick.

Now For The Whites

The Marshall School, is built adjacent to a seven classroom brick building in North Carrollton. Four schools were consolidated into this newly completed building.

Six schools were consolidated into the Vaiden School and students from five other schools are now transported by bus to attend nearby Leflore County schools at Carroll County expense.

Now that the Negro school-building program is completed, Carroll Countians are turning to improvements necessary in its white schools.

The problem now in Carroll County, school officials say, is to equalize schools for whites with those for the Negroes.

SAY STATE NEGRO SCHOOLS GET MORE THAN 80% OF MONEY

Director of Finace Bill Neal estimates that Negro schools account for more than 80 per cent of the 18 million dollars worth of school construction projects authorized by the State Educational Finance Commission during the 14 months since funds became available.

Neal said school construction projects approved between Jan. 31, 1956 and March 31, 1957 totaled more than 13 million dollars.

He said approvals were for projects in 29 school districts in 21 countries.

"By the time we complete our job of approving school reorganizing plans of all 82 counties," Neal said, "there will be about 154 school districts in Mississippi."

The 154 compares with more than 2,000 in 1953, the year the program was begun. There were more than 5,000 in 1947, he said.

The commission is authorized to issue a maximum of 60 million dollars in bonds at any one time for school construction. The bonds would be retired with $555,000 a month in sales taxes earmarking for that purpose.

So far, Neal said, no bonds have been issued because the commission has not had any trouble providing the money through monthly sales tax receipts.

This $555,000 a month, he said, provides school buildings, and equipment geared to meet a certain minimum standard.

However, counties or municipalities may supplement state funds with local funds to provide higher standards in their schools.

NEW FUNDS ALLOTTED MISSISSIPPI SCHOOLS

Most Of $1,672,575 Given To Negro Facilities

TOTAL NOW $20,000,000

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., May 27.—Allocation of $1,672,575 for new and expanded buildings under Mississippi's new Negro-white public school equalization program was announced Monday by the State Educational Finance Commission.

The total thus far is about 20 million dollars of which 78 per cent has gone to Negro schools.

$635,773 To White Units

Of the amount in the latest disbursement, $1,036,802 went to Negro schools and $635,773 to white schools.

Included in the new allocations was $336,440 for a Negro High School at Olive Branch in DeSoto County, the third such facility in a county which had no Negro public high schools prior to the new equalization program. Previous allotments for Negro high schools in DeSoto County were $360,000 for the school at Hernando, and $340,000 for the facility at Delta Center.

Two disbursements were made to Itawamba County, $128,100 for the Mantachie white high school, and $128,900 for the Tremont white high school.

Hinds, Coahoma Funds

Coahoma County was allotted $140,000 for the Dublin Negro Elementary School, and Hinds County given $248,625 for the Raymond Negro Junior High School.

Other allocations announced Monday by W. D. Neal, financial officer of the educational Finance Commission, included—

Warren County — Redwood White High School, $66,837; Jett White High School, $59,387, and supplemental allocation of $31,119 for white high school in Vicksburg to bring state's total grant to $342,308 for the $1,613,591 facility.

Burgland Negro High School in McComb, $311,737, additional $2,288 for total of $43,245 for Seminary White High Vocational Building in Covington County, and $219,142 for white elementary school at Columbia in Marion County.

Deep South Still Believes It Can Evade Court Ruling To Integrate School System

Mississippi's Attitude Toward Equalization Program Is One Good Example—Big Job Of Reorganizing Districts Completed

By TIM PARKER
Associated Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., June 22.—The Deep South's growing belief she can keep segregated schools is evidenced in Mississippi's changed attitude toward the state's multi-million-dollar school equalization program.

The basis for the program to equalize Negro and white schools and teacher salaries was laid by a legislative committee's 1953 report of "disturbing" discrimination against Negro education.

With no show of horror, the legislators said their recommendations could be used "with only a few changes . . . in a non-segregated system." The report frankly took into account not only the possibility that school segregation would be declared unconstitutional, which came about a year later, but also appeared to assume such a ruling would be enforced.

They Won't Admit It

Four years later, as Mississippi this week completed one of the major steps outlined by the study committee, you can't get an important public officeholder in the state to admit publicly that school integration can happen here.

Completed this week was the tremendous job of re-organizing school districts in all 82 counties. Before the program got under way, there were about 2,500 districts, some wealthy and well operated, many pathetically poor.

Now there are only 151, and each is to share equally, on a per student basis, in a school equalization and upgrading program whose eventual cost is estimated at 120 million dollars for facilities and 85 million every two years for salaries and administration.

The 1953 committee report made public knowledge of what had been for decades well known among school people and public officials.

"The condition of Mississippi's schools for Negroes in rural areas is pathetic and in some cases it is inexcusable," said the report by the committee headed by Representative Tyler Holmes of Montgomery County.

Mississippians Were Shocked

"Hundreds of children of the Negro race are compelled to attend school—if they attend at all—in unpainted, unheated and unlighted buildings that are not fit for human habitation and should have been condemned many years ago."

The legislators suggested Mississippians would be shocked, and they were, by figures made public for the first time on comparative amounts spent for Negro and white education. Prairie District in Lowndes County, for example, spent $249.39 per white child a year, only $20.41 per Negro child. LeFlore County ran $201.86 to $26.62; Glendora District in Tallahatchie County $464.49 to $13.71; Tunica County $270.69 to $21.36.

Disparity between the races wasn't the only problem. White children in some poor sections were worse off than Negroes in richer sections. School laws — there were more than 500 of them — were a "hopeless patchwork" of antiquated provisions.

State's Efforts Ignored

"If there is any value in the recommendations of this committee, they can be used regardless of whether the constitutionality of segregation is upheld or denied," the report said. "The recommendations can be used in a segregated system without change and with only a few changes, the majority of which would be administrative, in a non-segregated system."

The report added hopefully: "The fact that Mississippi has made an honest attempt to remedy an inequitable situation may have a psychological influence upon the United States Supreme Court in its decision in the segregation cases." Fifteen months later came the court's integration ruling.

As late as 1951, the average Negro teacher in Mississippi was paid $918 compared with $1,865 for whites. Now the pay is based solely on academic qualifications and experience. There is talk of a "third factor," to take into account differences in personal effectiveness, a proposal looked upon favorably by educators of both races.

Despite raises by the 1956 Legislature, the average Mississippi teacher at $2,443 was the second lowest paid in the nation last school year. This year, with Arkansas vaulting out of last place, Mississippi will be in the cellar again, despite an automatic $80 increase provided by law. Further raises will be asked of the 1958 Legislature.

In a formal dissent from the full committee, Representative Hilton Waits of Washington County said in 1953 that the equalization program is "too ambitious for the economy of Mississippi and the ability of the taxpayers to support."

The mammoth building program is financed by six million dollars set aside annually from the state sales tax. The Legislature authorized issuance of 60 million dollars in bonds, backed by the sales tax division.

Bond Bids Rejected

Last month the first 10 million dollars in bonds was offered and all bids were rejected as too high. Some blamed the current tight money market, but there also was talk that Eastern banking houses look with suspicion upon bonds to build a segregated school system, despite assurance of the sales tax backing.

This week, the Educational Finance Commission asked the State Bond Commission to try a smaller issue, of five million dollars. The hope is that Mississippi banking institutions can handle such an issue.

Continued difficulty in selling the bonds, with a great deal of money already committed and 78 per cent of it going to Negro schools, could delay the equalization program.

Representative John Kennedy of Marshall County recalled this week that attempts were made in the 1956 Legislature to kill the program.

"The same reactionaries who were responsible for the United States Supreme Court integration ruling in the first place tried to kill the program," the 27-year-old University of Mississippi law student said.

"We had more than half a century to give the Negroes equal facilities and we didn't. I don't believe there would have been a Supreme Court decision if we had."

MILLION IS NEEDED TO UPGRADE SCHOOLS

Two Mississippi Negro Colleges On Probation

THIRD IS UNACCREDITED

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 15.—Removal of a probationary status given two of Mississippi's senior colleges for Negroes and the upgrading of a third for accreditation will cost one million dollars, the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning Thursday advised the state Budget Commission.

The two Negro colleges placed on probation earlier this year by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools because of inadequate trained staffs and equipment are Jackson State College and Alcorn A. and M. College.

College officials said it will take an additional $750,000 to place those two colleges in good standing, and an additional $250,000 for Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes at Itta Bena, to gain accreditation.

Part Of Increase

The one million dollars is part of a $4,242,762 increase the college board is asking for operation of the five white and three Negro colleges under its jurisdiction for the new biennium commencing next June 30. The overall appropriation request for operation of the colleges is $16,542,762.

However, the overall allocation request of the college board for all programs under its direction, including agricultural extension, experiment stations, the four-year medical school and 350-bed teaching hospital, totals $28,283,262, or an increase of $7,942,762, about 40 per cent up.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, chairman of the Budget Commission which met with college board officials Thursday, said the funds for the Negro colleges is "mandatory."

"We cannot expect the Negroes of this state to attend institutions that are not accredited," the Governor said.

Governor Coleman also said increased funds for all the colleges to provide salary increases in an effort to stop exodus of teachers to state's offering better pay is another "must" if trained personnel is to be retained.

For Salary Increase

The $4,242,762 added state funds for operation of the colleges is in addition to $1,022,786 anticipated from student fees for an overall fund need of $5,265,548.

Of the increase, $2,336,780 is asked for salary increases, $1,324,800 for adding trained staff members, $435,410 for supplies and general expenses, $370,838 for repairs and maintenance, $580,672 for equipment and $217,040 for new programs.

College officials pointed out that the average professor salary in Mississippi is $4,544 against a national average of $5,649. The added funds would raise the state average to $5,452.

A breakdown of the requests for colleges in the new biennium follow:

University of Mississippi, $4,203,276, up $930,000; Mississippi State College, $4,230,900, up $1,184,256; Mississippi Southern at Hattiesburg, $2,571, 381, up $672,509; Mississippi State College for Women at Columbus, $1,445,431, up $410,593; Delta State College at Cleveland, $1,103,532, up $170,890; Jackson State, $1,084,382, up $1305,788; Mississippi Vocational, $971,578, up $418,998, and Alcorn College, $1,022,280, up $331,201.

Other Programs

Other programs under the college board and their budget request include:

Experiment stations, $2,276,000, up $781,000; extension service, $2,931,500 up $1,206,500; medical school, $2,300,000 up $500,000; teaching hospital, $2,600,000, up $600,000; nursing school, $350,000, up $123,000.

Regional education program, $532,000, up $232,000; chemical regulatory program, $250,000, up $50,000; advance nurse training, $58,500, unchanged; Gulf Coast research laboratory, $142,500, up $92,500, Negro students for out of state graduate work, $250,000 up $100,000, and for foundation herds at Mississippi State College, $50,000, up $15,000.

Kansas City Makes Big Strides In Integration Despite Tensions

Mon. 5-20-57

This is the fourth of several articles on the integration of Negro and white students and teachers in the public schools in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision.

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 15 —The caller sang out "Swing your partners" and the square dance was on.

The boys and girls at West Junior High School pranced happily on the stage of the school auditorium while their classmates applauded.

No one seemed to notice that Negro as well as white pupils were in the dance. And that they "swung their partners" regardless of color.

Of the 633 students at West Junior High School, 114 are Negro. Negro youngsters participate in every type of activity. They are on the swimming and basketball teams. They are on the twenty-five social and school clubs, from needlework to photography. They attend the monthly dances.

"When we first enrolled Negroes here a year ago," Roscoe V. Cramer, the principal, said, "we had some doubts about mixed dancing. But I knew that the boys and girls would solve the problem in their own way. They did. Negro boys dance with Negro girls, white boys with white girls."

Dr. Cramer looked up at the auditorium stage. "This is probably the first time in this city," he said, "that mixed dancing has been seen in our schools."

He paused before adding: "But this is not ballroom dancing. In square dancing, you see, the white and colored children only hold hands."

Integration has made rapid strides here. But, serious problems still exist. Many junior and high school students say that while they accept mixed classes they do not like them. An undercurrent of uneasiness, bordering on tension exists in several of the integrated schools. In some schools Negro students are not permitted to join some of the extra-curricular club activities. But school officials minimize this condition. They blame adults.

22 Per Cent Negro

In this city of 500,000 the Negro school population is large; 22 per cent, or 14,000, of the school enrollment of 62,742, are Negro. Of 2,485 teachers, 394 are Negro.

This fall, for the first time, the system began to integrate the faculty. One hundred and seventy-one teachers are working on mixed faculties. Of these, 115 are white, fifty-six are Negro. One formerly all-white elementary school has a Negro principal. A high school has a Negro vice principal.

"We still have a long way to go before we get complete faculty integration," Dr. James A. Hazlett, Superintendent of schools, said. "We have made a start, and that is important. We can't step out too far ahead of the community on the integration issue."

Pupil integration, though, is virtually complete. Mixed classes are found on every level from kindergarten through junior college. In the fall of 1955, the Board of Education put revised district lines into effect, abolishing all differences between Negro and white school lines. Regardless of color, children attend school in their own districts.

Transfer Rate Low

However, they can ask for a transfer to another school. Few students take this way out. In the pre-integration year of 1954-1955, 2,572 students asked for transfers for one reason or another. That was considered normal. When integration became effective, in 1955-56, 2,998 sought transfers, an increase of about 400. This year about the same number asked to change schools.

"Of course, we know that a small percentage of the students want to get out of a mixed school," Dr. Hazlett said. "But frankly we were surprised at the insignificant number who actually took advantage of this opening. We are even more pleased to see that the number seeking transfers is not growing."

The schools in Kansas City are almost an island of integration in a community that is still largely segregated. The churches, for the most part, are not mixed. The city hospitals are kept separate on the basis of color. The downtown restaurants do not serve Negroes. Many movie houses have a segregated policy.

"Considering the rest of the community activity, the schools have made remarkable progress," Dr. Hazlett said. "We have not had any serious flare-ups."

On the elementary level, Negro and white students accept each other easily. They play together regardless of color. At Linwood Elementary School, where the 850 children are almost equally divided between whites and Negroes, the atmosphere is calm and friendly. The boys and girls do not give any sign of prejudice.

Tension in Junior High

This is not true on the junior high school level. Tension is apparent at Central Junior High School, where 42 per cent of the 1,450 pupils are Negroes. Within recent months, fist fights between white and Negro boys have been reported. A Negro boy broke the jaw of a white boy in an unprovoked attack. The police have been called to curb a growing protection racket, in which Negro boys demand money from white pupils.

The principal, Rae Haley, is quite aware of what is happening. To try to ease the tension, six Negro teachers and a Negro counselor have been added to the staff.

It is a community, not just a school problem, school officials say. Central School is in a section where the Negro population is growing. Many whites are moving out. Last Monday the Central Linwood Community Council, consisting of representatives of the churches, schools, welfare groups and other civic-minded organizations, met to consider how to bring about better relations between whites and Negroes.

"The churches and other community groups must cooperate with the schools if we are to have integration," the council insisted.

You can hear the views of their elders parroted by the seventh, eighth and ninth graders.

'Can't Trust the Negroes'

"You can't trust the Negroes," according to Russell Funk, 15 years old, a ninth-grade student. "When you walk down the hall they try to trip you or swing at you with their fists."

"I'm shocked at the language of the colored girls," Carol Harmon, 15, said. "Some of the girls are nice, but most of them use a lot of profanity."

"This is my first year with colored children," observed 13-year-old Bobbette Roberts, a seventh-grader who wants to be a nurse. "I accidentally knocked a basket off the bench of a colored girl in gym today and she hit me. A lot of times the colored girls put their arms around you. I don't want to seem mean, but I just don't like them hovering about me in that way."

She continued:

"If we go to school with Negroes, it's going to mean intermarriage. You just can't help it. I think it's terrible to see a white boy go down the hall next to a colored girl."

For the most part the Negroes expressed a wish to be friendly.

'Loads of White Friends'

"We want to show our white friends that we are not an inferior group," said Maisie Dixon, 14, a ninth-grade student. "I have loads of white friends. They don't mind my color. But it's the grown-ups that influence them and tell them not to play with us."

"We don't want to grow up hating each other," asserted Marva Welch, 15, who hopes to be a laboratory technician some day. "We don't have any grudge against the whites. But we feel that we are just as good as they are."

Another quietly insisted: "There is really no difference between us. It's just a matter of color."

Despite the difficulties and the tension, much headway has been made. Mr. Haley estimates that less than 10 per cent of the students in his school are "troublemakers." The rest, he believes, accept mixed classes.

Negro students have been elected to various class offices. It is not uncommon to find a Negro on the Student Council or president of a class.

"My best friend is a Negro girl," volunteered Pauline Walker, president of the West Junior High School Student Council. "My mother was dismayed when she heard that I had a Negro friend. It doesn't bother her now, though."

John Robins, a Negro, is treasurer of the council.

"Some of the white pupils were a little skeptical about me at first," William M. White, one of the six Negro teachers at Central Junior High, observed. "They weren't sure whether or not they would like me. I'm sure they like me now though."

"I find it's harder to make the same grades at Central," said Opal Jackson, 13, who came from an all-Negro school. "I have to study much harder."

Eclophia Smith, a seventh grader, came to Kansas City last January from Summers, Miss. The junior high work here is pretty rough on him, but he is struggling hard to keep his head above water.

"I felt scared and ashamed when I first came here," Eclophia continued. "You see, I never went to a school with white children before. I'm not scared any more. They all treat me very nice."

The white children accept their Negro teachers without resentment.

She Wants to Learn

"I came here to learn," points out Judy Dunn, 13, who wants to be a nurse, "and I don't care whether my teacher is white or black."

"We are very happy at this acceptance of Negro teachers by the white children," Dr. Hazlett said. "Frankly we were worried at first about putting Negro teachers in with white children."

Other problems have developed. Some teachers say mixed classes have brought about relaxed discipline and lower educational standards.

"The Negro children are just a little slower in getting to school," according to Miss Ann Kayser, a fourth-grade teacher, who is president of the Teachers Cooperative Council.

"I've had a 30 per cent increase in tardiness in my class. Quite often I'll have three or four Negro children come in ten minutes late."

"They're noisier and less inhibited," declared Ed C. Lockridge, a math teacher for the last thirty years. "I have three or four Negroes who are top students, but most of them are not that way. What alarms me is that the white students are doing less work. Instead of getting the Negroes to come up to their standards, they are lowering their their own."

It is obvious that the easy-going relationships among teachers and students on the elementary level does not exist in junior high school. Many might say that junior high age is difficult under any circumstances. It is made more so through integration, some of the teachers believe.

Some Segregation Remains

Segregation has not been entirely abolished, Paul M. Marshall, principal of senior high school, notes. The Negroes have not been invited to join the literary club at his school.

"Several Negro students came to me," Mr. Marshall said, "and wanted to form a literary club of their own. I gave them permission to do so."

"I think that kind of segregation should be discouraged," declared William Gremley, executive secretary of the City Commission on Human Relations. "That's retrogression."

However, Mr. Gremley, whose city commission of fifteen works closely with the school board, said that integration had made an "excellent record." Desegregation has taken place with a minimum of violence.

"Some of us feel that integration should be speeded up," he said, "especially in mixing teaching staffs more. But on the whole Kansas City has done a remarkable job."

Here, as in the other Southern communities visited by this reporter, integration ends the moment the pupils leave the school yard. A white boy, standing in front of Central High, waved to his Negro friend as they stepped outside the school yard.

"So long, Jim," he said, quietly, "see you tomorrow."

They both walked in the same direction, the Negro boy joining several Negroes, the white boy a group of whites. It was 3 P. M. Integration had ended for the day.

The fifth article, which will appear on Wednesday, will discuss classroom reaction to integration in the high schools in Tulsa, Okla.

Race Designation Removed From Missouri School Law

ST. LOUIS.—The Missouri Assembly has passed Bill 163 that removes the appellation of "colored" from the school census laws that require all superintendents to certify the names of all children between the ages of 6 and 20 years. In accord with Missouri desegregation in compliance with the Supreme Court's decision, the bill was introduced by Representatives Troupe, Tyus and Wheeler of St. Louis, and Neal of Kansas City.

The new law repeals the old statutory law Section 163,130 and other sections where the word "colored" or "Negro" was used.

The only part left in the Missouri law that has a racial discrimination is the part of Section 3361 which forbids the "intermarriage between white persons and negroes or white persons and Mongolians." (The word Negro is non-capitalized but the Mongolian is capitalized in the statute.)

The provision in the Missouri

The provision in the Missouri Constitution providing for separate schools for "children of African descent" is still in the Constitution but it has been nullified by the U. S. Supreme Court decisions.

St. Louis school official honored

ST. LOUIS (ANP)— Philip J. Hickey, superintendent of instruction of St. Louis public schools, has been awarded a citation from Phi Delta Kappa for his leadership in the integration of personnel and students in the school system here.

The presentation was made by Miss Beryl Smart, chairman of the society's national workshop committee, and Mrs. Olivia B. Jones, president of the St. Louis chapter at the organization's 33rd annual conclave at Miami.

Missouri: The Show-Me State

Missouri is living up to its proud title of "Show Me" state in the splendid record it is making in school integration. Southern School News, a reliable organization of Southern newspapers making periodical study of racial mixing in education since the 1954 Supreme court decision banning segregated schools, reports that 60,000 out of 67,000 Negro pupils in the state are going to integrated schools.

The report reveals that the only lag in bringing the state up to what will be considered complete integration is in the bootheel and Little Dixie sections in the most southerly part of the state. Some improvment is being noted there and investigators feel that within a five to ten year period, school segregation will be a relic in the state.

Missouri has forged ahead in complying with the high court mandate of three years ago because of the high caliber of its governors, Phil Donnelly, at the time of the historic ruling, and the present incumbent, James T. Blair, who have done their part offficially to make school integration a reality.

Leading in mixing Negro and white students have been the three largest cities of the State—St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph. In the first two, integration of teachers is taking place, though at a slower pace than that of the pupils in the classrooms. St. Joseph moved ahead in the fall following the May 17 Supreme court edict. The other cities moved a little slower but speeded up the second and third years.

It is noteworthy that Missouri is making full use of Lincoln university, its former all-Negro seat of higher learning at Jefferson City, Mo.. by continuing its operation with one-third of the student body being white, maintaining its Negro president and an integrated faculty.

This a far cry from the thirties when the NAACP made efforts to open the doors of Missouri university to Negro students, first with Lloyd Gaines (who mysteriously vanished from public sight) and later, Miss Lucile Bluford, news editor of THE CALL.

These events were followed by the U. S. Supreme court's ruling that either Negroes be admitted to M. U. or that equal educational facilities be provided for them. The state then poured out hundreds of thousands of dollars in an attempt to raise Lincoln to equal status with M. U. However, Negroes were finally admitted to M. U. and the state legislature used good judgment in keeping Lincoln alive and finally opening it to all students regardless of race. All state-operated educational institutions of higher learning are now open to whoever can qualify for admittance.

Missouri has come a long way in making equal opportunity for all its citizens in contrast to its sister-state Arkansas, whose Governor Orval E. Faubus, has furnished the Russian Communistic propaganda machine with some most potent points about U. S. racial bias to circulate to the dark-skinned inhabitants of the world.

There's a song in the musical hit "Everything's Up To Date In Kansas City. It's Gone about as Far as It Moving Well in Missouri. It hasn't Gone as far as it can Go," which might be paraphrased to: "Everything's can Go. But it's headed in the right Direction."

Charge Bias At Allen School

Parents Protest Teachers' Use Of Word 'Black'

Negro parents in Westport last week protested to School Principal E. G. Creek incidents of racial prejudices they said their children have been experiencing at the three-year integrated Allen elementary school.

Charges made by a group of 12 mothers and two fathers, attending a conference at the school included the statements that:

Negro kindergarten pupils, during rest periods, were required to recline upon a table —"because of grease on their hair," while the white tots took their rest upon the classroom rug;

That one of the Negro pupils was sent to an ungraded room without notification of her parents;

That some teachers in their classrooms, addressed Negro students by the term "black child;" or referred to them as "black" girl or boy.

That the Negro pupils who had signed up to take part in the school's carnival, were taken out of the entertainment because "they were asked to appear in cotton-picking roles and sing Negro spirituals," contrary to their wishes.

Principal Creek said he felt it an "honor" to have the parents call upon him. He welcomed the opportunity "to talk it out and get the atmosphere clear," Creek said, greeting the group.

Makes 'Slip'

He began the conference by referring to "some of the black—" which he quickly changed to "some of the Negro children." As parents voiced their protests, Creek immediately apologized for "my slip."

The parents continued their objections over the use of the descriptive adjective, "black," with reference to their children and Creek then asked what the "acceptable terms" were. A parent informed him that the words "colored" and "Negro" were customarily used.

Then the questioning began.

One parent asked why the Negro kindergarten children had to rest upon a table while the white children used the classroom rug. She added that she never used grease on her child's hair.

Discusses Rug

Creek explained that the classroom had received a new rug last year and that the reason was "to protect the new rug."

The principal added that the situation in the kindergarten class had been corrected. Thursday morning all of the students, Negro and white, were sleeping on the rug with sheets of brown paper under their heads, Creek said.

Another parent wanted to know why his child was put in an ungraded room without his knowledge.

The principal said that if such a thing had happened "it was a slip" and he took "full responsibility for that."

Creek added, "my rule is to consult the parent; we want the parent to be satisfied." He explained that the "ungraded" room is for "children who have difficulties."

Approximately 300 students are registered at the elementary school, 70 of them Negroes. About 55 of the Negro students live in the Westport district, the school office revealed.

A Variety of Subjects

Creek led the discussion over a variety of subjects which, he said, could affect a child's progress, or lack of it, in school. He discussed intelligence quotients, Allen's four special rooms, the one ungraded room, and the affects on the child of home life, food, and religion.

The discussion was brought back to the parents' major concern when one mother stated that she had taken her children out of the proposed school carnival because she objected to their being relegated to the roles of singing spirituals and appearing only in a cotton-picking scene.

Creek told the parents that three of the Negro students had asked to sing spirituals and had wanted to appear as cotton-pickers.

Several of the parents voiced disagreement to which the principal replied that he could "name" the pupils.

Several said that their children had had professional dance training and would not want to do the spiritual and cotton-picking scenes.

Other parents said that the sixth-grade teacher, Mrs. Gladys Hannay, "put the Negro children out of the carnival."

"Why don't we have Mrs. Hannay in on this meeting?" another parent asked. However, the principal objected to this proposal.

Cites Arkansas Feud

One parent stated that one of the teachers had been discussing the Arkansas integration battles in the classroom with her children and had told them that "if it had not been for a colored NAACP woman the Arkansas integration trouble would not have happened."

A father who, until now had sat silently, spoke up declaring, "I don't think that the teachers are here to teach integration or segregation."

Creek was asked, "Do you think a teacher should have said this?"

Creek said that he did not know about the incident.

Sees No Wrong

The discussion returned to the use of the term "black" with reference to the Negro pupils when the principal said,

"I don't see anything wrong with using the word 'black.' I'm not using it derogatorily. We used to play a game called 'Black Man' and there weren't any colored children in it."

A round of discussion by the parents then followed on the word and what it has come to mean in the American way of life.

"It is damaging to the children," one parent declared. "They absorb it and it causes them to have inferiority complexes," the mother said.

"I think that is the way you are taking it," the school head replied.

"If you don't see any wrong with using the word, then no wonder your teachers don't," another parent countered.

As the discussion progressed, the principal apparently underwent a change of thinking, assuring the parents toward the end of the meeting that he would try to stop using the term.

"I don't blame you for taking exception to the word," he said. "I apologize and I am going to try to break myself."

The principal favored a suggestion made by one of the delegation that the presence of a Negro teacher at the school might help solve some of the difficulties.

He agreed "to do all I can to influence the teachers to call the students by their names instead of referring to them by race or color."

He told the delegation of parents, "I'm glad you felt free to come t me."

Among the parents at the meeting were: Mrs. Juanita Cotton 4330 Penn; Mrs. Dorothy Davis, 507 W. 43rd Terrace; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Bryant, 600 W. 43rd Terrace; Mrs. Ida Mae Johnson, 4321 Broadway; Mrs. J. L. McCon, 4323 Broadway; Mrs. Ethel Hurt, 606 W. 43rd Terrace; Mrs. Lucille Fulton, 405 W. 43rd street: Mrs. Frank Talley Jr., 408 W. 43rd street; Mrs. Kester M. Plowright, 401 W. 42nd street; Mrs. Bernard Bryant, 4222 Wornall Road; Mrs. Adolph Roulette, 526 W. 43rd street; Mr. A. D. Huggins, 412 W. 44th street; and Lucile Bluford of THE CALL.

Racial Issues Cause Tensions In Perilous Era

ST. LOUIS.— (INS) — A southern newspaper editor told Missouri school teachers Friday that racial tensions in the south are destroying friendly communications between people at a time when Americans must be united "if the nation is to survive."

Mark F. Ethridge Jr., publisher of the Ravenswood, W. Va. newspaper, told a meeting of the Missouri department of classroom teachers that the race problem has deeply hurt the south's fight for industry. He said the only cure is "patience and a willingness to peacefully solve the problem."

Ethridge, who is the son of the publisher of the Louisville, Ky. Courier-Journal, said:

"The Russian Sputnik gives us little time to fight among ourselves." He added:

"Some southern legislators are making race laws like the first straw houses of the little pigs. When tested by the winds of reality they will fall."

Pupils Protest Mixed Classes After Slaying

Advertiser P.1 Tues. 1-8-57 Montgomery

SIKESTON, Mo., Jan. 14 (AP)—Students demonstrated today against attending classes with Negroes as authorities sought new leads in the Saturday night slaying of a high school football player and the rape of his girl friend.

Authorities took precautionary measures against possible trouble. The state highway patrol moved in extra troops, armed with tear gas guns and other riot equipment. But no violence was reported. The girl had described the slayer-rapist as a Negro.

Two Negroes were arrested Sunday for questioning. One, Claude (Bootmouth) Lightsey, 61, a handyman, was taken to state highway patrol headquarters at Jefferson City for a lie detector test.

Highway patrol Capt. K. K. Johnson said the test indicated Lightsey had nothing to do with the case. The other Negro was identified by authorities as a friend of Lightsey. His name was never disclosed.

The slain boy was John Malugen, 18, co-captain of the Charleston High School football team. Charleston is 14 miles east of here.

Authorities said June Castleberry, 18, Sikeston, also a high school senior, was criminally assaulted.

Prosecuting Atty. G. Peter Gilmore said the assailant appeared to be a local man. He explained he had to be familiar with the area which is a favorite parking spot for couples. Also, he said, he must have known the occupant of the house had a habit of attending motion picture shows Saturday night and would not be home.

REFSUE TO ATTEND

About 60 of the 675 high school students here and 100 of the 350 at Charleston refused to attend classes unless the Negroes were excluded. Superintendents of both schools told them classes would be run as usual.

Later the students joined for a marching, cat-calling demonstration at Charleston. State troopers immediately threw a cordon of cars around the school and the demonstrators broke up in small groups.

When classes let out at both schools this afternoon the demonstrators had drifted off and no incidents were reported. Eighteen Negroes attend the Sikeston school integrated three years ago, and seven the Charleston. The school there was integrated two years ago.

Missouri School Tense After Attack On Girl Student

White Students Try To Gang Negroes In New Flare-Up

P.1

Charleston, Mo., Jan. 14.—White students tried to block the way of five Negroes at the high school last week in a new flare-up of racial tension after an attempted attack on a 13-year-old girl.

Tension first developed in this southeastern delta area after the slaying Saturday night of a high school football star and the rape of his girl friend.

About 40 white boys ganged around four Negro students as they approached the school. A Negro boy was pushed but not injured. Later a group of white girls tried to block a Negro girl's entrance.

Integration Ordered

Courier 1-18-57

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo. — The Board of Education ordered integration of junior and senior high classes by September.

No Logic In Principal Shifts

Call Fri. 6-14-57

There is neither logic nor consistency in the board of education's assignment of principals in our integrated school system. The long-awaited decision in the Lowell-Douglass school situation on the West Side was made last week with the white principal of Lowell being shifted to Douglass and the Douglass principal retired to the classroom.

Kansas City, Mo.

This is the second time since de-segregation began that a white principal has been assigned to a former all-Negro school and the Negro principal transferred to a teaching position. P. 18

When Garrison, on the north end of town, was shifted from an all-Negro to an integrated school, the Negro principal was pushed aside. The reason given at that time was that the white student population outnumbered the Negro. No Negro teachers were placed at the school although a sizable number of Negro pupils remained there.

Now with the merger of Lowell (formerly for white pupils) and Douglass (formerly for Negroes) into one school on the West side, the population next fall is expected to include a substantial number of both white and Negro pupils.

Following the "pattern" set by the school authorities in the Garrison case, the principal could have been either white or colored. The school board decided upon a white principal. We daresay this move was made to keep from "offending" the parents of the white children who will attend Douglass next year. We ask: What about the feelings of the colored children whose principal was shunted aside?

In placing the Douglass principal on the unassigned principals' list, the board of education brought off the list the former principal of Garrison and made her principal of the Booker T. Washington school which even in integration has practically an all-Negro enrollment.

So far, the only school with an integrated student body which has a Negro principal is Greenwood. Here, the precedent set at Garrison was followed as the student body is over 90 per cent Negro.

At Yeager, the "pattern" was ignored again. Although the student population is predominantly Negro, a white principal was assigned there for next year.

There is no rhyme nor reason to the school board's assignment of principals. We dislike bringing up the matter of color in the placement of principals and teachers but we have no choice when it is so obvious that the school board is taking color into consideration. We would like to think that the principal best suited for a particular situation is the one chosen, regardless of race but the facts before us do not lead to such a conclusion.

It is hard for us to believe that the school authorities are acting in an unbiased manner when we recall the statement made by a top official last year that it was felt "wisest" to have a white principal at Manual high despite the fact that the student body was predominantly Negro and the fact that a Negro vice principal was qualified and available for the post.

It goes without saying that the school authorities are moving too slowly in the matter of teacher integration. We hope that as they deliberate this summer over the assignment of teachers that they will increase the number of schools with integrated faculties and begin to consider their teachers on the basis of their qualifications rather than of color.

The school board not only should itself recognize merit as the basic factor in the placement of a teacher but it should use its high office to influence parents and the general public to accept this principle in the true spirit of integration and democracy.

NATIONAL SCHOOL SAFETY PATROL

Atlanta Negro, Former White Pupils Parade In D. C.

Houston Tex. Sat. 5-4-57

WASHINGTON, D C (NNPA) — Negro participants rom Atlanta schools in the 21st National School Safety Patrol parade Saturday looked good.

Three special trains over the Seaboard brought 1,000 children, Negro and white, from Atlanta to take part in the parade. The entire group was under the supervision of Police Chief Herbert Jenkins of Atlanta.

The Negro group was in the immediate charge of A J Lewis, 2d, principal of the Thomas Heathe-Slater School in Atlanta. The Negro group included the Washington High School band of 82 pieces, 217 children, a nurse, Mrs Mary McKinney, of Grady Hospital; two police officers, James McKinney and William Hudson; six policewomen and four teachers.

Judge Orders End of Strike By Teachers

Post & Times Herald 2-9-57 Wed. 2-6-57

MANCHESTER, N. H., Feb. 5 (INS)—The two-day strike of 363 teachers, which has given 9217 pupils in 24 schools an unscheduled holiday, was ended today by Justice Robert P. Griffith in Hillsborough Superior Court.

Washington D.C.

He ordered the teachers back to their classrooms with the comment:

"The Court rules that public school teachers do not have the right to strike against the city and that such a strike is illegal."

New Hampshire

There seemed little doubt that schools would resume classes tomorrow with every teacher back in the classrooms. A spokesman for the teachers said earlier they would comply with any such court order.

The Judge granted the city's request for a temporary injunction against the Manchester Teachers Guild, whose membership includes 330 of the strikers.

The teachers want a 17 per cent pay boost over a three-year period. The city voted 10 per cent increases and refused a teacher request to arbitrate differences.

There was no immediate comment from the teachers. They could carry an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

School Strike Is Ruled Out By N. H. Court

Post + Times Herald Wed. 3-27-57

Washington D.C.

CONCORD, N. H., March 26 (AP)—The New Hampshire Supreme Court ruled today that public school teachers do not have the right to strike for higher pay.

Post Herald

In a precedent-making decision, the high court upheld a Superior Court injunction which last month halted a two-day teacher strike in Manchester, the state's largest city.

"Public employes have no right to strike against the government," the court said.

Any modification of this policy must be made by the legislature rather than through the courts, the ruling said.

Students trap Shanley on school integration

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 3-30-57

RUTHERFORD, N.J. — "It has set us back many years."

What did Bernard M. Shanley, President Eisenhower's appointments secretary, mean by this statement in his reference to the U.S. Supreme Court unanimous decision on public school integration which he made here Thursday?

He made the statement, after addressing the students at Fairleigh Dickinson University, during a question and answer period.

A STUDENT had asked Shanley his opinion concerning the effect of the Supreme Court's historic decision.

Pressed by a group of students and reporters for an explanation of his amazing comment, Shanley said after the assembly:

"If I had been a member of the court, I would have voted the same way."

He added that he agreed wholeheartedly with the court decision, emphasizing that its long-range benefits more than offset the short-term disadvantages.

HE CITED as a "setback" stemming from the court decision, the admission rate of colored students to graduate schools in the South.

Before the Supreme Court's decision on school integration, Shanley said, colored students were being admitted to graduate schools in increasing numbers.

But, he elaborated, since public school integration was ordered, some Southern universities have reinstated their ban against colored students in any school.

The Supreme Court's decision, he continued, has made the racial situation "more complicated," and has "set us back some years in the thinking of the South."

'Showdown' Seen On Integration

Post-Times Herald Washington, D.C.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Feb. 1 (Spl.)—A "showdown" during 1957 in public school integration, with increasing Federal moves to bring compliance with the Supreme Court ruling, was forecast yesterday by the Rev. Dr. Robert E. Van Deusen of Washington, D. C.

In a report to the National Lutheran Council, Dr. Van Deusen, council public relations representative, said "this year may prove the high-water mark in bitterness and violence on the one hand and the establishment of the supremacy of Federal authority over state control on the other."

Another report said the proportion of racially mixed Lutheran congregations has increased from 2 to 6 per cent of the 16,000 congregations in four years.

School Fund Plight Laid To Churches

Post-Times Herald P. 5-C
Wed. 1-30-57

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Jan. 29 (AP)—Charges that a growing emphasis on church parochial schools in America is blocking adequate support for public schools were raised today at a National conference of Lutherans.

Washington, D.C.

Dr. Oscar A. Benson, of Minneapolis, a leading Lutheran figure and President of the Augustana Lutheran Church said the trend has tended to "stifle and vitiate the ability of the public schools to get the kind of support they need."

Other delegates expressed similar views.

The matter came up as the National Lutheran Council representing eight Lutheran branches with about 5 million members, directed a committee to work out a statement of policy regarding public and parochial education.

Dr. Benson particularly criticized the Roman Catholic Church's position on this issue, saying that the Catholic population was "so regimented in many areas that it manages to defeat all legislation for appropriations for public schools."

But he also said some Protestants were shifting their allegiance to parochial schools.

He said the implication is that children in church schools are in a "good atmosphere" and that public schools are "bad, getting worse, and so let them go to the devil."

Attorney Harold Levander, of St. Paul, Minn., said the churches should take a stand against "using our parochial schools as a means for defeating bond issues for public schools."

VOTES TO GIVE '5TH' TEACHER HER JOB AGAIN

Newark, N. J., Sept. 25 (AP)—The Newark school board reversed an earlier decision last night and voted to reinstate a teacher who had invoked the 5th amendment because, as one board member put it, "This is Newark, not Little Rock."

The board voted five to three to reinstate Mrs. Estelle Laba of Millburn as a biology laboratory instructor at Central High school.

At the same time, public hearings were ordered for two other teachers who had been dismissed after pleading the 5th amendment when asked about possible communist activities.

Urged by Superintendent

Dr. Edward F. Kennelly, superintendent of schools, recommended the action after meeting with the teachers recently.

Times, 9-26-57

Mrs. Laba, Dr. Robert Lowenstein, 47, who was acting chairman of the modern language department at Barringer High school, and Perry Zimmerman, a former mathematics instructor at Dayton st. school, invoked the constitutional privilege against possible self-incrimination before the house un-American activities committee in 1955.

The New Jersey Supreme court ruled last spring that the school board had no right to dismiss the teachers for having invoked the 5th amendment. The court added, however, that the board could make its own investigation of the teachers and dismiss them if they were determined unfit to teach.

Board Member's Statement

In voting for the reinstatement, Joseph F. Walsh, a board member, said:

"I originally voted to dismiss Mrs. Laba. I was firmly convinced then that anyone who invoked the 5th amendment was not entitled to be retained in the school system. I still feel the same way.

"Happily, this is a land that is governed by laws and not by men. My personal feelings are not involved. This is Newark, not Little Rock. I will adhere to the Supreme court decision."

Race Issue Raised In Test Case

Journal & Guide Sat. 7-27-57 Norfolk, Va.

Mother Contends Girl Handicapped In Negro School

NEW YORK—The entire school pattern of New York City may be drastically affected by a test case which will challenge its zoning provision. The suit, the first of its kind, is being instituted by Mrs. Mae Mallory on behalf of her 12-year-old daughter, Patricia Leola.

In her plea, Mrs. Mallory contends that Public School 88, a junior high school at Seventh avenue and 114th street, is inferior. As a result of being required to attend this school by the residential zoning pattern, the plaintiff argues that her child is denied a first class education, which will hinder her ability to attend an accredited college for study to become a dietitian.

THE PETITION cites that Public School 88 has an all-Negro enrollment due to zoning, whereas P. S. 118, where the plaintiff sought to enroll her child, is integrated. It is located on 93rd street between Amsterdam and Columbus avenues. It charges that Patricia will not have an opportunity to interrelate; that P. S. 88 lacks experienced and trained staff; lacks a well orientated and executed curriculum to prepare her for future education; and that the physical plant is substandard and in a hazardous condition.

It was reported that Mayor Wagner's office tried to prevent the case from going to the courts. On July 9, Mayor Wagner met with Mrs. Mallory and her attorney, Paul B. Zuber, who is chairman of the Parent Committee for Better Education of which his client is secretary, and assistant superintendent Clare C. Baldwin, representing Supt. William Jansen.

THE MAYOR was informed the superintendent could not permit any change in the zoning regulation.

The papers in the case were served on Dr. Jansen last Wednesday. The petition will reach the State Supreme Court July 31. Atty. Zuber said that the suit was being based on the United States Supreme Court's decision in the school segregation issue.

Mother Sues N.Y. Schools

Afro-American Sat. 7-27-57

NEW YORK — A young mother this week entered suit against the board of education here to force enrollment of her daughter in an integrated junior high school outside the school zone in which she lives.

Mrs. Mae Mallory of 27 Morningside Dr. has charged that her daughter, Patricia, 12, cannot receive a first-class education at the all-colored school to which she has been assigned.

This, she charges, violates the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 ruling against segregation in schools.

HOWEVER, the net effect of the suit, which will be filed in State Supreme Court on July 31, would be to break down the system whereby the board assigns pupils to schools according to the zones in which they live.

Mrs. Mallory, who is active in her neighborhood Parent-Teacher Association and who is secretary of the Parents Committee for Better Education in Harlem, charges that all-colored schools in Harlem and other sections of the city are inferior to integrated schools.

SHE SAID that her daughter, who wants to become a dietitian, is scheduled to enter P.S. 88, a junior high school at 7th Ave. and 114th St., in the fall.

Because of the neighborhood in which she lives, the school has an all-colored student body.

Mrs. Mallory said she asked the board, instead, that her daughter be enrolled at Joan of Arc Junior High School at 93rd St. near Columbus Ave.

She was denied permission to change the enrollment, she said, because the school is out of her district.

TEACHERS SPURN DIFFICULT POSTS

New York Sat. 7-13-57

Only 25 Volunteers for 1,000 Jobs in Problem Schools—Officials Map Action

By BENJAMIN FINE

Only twenty-five New York teachers have volunteered to serve in the city's so-called difficult schools. Between 1,000 and 1,200 are needed.

Last spring the Board of Education's integration committee recommended that experienced teachers be assigned to the schools, which have a preponderance of Negro or Puerto Rican pupils.

The teachers protested against forced assignments. They contended that there would be enough volunteers to fill the positions.

Officials called for volunteers, requesting experienced teachers to accept transfers to Harlem and other problem areas.

Of the 40,000 teachers in the school system, only twenty-five offered to serve.

Board officials are now aroused and representatives of Negro organizations are up in arms.

"We are not going to sit down and do nothing about it," Dr. Edmund J. Gannon, associate superintendent in charge of teacher personnel, said yesterday.

May Defer Vacation

Dr. Gannon is scheduled to go on vacation next week.

"I'm not going," he said. "I'll stay here all summer if necessary to work out a plan to get the experienced teachers in the difficult schools."

For several years Negro leaders and others have complained that the difficult schools have more than their share of substitute, probationary and emergency teachers. They will evidently have a stronger argument now.

The Board of Examiners has certified 1,400 new elementary teachers for this fall. They are recent college graduates, without any teaching experience.

Because of the lack of volunteers, the newly licensed teachers will get the "difficult" school assignments. In previous years, when this happened, many new teachers refused to take positions and went to school systems in the suburban areas. Officials are afraid that may happen again.

Next Step in Doubt

Board officials are frankly troubled about the next step. On the one hand, they adopted the integration report that pledges the board to assign experienced teachers to the difficult schools. On the other, the teacher associations are ready to protest if enforced rotation is adopted.

Under the integration recommendations, the board would assign the new teachers to the more favored areas, usually in all-white districts. The experienced teachers would then be assigned to Harlem or other areas that need good teachers. They would stay for three years, presumably.

Dr. Gannon expressed the belief that it might be best to wait a bit longer to see if more teachers volunteered.

"As of this moment the volunteer plan has failed," he said. "If it continues this way we may have to assign teachers without asking them."

Integration Lag Is Seen in N. Y.

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5 (AP)—Members of the New York City School Integration Commission have charged that Dr. William Jansen, school superintendent, is not putting into good practice the commission's recommendations for ending segregation wherever possible.

They want to question Dr. Jansen, it became known today, to find out why, as they charge, integration has bogged down.

For that reason, Mrs. Morris Shapiro, chairman of the zoning subcommission of the integration commission, has asked Charles H. Silver, Board of Education president, for a special meeting to air the grievances of the entire commission.

A meeting has been set tentatively for Aug. 22, and by that time Dr. Jansen will have returned from a vacation.

The Board of Education two years ago appointed the commission on integration, and six subcommissions were named. They completed their repotrs last spring and they were adopted by the board.

In essence, the six reports urged that the board take a definite stand in ending segregation wherever possible. Changes were urged in school zoning, and it was proposed that experienced teachers be assigned to difficult schools.

Members of the commission have protested to board members that Dr. Jansen is not putting the recommendations into good practice.

SCHOOLS FACE SUIT ON ZONING POLICY

Times Thurs. 7-18-57

Mother Contends City Negro Institutions Are Inferior

New York

By BENJAMIN FINE

The Board of Education's school zoning policy is being challenged in the courts.

A suit is being brought by a mother to compel the board to permit her child to go to a junior high school outside her school district. The board, through the Superintendent of Schools, utilizes a zoning system that is based on the place of residence of the parents.

This is now being attacked on the ground that the all-Negro schools in Harlem and elsewhere are inferior to the predominantly white schools.

If the zoning laws are declared unconstitutional, the entire school pattern would have to be altered drastically.

The suit is being brought by Mrs. Mae Mallory of 27 Morningside Avenue in behalf of her 12-year-old daughter, Patricia Leola.

During the last school year, Patricia, who wants to go to college and become a dietitian, attended Public School 10 at St. Nicholas Avenue and 117th Street. When school ended last month, she was assigned to P. S. 88, a junior high school at Seventh Avenue and 114th Street. This because of the residential pattern is an all-Negro school.

Mrs. Mallory, who is active in the local Parent-Teachers Association and is secretary of the Parents Committee for Better Education in Harlem, objected to this assignment. She argued that P. S. 88 would not provide a first-class education for Patricia. Instead, Mrs. Mallory tried to enroll the child at Joan of Arc Junior High School (P. S. 118), Ninety-third Street between Amsterdam and Columbus Avenues.

Because the school is out of her district, permission was denied.

Through her attorney, Paul B. Zuber, who is chairman of the Parents Committee for Better Education, Mrs. Mallory threatened to bring suite to compel the school board to change its ruling.

An attempt was made by the Mayor's office to prevent the case from going to the courts. On July 9, Mayor Wagner met with Mrs. Mallory, Mr. Zuber and Dr. Clare C. Baldwin, assistant superintendent, representing Dr. William Jansen, the Superintendent of Schools.

The Mayor was told that the superintendent could not permit any breakdown of the zoning regulations.

Yesterday, Mr. Zuber served papers on Dr. Jansen. The petition wil be filed in State Supreme Cour on July 31.

Mr. Zuber said that the suit was being based on the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the school segregation issue. The Supreme Court declared "separate but equal" school facilities unconstitutional. Even if P. S. 88 were made as physically and educationally attractive as P. S. 118, Mr. Zuber declared, it would still be a segregated school and thus basically inferior.

The petition charges that P. S. 88 is inferior in many respects to P. S. 118, which is an integrated school. The papers served on Dr. Jansen makes these charges:

¶Patricia will not have an opportunity to inter-relate with children of other racial groups.

¶P. S. 88 lacks an experienced and trained teaching and supervisory staff.

¶P. S. 88 lacks a well oriented and executed curriculum to prepare Patricia for future educational training.

¶The physical plant of P. S. 88 is substandard and in a hazardous condition.

"We are going to ask the court to declare the board's zoning policy unconstitutional," Mr. Zuber said. "The board admits that the schools in the difficult areas are substandard. The superintendent cannot deny that the child who goes to a substandard school loses a basic constitutional right."

Top school post goes to Turner

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 7-20-57

NEW YORK — Francis A. Turner, assistant director of community education for the NYC Board of Education, has been selected to head a school zoning body at a salary of $16,000 a year.

The body, which will have wide powers over boundary lines, was created to aid in the board's program to speed up integration in the NYC schools. It will be officially proclaimed at the board's meeting Thursday.

As head of the body, Turner will become the second of his race to have the title of assistant superintendent. He will work directly under Supt. William Jansen.

THE CENTRAL unit on school zoning was created following the recommendations of a subcommission, one of six established last December by the board's commission on integration.

Its powers will take in the boundary lines of the various areas served by the city elementary and high schools under public jurisdiction.

SPECIFIC DUTIES of the group include the preparation and coordination of city-wide plans to achieve the maximum integration in the public schools as soon as possible.

In addition to Mr. Turner, NYC has one other Assistant superintendent of schools. He is Dr. John B. King, in charge of two Brooklyn school districts.

Only 25 NYC teacher volunteers want jobs

Afro-American Baltimore Sat. 8-3-57

NEW YORK (ANP) — Last spring the NYC Board of Education's school integration committee strongly recommended that experienced teachers be assigned to so called difficult schools which have a preponderance of colored or Puerto Rican pupils.

Teachers' groups protested against "forced" assignments and contended to school officials that volunteers would readily fill the 1,000 to 1,200 posts.

Thus far, of 40,000 teachers in the NYC school system, only 25 have volunteered to serve. Officials are reportedly aroused to the point of taking immediate steps to rectify the situation.

Integration Test Begun In Brooklyn

New York Herald Tribune P. 5

Negroes Go To Distant School

By Robert A. Poteete

The Board of Education has begun a small-scale experiment in long-distance transfers of volunteer Negro high school students in the hope of achieving racial integration without further taxing already overcrowded schools.

Since the opening of the fall term in the public schools, from the Bedford-Stuyvesant section in the heart of Brooklyn have made long daily trips on public transportation to and from a high school on the periphery of Brooklyn.

Normally, they would have attended academic schools in Bedford-Stuyvesant where enrollments are heavily Negro. The purpose of the voluntary transfers was to make racially balanced schools available to them on an experimental basis.

4 Schools By-Passed

In their daily trips, the thirteen by-pass four other high schools, closer to the Bedford-Stuyvesant section but already so overcrowded as to make transfers impractical even if such transfers would serve the purpose of integration to which the Board of Education is firmly committed.

At the high school on the periphery of Brooklyn, the thirteen reportedly have been assimilated without question into a large sutdent body which had only about 3 per cent Negro enrollment. The Board of Education did not reveal the name of the school.

Fred Schoenberg, assistant superintendent of Brooklyn schools, said that School Superintendent William Jansen had set up the experiment after conferences with groups of parents from the heavily Negro Bedford - Stuyvesant section who demanded some solution to the problem of racially homogenous schools in their area.

Problem Explained

He explained that the problem was with academic high schools, which are zoned. Vocational high schools throughout the city are open to all students regardless of where they live. In Bedford-Stuyvesant, the choice of academic high schools is limited to all-Negro or half-Negro and half-white schools.

Mr. Schoenberg said that the parents objected on the ground that any school with more than 40 per cent Negro enrollment is "segregated," and that the ideal racial balance would match the population balance at less than 15 per cent Negro to about 85 per cent non-Negro.

Mr. Schoenberg said that the beginning problem was that the academic high schools in the Brooklyn areas adjoining Bedford-Stuyvesant were overcrowded, with or without the desirable racial balance.

Dr. Jansen's offer to the parents was to make room for thirty youngsters from Bedford-Stuyvesant at the high school on the periphery—an hour to an hour and a half away from the section by public transportation. At the time the offer was made, twenty youngsters volunteered to enrol. By the time school opened, this number was down to the thirteen now making the daily trips.

Object of Test

The object of the experiment, apparently, is to find out whether the parents and the students will consider the long travel time worthwhile in order to obtain a well integrated school.

The principal of the peripheral school said that it is too early for any one to determine this.

Another school official observed that the 13 students are spending from two to three hours daily traveling to and from school, and that if they participate in extra-curricular after-school-hours activities, they will be arriving home at 7 or 8 p. m. He also noted that winter weather could be an additional discouragement.

Whatever the result of the long-travel experiment, the Board of Education is under intense pressure, particularly from the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, to find ways to achieve a better racial balance in all the schools.

Placing of Schools Speeds Integration

Half of New Buildings in City Situated in Mixed Racial Areas

By TERRY FERRER

Education Editor

More than half of the city's new elementary and junior high schools which have been completed or planned since 1954 have been deliberately placed in bi-racial or "fringe" areas to speed integration, Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, reported yesterday.

In presenting a study made by Dr. David H. Moskowitz, associate superintendent in charge of the Board of Education's division of housing, Dr. Jansen said that of 134 new elementary and junior high schools, seventy-one are in sections of mixed racial population. The regular high schools which have been finished or are in the planning stage were not included in the survey because the Board of Education considers that by serving large geographical areas, these schools are, in effect, integrated.

Ferrer

Twenty-one of the elementary and junior high schools have already been completed, Dr. Moskowitz reported in his study. Ten of them are elementary schools. Of the remainder, twenty-two are under construction, nine are on the drawing boards and nineteen are in the proposed 1958 capital budget, which was approved by the Planning Commission on Nov. 1.

$16,000 Modernization

Further, Dr. Moskowitz's report said, since 1954 some $16,000,000 has been spent in modernizing the facilities of thirty integrated schools. "This total," Dr. Moskowitz said, "represents slightly more than half of all modernization projects undertaken."

Budget allocations for rehabilitating the whole school plant and replacing obsolete equipment has increased from $2,000,000 in 1954 to a proposed $14,000,000 for 1958.

"This unprecedented increase in funds for the upgrading of the physical plant," Dr. Moskowitz said, "will provide more opportunities to improve the condition of schools in fringe areas, and thereby lend aid to the cause of integration."

Where Needs Are Greatest

Since 1954, more than $35,000,000 has been spent on maintenance and repair of elementary and junior high schools, the report said, with "the bulk of such appropriations going to obsolete schools in depressed areas where the needs are greatest."

In these depressed neighborhoods, the Board of Education has also provided or planned to build additional special classrooms, about four times as many as have been completed in the last three years. Sixty-three of these special instructional rooms have already been completed, and 247 more are either under construction or planned.

These 310 special classrooms will be used or are being used in the following way: For the mentally retarded, 135; for remedial instruction, 111; for health improvement, forty-seven, and for sight conservation, seventeen.

Playgrounds and Kitchens

In further efforts to help low socio-economic sections of the city, the Board of Education and the Department of Parks now operate thirty additional playgrounds, which have been built since 1954 near schools in these areas. The need for expanded lunchroom facilities to insure hot lunches for the children of these poorer families has been met by making kitchens and storage space 50 per cent larger than in "non-blighted areas."

Dr. Moskowitz admitted that there is still much to be done to overcome the existing backlog of overcrowded schools and obsolete buildings. Although the city has been spending about $100,000,000 annually for school construction in the last few years, Dr. Moskowitz said, it has as yet been unable to get all the funds necessary to meet all of the financial problems brought on by the current inflation, today's high birth rate and the hangover of the depression on the 1930s and the pressures of the war years.

Both Dr. Jansen and Dr. Moskowitz felt that school integration has been hampered in some areas by the segregated residential patterns of the communities which the schools serve.

Remedies Difficult

"This is an unfortunate condition of present day urban life with which the schools cannot cope directly," said Dr. Moskowitz. "Many such ethnically homogeneous areas are geographically so extensive that remedial action in the form of effective zoning or judicious school location cannot be undertaken without large-scale transportation of children to distant schools.

"Mass bussing of children would do violence to the concept of the neighborhood school, would destroy the many benefits which accure from it and would with good reason be opposed by the community," Dr. Moskowitz concluded.

Further difficulties in intergrating schools are caused by the post-war growth of large-scale housing projects. Public housing projects now number seventy-eight in the five boraughs, with forty-nine more either under construction or planned, the report said. Since these public projects, plus a number of private housing projects, reflect the ethnic make-up of their tenants, the Board of Education can do nothing directly to hasen integration of schools serving such projects.

N. Y. C. regroups pupils in try to end Northern segregation

Miss. Pi. Bham, Ala. 7 m. 2-1-57

BY PETER B. BART

NEW YORK — Every weekday morning several school buses pull up in front of Public School 93 in the Bronx and some 200 Negro children scamper off to class. 14d(1)

Until last September these seven and eight year old tots could walk to their own neighborhood schools. Today the City of New York takes them in buses the 20 city blocks or more to P. S. 93.

Their daily journey is part of an enforced mass migration of school children being launched by New York's Board of Education. It's a matter of racial integration. Until the Negro children were transferred to P. S. 93, that school was attended almost entirely by white pupils living in the neighborhood. Now, like many of the 790 other New York public schools, it is "mixed."

"Mixed" is a big word in New York City these days. Without fanfare—but by no means without objections—city officials have begun a program of racial integration that involves more than a policy of non-discrimination. As at P. S. 93, many school youngsters are already being transported from one school district to another so the Board of Education can achieve what it feels is a proper balance.

This is only a beginning. A "master plan" to speed up the integration process for New York's 925,000 public school pupils has been drawn up by the subcommittee on zoning of the Board's Commission on Integration. If approved, the plan will take effect next September. It proposes extensive use of city-financed buses to create racially balanced schools, and suggests that racial integration should be the sole objective of school zoning.

Rotating Teachers

Also under consideration: A plan for the rotation of experienced teachers from "good" schools to "problem" schools so as to improve the quality of instruction in slum areas. Meantime, the Board of Education wants a $68 million boost—to $412 million—in its new budget; some of the additional money would be used to expand the work of the Commission on Integration.

The aim of all this activity is to eliminate the school segregation that occurs in the North as an outgrowth of local housing patterns. To banish it the officials must also banish the traditional concept of the "neighborhood school."

Elsewhere in the North this campaign to abolish alleged "de facto" school segregation is also picking up in intensity—notably in cities like Chicago, Philadelphia and Detroit. But the most impressive efforts are being made here in New York.

Even here the size of the school migration can't be fully measured. One difficulty is that its operation is decentralized: School officials say they've made no attempt to add up the number of pupils transferred. Another is that the best informed officials hesitate to give a guess; they shy away from public comment because they think it is an explosive subject.

Criss-Crossed City

Nevertheless, all concede that hundreds of New York students are already criss-crossing the city by bus and subway to schools far from home. In the slum-ridden Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn, full-scale transfers of children from zone to zone have brought about integration in at least 20 schools since the opening of the school year.

Not only are children from Negro sections like Harlem traveling to hitherto all-white schools; in some instances, white pupils are crossing regular school zones to enter all-Negro schools.

"One junior high school in my three Brooklyn districts was almost entirely Negro last year, and it's now 50-50 in racial composition," says Samuel M. Levenson, an assistant superintendent of schools. He adds: "In another junior high school, white students were brought in from a mile or so away to prevent it from becoming 100% Negro."

"We've got busloads of Negro children coming in from big distances," the principal of a formerly all-white school in Manhatten relates. "I hate to think what it's costing the city."

In some cases, integration is being achieved by means of minor gerrymandering of school zones without much transfer of pupils. This is particularly true of schools in so-called fringe areas where white and Negro neighborhoods converge.

Vigorous Pursuit

Spearheading the integration movement in New York and other cities, is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. At its 1956 convention in San Francisco the NAACP resolved that "the entire resources of this organization be dedicated to pursue with vigor the elimination of segregation in the schools in Northern communities . . . We cannot wait for residential discrimination to be eradicated before something is done about the elimination of segregation in our Northern public schools."

Backing the NAACP in a number of cities are such groups as the Urban League, Americans for Democratic Action, United Automobile Workers, plus local civil rights and religious groups.

Not surprisingly, public officials are extremely sensitive on the issue. Consider the curious case of an obscure Brooklyn minister, Dr. Milton A. Galamison of the Siloam Presbyterian Church. Irritated by what he considered to be a delay in "desegregating" Brooklyn Junior High School 238, Dr. Galamison sent a personal telegram to Superintendent of Schools William Jansen demanding the latter's resignation.

To the minister's astonishment, Dr. Jansen personally called and "asked for an appointment." Later the telegram was released to the press along with a rather defensive explanation by Dr. Jansen of his position. Thus the affair attained city-wide publicity. And Dr. Galamison was elected president of the Brooklyn branch of the NAACP.

Moving Away

School authorities tend to discount the protests they hear. "We had some white parents who threatened violent action if their children were transferred to Negro schools," confides a Brooklyn principal, "but in the end some of them just gave up and moved away." Agrees Rev. Dr. David M. Cory, executive secretary of the Brooklyn Division, Protestant Council: "You hear a lot of talk about violent opposition to school integration, but I have yet to find any actual manifestation of it."

Nonetheless, some open opposition exists. The scheme to rotate experienced teachers from good to problem schools has already drawn sharp objections from the powerful High School Teachers Association. Its president, Mrs. Concetta T. Roy, warns: "It will only create more dissatisfied high school teachers."

And Rev. W. Sterling Cary of Brooklyn says: "I just don't think the schools are the answer. The real problem lies in the housing ghettoes themselves which are the cause of Northern school segregation. And I think all this rezoning could be a hardship on children who may have to travel great distances to school every day."

"I believe we're being stampeded into a dubious program," contends the principal of a recently integrated Brooklyn school. "We have incontrovertible evidence of large numbers of white children withdrawing from schools when Negroes are brought in from outside. Many New York schools will be 100% colored within two years after Negro children are introduced. The hard truth is that we can't have full-scale integration until both Negroes and whites are really ready for it."

But such voices seem unlikely to halt the rush. As one highly placed New York school official puts it: "Any racial issue is political dynamite in a city like this. If anyone suggests that the integration program be slowed down while we find out where we're going, he's immediately branded a racist."

New York Test Puts Negroes In Predominantly White School

Advertiser-Alabama-Journal

Sun. 2-3-57

NEW YORK, Feb. 2 (AP) — An experiment in transporting Negro children to a school in a predominantly white neighborhood is being tried here in the interest of racial integration. So far the plan is in effect only in one school on a trial basis.

But a "master plan" to balance the racial ratio in all schools attended by the city's 925,000 public school pupils has been drawn up by the zoning committee of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration.

The board itself has not approved the paln—except for the one school—but is expected to reach a decision in time to determine whether it shall start going into effect when the schools open their next term in September.

INTERESTED EYE

Meanwhile, it is keeping an interested eye on Public School 93 in the Bronx. Until last September, the school was attended almost entirely by white pupils.

Since then, city-financed buses have drawn up to the school each day with some 200 Negro children who formerly walked to school in their own neighborhood a mile or more away. Now these seven and eight-year-old tots, scamper into P.S. 93 classrooms in what may be the forerunner of a planned integration pattern.

New York City schools have no segregation as such. Many have mixed classes, but some are predominantly Negro and some predominantly white, largely following the racial characteristics of the neighborhood in which the school is located.

The "master plan" would have the schools attended on a "balanced" rather than a neighborhood basis.

It became known yesterday that 1,000 teacehsr might be transferred to classrooms in Harlem and other sections of the city where classes were predominantly Negro or Puerto Rican.

The Board of Education has before it a report of its subcommission on integration dealing with teacher assignments. The report proposed that, if a difficult school could not be staffed with regular teachers, the board should draft them for such service. At the open hearing on Jan. 17, the major teacher groups opposed this suggestion.

The board will act upon it on Feb. 28. In all likelihood, it will be adopted.

School officials are getting ready to implement the recommendation, following its adoption. It has been found that few teachers want to go to Harlem or to underprivileged areas. As a result, the so-called difficult schools are filled with a much higher percentage of substitutes and emergency teachers than are the all-white schools.

Urban League Report

The Urban League of Greater New York, in a study of schools, found that in almost every case the schools in better economic areas had a higher percentage of regular teachers.

Junior High School 258, Brooklyn, was singled out by the league as an example of what was happening. This school has been a controversial center for months. It is an all-Negro school; the league believes that the school should be developed into an integrated one. Of the seventy teachers, only eighteen are on regular license. Twenty-two are on the substitute list and another twenty-two are on emergency licenses. The others are teaching under a waiver, since they hold elementary certificates.

"The teaching situation in J. H. S. 258 is symbolic of the need for adoption of the teachers' assignment report," Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League, declared. "Here is a modern, up-to-date plant, including all kinds of facilities, yet the proportion of experienced, regularly licensed junior high school teachers still falls below that for comparable white or integrated schools."

The teachers' groups are opposed to forced transfers. They assert that it would break down morale and breed resentment and defiance. However, hoard officials are going ahead with their plans to take teachers from the better schools and move them into the schools that have the largest proportion of emergency or substitute teachers.

The officials reassured the teachers that everything would be done to make such a transition as easy as possible. Teachers are to be transferred for a three-year period only. Also, teachers with nineteen or twenty years of experience are not to be transferred.

School officials at 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn the board's headquarters, have been meeting in closed sessions for the last two weeks. Another meeting was held last night, and others are scheduled before the Feb. 28 meeting. The officials had data showing that schools in Harlem, Bedford-Stuyvesant and South Jamaica had an undue proportion of substitute teachers. Regularly appointed teachers shy away from these areas.

The integration commission has proposed that teachers get an opportunity to volunteer for the difficult schools. But the board has been unable to get enough volunteers.

Teachers Association Still Opposes 'Forced Transfers' Under School Program

Sat. 3-2-57

By BENJAMIN FINE

Spokesmen for teachers and community groups yesterday showed a varied reaction to the school integration program adopted on Thursday by the Board of Education.

The board unanimously approved the zoning and teacher placement reports. Presented by its Commission on Integration. The reports call for new school district lines, as well as a transfer plan for teachers to get more regular teachers into "difficult" schools. The plan is designed to end segregation in fringe areas.

The teachers have objected to that part of the report dealing with "forced transfers." They have insisted that morale in the school system will be shattered if the board compels teachers to go to difficult schools.

The New York Teachers Guild said that the board had found a sensible solution to a difficult problem. The guild said that the way was now open to work out an acceptable plan for staffing difficult schools by consulting with teacher leaders.

"The real way to give equality of educational opportunity in this city," the guild said, "is to approve the difficult schools with all possible speed. We urge all teachers to support vigorously the many proposals for increased guidance and remedial services, smaller classes, more manageable teacher loads and other improvements in these schools."

The Urgan League of Greater New York praised Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, for his "leadership in carrying forward the integration program." It noted that the integration reports were sound in all their basic recommendations.

Responsibility Is Cited

"The board and its administrative staff," said Mrs. Sophia Yarnall Jacobs, president of the league, "now have the positive responsibility not only to implement the reports but to clear up the baseless anxieties and misapprehensions about their contents.

The League declared that there must be no changes in the substance or the timetable of the policy recommendations. It urged that an adequate budget proposal be submitted immediately to the budget director, and it also suggested that the administrative staff begin working on an implementation program.

"We want to see a real start toward full implementation as contemplated in the reports, by next September," the leagues aid.

The Inter Group Committee on New York's Public Schools also praised the Board of Education. It said tha it twas pleased at the action and looked forward to a speedy implementation of the recommendations to end segregation.

The High School Teachers Association contdemned the "hasty adoption" of the zoning and teacher assignment reports. Mrs. Concetta C. Roy, president of the association, said that the teachers were disappointed by the lack of open discussion on the issue.

"As long as forced rotation of teachers and unjustified transportation of children from neighborhood schools remain," said Mrs. Roy, "the threat to the morale of the pupils, parents and teachers will continue."

Court Leaves 'Under God' In School Pledge to Flag

Post-Times Herald Tues. 2-26-57
Washington, D.C.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 25 (AP) A state Supreme Court judge has refused to order the words "under God" stricken from the pledge of allegiance made by New York public school children.

Justice Isadore Bookstein said in a decision announced yesterday that use of the phrase in the Flag pledge was not in violation of constitutional guarantees of religious freedom.

"The child of a non-believer may simply omit the words," he said. Joseph Lewis of Croton Falls, president of the freethinkers of America, and Alfred L. Klein of Staten Island had held, in the case the phrase was unconstitutional and "a flagrant disregard of the rights of conscience of every individual . . ."

Martin J. Scheiman, counsel for the petitioners, said last night there was "a very strong likelihood of an appeal."

Lewis brought the action last September. He said at that time he would carry the case to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

The litigation centered on an education department recommendation of a pledge to the Flag. It was amended to include "under God" after Congress had changed the official version of the pledge to include the phrase.

School balance factors probed in scores

NEW YORK (ANP) — Although racial segregation in the New York City public schools was banned by law in 1900, a kind of "de facto" segregation or racial concentration still exists as a result of residential segregation, Asst. Supt. of Schools John B. King told the Catholic Interracial Forum here.

Other complicating factors in the problem of achieveing complete integration in the New York schools, King stated are the tremendous size of the city, the scope and complexity of its educational program and its constantly shifting population.

An assistant superintendent since 1951, Mr. King was the first of his race to attain that position in the New York public school system.

He said that the Board of Education is "firmly determined" to achieve more racially balanced schools but that since "population distributes itself," residential patterns will continue to be a complicating problem in the Board's plans.

Queens Section Opposes NYC Integration Plan

Journal and Constitution

Fri. 3-24-57

NEW YORK, March 23 (AP)—The city's new plan to integrate Negro and white children in the schools is arousing some opposition, largely in the Borough of Queens.

School officials have arranged two public meetings to allay what they call misunderstandings.

Dr. William Jansen, superintendent, will address another the one meeting April 10 and Dr. Jacob Greenberg, deputy superintendent wil laddress another the next day. Both meetings will be held in Queens.

The Board of Education has received more than 2,000 letters criticizing the integration program since it was announced several weeks ago. It estimated that about 90 per cent of them came from Queens.

THE CITY HAS no segregation as such, but some schools are largely Negro or white depending on the residential pattern of the neighborhood.

The plan aims to attain a more balanced mixture of whites and Negroes by rezoning school districts and by some bus transportation from one area to another.

The Federation of Civic Councils of the Borough of Queens is one group that has asked school officials for clarification. Federation leaders say they favor "natural" but not "forced" integration.

Queens, a largely residential area, has 22 per cent of the city's almost one million pupils. Less than five per cent of those in Queens are Negro or Puerto Rican and they are concentrated largely in six schools.

N. Y. School Segregation On Increase

By EVELYN CUNNINGHAM

NEW YORK—To the consternation of those proud New Yorkers who like to look upon their city as free from racial strife, the public school integration issue has been as rough a problem here as it has been in the strongholds of Dixie.

While the problem has not been accompanied by violence and other forms of overt resistance, the sad fact remains: Most Negro children in New York attend "Negro" schools and most white children attend "white" schools.

ON THE SURFACE, this would seem logical and natural; youngsters attend school nearest their homes, and their homes are in segregated areas. There is only a smattering of housing integration in New York City.

Beyond the surface, however, there is another dark fact: THE DEGREE OF SCHOOL SEGREGATION IS ON THE INCREASE. Should present trends continue unchallenged, it is conceivable that this city could enjoy the questionable distinction of operating a completely separated black and white school system.

While for some time authorities, educators and parents played pitty-pat about school segregation, the first noisy bombshell was tossed four years ago by Dr. Kenneth Clark, City College professor and founder and co-director of the North Side Center for Child Development. A telling witness in the now-famous Virginia school desegregation case which led to the May 17, 1954, Supreme Court decision, Dr. Clark returned to New York ready to do battle about the same problem that existed in his hometown.

DR. CLARK not only charged that segregation was on the increase, but he also pointed out that the quality of education which children in segregated schools received in New York was continually deteriorating.

New York's officialdom viewed the situation with alarm. As to be expected, there followed a calling of conferences, a forming of committee, a creating of study groups. Tackling the question with intelligence and vigor were the Urban League's Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools, the Board of Education's Commission on Integration and the Public Education Association.

The Intergroup Committee's findings were seconded by the PEA after a year-long study. The PEA charged that nearly three-quarters of New York City's public schools were attended by children of a single ethnic group; that those schools that were predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican suffered most from overcrowding, age and deterioration; from inadequate and inexperienced teaching. The children lagged behind in learning, and even their intelligence quotient deteriorated from year to year. It was affirmed that less money was spent per pupil in these schools — where the need was greatest—and that zoning of the public schools was done, at best, with little, if any, regard for integration.

THE COMMISSION on Integration developed a statement that "it is a desirable policy to promote ethnic integration in our schools as a positive educational experience of which no child in the city should be deprived." Six subcommissions on guidance, educational standards, physical plant, zoning, teacher assignments and community relations were set in motion to make this policy work.

Meanwhile, there has been that segment of the citizenry whose alarm has been based on entirely different reasons. There have been, and are, those teacher groups who fear that thousands of teachers may be uprooted and sent far and wide over the city. And there are parents who believe they face the prospect of a huge cross-city network of buses taking their protesting children from schools near home to schools many miles away, solely for the purpose of integration.

And, finally, there is Superintendent of School William Jansen who told Mayor Robert F. Wagner that the charges were utterly with foundation.

DR. KENNETH CLARK
. . . dropped the bombshell

NEW YORK—Superintendent of Schools William Jansen has announced that definite progress is being made in the integration of New York City's schools. Edward S. Lewis, Urban League director, noted that Mr. Jansen had included no "specifics" in his statement.

Jansen Sees Progress in Integration

School Board In Closed Session

The Board of Education united behind Superintendent of Schools William Jansen yesterday in his prediction that, despite difficulties, substantial progress in school integration will be made here this year.

The board discussed the issue in executive session at 120 Livingston St., Brooklyn, and afterward Dr. Jansen issued a statement in which the board and its president, Charles H. Silver, concurred. In it, Dr. Jansen said the city was making "definite progress" toward integration despite "some disappointments and expected difficulties."

In emphasizing that the statement of the superintendent was also issued in behalf of the board, the board apparently hoped to demonstrate agreement on integration.

Mr. Silver—who only Monday said flatly that he was "disappointed in the progress" of integration—said after yesterday's meeting that he was in complete accord with Dr. Jansen's statement.

He said board members are not in disagreement on the issue of integration, and added that they also agree on the importance of the problem.

Jansen Statement

In his statement, Dr. Jansen said, "It is well known that no form of segregation within the meaning of the historic decision of the Supreme Court is practised in New York City." He said the city was interested in providing "the best possible education for all the children of our city, including the gifted and those who are handicapped by difficulties or problems arising from their environment," and added:

"For this reason I look upon integration as the process of making one united family out of all our people, creating and maintaining equal rights and equal opportunities for all. It is with this goal in mind that we are making definite progress, although we are, at the same time, meeting with some disappointments and expected difficulties."

New York Struggles At Huge School Race Integration Job

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (AP)—Step by step, New York City is trying to achieve more complete racial integration in its huge public school system despite the city's segregated residential patterns.

School Supt. William Jansen today issued a 23-page report, summarizing progress made in carrying out a broad program adopted last spring to bring about fuller distribution of the races in the schools.

It's a long-range undertaking, involving rezoning of school districts, locating of new schools and other techniques. As outlined by Jansen, some of the machinery for doing the job is just getting started.

He said that the mere shifting of one or two Negroes into formerly all-white schools, or vice versa, did not fulfill the integration objectives, which is to obtain a balanced racial makeup.

"Integration is a process of bringing all parts together into a unified whole," he said.

School segregation has long been illegal in New York City. Jansen emphasized that all schools are open to any race, but residential concentrations in some areas have been reflected in many schools.

There are about 1½ million pupils in the city's public schools, 18.3 per cent of them Negro, 14 per cent Puerto Rican and 67.7 per cent white. But many live—and go to school—in areas mostly of their own race.

Jansen said changes made in the past year had "improved racial distribution" in more than 50 schools that formerly were predominantly white or predominantly Negro.

As directed by the school board program, he said a comprehensive zoning plan, still in tentative form, has been drawn up to further the goal of racially mixed enrollments.

It is to be ready to go into full effect in the fall of 1958, although some of its general principles already are being applied.

Concerning one of the most controversial issues in the rezoning move—the transportation of pupils by bus from one area to another in order to get mixed schools—the plan states:

"Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration.

"However, when it becomes necessary to transport pupils by bus to relieve overcrowding and for better utilization of the school plant, integration of racial groups should be one of the considerations in determining which pupils shall be moved and to which school."

Bus transportation is provided whenever pupils live beyond maximum distances, depending on grade level, from the school to which they must go.

The plan says that the "neighborhood school concept" — the practice of having children attend schools in their own residential vicinity—will be preserved in the rezoning of districts, but adds: "It may be possible, without abandoning the neighborhood school concept, so to draw the zones lines that more pupils of different races will attend schools with interracial pupil groups."

The plan says that "it is impossible to establish any fixed ratio of children of different racial backgrounds for all schools" because of the housing patterns which themselves are constantly shifting.

In other words, the schools see no prospect of getting a proportionate number of Negro and white pupils, in relation to the over-all city population, in each school—so long as the residential lines exist.

"Unfortunately," the zoning blueprint adds, "there are in New York City a few localities populated by Negroes which cover so large an area that it is difficult to provide an interracial population for those schools located in the heart of such areas.

"Nevertheless, the assistant superintendent — in such areas—should constantly keep this objective in mind."

The plan notes that because elementary school zones are smaller, it will be more difficult to rezone them to embrace mixed population groups, but that junior and senior high schools, covering larger areas, can do so more readily.

In conformity with the authorized program, Jansen said a "central zoning unit" now is being formed, with a director already named, but that personnel to fill the staff has not yet been obtained.

Office space has been provided for the unit, with a $100,000 budgetary allotment.

Jansen also reported major progress in another phase of the program—the improvement and expansion of teaching staffs and facilities at so-called "difficult schools," many of them in predominantly Negro residential areas.

This Is Racial Discrimination

Of course one should not expect either favoritism or prejudices to play a part in the public school system of the grand and glorious city of New York, yet it seems to be nevertheless a [illegible] something of that [illegible]

[illegible] "National [illegible] published in New York.

"Of the 1,000,000 pupils in elementary and junior high schools in New York, three out of every four go to schools that are at least 90 per cent colored or 90 per cent white. In the Negro and Puerto Rican areas of the city, the poorest economically, school buildings are older and more crowded. They have 1,150 of the city's 1,450 new, inexperienced teachers. The Board of Examiners has certified 1,400 new elementary teachers to go to work this September. Most will go into the schools labeled "difficult," while the experienced teachers remain in the 90 per cent white schools.

"There are other charges: that education in colored schools is insufficient foundation for higher education, that guidance teachers steer Negro and Puerto Rican children away from further academic study or the professions, persuading them into vocational schools."

Most assuredly, that is something Congress and the President should do something about.

Why doesn't the President call out the national guard and compel the New York school authorities to assign their very best teachers to the Negro schools?

WAGNER ANSWERS INTEGRATION UNIT

Times P.26-C

The executive committee of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration was told by Mayor Wagner last night that it should deal directly with the board, not with the Mayor's office, in seeking additional school integration funds.

The Mayor wrote a letter to Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, answering the committee's plea on Monday for funds.

The committee asserted that the effectiveness of the integration program depended in a large measure on the restoration of a substantial part of itms deleted from the Mayor's 1957-58 executive budget. The committee did not say how much additional money was needed.

In his letter Mayor Wagner said this year's allocation of additional funds for integration was "precisely what you asked for when I met with you and Superintendent of Schools William Jansen during my budget retreat."

"I am strongly of the opinion," the Mayor continued, "that the commission, as an agency of your board, should deal directly with your board on these matters rather than with this office."

The Mayor added, however, that he would be willing to meet with the board whenever it wished.

Preparing for Integration

Times P.30

Attitudes of Teachers and Public Believed Basic to Success

Jus. 4-23-57

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In the discussions of the recommendations of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration, which have been focused largely on the reassignment of teachers and the transfer of pupils, one of its important proposals has been neglected. This is the need for better preparation of prospective teachers and teachers in service in the principles and practice of intergroup relations.

Contrary to what one might expect, this field of study has not loomed large in the preparation and in-service training of teachers in New York City, and we are now paying a price for it.

A survey of cities which have been dealing with integration shows that the greatest success has been achieved in those communities, such as St. Louis, which have put the most effort into securing understanding on the part of teachers and public before the program was put into effect. In New York City it was mistakenly assumed that teachers and public were ready for the readjustments demanded by a complex program.

The costs and difficulties of integration, which are not to be glossed over, only make sense in the light of a deep understanding of the relationship between our multi-group society and the principles of democracy.

We need to study minority groups, such as the Puerto Ricans, as our school system is doing. However, we also need to study the nature of prejudice in the majority groups, self-examination by teachers and the techniques for promoting healthy relationships between diverse groups. The social sciences have accumulated much useful knowledge in these areas.

It is now evident that integration in New York City will not be achieved in a year or two, but is a matter of a decade and more. Success depends not so much on the mechanics of the operation as on the attitudes of teachers and public. Our colleges and universities can make a vital contribution here, but their resources have barely been tapped to date.

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1 (AP) — An experiment in transporting Negro children to a school in a predominantly white neighborhood is being tried here in the interest of racial integration. So far the plan is in effect only in one school on a trial basis.

But a "master plan" to balance the racial ratio in all schools attended by the city's 925,000 public school pupils has been drawn up by the zoning committee of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration.

The board itself has not approved the paln—except for the one school—but is expected to reach a decision in time to determine whether it shall start going into effect when the schools open their next term in September.

INTERESTED EYE

Meanwhile, it is keeping an interested eye on Public School 93 in the Bronx. Until last September, the school was attended almost entirely by white pupils.

Since then, city-financed buses have drawn up to the school each day with some 200 Negro children who formerly walked to school in their own neighborhood a mile or more away. Now these seven and eight-year-old tots scamper into P.S. 93 classrooms in what may be the forerunner of a planned integration pattern.

New York City schools have no segregation as such. Many have mixed classes, but some are predominantly Negro and some predominantly white, largely following the racial characteristics of the neighborhood in which the school is located.

The "master plan" would have the schools attended on a "balanced" rather than a neighborhood basis.

School Official Discusses Steps To End Bias

Daily World Wed 3-27-57

Atlanta Ga.

NEW YORK—(ANP)— Although racial segregation in the New York City public schools was banned by law in 1900, a kind of "de facto" segregation or racial concentration still exists as a result of residential segregation, Asst. Supt. of Schools John B. King told the Catholic Interracial Forum here.

Other complicating factors in the problem of achieving complete integration in th New York schools, King stated are the tremendous size of the city, the scope and complexity of its educational program and its constantly-shifting population.

An assistant superintendent since 1951, King was the first Negro to attain that position in the New York public school system. He said that the Board of Education is "firmly determined" to achieve more racially balanced schools but since 'population distributio' itself residential patterns will continue to be a complicating problem in the Board's plans.

N. Y. Times Writer Looks at Integration

Thurs. 5-23-57

By E. L. Madison, Jr.
Of The Eagle Staff

Dr. Benjamin Fine, education editor of the New York Times, visited Tulsa Public Schools last week to determine the extent of progress of integration in the schools here. Fine's report of the Tulsa study was released in Wednesday's edition of the Times.

In an interview with Dr. Fine Thursday afternoon at the Central Young Men's Christian Association, The Oklahoma Eagle was informed that the writer's trip was primarily concerned with areas where school integration of Negro and white students is working satisfactorily.

Dr. Fine reported that he had visited cities in other so-called border states where integration has progressed. Among these were Charleston, W. Va., Wilmington, Del. and cities in Missouri and Lexington, Ky.

Reporting his findings which resulted from a meeting with 30 or more school principals and school officials, Dr. Fine said Negro school administrators all agreed that there has been no problem with regard to school integration in Tulsa.

On the other hand, Dr. Fine was informed by citizens present at the YMCA interview that although the situation in school integration here is hopeful and should be commended, there are still many more issues to be solved. Chief among these was the issue of integration on the teacher level.

With reference to teacher integration, Dr. Fine quoted Dr. Charles Mason, superintedent of the Tulsa Public Schools, as saying that no plans are currently underway to get Negro teachers in white schools in this city.

M. M. Taylor, executive director of the Tulsa Urban league, told Dr. Fine that a systematized job must be done in order to bring about teacher integration in the Tulsa system. He declared that there had been no organized effort here to get Negro teachers hired in local schools rgardless of color.

It was reported that a total of 1393 Negro teachers are still employed in segregated or predominantly Negro schools. "Progress in school integratinon here," Taylor said, "is purely a matter of opinion."

Zoning is a Factor

The Rev. Karl E. Lutze, pastor of Prince of Peace Lutheran church and president of the Tulsa Urban league, said a majority of Negro schools in Tulsa will be "Negro" due to the geographical situation. He made reference to the zoning in the Negro residential area.

Primus C. Wade, Tulsa attorney and Urban League board member, said that Tulsa school districts "have been gerrymandered Negro teachers are not being employed on an integrated basis."

Dr. Fine, who also observed the school integration program underway at Oklahoma City, said there were about 600 Negroeos attending predominan ly white schools there. He reported further that there had been a few instances of faculty integration.

The New York Times writer said his report might be summed up as follows: "The situation in Tulsa presents a hopeful picture but there is still unfinished business."

Action Has Been Slow

According to a prominent Tulsa oilman who attended the meeting, 112 out of 56,000 Negro students have been integrated into the Tulsa schools in the two years that the program has been in effect. He said that according to statistics the program does not show too much concerted action on the part of the school administration. He further stated that some superintendents and principals seemingly refuse to admit that the problem exists.

A leading Tulsa labor executive reported that as far as he knew labor unions had not shown any objection toward school integration. However, he pointed out that within labor ranks here integration was moving at a snail's pace. There has been only slight improvement during the last two years.

The Rev. M. C. Merriweather, pastor of Christ Temple CME church, maintained that there is a problem to get Negro teachers hired who have lost jobs as a result of integration in smaller Oklahoma communities. He felt teachers should be employed where vacancies exist, regardless of where they were previously employed.

TODAY IN NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Segregation In New York

Integration In The School System Even There Continues As A Problem

BY DAVID LAWRENCE

Wed. 1-30-57

WASHINGTON

NEWS THAT SEEMS on its face to be confined to a locality and hence gets little attention nationally can upon occasion be of far-reaching importance in the life of a nation. A good example is the failure as yet of New York City's Board of Education to obey the Supreme Court of the United States in what lately has been emphasized as "the law of the land."

It will be surprising to many people to learn that "integration" in the school system has not been solved in the metropolis of America where so-called "liberalism" is very vocal. There loud voices of accusation recently have been heard denouncing the South as "backward" or as "undermining respect for the Supreme Court" or as contemptuous of the Constitution.

One can hardly believe that it is in the Northern citadel of "civil rights" where public attention is being vividly drawn to the tendency of human beings to segregate according to color. With a commendable sense of realism in assessing the weaknesses of human nature, The New York Times, in an editorial entitled "The Beam in Our Own Eye," a few days ago spoke out as follows:

New York Times Pointed Out Difficulties

"EVER SINCE the Supreme Court in 1954 concluded that in the field of education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' had no place, and that racial segregation deprived children of a minority group of equal educational opportunities, New York City has been re-examining its conscience. A commission on integration, with various subcommissions, has been at work for the Board of Education.

"The board did not, for the most part, have to deal with the problem found in parts of the South, where there is settled public opinion against integration. It had to cope with the more subtle forms of segregation that create, as if by accident, a school almost wholly white, Puerto Rican or Negro in its student body. The good intention to integrate is not enough. Real physical difficulties exist, as in the case of a school drawing its student body from a residential area almost wholly of one race. Inertia, some prejudice that must be admitted, and other obstacles too numerous to recount stand in the way of instant solution, even granted the best of goodwill.

"Now the Board of Education stands at the critical point where mere paying of lip service to fine moral principles will not suffice to move us forward, and where the sacrifices by which high principles are translated into action must be assumed."

Integration Takes Time Even In New York

THIS WILL COME as news to many people outside New York, especially in the South. For evidently there are no "Citizens Councils" in New York which have brought about this situation. It will be a comfort to the Southerners to learn, however, that the problem cannot soon be solved "even granted the best of goodwill" because "obstacles too numerous to recount stand in the way of instant solution." Maybe one of the Circuit Courts of Appeals and one of the District Courts which in recent rulings didn't allow time for "gradual" change will be conscience-stricken to discover that court decisions based on "psychology" do not wipe out either prejudices or the characteristics commonly called "human nature." For even in New York City apparently it takes time to find ways to accomplish "integration."

But perhaps the real significance of the New York City episode is that the persons who are taking the Supreme Court decision literally do not really understand how much distance they have to go. For if the logic of the high court's decision is really followed, it will become necessary for every school to admit at least a sprinkling of persons of another color in order to remove the "inferiority" complex which the pupils of one race are supposed to develop when there is any race discrimination in the schools. Theoretically, even the private schools will some day have to make their contribution to the "psychological" millenium described by the Supreme Court of the United States when in 1954 it suddenly decided that "psychological" considerations were more controlling than a legal precedent which had stood more than 100 years as "the law of the land."

The sympathy of the South doubtless will go out to the people of New York who are struggling so slowly "to obey the Constitution."—©

Urban League Brands School Board Lax As Jansen Rewrites Integration Reports

Times Sun 1-27-57 p. 38

New York

The Urban League of Greater New York accused the Board of Education yesterday of "sitting on its hands while Superintendent of Schools William Jansen tears the heart out of the nation's most comprehensive school integration program."

The charge was contained in letters sent by Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the league, to Mayor Wagner, Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald and Dr. Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education.

These officials were asked to "do all in your power to correct this unfortunate situation where recommendations growing out of years of work and study * * * are being watered down to insignificance."

The attack followed the publication of a new master plan prepared by Dr. Jansen for zoning the city's public scools. The plan, described as "tentative," would make few basic changes in the present system, under which many schools draw their pupils entirely from racial groups predominant in their neighborhoods.

A new system of bus transportation had been expected to start this fall. However, Dr. Jansen's report said "pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration."

The league accused Dr. Jansen of "rewriting" two reports by the board's Commission on Integration. These concerned the assignment of teachers and zoning.

The reports were adopted by the board "with reservations." Mr. Lewis' letter said that the board had given the impression that the reservations had applied only to details and the wording of the reports. He charged, however, that Dr. Jansen had "seized upon these 'reservations' to rewrite these reports in such a way as to preserve, in essence, the status quo ante."

Specifically, Mr. Lewis said that Dr. Jansen had:

¶Ignored the mandate of the commission to staff all schools with an equal number of qualified and experienced teachers. Instead, Mr. Lewis said, Dr. Jansen has "crammed 1,150 of 1,450 new inexperienced common branch teachers in the Harlem, Bedford-Stuyvesant and other de-facto segregated schools."

¶Made no "real effort to secure volunteers among the experienced teachers to transfer into the 'subject schools.'"

¶Delayed until the very last minute the issuance of a comprehensive zoning plan, as mandated by the board, and finally came up with a document that placed zoning policy "effectively back where it had been before the organization of the Commission on Integration."

A SUPERINTENDENT FOUND?

Times p. 18-2

For statutory reasons of age Dr. William Jansen must retire on Aug. 31, 1958, as Superintendent of Schools of New York City. On Dec. 7, 1956, the Public Education Association, expressing the views of eighteen respected civic organizations on its coordinating committee, wrote to the Board of Education taking note of this impending retirement. It asked that the board announce the procedure it expected to follow in selecting a new superintendent. It suggested that the board appoint an advisory committee of ten citizens to recruit and screen candidates to find "the best-qualified person in the country."

The silence in board circles that has followed this constructive suggestion by the P. E. A. has been deafening. On May 23 the P. E. A. wrote again to Charles H. Silver, board president, repeating its suggestion. This too has failed to move the board.

This raises some questions in the public mind. Does the board feel so sure of its own wisdom that it regards citizen help—from university presidents and deans of schools of education—as surplus? Does it feel, consistent with the Lyons residence law, that no one but a New Yorker should be considered for the superintendency of a school system already suffering from inbreeding? Or has it already tacitly chosen the new superintendent and thus doesn't want to be bothered with a committee, or a list of candidates on which the board's nominee might by some embarrassing accident be among the missing?

In his address on re-election as board president Mr. Silver said, "It will not be easy to find a man equal in stature and ability to Dr. Jansen." He added: "We will approach this task with a solemn awareness of the importance of our decision in selecting one who will guide the school system as its executive head in the years to come." We advise the Board of Education not to make a farce out of this promise by its president by provincially closing the door to outside educators. A committee should be appointed at once.

Schools Lag, Negroes Say

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, July 11 (AP)—A Negro delegation of about 50 persons, representing the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and other organizations, appealed to Mayor Wagner today to speed the progress of integration in the city's schools.

The group held a two-hour meeting with the mayor in City Hall.

Speakers told the mayor that the Board of Education was lagging in putting forward an integration program.

Recommendations made by the parents included appeals for permissive zoning to allow Negroes to enter junior and senior high schools; in other sections of the city, more experienced teachers in all-Negro schools; better physical facilities such as cafeterias and classrooms and better guidance facilities.

The mayor told the group he would look into the situation and check with the Board of Education.

There is no official segregation in the city's schools, but becaue of racial residential concentration, schools in some zones are predominantly white or colored.

Text of the Jansen Plan on School Zoning

Times 9-8

Following is the text of a tentative plan for zoning for the city's public schools. It was prepared by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, and submitted to assistant superintendents and members of the Board of Education's commission on integration.

Lab. 9-27-57

Any comprehensive plan for zoning will be the result of a process of growth and, therefore, no doubt will undergo continuous modification. Any plan at present is, therefore, to be regarded as a starting point and, of necessity, will be flexible.

New York

Since there is an uneven distribution of various ethnic groups in different communities and boroughs, and since there is a constant shift of population within the city, it is impossible to establish any fixed ratio of children of different racial backgrounds for all schools. The ratio will vary among schools and will constantly change as the residential pattern shifts from one majority to another. The homogeneous character of some school neighborhoods is an effect of segregated residential patterns, a condition which the schools cannot deal with directly.

Unfortunately, there are in New York City a few localities populated by Negroes which cover so large an area that it is difficut to provide an inter-racial population for those schools located in the heart of such areas. Nevertheless, the assistant superintendent should constantly keep this objective in mind. At the same time, he should take appropriate steps to develop within his districts an understanding of, and positive attitude toward, more inter-racial schools as part of a good intergroup relations program.

Elementary and Junior High Schools

DEFINITION — By zoning is meant the process of establishing boundary lines for an area within which all pupils of the same grade attend the same school.

I. Basic Criteria

1. Distance from home to school—This means that the proximity of the school to the homes of the children who attend it is a major consideration in deciding on the boundary lines. This is particularly true of the elementary schools. A half-mile is considered beyond walking distance for pupils in the kindergarten through second grade, a mile for pupils in the third grade through the eighth grade.

2. Maximum utilization of school space—In the face of mounting enrollments, it is necessary to adjust zone lines to make the most efficient use of existing school facilities.

3. Racially integrated schools—In applying the above criteria, the promotion of a racially integrated school population should be an important consideration.

4. Transportation — Where it is necessary for children to use public transportation, the convenience and accessibility of such transportation is a factor in setting zone lines. In instances where children are assigned to schools beyond the distance limits mentioned in Item 1, transportation by various means, including the school bus, is provided.

5. Topographical barriers—Lakes, rivers, canals, railroads, street crossings, bridges, parks, highways and other natural and man-made obstacles are factors which often have an intruding influence with respect to school zoning.

6. Continuity of instruction—It is an objective to avoid shifting the same pupils several times as a result of adjustments in school boundaries.

II. Basic Principles

1. The neighborhood school concept posts that the public elementary and junior high schools are essentially neighborhood or community institutions which serve the children of families living wthin an area contiguous to the school building. It may be possible, withont abandoning the neighborhood school concept, so to draw the zone lines that more pupils of different races will attend schools with inter-racial pupil groups.

The application of the neighborhood school concept insures the conditions of relative nearness, safety and convenience which are basic considerations of good school organization. Many parents still want their children to come home for lunch. If a child becomes ill, he is not far from home. If a child takes private lessons after school, he can get home quickly. If he goes to released time instruction, he will be near the center. If he wants to remain in school for some special activity, he can get home without being required to meet a bls schedule. The neighborhood school also tends to develop a strong parents' association and a stronger community spirit.

The determination of district lines should be consistent with the neighborhood school concept and the district of the school unit should ze the attendance area of all pupils living within it.

2. The Assistant Superintendent shall have the responsibility for determining school district lines. This responsibility is logically placed on the Assistant Superintendent in the field as the person having direct supervision of the schools, a comprehensive knowledge of the area, full information on available school facilities and instructional needs, and immediate contact with members of the Local School Boards and community.

The Assistant Superintendent should weigh the advantages of a complete introduction by having it apply only to new admissions. One factor might be the degree of difficulty in winning over the community to the change.

3. Parents of pupils affected and members of the Local School Boards should be consulted by the Assistant Superintendent prior to making changes in existing school districts or in creating new school districts.

4. Provision should be made in each school for classes which will serve the full range of its pupils' needs and abilities. This will include the organization of classes for the brightest pupils on each grade. These classes need not be either Intellectually Gifted or Special Progress.

In all schools, children who qualify for Intellectually Gifted and Special Progress Classes and who cannot be accommodated in their home schools, may be sent to other schools. The objective integration should be considered when such transfers are being contemplated by the principal and Assistant Superintendent.

5. The special classes for mentally retarded, physically handicapped, health conservation, etc., should be organized in a manner consistent with the basic concept of neighborhood schools. When, because of the small number of such pupils in a given school, it becomes necessary to transfer these pupils to another school, integration should be one of the criteria for placement.

6. The continuity of a pupil's school attendance should be maintained as far as possible. Changes in district lines should be such as to avoid frequent interruptions in the continuity of instruction.

7. Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration. However, when it becomes necessary to transport pupils by bus to relieve overcrowding and for better utilization of the school plant, integration of racial groups should be one of the considerations in determining which pupils shall be moved and to which school.

8. The junior high school draws its pupils from a considerably larger area than does the elementary school, and, therefore, will afford greater flexibility in the establishment of zoning lines. At this level the elementary school zoning criteria must also be taken into consideration, but additional consideration is to be given to integration by drawing zoning lines to include the areas of feeder schools or parts of the orea of feeder schoolss in such a manner as to promote racial integration.

9. Any exceptions to the above principles may prevent the orderly implementation of the comprehensive zoning plan and disrupt the process of integration. Accordingly, the application of the principle of permissive zoning" should in general be deferred to the senior high schools.

Senior High Schools

The High School Division is composed of two sections: the vocational section and the academic section. In general, there are no zoning restrictions in the vocational high schools, and pupils may apply from any borough of the city. In the general vocational high schools, the pupils are more likelyto come from the borough in which the school is located, while the specialized vocational high schools draw from all sections of the city. Actually, desirable ethnic distribution has been achieved in these schools, except that a school located in a homogenous area derives the major portion of its population from the immediate environs.

In the academic high school section different determinants are operative. There are four specialized high schools (Brooklyn Technical, Bronx Science, Stuyvesant, and Music and Art) that obtain their pupils on the basis of an entrance examination, and there are no zoning restrictions. In the boroughs of Brooklyn, Manhattan and the Bronx there are several single-sex schools, and, generally, these schools have borough-wide zones. The remaining academic schools are co-educational and have basically the same course offerings, including the academic course (college preparatory) the commercial course and the general course. The co-educational high schools have a distinct boundary or zone and only the pupils who reside within the boundary are permitted to attend the high school in the zone.

I. Basic Principles

1. The assistant superintendentsasigned to the High School Division should have the responsibility for determining high school boundary lines.

2. Prior to making changes in existing school zones or in creating new school boundaries, the Divisional Assistant Superintendent should consult with the principals, the parent groups and the field Assistant Superintendents who have an interest in the new boundary lines.

3. Provisions should be made in each school for classes which will serve the full range of its pupils' needs and abilities. This will include the organization of honor classes in all schools.

II. Criteria for Zoning

1. The senior high school draws its pupils from a considerably larger area than does the elementary school or the junior high school and, therefore, will afford greater flexibility in the establishment of zoning lines. Because of this latitude, additional consideration can be given to racial integration provided it is consistent with other basic criteria.

2. Distance from home to school for high school pupils should be considered even though it is not given the same emphasis as in the case of the elementary or junior high school. A compact high school zone insures desirable community interest, strong parent associations and an active after-school program for pupils.

3. Maximum utilization of school space—In the face of mounting enrollments, it is necessary to adjust school zones to make the most efficient use of existing facilities.

4. Transportation—Since the majority of high school pupils use public transportation, the extent and relative convenience of its use should be considered when boundary lines are drawn.

III. Exceptions

1. The High School Division has granted exceptions to zoning regluations in order to promote racial integration. Examples of such exceptions may be found in examining the booklet "The Directory of the Public High Schools."

2. If the practice of zoning variances is to be extended, there are certain inevitable outcomes to be considered and understood. Schools that are located in ethnically homogenous areas will become underutilized if the pupils of the feeder schools in the area are permitted to apply to schools out of the area. Eventually, the high schools in the zone will become so underpopulated that they will have to be abandoned. This event in turn will increase the overcrowded conditions in the adjacent zones, requiring additional high school facilities. Moreover, the high school in the zone adjacent to the area that has just been abandoned as a desirable zone for high schools, will soon develop a very high percentage of the ethnic group in the homogeneous area.

In the interest of optimum utilization of school facilities, and in the interest of maintaining racial integration at desirable levels, the following recommendations are made:

a. As a guide, the ethnic composition of all schools in a borough should be ascertained.

b. Zoning maps, showing racial and ethnic composition by blocks, should be supplied.

c. Exceptions to zoning regulations should be made to feeder schools on the basis of specific numbers of specific schools.

d. The numbers to be assigned to specific high schools are to be determined on an arbitrary basis, a geographical basis, or a combination of the two. If the arbitrary basis is the one to be used, then each applicant in the graduating class of the feeder school who expects to take advantage of the zoning variance is to indicate, in the order of preference, the schools to which he seeks admission. As many first choice preferences will be granted as possible. Second, third, etc., choices will be used in order to control the number that are to be admitted to the respective schools, also bearing in mind the other criteria that should be applied.

3. A zoning variance should be authorized if it will satisfy a subject need of an applicant, usually a foreign language.

4. A zoning variance should be authorized for an applicant because of health conservation, sight conservation, or the need for CRMD [Children with Retarded Mental Development] classes, or special need as indicated after study by the Bureau of Child Guidance.

Neighborhood Is Stressed in School Zone Program Urged by Superintendent

Dr. Jansen's master plan for school zoning, Page 8.

By BENJAMIN FINE

A master plan for zoning the city's public schools has been prepared by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools.

The plan sets out the basic criteria for redistricting the schools. In essence, it differs little from existing practices. The Superintendent's comprehensive program provides that the neighborhood concept of the school system be continued.

The plan, which is called "tentative" by Dr. Jansen, has not been made public, but a copy was made available to The New York Times. It was the basis of considerable discussion, much of it bitter, at a conference Thursday morning in the office of Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education.

A number of field superintendents, administrative officials and members of the board's Commission on Integration attended the meeting. State Controller Arthur H. Levitt, who with Mr. Silver is co-chairman of the commission, also attended.

Delay Laid to Jansen

Dr. Jansen was charged with "holding back" the integration program. Several Negro members of the commission threatened to resign unless the Board of Education moved faster.

The zoning report was a particular target. Many suggested that the previous report prepared by the subcommission on integration, headed by Mrs. Morris Shapiro, had been watered down and rewritten.

The Urban League of Greater New York is sending letters to Mayor Wagner, Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald and Mr. Silver expressing its displeasure at the steps taken by Dr. Jansen to implement integration here.

In his zoning plan, Dr. Jansen cited these basic criteria in districting elementary and junior high schools:

¶Distance from home to school.

¶Maximum utilization of school space.

¶Racially integrated schools.

¶Transportation.

¶Topographical barriers.

¶Continuity of instruction.

The heart of the zoning plan is this principle:

Responsibility Is Set

"The neighborhood school concept posits that the public elementary and junior high school are essentially neighborhood or community institutions which serve the children of families living within an area contiguous to the school building."

The report declares that the assistant superintendents shall have the responsibility for determining school district lines. No mention is made of the Central Zoning Unit, which is now being established by the Board of Education. At the Thursday board meeting, Dr. Francis A. Turner was elected Assistant Superintendent to head this new agency.

Edward S. Lewis, Urban League director, warned that "if zoning is left in the hands of the assistant superintendents, it will continue to encourage de facto segregated schools."

On the controversial question of bus service for children, the Jansen report declares:

"Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration.

"However, when its becomes necessary to transport pupils by bus to relieve overcrowding and for better utilization of the school plant, integration of racial groups should be one of the considerations in determining which pupils shall be moved and to which school."

The comprehensive plan expresses opposition to "permissive zoning." Under this practice, parents could select the school ti which their child might attend. The subcommision on integration had recommended that some permissive zoning be set up.

High School Zoning

At issue also is the question on zoning on the high school level. The report urges that the neighborhood concept be retained, in large part, in the high schools as well as junior high and elementary schools.

"Distance from home to school for high school pupils should be considered even though it is not given the same emphasis as in the case of the elementary or junior high school," Dr. Jansen says. "A compact high school zone insures desirable community interest, strong parent associations and an active after-school program for pupils."

The report declares that if the practice of zoning variances is to be extended, there are certain "inevitable outcomes to be considered and understood."

"Schools that are located in ethnically homogenous areas will become under-utilized if the pupils of the feeder schools in the area are permitted to apply to schools out of the area," Dr. Jansen maintains. "Eventually the high schools in the zone will become so underpopulated that they will have to be abandoned."

Before the report is adopted, it will have to be approved by the Board of Education.

Says Pupils Should Not Change Zone Solely To Establish Integration

New York, N. Y., July 29—A master plan for zoning the city's public schools has been prepared by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools.

The plan sets out the basic criteria for redistricting the schools. In essence, it differs little from existing practices. The Superintendent's comprehensive program provides that the neighborhood concept of the school system be continued.

The plan, which is called "tentative" by Dr. Jansen, has not been made public, but it was the basis of considerable discussion, much of it bitter, at a conference Thursday morning in the office of their race, religion or national origin.

Mr. Abrams was quick to note that this rise was not the result of an increase in bigotry in the state, but of other factors, such as a greater awareness among minority groups of their rights under the law. He observed that thirty-eight complaints charged bias in housing, an area in which the commission has limited jurisdiction.

Mr. Abrams said that 502 complaints filed so far this year exceeded the number filed in the entire twelve months of any previous year in the commission's 12-year history, with the exception of 1956. Last year, 562 complaints were filed.

The chairman said that, upon investigation by the commission, the specific discrimination complained of this year was found to exist in 14 per cent of the cases. This is considerably lower than the 27 per cent average over the last ten years.

Mr. Abrams noted, however, that indiscriminatory practices, other than the specific practice complained of, had been found in 23 per cent of the cases investigated this year. This brought to 37 per cent the cases where some form of bias was found. This percentage was also below the ten-year-average.

Mr. Abrams cited the following principal factors in the increase in complaints:

A greater awareness by Negroes and other minorities of the existence of the commission and of their rights under the anti-discrimination law .

Greater efforts by the commission to protect minority groups, particularly in up-state areas.

New York Schools Keep Neighborhood Plan

New Orleans

NEW YORK, July 27 (AP)—The New York Times has disclosed a new master plan for zoning the city's public schools and said it differs little from existing practices governing the controversial race segregation issue. P. 11

The plan, drawn up by Dr. William Jansen, superintendent of schools, has not been officially made public but the Times today published it in full.

Essentially, it provides that the neighborhood concept of the public school system be continued. Under this policy in the past, many New York City schools have in fact although not in law been racially segregated, since neighborhood schools followed the racial pattern of their communities.

The city had previously announced it would try to end "de facto" segregation and to improve educational opportunities in so doing.

Groups favoring a vigorous policy of trying to break up, as much as possible, segregated school patterns by shifting some students around reportedly were angry about the Jansen plan.

The Times also said several Negro members of the city's commission on integration threatened to resign unless the board of education moved faster toward integration.

Jansen's report, as published by the Times, does say that the assistant superintendents of schools who are charged with carrying out the school zoning should have the "objective" of eventual integration always in mind.

Continue to Demand Salary Rises for All—Education Board Chided by Mayor

The Board of Estimate was warned yesterday that unless it provided adequate funds to the Board of Education, the school integration program might be adversely affected.

The warning was sounded by various speakers at the second of three public hearings on Mayor Wagner's 1957-58 executive budget of $1,936,234,223. Yesterday's session was devoted to the education and library allotments.

In addition to the request for more funds for a proposed attack on "de facto" segregation in the school system—a situation attributed to residential patterns rather than official policies—strong pleas were made for more money for teachers' salaries and school services.

Many of the speakers sharply criticized the Mayor for reducing the Board of Education's budget request, especially the proposed $23,000,000 item for teacher pay rises. In the Mayor's budget the item has been cut to $8,400,000, spread over two years. This would provide pay increases for about 16,000 of the city's 38,000 teachers. Those benefitting would be mostly high school teachers appointed before 1947 and teachers with advanced preparation.

Mayor Explains Distribution

At the beginning of the session, and several times during the hearing, Mr. Wagner asserted that the distribution of the increases was suggested by the school board, and that it was not his idea. He also said the board knew in advance that the city did not have $23,000,000 for teacher pay rises, but that the board nevertheless made the request.

While the hearing was in progress, about 250 teachers gathered outside City Hall demanding satisfactory increases for all teachers. The demonstration was conducted by the Teachers Union, independent. A demonstration by the Teachers Guild on Tuesday, before the hearings began, brought out 1,500 to 2,000 protesting teachers.

On the subject of integration, almost all the speakers were in favor of increased funds for the program. Matthew J. Shevlin, of the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, however, argued that no funds at all were needed for the program, because "there is no such thing as segregation in New York City."

The majority view point was upheld by Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League of Greater New York, who charged that items "crucial to put into effect this program" had been deleted by the Mayor.

Mr. Lewis said these items, amounting to about $15,000,000, had not been earmarked for the program "per se," but would have provided "equal educational opportunities for our city's minority children who have been educationally starved for so many decades."

Similar views on the subject were expressed by officials of the Public Education Association, the United Parents Association, the Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools and other organizations.

Varying Views of Teachers

While all the teacher groups were unanimous in their sentiment that teachers deserved high salaries, they were sharply divided on who should get what.

The High School Teachers Association attacked the single-salary principle, whereby teachers of equal preparation receive equal salaries regardless of the level on which they teach. The group argued that high school teachers, because of their special preparation and responsibilities, deserved higher salaries than those in elementary schools.

Strong support for the single-salary concept and for pay increases for all teachers were expressed by officials of the Teachers Guild, the Joint Committee of Teacher Organizations, the Kindergarten-6B Teachers Association, the Teachers Union and other groups.

Superintendent of Schools William Jansen backed the teachers' request for higher salaries and a shorter schedule. When Mayor Wagner interjected that the city did not have enough funds to satisfy the demands of all municipal employes, Dr. Jansen conceded the magnitude of the problem, but added: "Perhaps it would be helpful to have a commission of some of our leading economists look into the situation."

Today's hearing will begin at 10:30 A. M. and will be devoted to civic groups wishing to speak on the entire city budget.

City Plans 24 School Buildings To Spur Drive for Integration

By BENJAMIN FINE

The Board of Education is taking steps to end segregation in New York City schools.

Twenty-four elementary and junior high school buildings will be constructed in Harlem and in the Bedford-Stuyvesant district in Brooklyn. Twenty-two of these will be situated so as to reduce the segregation that is developing from the housing pattern.

Dr. David H. Moskowitz, associate superintendent, in charge of the building program, said the board was planning, so far as possible, to build the schools so that integration would take place as a natural consequence.

The schools will accommodate about 25,000 pupils and will cost a total of about $60,000,000. They are to be completed in the next three years.

In addition to the building program, the board has taken, or has under consideration, the following steps:

¶About 1,500 children, both white and Negro, will be sent by bus to schools other than those they now attend. The pupils will be transferred only on the request or consent of parents. For example, one school in Harlem will send fifty Negro children to a predominantly white school outside their district.

¶The assistant superintendent in a Brooklyn district will send 400 Negro pupils from the Bedford-Stuyvesant section into a predominantly white school through a permissive zoning arrangement.

¶Special classes will be set up for superior students in some parts of the city, to which Negro pupils may be assigned if they meet the academic standards.

¶The Board of Education plans to improve the so-called difficult schools in the segregated areas by providing more supervisors, more school clerks and auxiliary teachers. The Mayor approved the board's supplementary budget request of $1,589,500 for this purpose.

¶Teachers are to be asked, on a voluntary basis at first and later under orders, to serve in the difficult schools. Most of the schools that are predominantly Negro or Puerto Rican have a much higher than average proportion of substitute teachers.

The program translates into action integration reports adopted recently by the Board.

There has been opposition to the program among teachers and some parents. The teachers are afraid that a compulsory rotation plan will force them to serve in Harlem schools. The parents fear that their children will be sent by bus outside their own neighborhood.

Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, speaking in Queens last Wednesday, denied some rumors concerning integration.

"It is not true," he said, "that we are transporting or planning to transport groups of Negro children long distances to schools in which the pupils are predominantly white and vice versa."

Nor, he continued, is the administration's position on "compulsory rotation" decided. Teachers will be encouraged to volunteer for the difficult schools, he said.

To carry out the program, the board has named a committee of four, headed by Dr. Jacob Greenberg, deputy superintendent. The others are Dr. John B. King, assistant superintendent; Dr. J. Wayne Wrightstone, director of educational research, and Dr. Morris Krugman, assistant superintendent in charge of guidance.

The firmest attack on segregation will come with the construction of schools in the Harlem and Bedford-Stuyvesant areas. Fifteen of the new schools will be built in Harlem and nine in Brooklyn.

In the past, many schools were built to conform to current residential patterns. The new policy takes the opposite position. According to Dr. Greenberg, the schools will be built in the fringe areas where population is mixed and children of different races live in the same district.

The board also plans to set up a central unit for zoning. This will cost about $100,000 and will be located in the board headquarters at 110 Livingston Street in Brooklyn. This unit, officials say privately, may eventually become the most important weapon in breaking down the patterns of segregation.

One major problem, it was noted, lies in the uneven racial distribution of children in the city. Some areas have a large number of Negroes or Puerto Ricans, while others have few or none.

The statistics below, showing the division of school population, was prepared by the Greenberg committee:

	Negro.	P. R.	Other.
Richmond	5.8	1.2	93.0
Queens	10.7	1.4	87.9
Manhattan	34.5	32.5	33.5
Bronx	15.3	19.3	65.4
Brooklyn	17.3	10.7	72.0
City total	18.3	14.0	67.7

The zoning unit, the board explained, will be formed from members of the professional staff. It will consist of census experts, mapmakers and school authorities. Field superintendents, local school boards and parents will also have a voice.

New Pupils Affected

Dr. Greenberg said that the redistricting would usually apply only to new pupils. Children already attending a city school will not be affected; the only exception will be in schools that are seriously overcrowded. Transfers will be made after consultation with parents and the individual school board.

"To achieve integration," Dr. Greenberg said, "children will not be required to walk greater distances than they now walk. The neighborhood school concept will always be kept in mind. There is no intention to change the neighborhood school policy."

The Greenberg committee will work with the Commission on Intergroup Relations, formed last year by Mayor Wagner. This fifteen-man commission is headed by Dr. Alfred J. Marrow.

"The schools have a big job ahead of them," said Dr. Marrow. "Integration cannot be accomplished by fiat or directive."

To make the job for teachers in difficult schools more pleasant, the board had planned to cut class sizes, to provide more supervisors and to employ more clerks. But the funds for these services were cut from the regular budget; however, a substantial amount was left for these extras in the supplementary one.

Among other things, the Greenberg group is studying the possibility of providing more parking facilities in congested areas to ease the burden on teachers who drive. This is not a simple matter in crowded

'Not Consulted'

"As yet," said Mrs. Concetta C. Roy, president of the High School Teachers Association, "we and other high school personnel have not been consulted although the groundwork for implementing the reports is being laid. Open zoning might create serious population problems in the high schools. Those issues should be tackled now. The teacher shortage is already acute in the high schools. Threats of forced transfers and artificial zoning will only aggravate it."

Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education is co-chairman, with Arthur Levitt, State Controller, of the school integration committee. Mr. Silver declared that "the integration program must go forward without any slackening." He believes that the public, teachers and school officials will accept the program without opposition.

"We need to educate the parents and teachers," said Mr. Silver. "Once our program is properly understood, it will receive tremendous support from all right-thinking members of our city."

DESEGREGATION APPEARS VICTOR

Pittsburgh Courier, Pa.

New York City Suburb Has Special Election

Fri. 5-17-57

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 16 (AP)—Returns from a special election on a school expansion program in this New York city suburb were seen as indicating, in at least one instance, a victory for desegregation.

Among the items submitted to voters in the referendum on the $13,806,000 school improvement project was replacement of the present Lincoln elementary school with a new one.

Ninety per cent of the pupils attending Lincoln are Negroes, because most of the residential facilities in the vicinity are occupied by Negroes.

Negroes opposing the construction of new quarters to replace those now used contended that such action, rather than distributing the pupils among other schools in the city, would defeat desegregation for another 50 years.

Voters rejected the building replacement plan by a tally of 7511 to 6598.

In all, three of five school improvement proposals opposed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were defeated.

It was clear, however, that monetary considerations played a large part also in the voting. Many of those against the various proposals were clearly opposed to spending more money.

New Rochelle, just north of New York city and the residence of many city office workers, has a population of more than 72,000.

It was contended by some Negro leaders that the elementary school question offered the first opportunity since the supreme court desegregation ruling for residents in a northern city of middle size to perpetuate actual segregation now in effect.

Voters Back Plan To End Segregation

Daily World Fri. 5-17-57

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y. — (SNS) — Northern cities too, have their problems concerning segregated schools.

New Rochelle voters, in a special referendum on the school-expansion program this week, indicated that its one segregated school had to go. The NAACP had urged the voters to reject the proposal which would cause continuation of the segregated school.

Local Negro leaders called the voting on elementary school propositions as the first opportunity since the U. S. Supreme Court's decision against segregation, for residents in middle-size northern cities to declare whether they wanted to perpetuate segregation.

New York Education Board Outlines Integration Plan

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 5-22-57

NEW YORK — (ANP) — A three-point program designed to effect integration in this city's schools was outlined last week here by the Board of Education's Commission on Integration.

The tri-point plan is as follows: The adoption of:

1. An adequately staffed Centralized Community Relations Unit as a guide to help existing community groups stimulate intergroup programs locally.

2. Pilot projects under the commission on Intergroup Relations to serve as models for neighborhood councils.

3. A public relations unit within the board of education to disseminate information on policy and administration and to advise the board on how to present its program to the public.

In its first ruling against segregation, the state's highest court told the parents:

"Whatever may be the powers of the Supreme Court to correct and overrule its own decisions relating to the construction or interpretation of the U. S. Constitution, we are without any such power.

"On the contrary, we must recognize the binding force of such decisions of the Supreme Court and be controlled by them."

Accuses "Times" Of Integration Facts Error

Birmingham, Ala. Wed. 5-29-57

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Contending that an article in the New York Times created a misunderstanding of the Board of Education's school desegregation program here, the superintendent of Schools in this city last week objected to the listing of two additional steps that the board "has taken" or has under "consideration."

Dr. William Jansen referred to the newspaper story which reported that "about 1500 children would be transported by bus to schools other than they now are attending on the request or with the consent of parents.

He also objected to the assertion in the article that 400 Negro pupils from the Bedford-Stuyvesant area would be sent to predominantly white school by "permissive zoning arrangement."

Dr. Jansen said "there is no plan to transport 1500 Negro and white children after obtaining parental consent, nor is there any truth to the statement that 400 Negro children are being transferred to a predominantly white school."

He stated that the writer of the article was perhaps confused by the fact that "a new school building located in a white area, but not far from a Negro area will be opened later this year."

The educator said that by "permissive zoning," the impression meant is the granting of the privilege of attending a school other than the one normally attended by the children living in a neighborhood."

Say New Rochelle Citizens Voted Down 'Separate But Equal School' for Negroes

Dyston Tri Thurs. 5-30-57 Des Moines, Iowa

New Rochelle, N. Y. — Analyzing the results of a referendum on a proposal to build a new school in an all-Negro area, Rev. M. DeWitt Bullock, president of the New Rochelle NAACP branch, said May 24 that the defeat of this proposal indicated that the "citizens of New Rochelle, white and Negro, voted against payment for separate but equal schools."

The proposal, one of seven submitted to the electorate on May 14, would have allocated $1,516,000 for the construction of a new Lincoln elementary school on the site of the present school in the heart of the Negro area. The NAACP opposed the proposal because "it would perpetuate segregated education and insure the development and expansion of an enlarged all-Negro community" Mr. Bullock asserted.

Citizens Groups

Despite the opposition of the New Rochelle NAACP, the board of education insisted on submitting the proposal to the voters. Many citizens' groups also supported the board's position. But the voters rejected it.

"The board has been taught a lesson in integration as far as citizens of New Rochelle are concerned," Mr Bullock declared. "It is my feeling that now the board realizes that people will no longer sit idly by in our community and allow school officials to turn their backs upon our American democracy. The board defeated its own referendum by poor public relations, misrepresentation and pressure tactics. It lost the referendum because it is out of touch with the thinking of the majority of the citizens."

Five Defeated

Of the seven proposals submitted for a school expansion program costing $13,806,000, five were defeated including three which the NAACP branch urged people to vote against.

Instead of building a new elementary school in the heart of the segregated Negro area, the NAACP contended that the present Lincoln school should be abandoned and the pupils assigned to other schools in the city. Enrollment in the school is now 90 per cent Negro.

JANSEN DISCERNS INTEGRATION GAIN

New York Times 9-30-57

Zoning Alters Composition of 50 Schools, He Reports —5,000 Pupils Affected

By LEONARD BUDER

Racial integration in more than fifty New York City schools has been augmented in the last year through zoning changes, Superintendent of Schools William Jansen reported yesterday.

More than 5,000 pupils from Negro and Puerto Rican neighborhood schools have been transferred to what were formerly all-white schools as a result of the zoning changes. About 1,500 of these pupils are being transported by bus up to two miles so they can attend mixed schools. In a few instances, white children have been transferred to largely Negro and Puerto Rican schools.

Dr. Jansen said that the transfers were accomplished with "a minimum of protest because of careful planning" and with no difficulties. The schools affected were elementary and junior high schools.

Program Is Explained

The Superintendent explained the program at an interview last week, at which he released a progress report on school integration. The report, which will be followed by others in the near future, covered school zoning—which has to do with school boundaries—and teacher assignments.

The twenty-three-page statement gave a point-by-point account of what the schools are doing to implement to the recommendations of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration. It showed that "some action" had been taken on a majority of the proposals submitted by the subcommission on zoning and teacher assignments.

The report was seen as the school system's answer to criticisms that it was not doing enough to further integration in the city schools. One of the specific charges has been that Dr. Jansen was "dragging his feet" on integration.

Zoning Changes Noted

The zoning changes at the "more than fifty schools" was touched upon only briefly in the report, which said:

"These changes were made carefully. The plans were discussed with the parents and all changes were effected smoothly."

However, Dr. Jansen elaborated on it at his press interview. He pointed out that in all instances the children were transferred from overcrowded to under-utilized schools. This, he said, was in line with the subcommission's recommendation that school zones be drawn to effect better utilization and to further integration.

The zoning changes, Dr. Jansen asserted, affected "many times" 5,000 pupils, the number actually transferred. Because of the transfers, some previously overcrowded schools were able to abandon part-time schedules and go on full programs.

"This has meant better education for many more thousands of our pupils," the Superintendent commented.

Explaining why most of the children transferred were Negro and Puerto Rican, Dr. Jansen said that the Negro and Puerto Rican schools were in the densely populated areas of the city and thus were most overcrowded.

Richmond Not Affected

The zoning changes affected schools in all boroughs but Richmond, where the pupil enrollment is 93 per cent white. Dr. Jansen said that most of the schools affected were in "periphery" and "fringe" areas, where integration could be furthered by a revision of school boundary lines. In the matter of schools located deep inside one-race neighborhoods, he said, the problem was much more difficult, but was being worked on.

Dr. Jansen said that he hesitated to make public the list of schools affected by the zoning changes "because to publicize the fact that these schools are being made more Negro or Puerto Rican might stir up some feeling that could hurt our efforts." But he cited several examples—naming schools "off the record"—to show what had been done.

In three examples, involving transfers from crowded East Bronx schools to underutilized all-white schools in the West Bronx schools to under-utilized Negro and Puerto Rican pupils were sixty, 150 and 300. In each instance, the transfers gave the receiving schools an enrollment of 15 per cent Negro and Puerto Rican pupils.

Other illustrations involved schools in Queens and Brooklyn. In some cases, the pupils walked to their new schools; in others, they took school or public buses.

When it was pointed out that most of the transfers appeared to change the enrollment at former all-white schools to 15 per cent non-white, Dr. Jansen asserted that this was not a Board of Education-ordered percentage, but one that some officials in charge of school districts apparently had set as their goal.

Says Percentage Will Rise

The percentage, he said, would go up in succeeding years, because many of the transferred pupils were in the early grades of elementary school and in the seventh-grade in junior high school. As these pupils move up through the grades, other Negro and Puerto Rican pupils will take their places in the lower grades.

"In one junior high school in the Bronx," Dr. Jansen said, "we now have sixty Negro children. Next year, we will have 120, and the following year, 180."

In some cases, the zoning changes were the result of teamwork between officials of two school districts. Some pupils not only left their regular schools but also by-passed other crowded institutions in their district to attend an under-utilized school in an adjoining district.

In his report, Dr. Jansen stressed that "no form of 'segregation' within the meaning of the historic decision of the Supreme Court [in 1954] is practiced or sanctioned in New York City." Where a large concentration of an ethnic group occurs in a school, he said, it is a result of the ethnic make-up of the neighborhood of the school.

In some sections of the country, he noted, if one or two Negro pupils attend a formerly all-white school, "these schools are called integrated schools." Used in this context, he went on, the term has no application to the city schools.

"There is, however, a much broader application of the term 'integration'," the Superintendent added, "which has engaged our serious consideration. It has to do with the obligation of a school system to provide full educational opportunities for all children."

Complexity Is Stressed

The statement pointed up the complexity of the integration problem. Of the pupils in the city's elementary and junior high schools, 67.7 per cent are white; 18.3 per cent are Negro; and 14 per cent are Puerto Rican. Manhattan has the greatest mixed school population with 34.5 per cent Negro; 32 per cent Puerto Rican; and 33.5 per cent white.

The report said that the statistics were based "upon the judgment of principals and teachers," since no child is asked about his race, nor does any notation appear on the individual record cards.

On the subject of the recommendations of the zoning subcommission, Dr. Jansen reported the following action:

¶Integration has been accepted by the school system as a "cardinal principle of zoning."

¶A tentative master plan for school zoning has been formulated by the Superintendent.

¶The school board has appointed Dr. Francis Turner as assistant superintendent to head the proposed central zoning unit. The unit, however, has run into some difficulty in obtaining qualified staff personnel. A budgetary allotment of $100,000 for 1957-58 has been given to the unit.

Study Is Promised

Dr. Jansen said that many additional steps would be taken during the present school year, including the intensive study of some critical areas and some action in connection with the recommended "permissive zoning of high schools." The Superintendent added that high schools required different measures from elementary and junior high schools because they were not "neighborhood schools."

The reported repeated assurances made last year by the executive committee of the commission that the concept of the neighborhood school—whereby pupils of a community go to the school in that neighborhood—would not be discarded. He also reiterated that children would not be sent from one borough to another to further integration.

Of the sixteen proposals made by the subcommission on teacher assignments and personnel the report said that some action had been taken on all but one. This has to do with providing parking facilities for teachers serving in difficult areas. Dr. Jansen said that the board was working on this problem even before the suggestion was made but has so far been unable to solve it.

The report said that class sizes had been generally reduced in schools with large Negro and Puerto Rican enrollments, and that these schools had been given more supervisory assistants, teachers and special services.

Dr. Jansen said that some progress had been made in obtaining more experienced teachers for difficult schools, although he added that the improvement "has not been as rapid as some are demanding."

Dr. Edmund J. Gannon Associate Superintendent of Schools in charge of personnel, who took part in the news conference, noted that 1,200 newly appointed teachers were assigned to these schools at the start of the new term on Sept. 9.

Despite some predictions that teachers would quit their jobs rather than serve in difficult schools, he said, there was no large number of teacher-absences the first week of the term.

The news conference was held in Dr. Jansen's office at the Board of Education, 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn.

N. Y. School Integration Progress Is Reported

Post Herald p. 22 Mon. 9-30-57

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (AP)—Step by step, New York City is trying to achieve more complete racial integration in its huge public school system—despite the city's segregated residential patterns.

School Supt. William Jansen today issued a 23-page report, summarizing progress made in carrying out a broad program adopted last Spring to bring about fuller distribution of races in the schools.

It's a long-range undertaking, involving rezoning of school districts, locating of new schools and other techniques. As outlined by Jansen, some of the machinery for doing the job is just getting started.

He said that the mere shifting of one or two Negroes into formerly all-white schools, or vice versa, did not fulfill the integration objectives, which is to obtain a balanced racial make-up.

"Integration is a process of bringing all parts together into a unified whole," he said.

School segregation has long been illegal in New York City. Jansen emphasized that all schools are open to any race but residential concentrations in some areas have been reflected in many schools.

There are about 1½ million pupils in the city's public schools, 18.3 per cent of them Negro, 14 per cent Puerto Rican and 67.7 per cent white. But many live — and go to school — in areas mostly of their own race.

Jansen said changes made in the past year had "improved racial distribution" in more than 50 schools that formerly were predominately white or predominantly Negro.

As directed by the school board program, he said a comprehensive zoning plan is ready to go into full effect in the Fall of 1958, although some of its general principles already are being applied.

Concerning one of the most controversial issues in the rezoning move—the transportation of pupils by bus from one area to another in order to get mixed schools—the plan states:

"Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration.

"However, when it becomes necessary to transport pupils by bus to relieve overcrowding and for better utilization of the school plant, integration of racial groups should be one of the considerations in determining which pupils shall be moved and to which school."

The plan says that the "neighborhood school concept" — the practice of having children attend schools in their own residential vicinity—will be preserved in the rezoning of districts, but adds:

"It may be possible, without abandoning the neighborhood school concept, so to draw the zones lines that more pupils of different races will attend schools with interracial pupil groups."

"Unfortunately," the zoning blueprint adds, "there are in New York City a faw localities populated by Negroes which cover so large an area that it is difficult to provide an interacial population for those schools located in the heart of such areas.

Jansen also reported major progress in another phase of the program—the improvement and expanding of teaching staffs and facilities at so-called "difficult schools," many of them in predominantly Negro residential areas.

One keenly debated phase of the program — the authorized compulsory transfer of teachers to "difficult schools" if volunteers can't be obtained to give such schools faculties as good as elsewhere—still is being held up, Jansen said.

In many cases in the past, the "difficult schools" have had a large ratio of inexperienced substitute teachers. Teacher organizations have strongly protested the "compulsory transfer" plan. Jansen said that if a campaign to obtain volunteers fails, then the compulsory steps will go into effect.

Report on Integration in the City's Schools Shows Progress and Problems Ahead

Times, 11-29-57 p. E11 - Sun 10-6-57

By BENJAMIN FINE

The steps that the city school system has taken to reduce segregation here were outlined last week by Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools. In his first report since the Commission on Integration presented its findings last spring, Dr. Jansen suggested that much progress has taken place.

Problems of integration arise in New York primarily because of segregated housing patterns. Children go to the school in their district. The population of Harlem is almost completely Negro, so most schools are all-Negro schools. Only in "fringe" areas where Negroes and white live closely together are the schools mixed.

Dr. Jansen gave an optimistic report of what the school board has done. He pointed to these steps that tend to reduce segregation within the school system:

(1) Zoning changes have been made in fifty schools, to bring Negro, Puerto Rican or white children into districts where there had been none. As a result, 5,000 Negro or Puerto Rican pupils have been transferred to formerly all-white schools. About 1,500 of these pupils are now taken by bus, up to two miles, to formerly all-white schools, and white children are transported to the formerly all-Negro schools.

(2) Integration has been accepted as a cardinal principle of zoning. A zoning unit has been created, with an initial budget of $100,000, to study the school district lines.

Criticism of the Report

The Intergroup Committee on New York City Public Schools, consisting of thirty civic organizations interested in integration, has been most critical of the city's school program. In a meeting last week, it attacked some of the conclusions found in the twenty-three page Jansen report. The group challenged Dr. Jansen's figures on zoning changes, charged that his zoning unit would be ineffective and complained that many schools in Negro and Puerto Rican areas remain understaffed.

"We are not happy about the Jansen report," the Urban League of Greater New York said. "We feel that many of the essential recommendations of the integration commission have been perverted or eliminated."

These problems remain unsolved:

Teacher assignment: The integration commission proposed that teachers with experience, be assigned to the "difficult" schools. (These are schools that are in underprivileged areas, and have a predominance of Negroes or Puerto Ricans). It proposed that teachers be drafted, if necessary, to teach in the difficult schools. The board rejected the drafting of teachers, but urged that they volunteer. It just didn't work out. Twelve hundred more teachers were needed; exactly thirty-one have volunteered to date.

Redistricting the schools: The integration commission recommended that new zoning lines be drawn for schools to reduce segregation. Critics charge that Dr. Jansen has done little to rezone the school plants. The Urban League, the N. A. A. C. P. and other groups have complained that the status quo remains, despite the mandate from the integration commission.

Differences in Curriculum

Improved curriculum: Much remains to be done in the field of curriculum improvement for the difficult schools. A committee of Negro parents visited Mayor Wagner to complain that their children get a poorer course of studies than do children who attend the all-white schools in the better residential sections of the city. The curriculum is "down-graded," they charged, so that it is more difficult for pupils to take an academic course in high school as preparation for college.

Poor physical facilities: The charge has been repeated on various occasions that the school plants in Harlem and other underprivileged areas are inferior to the all-white schools. Classes are overcrowded, buildings are old, and decent playground or gymnasium facilities are lacking. In answer, the Board of Education points out that many new buildings will be constructed during the coming years in Harlem and other Negro or Puerto Rican areas.

What does the balance sheet show? Improvements have been made, but more money is needed if all the criticisms are to be met. As Dr. Jansen points out, integration is a cardinal principle of the city school system. But it will take time and genuine desire to put the theory of integration into practice.

Even in the Northern states the answers have not been found to the vexing question of integration. School officials are constantly seeking further solutions. Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, said last week he would meet with the New York Teachers Guild to discuss the problems that have arisen from integration, such as the question of teacher assignment and methods to improve the difficult schools.

The Jansen report shows what has been done to end segregated practices. It also suggests how much remains to be done in this complex area of human relations.

New York Ends Integration Via Bus Trips

NEW YORK (AP)— A Board o Education report has scotched the idea of transporting children to distant schools for purposes of integration.

Daily Home

Such transportation, the report says, would do violence to the concept of neighborhood schools would destroy the many benefits which accrue from the concept and would, with good reason, be opposed by the community.

Gallipolis Ohio p. 13

The report, prepared by Dr. David H. Moskowitz, associate superintendent in charge of the board's division of housing, was made public yesterday by Supt. Dr. William Jansen.

Times 12-5-57

The mass transportation idea, experimented with on a small scale last spring, met with much controversy. Critics complained that its effect was to lower standards in nonsegregated schools.

Actually, the ctiy has no formal segregation in its 900 public schools, However, because some neighborhoods are almost entirely Negro, Puerto Rican or white, schools in these neighborhoods, in effect, are segregated.

The report also pointed out that more than half the elementary and junior high schools completed or planned in the city in the past three years were deliberately placed in biracial or "fringe" areas to speed integration.

Integration of schools was recommended to the board by its commission on integration.

Notes Progress in Complying With Recommendations of School Integration Unit

TEACHING STAFF GROWS

Bright Pupils and Those Who Speak No English Aided, but Lack of Funds Is Found

By GENE CURRIVAN

Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, who has been under fire recently by members of the Board of Education's racial integration program, has issued a progress report.

At a news conference at his office, Dr. Jansen offered detailed statements of progress toward implementing recommendations of the Board's Commission on integration.

He reported considerable progress in raising the level of achievement and providing guidance for youngsters in the so-called difficult schools.

But he said there appeared to be an equal amount of frustration because of budget limitations.

Many of the recommendations made by the commission could not be carried out, Dr. Jansen said, but the proposed programs were placed on a "long-term" basis with the hope that the Board of Estimate eventually could be prevailed upon to loosen the municipal purse strings.

Dr. Jansen said progress had been made in providing more teachers, including those with a speaking knowledge of the Spanish language; more assistant principals to help meet the special needs of underprivileged children; more school supplies, and additional reading centers.

Smaller Classes Set Up

Provisions also were made for smaller classes, increased guidance, including an introduction to the cultural side of life for those who had never experienced it, and an attempt to equate curriculums so that the youngster in a Harlem school would receive the same education as one in Jackson Heights, Queens.

Dr. Jansen's "Statement of Progress" was concerned with two reports of the commission. One was on "Educational Standards and Curriculum" and the other on "Guidance, Educational Stimulation and Placement."

A previous progress report, on "Zoning and Teacher Assignments and Personnel," was widely assailed when it was issued Sept. 30. Critics charged it was a whitewash of actual conditions and did not adequately meet commission recommendations.

The latest report, which shows considerable progress but reflects the effect of limited finances, shows the following improvements made in the difficult or special service schools, as they are now called:

¶Two hundred seventy-nine teachers appointed to reduce class size.

¶Forty-five additional Spanish-speaking teachers assigned to schools in Puerto Rican areas to work with parents and community agencies.

¶Eighty-five more assistant principals assigned to elementary schools for teacher training and increased supervisory services. They also meet special needs of pupils and improve communication with parents.

¶Twenty-five additional assistant principals assigned to junior high schools.

¶$400,000 appropriated to employ qualified parents and others to relieve teachers in the lunch and milk programs.

Some Requests Refused

An indication of frustration was shown in the following paragraph of the report:

"However, 1,024 additional positions for reducing class size were disallowed [in the budget]. A request for 100 additional remedial-reading teachers was not granted, and a request for fifty additional special teachers of non-English-speaking children was also not granted. Also, additional guidance and psychological services were requested through the Divisions of Curriculum Development and Child Welfare to increase services in Special Service Schools. Most additional psychologists, guidance counselors, social workers and research workers requested were disallowed in the budget."

In both the elementary and junior high schools allowances of $1 more per capita were allowed for supplies. In junior high schools with large registrations of Puerto Rican pupils $150 will be given for special texts, tests and other materials.

The report also showed that classes had been reduced in size in an effort to raise the achievement level. Special service elementary schools were organized on the basis of twenty-eight pupils to a class, while the normal is 32.5.

Where there are large numbers of pupils who do not speak English, the classes are now on a statistical basis of 26.5 and are reduced to 25 or fewer if the non-English speaking percentage is 50 per cent or more. Junior high schols in the difficult category now have classes as low as 28.6 and high schools 21.5.

RACE ISSUE POSED BY A NEW SCHOOL

N.A.A.C.P. and Clergy Fight Building in Negro Area of New Rochelle

Sat. 3-23-57

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., March 22—The proposed replacement of the 1898 Lincoln Elementary School here by a modern $1,516,000 structure for the 550 pupils was opposed today by the New Rochelle branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Lincoln school is in a predominantly Negro district and 90 per cent of its pupils are Negroes. The association believes that instead of perpetuating a segregated school situation the Board of Education should take steps to integrate the racial groups of all the schools.

The Board of Education declared it opposed segregation but believed in adhering to a district for each school, and could not be held responsible for the large population of Negroes in the Lincoln district.

On May 14 the voters in this city are to decide whether to spend $13,806,000 on school expansions and redevelopments. One item will be the $1,516,000 for a new Lincoln school. Because of this item, the N. A. A. C. P. and the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance said they would fight adoption of all the elementary school proposals in the referendum. They demanded a comprehensive study of the integration problem.

The Rev. M. De Witt Bullock, president of the N. A. A. C. P. branch, said the Lincoln School replacement would accelerate the development of "larger all-Negro ghettoes."

Other Parts of City Cited

"We want to solve the problem of housing segregation," he went on. "This hope will be destroyed with a new Lincoln School. On the fringe areas of the Lincoln district, New Rochelleans of all races and ethnic groups are living together and their children are attending school together. This is an example of the kind of enriched and democratic living that should be duplicated a thousand times in every section of our city.

"We charge the Board of Education with failure to fulfill its responsibility in achieving the best educational climate for all our children and with lack of adequate leadership in interpreting and effecting the goals of democratic education."

Dr. Donald K. Phillips, Superintendent of Schools, reported that the board had asked eight universities to conduct a survey proposed by the Negroes and had received rejections. Many surveys have been made, however, and the State Department of Education has been consulted.

The board said it believed each school should have as pupils a cross section of the entire population. It attributed the "undesirable" racial imbalance at the Lincoln School to factors beyond its control.

Dr. Phillips said that the Lincoln School District, like all other schools here, had long had fixed boundaries and that no switching of districts by pupils was allowed. He predicted that the proposed replacement of the Lincoln School would not be rejected by a majority of the voters.

The Forest and the Trees

Times Union

The recent victory for school integration in New Rochelle, N. Y., and the dramatic demonstration of community solidarity in the Montgomery bus boycott tends to re-emphasize the importance of more intensified effort at the grass roots.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

In the past there has been a tendency to see the forest rather than the trees in the fight for full citizenship; to be greatly aroused by some issue of national importance while being rather unconcerned about conditions on the local scene, with the result that these were too often ignored.

Sat. 6-8-57

There was always something paradoxical about denunciations of segregation and discrimination in some distant Southern community while almost equally bad conditions existed in scores of places in the West, North and East, and seemed to be almost complacently accepted because they were dictated by custom rather than law.

Montgomery demonstrated the possibility of organizing an entire community to combat a community evil while New Rochelle demonstrated how intelligent Negro leadership can plan a political campaign and win white adherence to defeat a proposal which would perpetuate segregated schools.

N.Y. Schoolmen Hit On Integration Issue

Times Union Jacksonville

Sun 7-28-57

NEW YORK, July 27 (AP) — The New York City Board of Education was accused today of "sitting on its hands while Supt. of Schools William Jansen tears the heart out of the nation's most comprehensive school integration program."

The accusation was leveled by the Urban League of Greater New York, an interracial group which says its aim is bettering interracial relations.

The criticism followed publication of a new master plan prepared by Dr. Jansen for zoning the city's public schools. Described as "tentative," the plan, in general, makes few changes in the existing system, under which many schools have pupils drawn entirely from racial groups predominant in the school's neighborhoods.

A new system of bus transportation earlier had been expected to make a start this fall in reducing the segregation which occurred in previous school operations. However, Dr. Jansen's report said, "Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration."

The Urban League praised the "personal efforts" of Board of Education President Charles H. Silver to "implement public school integration and equality of educational opportunity." But the league said the majority of the board members appeared content to let the integration program "fizzle out."

The criticism was contained in letters to Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald and Silver from Edward S. Lewis, the league's executive director.

Specifically, Dr. Jansen was accused of acting contrary to a recommendation of the Commission on Integration that new, inexperienced teachers should not be sent to "de facto segregated schools" for their probationary period.

Instead, said Lewis, the school superintendent placed 1,150 of 1,450 new common branch teachers in "Harlem, Bedford-Stuyvesant and other de facto segregated schools."

Jansen was not available for comment.

The Board of Education has the final approval on all matters relating to schools.

Tobias backs Gotham school integration

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

Sat. 6-15-57

LAKE METCONG, N.Y. — The report of the New York City Board of Education's committee on integration deserves the support of all citizens who have the welfare of our children at heart, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, NAACP chairman, told teachers and parents at a week end conference here.

The conference, held at the Hudson Guild Farm, was sponsored by the board of education under the direction of Miss Truda T. Weil, assistant superintendent of Districts 12, 13 and 14, comprising the Harlem area in NYC.

ADDRESSING THE MORNING session on June 2, Dr. Tobias warned that "No problem is ever solved by running away. We all have a responsibility to take a stand and support efforts to eliminate racial segregation."

He cited the work of the NAACP which "set in motion the machinery for elimination of segregation in this nation."

President Eisenhower, he said, has succeeded in cleaning up racial discrimination in the District of Columbia, thus setting an example for other communites to follow.

"The attack on the NAACP in the South is really an attack upon the United State Supreme Court," he declared. This attack is doomed to failure. It cannot succeed, he asserted.

BOARD TO SCREEN FOR SCHOOL POST

Times P. 16-C

Assumes Task to Review All Candidates to Succeed Jansen as Superintendent

Fri. 7-26-57

By BENJAMIN FINE

The city's Board of Education yesterday set itself up as a "screening" committee to select a Superintendent of Schools.

New York

At its regular meeting at 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, the board voted unanimously to become a Committee of the Whole in the selection of a successor to Dr. William Jansen. After serving ten years, Dr. Jansen will retire next June at the retirement age of 70.

The Public Education Association and other civic groups have urged the board to appoint a citizens' screening committee. This was done in 1947.

Prior to the meeting, Charles H. Silver, board president, received a letter from the Citizens Committee for Children of New York, urging that a public committee be created to select the superintendent.

"The citizens of this city have a tremendous stake in his selection and should be given an opportunity to participate in it," the letter said.

Regarded as Board's Duty

In announcing that the board would do the screening, Mr. Silver said at the open meetting:

"One of the most important duties of the Board of Education is the election of a Superintendent of Schools. It is the considered view of the board that this is a mandated statutory function.

"By reason of the great citywide interest in this most important duty, I am today designating the members of the Board of Education as a Committee of the Whole to serve for this important purpose. To this committee names should be presented of individuals thought to be capable of filling the position of Superintendent of Schools of the largest school system in the world."

Seven of the nine members of the board were present.

The board elected Dr. Francis A. Turner as Assistant Superintendent of Schools. The post will pay $16,000 a year. Dr. Turner, a Negro, is the second member of his race to achieve such a position in the school system. Dr. John King is the other Negro Assistant Superintendent.

Facets of Integration

It was announced that Dr. Turner would head the newly organized Central Zoning Unit. This agency, which is now being set up by the Board of Education, will deal with problems of integration, such as re-establishing district lines to avoid segregation and yet keeping the neighborhood pattern of schools.

The board also approved the appointment of 1,450 new elementary teachers, effective with the fall term. Considerable controversy surrounded this action.

Eleven hundred and fifty of the new teachers will go to the "difficult" schools. These contain a predominant number of Negro or Puerto Rican children. The board's integration committee had asked last spring that the new probationary teachers be assigned to the better schools and that experienced teachers be sent to the difficult areas.

A campaign to get teachers to volunteer for the difficult schools proved fruitless. Only twenty-five teachers responded. As a result, the board was forced to assign the new teachers, without experience, to such positions.

Mr. Silver opposed this action. He reiterated yesterday that experienced teachers should be sent. He said he would vote for the item with the understanding that "the entire matter will be re-evulated and reconsidered for the beginning of the next spring term."

School Mixing Stalled in NYC, Negroes Say

Journal + Constitution

Sun. 7-28-57

Atlanta Ga.

NEW YORK, July 27 (AP)—A new master plan for zoning the city's public schools has aroused controversy and stirred charges that the integration of racial groups is being stalled.

Several Negro members of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration have threatened to resign unless the board moves faster.

The new zoning plan, described as "tentative," was prepared by Dr. William Jansen, superintendent of schools. In general, it makes few changes in the existing system under which many schools are pupiled entirely by those of the racial groups predominant in the schools' neighborhoods.

A NEW SYSTEM of bus transportation earlier had been expected to make a start this fall in reducing the segregation which occurred in previous school operations. However, Dr. Jansen's report said on this score:

"Pupils should not be transported by bus from one school to another solely for the purpose of integration.

"However, when it becomes necessary to transport pupils by bus to relieve overcrowding and for better utilization of the school plant, integration of racial groups should be one of the considerations in determining which pupils shall be moved and to which school."

WHEN THE Jansen plan was taken up for discussion at a conference in the office of Charles H. Silver, Board of Education president, some charged Dr. Jansen with "holding back" the program. Several Negro members of the integration commisison asserted they would resign if the process were not speeded up.

The Board of Education has the final approval on all matters relating to schools. There was no indication as to when it might act on the zoning question.

Moving Toward Integration

Cooperation of Leaders of Religious Faiths Believed Necessary

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The recent report of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration by the Sub-Committee on Community Relations and Information seems to some of us to be one of the most important of all the reports.

While the earlier reports underscore needs about which our schools can and must take action, the job of integration in our city cannot be accomplished by the schools alone. They must be supported in their goal by an enlightened public opinion and by the active and intelligent cooperation of all citizens of goodwill.

Progress at present is blocked not only by prejudice and by time-honored patterns crying for change, but by the fear and misunderstanding with which many citizens confront the proposals which have been made to forward integration.

The National Conference of Christians and Jews and other intergroup agencies in our city have long enjoyed cooperative relations with the public schools, and our human relations programs in the schools will continue to be important. I am impressed, however, with the emphasis which this report places upon neighborhood leadership, and I believe that it is urgent for all of our agencies to bring our resources to bear in the development of indigenous leadership and cooperation.

Role of Clergy

In this connection the report mentions the important role that can be played by rabbis, ministers and priests. On May 23 a conference sponsored by N. C. C. J.'s Committee on Religion at Work in the Community, under the leadership of Dr. Harry Carman, put the spotlight on what clergy of all faiths working together have accomplished in the Manhattanville-Morningside community.

Teams of clergy and lay religious leaders from various other neighborhoods in the metropolitan area will, we hope, be inspired to enter into similar cooperative work in their own neighborhoods.

As one religious leader has said, "Without disturbing the religious boundaries we must break down the barriers." Catholics, Protestants and Jews in active cooperation on the neighborhood level can bring the religious dynamic which is needed if we are really to move toward the integration which is our goal.

ALLYN P. ROBINSON,
Director, Greater New York Area,
National Conference of Christians and Jews.

New York, May 24, 1957.

Lip Service To Integration

New York City is having its troubles over what has been euphemistically called "de facto segregation" in the public schools — that is, segregation which exists, but without the authority of law.

New York City school segregation is, as we understand it, based on housing. Negroes are restricted to certain neighborhoods and the school zoning systems, following geographical bounderies, result in segregation in the schools.

A Commission on Integration has proposed a revision of these zoning laws to permit more "flexibility" in the assignment of children to various schools —deliberate race mixing, in other words. The committee also proposes a kind of troop rotation policy under which teachers will serve time in "difficult" schools —in Harlem and other Negro areas.

At a recent five-hour meeting, 85 speakers representing 100 of the city's most influentual teacher, parent and civic groups "clashed" (in the words of The New York Times). The pro-integration groups contended that "segregation, whether imposed by the Board of Education or whether the result of residential patterns, has no place in this city." They urged immediate integration by breakdown of zones.

But spokesman for the leading teacher groups denounced the zoning and assignment proposals. Such integration plans would, they said (sounding strangely Southern in their arguments) "lower teacher morale, disrupt school services and bring about an avalanche of resignations and retirements." The teachers were particularly hostile to being sent to the "difficult" schools in Harlem and elsewhere.

This reaction from the people on whom the integration plan would devolve—the teachers—"shocked" Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the pro-integration Urban League of Greater New York. The solid front of teacher opposition Lewis described as "simply incredible." He continued:

The attitude of the teachers certainly indicates that before we can get integration in our schools, we will have to re-educate our teachers. They evidently have been giving nothing but lip-service to the whole problem of integration. [Italics ours] How discouraging!

It can be expected that, as they are faced with the problem in their own cities, many who have been loud in their denunciation of the South and their professions of belief in integration will be unmasked as magnolia liberals only.

Dr. Theobold to Succeed Jansen as Schools' Head

Election Due Before End of Week

By JACOB JACOWITZ,
School Page Editor.

Dr. John J. Theobald, often mentioned as most likely to be the city's next superintendent of schools, will have that $32,500-a-year prize in his possession before the week is over.

It became known today that the Board of Education is calling a special meeting on Wednesday to elect a successor to Dr. William Jansen, who under the pension law must retire next summer.

At a conference held over the weekend, it was learned, the nine board members reached a unanimous decision to give the position to Dr. Theobald. President of Queens College, Dr. Theobald has been on leave since December, 1955, to serve as Deputy Mayor.

Within the last few months the Board of Education has interviewed 24 educators recommended for Dr. Jansen's job by various civic groups. Another 22 whose names had been suggested declined invitation to appear before the board's screening committee.

Originally the board had planned to vote on Dr. Jansen's successor after Jan. 1. The decision to speed up the procedure, it is understood, was caused by the fact that the Board of Higher Education was competing for Dr. Theobald's services. It was trying to induce him to become chancellor of the municipal college system.

According to Dr. Theobald's chief backers for the school superintendency, he is uniquely qualified for the job at this time when there is a nationwide outcry for tougher school standards and for more emphasis on science engineering and mathematics.

He has been trained as both an educator and an engineer. At one time he was a college teacher of mathematics. For a time he left teaching to work as a civil engineer. When he returned to college work he taught civil engineering at City College, and later on became a full professor of the subject.

Advanced to the position of dean, he made a study of college administration and eventually became dean of administration. Eight years ago he was made president of Queens College, where he has remained since, except for the period during which Mayor Wagner asked him to serve as Deputy Mayor.

Text of the Board of Education Statement on Integration Here

Times 7-22-C

Following is the text of a statement, in question-and-answer form, prepared by Dr. William F. Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, and Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, on the board's position on integration in the city's public schools.

New York

There has been some misunderstanding of several aspects of the integration program in New York City. Some anxiety has been generated among parents, teachers and other interested people because of these misapprehensions. To clear up certain areas of confusion, the [Board's] Integration Commission provides this simple question-answer review of the most widely discussed recommendations in the subcommissions' reports.

Q.—Why the concern about integration? Does New York City have segregation in its schools?

Times 3-26-57

A.—There is no official segregation in New York City; it is outlawed by statute. However, there is a concentration of certain ethnic groups in some schools in New York City resulting from the residential patterns.

Q.—What has the Integration Commission done thus far?

A.—There are six subcommissions, five of which have already released reports. Three of these have been approved by the Board of Education. The first report calls for providing facilities to raise the level of achievement in schools in culturally deprived areas so that all children may receive the best possible education. The second report calls for increased guidance in these schools and greater stimulation of gifted students. The third report calls for improvement of school buildings in underprivileged areas. It also recommends the location of new buildings in fringe areas so that they will serve a mixed population. All three reports met with almost universal approval.

Q.—What has been the cause then of the recent criticism by some people?

A.—The reports of the subcommissions concerning zoning and teacher placement (which will be acted upon by the Board of Education on Feb. 28) have been the ones misunderstood. Let us now look at some of the provisions of these reports which have been most often misunderstood.

Rezoning to Spur Integration

Q.—What does rezoning of school districts mean?

A.—Zoning lines are constantly being redrawn as new housing and population changes occur. The rezoning now envisioned simply means that, wherever possible, zoning lines will be drawn in such a way as to encourage integrated instead of segregated schools. This would apply particularly to so-called "fringe" areas—neighborhoods made up of several racial groups. The subcommission noted that such procedures have been used in the past. It is democratic in an American community to have children of different racial background who live near each other attend integrated schools.

Q.—Does this do away with the principle of neighborhood school?

A.—Certainly not.

Q.—What of the "bussing" of children?

A.—Most "bussing" in New York City occurs because children live at a distance from the nearest school. "Bussing" of elementary school children occurs also when there is an overcrowded school not too far from an underutilized one. It is now suggested by the Commission that integration be considered along with school utilization.

Q.—Does the zoning report require that children be bussed from one borough to another?

A.—Certainly not. As indicated in the answer directly above the "bussing" is the same type that is now being practiced for school children throughout the city.

Q.—What is "permissive zoning?"

A.—This would enable a child attending a non-integrated school in his neighborhood to transfer to an integrated school elsewhere if his parent so requests and school conditions permit.

Housing Pattern a Factor

Q.—Will all schools in New York City become integrated?

A.—Though this would be desirable, our segregated housing patterns make this impossible. Most elementary schools in racially homogeneous areas would probably have to remain virtually unchanged for the time being. The Commission on Integration has stated that only limited success is possible until the discriminatory residential pattern now in existence come to an end.

Q.—What about "rotation?"

A.—This is a word which has been bandied about very loosely. This report refers to an equitable staffing of all schools and the suggested methods to accomplish this. What is intended is that all schools will have the same ratio of experienced teachers to substitutes. In fact, this principle was approved by the Board of Education last June and some effort has been made to increase the number of licensed teachers in subject schools.

Q.—Some teacher groups have asserted that the subject schools should be staffed by volunteers. Why isn't the problem handled that way in order to avoid "drafting" teachers?

A.—This is precisely what is intended. It is only if there are not enough volunteers for the so-called subject schools, that some changes in teacher placement are intended.

Q.—It has also been asserted that if conditions in the subject schools are improved there would be no problem in setaffing them. Has the subcommission on teachers assignments given thought to that suggestion?

A.—Of course it has. The subcommission's first recommendations were for reduction in class size, improvement in physical plant, more remedial teachers, increased supervisory help and more free time for the teachers in such schools.

Q.—Some teacher groups have recommended a salary differential for teachers in subject schools, similar to that now earned by teachers in "600" schools. Has the subcommission on teachers assignment given thought to that proposal?

A.—It has and it has peremptorily rejected that proposal. A subject school is not a school for delinquents. It is a school in an underprivileged and culturally deprived area. The additional funds required would be better spent in improving teaching conditions in these schools.

Teacher Transfer Possible

Q.—How is it intended to equalize the ratio of experienced teachers to substitutes in all the schools?

A.—If there are not enough volunteers, it may be necessary for teachers in some schools to be declared in excess and transferred to so-called subject schools, giving every possible consideration to distance from home. It is recommended, also, that a formula be established to regulate transfers.

Q.—Won't this be inconvenient for some of the teachers thus transferred?

A.—In some cases, yes. But the needs of the children are primary. It is likely that most teachers agree with that principle. Moreover, as conditions in the subject schools improve—more experienced teachers, smaller classes, better physical palnt—the teaching conditions in the subject schools will be improved. The Board of Education in its budget request ofr the coming fiscal year indicated its wish to implement these recommendations. The subcommission believed it unfair to require the children to wait for all these improvements.

Q.—Since many more teachers than at present will serve in subject schools, won't this new policy have an adverse effect on teacher recruitment?

A.—On the contrary, it is believed that it wil lhelp, providing that new teachers enter the city school system with the assurance that they will begin work in relatively less complex teaching situations.

Q.—Isn't it a little harsh to uproot teachers who have been in the same school for many years?

A.—Admittedly, and under the recommendation, the Personnel Division of the Board of Education would not reassign teachers of twenty years service or more and would certainly consider individual cases of hardship when it makes assignments. However, it is not desirable to perpetuate the present conditions in which subject schools are staffed to such an extent by substitutes and inexperienced regular teachers.

Q.—If there is additional mixing of children from deprived areas with those from more favored areas, will the result be a lowering of standards in the fringe-area school?

A.—If anything, it should provide an additional educational stimulus. With the improvement of teaching conditions and the general quickening of the educational pulse, envisioned by the subcommission reports, the level of achievement should be raised in all schools.

Q.—Why then has there been some resistance to the subcommission reports on zoning and teachers assignments?

A.—A great deal of resistance is due to misunderstanding, which it is hoped this review will clear up. There is always resistance to change, especially change that means certain inconveniences. The Commission on Integration, however, is confident that the people of New York City will recognize their moral and democratic responsibilities.

We are not unmindful of the problems that the Superintendent will have in carrying out the recommendations in all of these reports, and it is understood that in the implementation of the recommendations, administrative discretion must be exercised by the Superintendent of Schools and his associates.

INTEGRATION HERE, 500

Times 7-26-C

Refusing to be awed by a campaign of misrepresentation, selfish obstructionism and in some cases prejudice, the Board of Education has courageously approved in principle a program to equalize educational opportunity in New York's schools by reducing de facto racial segregation as much as possible and improving teaching standards where needed. The action was unanimous. The board president, Charles H. Silver, rejected counsels of

New York Times 3-4-57

The board specifically reserved to itself the right to proceed deliberately and reasonably with the implementation of the reports on zoning of school districts and on teacher assignments that had come from its Commission on Integration. Zoning, or rather better zoning, means that school district lines will be drawn wherever possible to encourage integrated schools instead of segregated schools.

Segregation has never had official sanction in New York; where the student body is all-Negro, for instance, it is because a residential neighborhood is all-Negro. With the best of good intentions it is not easy to cope with such a situation. However, where rezoning cannot immediately improve a situation teacher transfer and—this is important—other related improvements can greatly alter for the better the educational opportunity in a "difficult," or "subject," school. This is where the other report, on teacher assignments, comes in.

Now in principle the difficult school will begin to get the best of things and of personnel. It will be manned by experienced teachers; if they cannot be obtained by voluntary action they will be obtained by assignment. The lot of the teachers in such schools will be improved, with smaller classes, more free time, and so on; in spite of all the assurances given, some teacher organizations fear (as usual when any compulsive change is suggested) a loss of teacher "morale." We think too well of the rank and file of our teachers to believe this. Anyway, as Dr. Jansen and Mr. Silver have noted, "the needs of the children are primary."

This commendable action by the board, prepared for and assisted by such fine organizations as the Public Education Association, brought its loud protests. But how could the decent people of this city have held up their heads today if the board had declined to take it? How could we have answered our conscience? What could we have said to our friends in the South?

School Board Hedges On Integration Report

World-Telegram & Sun P. 14
Fri. 3-1-57
New York

By JOHN J. McCUEN,
Staff Writer.

Straddling the fence with the skill of a tightrope walker, the Board of Education yesterday approved in principle, but not in all their details, two highly controversial reports from its Commission on Integration.

They deal with zoning schools throughout the city in the interest of a better racial balance among the pupils and with placing additional experienced teachers in the schools of the "difficult" areas.

The board's action was an obvious compromise between those who wanted to delay the controversial reports until they could be fully clarified, and those who favored immediate adoption.

It voted to accept the reports, but left clarification and interpretation for some time in the future. Neither did the board commit itself to carry out the recommendations in the documents.

However, a group of parents from Queens let the board members know that the fight on changing school zones is not yet over.

When the vote was taken and the meeting was declared adjourned, the parents shouted thier disapproval and threatened law suits if steps are taken to implement the integration program in a manner not satisfactory to them.

Teachers' leaders were also resentful that the board would hear no discussion from other than board members before the vote was taken. Among those who protested were Mrs. May Andres Healy of the Joint Committee of Teachers Organizations, Mrs. Concetta Roy of the High School Teachers Assn. and others.

Teachers are concerned because the Integration Commission had recommended a program of forced transfers to "difficult" areas.

Both Reprehensible

A Pro-American

An editorial in Life Magazine says New York City has no officially segregated schools, but over-zealous friends of integrated schools are creating a new problem.

The magazine says New York officials are being pressured to make thousands of children change their schools to provide a better racial balance and to permit children and parents to select what school they should attend.

Baltimore, Md.

The facts as disclosed by the New York Board of Education are as follows:

Some areas of New York City are populated predominantly by colored people, or by Puerto Ricans, or by Italians, or by Jews, or by foreign-born, etc.

The school district lines have been drawn so that schools within these given districts are virtually segregated according to the racial or religious composition of the neighborhood.

The result is that schools in colored or Puerto Rican neighborhoods are overcrowded, operating on double shifts, equipped with poor facilities and staffed with tired and overworked teachers.

Two or three blocks away would be a virtually all-white school with more space than it had pupils.

What the board proposes to do is to redraw these school districts to eliminate these racial and religious boundary lines.

The White Citizens Councils in Mississippi is fighting to keep schools segregated by race and law.

Life Magazine in New York is fighting to retain segregation by gerrymander.

We say both are equally reprehensible and contrary to the Supreme Court's decision and the Constitution.

We think the New York Board of Education would be wise to ignore the fulminations of Life Magazine and proceed with all deliberate speed with its announced plans.

School Board Adopts 2 Integration Reports But With Reservations

On Zoning And Shifting Of Teachers Fought by Parents And Instructors

The Board of Education yesterday adopted with reservations two controversial reports by its subcommissions on integration. The first recommended the rezoning of school districts to encourage desegregation and the second called for the re-assignment of experienced teachers to provide "equitable staffing" in schools in underprivileged areas where there are at present a high percentage of substitute teachers.

In a statement at its regular meeting at 110 Livinston St., Brooklyn, the board emphasized that "approval of these reports together with the accompanying supplementary material does not necessarily mean acceptance in every detail either of the language or of specific aspects of the recommendations contained therein."

It also "reserves" to itself the privilege of interpreting the meaning to be attached to certain terms and phrases, of further exploring the methods of specific recommendations and of resolving the administrative problems which necessarily arise" . . .

The two reports had brought denunciations from community and teacher groups since they were first submitted to the board in December. A heated public hearing was held on them on Jan. 17 and the board delayed final action until its regular meeting yesterday, at which six of the nine members were present.

Re-Zoning Opposed

Community and parent groups had opposed the re-zoning report under the impression that it called for the wholesale bus transportation of children even from one borough to another in order to provide racially integrated schools. Teacher groups opposed the personnel report on the ground that it would mean the whoesale transfer of teachers of long experience from the schools in which they had seniority to schools in distant and undesirable neighborhoods.

In a final effort to eradicate misunderstanding earlier this week the executive committee of the board's Commission on Integration issued the "supplementary material" specified in the board statement clarfying the recommendations of the reports.

The re-zoning envisioned by the report would mean that school district lines would be drawn "in such a way as to encourage integrated instead of segregated schools," applying particularly to "fringe" areas, neighborhoods made up of several racial groups. Busses would transport children only, as they have in the past, if a child lives at a distance from the nearest school or when there is an overcrowded school not too far from an under-utilized one. The commission proposed that integration as well as utiliaztion be considered.

Further, it recommended "permissive zoning," so that a child attending a "segregated," or non-integrated school, could, if his parents so requested and school conditions permitted, be transferred to an integrated school elsewhere.

Teachers would be "assigned" to underprivileged schools only, the commission stated, if not enough experienced teachers volunteered for the job. It recommended that a formula be established to regulate transfers, with consideration to individual hardship cases.

INTEGRATED SCHOOLS

Times P. 29-C
Fri. 3-1-57
New York

In rightly condemning school segregation in the South we New Yorkers must also have become aware in the last year or two—if we did not know it before—that this city has a serious school segregation problem of its own that requires, and is now receiving, the closest attention.

School segregation as such in New York City is, of course, extralegal based as it largely is on the racial residential pattern of local areas. Its extent was indicated in a report of the Public Education Association a year and a half ago, which noted that in only 30 per cent of the schools do appreciable numbers of Negro and Puerto Rican children contact continental white children." This is the situation that the Board of Education is now trying to correct, partly by establishing new schools in "fringe" areas where populations are mixed and where integration of pupils would become almost inevitable.

This method of attack on the segregation problem is observable in the building program for new schools as reported in this newspaper yesterday. However, by no means all of the schools listed are "fringe" schools; and it is necessary to warn against expecting too much. At least three of the new Harlem schools, for example, can accomplish little in the way of integration, though they are all badly needed.

In addition to locating some of the new schools in racially strategic locations, other methods are also being advanced. A limited experiment in transferring pupils from one district to another, with their parents' consent, will be tried. This approach has its pitfalls, but school officials have promised that "the neighborhood school concept will always be kept in mind," and that children will not be transported long distances merely to insure racial admixture. Another important step is the establishment of a central unit for zoning of school districts, which could do much eventually to alter the segregation pattern.

Improvement of teaching conditions in "difficult" schools in areas where segregation does exist has been promised, although funds to do the job adequately—not to mention the broader question of teacher pay increases generally—have not been included in the budget. But an encouraging start is being made on reducing segregation in the city's schools. There is also a long road ahead.

School Executive to Explain In Person the City's Plans for Integration Program

Sat. 4-23-57

MANY LETTERS RECEIVED

Borough Groups Appeal for Details—Meetings Are Set for Monday and April 10

By PETER KIHSS

The school system has become concerned over criticisms in Queens about the new integration program for Negro and white pupils. Officials are moving to explain it in person.

The two-month-old Federation of Civic Councils of the Borough of Queens, whose leaders say they are for "natural" but against "forced" integration, is one body that has asked for clarification. The group has written the Board of Education that it wishes "to eliminate the possibilities of certain 'hate groups' from exploiting the fears of the people."

Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, will address a special group April 10, at 2 P. M. in Jamaica High School. He will attempt to allay "misunderstandings about zoning" and possible bus transportation of children from one area to another. He is inviting each of the borough's 200 schools to send three parent representatives.

Expects Very Few Changes

In answer to questions, Dr. Jansen said yesterday:

"It is my opinion at this time without having examined the matter in all details—that only an extremely few schools, if any, in Queens, will there be any change at all. There may be none.

"We have no intention whatsoever of long-distance bussing or bussing of children simply because of their color. If we bus children, it will be because there is room in one school and not in another, as we do now.

"We believe in the neighborhood school."

Dr. Jacob Greenberg, deputy superintendent, head of the school system's "implementation committee" for the new program, is to speak at 8:15 P. M. Monday at the Cambria Heights Jewish Center, 222-05 116th Avenue. This was arranged by the Queens Community Coordinating Council, whose chairman, Mrs. Sylvia Bartley Altschuh, said her East Queens group brings organizations together for information without taking a position on issues.

2,000 Letters Criticize Plan

More than 2,000 letters criticizing the integration program have been received by Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education. Estimates were that 90 per cent came from Queens, despite what would appear to be a relatively minor problem there.

Queens has 22 per cent of the city's pupils — 208,195 out of 922,030—in 200 of the city's 782 schools. Less than 5 per cent of its people are Negro or Puerto Rican—the City Planning Department has estimated the borough's 1960 population will be 1,805,000, including 80,000 nonwhites and 25,000 Puerto Ricans.

Six Queens elementary schools —two in Corona and four in South Jamaica—were among the forty-two in the city found by a basic Public Education Association report in October, 1955, to have enrollments that were 90 per cent or more Negro or Puerto Rican. The borough had no schools among the city's nine junior highs with 85 per cent such enrollments.

Much of the initial Queens protest appeared in largely similar letters that apparently had been stimulated by teacher groups opposing possible transfers of their members. The new program has proposed to seek volunteer transfers of teachers first to so-called "difficult" schools. In any event, the transfers would average one or two from a school.

Right-Wing Efforts Noted

Right-wing groups also got to work. Socialogists suggest that many of suburban Queens' residents may have moved from the heart of the city either consciously or partly to get away from integrated patterns in the more congested sections. Still others might be worrying about changes that might affect property values.

About mid-January, some East Queens residents began receiving Jamaica-postmarked envelopes containing a leaflet, with no identification of sponsorship, entitled "The Ugly Truth." This reprinted a speech by Attorney General Eugene Cook of Georgia attacking the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which has been battling against segregation.

In Woodhaven, petitions were circulated last month by a "Committee for the Preservation of the Neighborhood Schools and Equity," expressing worry over bus and police problems and envisioning a plot to pit races against each other. A sectional newspaper published a story on "The Red Plot to 'Rezone' Your Children," contending the Communist party was seeking "to redistrict school lines on an integrated basis.'

This month, some Queens civic leaders received a four-page newsletter entitled "The Red Hand in New York Schools," published by the National Economic Council, Inc., headed by Merwin K. Hart. This attacked the zoning and teacher transfer phases, suggested that "leftist groups" had influenced the program and estimated that it might ultimately cost taxpayers $5,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Further fuel came from reports in major publications denied by school officials—that long-distance bus hauling of children had been started in other parts of the city simply to force racial mixing.

Times P. 24 C

Schools Widely Scattered

Unlike the city's apartment and tenement areas, the small-home regions of Queens have widely scattered schools, involving bus transport for pupils. The school system provides for buses when a child in kindergarten or the first or second grade would have to walk more than half a mile, or a child in the third to eighth grades would have to walk more than a mile, or the nearest school is overcrowded.

4-3-23-57

The spectre of extra bus routing has particularly stirred the Federation of Civic Councils. This was organized last January as a coordinating body for the United Civic Council of Queens, the Central Queens Allied Civic Council, the Eastern Queens Civic Council, the Queens County Civic Council, the Civic Council of Southern Queens and the North Shore Council of Community Home Owners. These in turn represent some 200 associations with possibly 100,000 members.

Councilman Robert E. Barnes, Republican of Flushing, has introduced a resolution calling for a City Council hearing on the program.

New Rochelle Criticized on School Bias; Education Board Denies State's Charges

Times Tues. 4-2-57

New York, Special to The

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., April 1—A state education official today criticized the quality and sincerity of racial integration in this city's schools. School officials denied the charged and said they were flabbergasted by them.

P. 33

The state report was drafted by Dr. Theron A. Johnson, head of the Division of Intercultural Relations of the Department of Education.

School officials fear that his report and the controversy it is likely to set off may jeopardize acceptance of a $13,806,000 school expansion and replacement program. A referendum on it is scheduled to be held May 14. Dr. Johnson's report suggested that the referendum be postponed.

Dr. Johnson had come here and studied charges by the local branch of the National Asosciation for the Advancement of Colored People that the Lincoln elementary school was segregated. It is in a district that is predominantly Negro and 90 per cent of its pupils are Negroes.

"Although the Board of Education," Dr. Johnson wrote, "has frequently expressed its dissatisfaction with the existence of a predominantly Negro elementary school in New Rochelle, it has not fully taken the responsibility to implement its policy of integration. Although the board cannot be blamed for a residential pattern which facilitates segregation, it does have the responsibility to take the leadership in finding a way out.

"In studying the existing school attendance lines there were many instances where the boundary seemed to be neither reasonable nor consistent. It could only appear that special interest had been permitted to effect the assignment of children to schools.

The N. A. A. C. P. is opposing all elementary school projects in the referendum, including a $1,516,000 Lincoln School replacement, because of the "segregated" pupils in that school.

Frederick A. Davidson, president of the Board of Education, said in reply to the state report that "our responsibility is to provide adequate facilities for all the children in New Rochelle."

In a letter to Dr. Johnson, Mr. Davidson wrote:

"In view of your Dec. 18 report in which you stated that 'no known techniques can now create complete integration of the Lincoln School District,' may I say that we are amazed at your present suggestion that relief from the serious overcrowding which now plagues many of our schools should be postponed until some technique can be found which might create complete integration in Lincoln. This, as you know, is a housing problem rather than a school zoning problem."

Every school in New Rochelle has fixed boundary lines and no pupil is permitted to shift to a school outside his district. The school board contends that all boundaries, including those of Lincoln, are geographically logical.

Board Appeals to Wagner for Items for Transition That Were Cut From Budget

By LEONARD BUDER

A strong plea for funds to implement the school integration program was sent to Mayor Wagner last night.

The appeal was made by all nine members of the Board of Education's Commission on Integration. Among those signing it were State Controller Arthur Levitt and Charles H. Silver, board president, who are co-chairmen of the commission.

The statement registered the committee's "grave concern at the elimination from next year's budget proposal of most of the funds necessary to implement the recommendations of at least three subcommissions; those which dealt mainly with equalization of educational opportunity in the subject ["difficult"] schools as distinguished from the ethnic mixing of children."

In the appeal to the Mayor, the executive committee, which contains the chairmen of the six subcommissions on integration, declared that:

"'Integration,' as the commission has used the term, has at least two interrelated aspects. One involves developing techniques for attaining more diversified school populations, the other involves the raising of the educational standards and the improving of facilities and teaching for all children.

"The former type of integration can be accomplished only to a limited degree as long as residential segregation exists in our city. Your budget provides for the administrative unit recommended by the subcommission on zoning in order to help bring this about. In addition, implementation of some recommendations of the physical plant report will locate many new schools so as to provide a more balanced racial population."

Higher Standards Sought

But the committee expressed its concern over the fate of the recommendations pertaining to guidance and educational standards.

Asserting that various studies had shown that "many children were not achieving up to normal expectations," the statement said:

"These groups are composed principually but not exclusively of Negro and Puerto Rican youngsters. Because of the lack of normal exposure to the enrichment of cultural influences outside of the school, intensified in the case of Negroes and Puerto Ricans by the discriminations which still exist in our community, these children need more compensatory aid in school to fulfill their capabilities in later life.

"Consequently, many of the recommendations of the commission were formulated to increase educational and vocational services, to increase and broaden testing facilities, to provide more remedial teachers and teachers to reduce class size and to improve physical facilities. The zudget requests for these items were largely deleted in your budget proposal."

Restoration of Items Urged

The statement said that the effectiveness of the integration program depended in large measure on the restoration of a substantial part of the deleted items. It added that "a carefully selected number of such items would not be exorbitant in cost and a conference with Board of Education officials would easily pinpoint the most critical items."

The committee members not connected in an official capacity with the school board also offered to consult with the Mayor on this matter.

While the plea made no mention of how much additionally was needed, it had been previously estimated that the deleted items that would provide "equal educational opportunities" for the city's minority children, came to about $15,000,000.

In addition to Mr. Levitt and Mr. Silver, those signing the appeal were the Rev. John M. Coleman, Brooklyn member of the school board and coordinator-secretary of the commission, and the following six sub commission chairmen: State Rent Commissioner Robert C. Weaver, Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, Richard L. Plaut, Mrs. Rose Shapiro, George K. Hunton and Thomas B. Dyett.

Jansen Stresses Housing

Maenwhile, at a luncheon meeting of the Bronx Board of Trade held at the Concourse Plaza, Superintendent of School William Jansen underscored the influence of housing patterns o the school segregation problem.

"Unfortunately," he declared, "there are in New York City few localities populated by Negroes which cover so large an area that it is difficult to provide an interracial population for those schools located in the heart of such areas.

"It is essential that we work for interracial housing to break up such areas."

Dr. Jansen's talk was a discussion of factors bearing on the integration plans of the school board. He reiterated denials by himself and Mr. Silver that the board contemplated a change in its system of pupil transportation specifically in connection with the integration program.

"For some unexplained reasons," he said, "rumors have been spread that we are transporting or planning to transport groups of Negro children long distances to schools in which the pupils are predominantly white, and vice versa. These rumors are completely false."

In response to a question, the Superintendent emphasized that whatever transport the integration plan involved would be based on the existing rules, not on the integration scheme per se.

24 Schools Planned to Aid Integration in New York

Star Wed. 4-17-57 E-35-C

Washington D.C.

NEW YORK, April 17 (AP).—Twenty-four new schools are to be built at a cost of some $60 million in Negro sections of Manhattan and Brooklyn as part of the city's school integration program.

Dr. David H. Moskowitz, associate superintendent in charge of the city's school building program, outlined the plan yesterday. The schools will be built over a three-year period.

He said the schools will be located in such a way as to make the integration of Negro and white pupils take place naturally. The new structures will be placed in fringe areas where the surrounding population is mixed.

Some 25,000 pupils will be accommodated by the new schools. Fifteen of the elementary and junior high schools are to be built in Manhattan's Harlem, with nine others scheduled for the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, where large numbers of Negroes and Puerto Ricans reside.

The Board of Education said it also is planning to offer incentives to teachers to move to the so-called difficult schools in Negro and Puerto Rican areas. These schools presently employ a high percentage of substitute instructors.

The teacher program will be voluntary now and compulsory later, officials said.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 17 (AP).—An exchange of blows between a white man and three Negro women flared yesterday on a racially integrated Montgomery city bus.

Police said it was the first racial incident on a city bus since shortly after the United States Supreme Court ordered an end to segregation on them December 21. The four were charged with assault and battery.

James E. Grice, jr., 31, told police he gave his seat at the front of a bus to a white woman and then moved toward the center of the bus.

He said he asked a Negro woman to move to the rear so he could sit down, but that the woman slapped him. The woman, identified by police as Josephine Boldin, 19, said Mr. Grice cursed her and ordered her to move, then struck her twice with a wrench.

Police said the two other women, Annie Burch, 37, and Johnnie Mae Eaves, 32, came to the woman's support.

Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said no serious injuries were reported.

The four signed their own bonds and were released. A hearing was set for City Recorder's Court Monday.

NEW ORLEANS, April 17 (AP).—Two Louisiana laws designed to bar Negroes from State colleges were ruled unconstitutional yesterday by two Federal district court judges.

One 1956 law required all college applicants to submit certificates of eligibility and moral character. The other law made it illegal for a school official to advocate integration. This had the effect of preventing the officials from signing certificates for Negroes.

Federal Judges Herbert W. Christenberry and J. Skelly Wright said the laws were "a transparent device" to bypass the 14th Amendment.

Their joint opinion was handed down after argument on three cases were heard in Baton Rouge.

Superintendent Says Board Does Not Seek Mass Shift With Consent of Parents

144(1)

Superintendent of Schools William Jansen declared yesterday that "considerable misunderstanding" of the Board of Education's program for ending segregation in the city schools has resulted from an article in The New York Times on Wednesday.

The article reported that twenty-four elementary and high school buildings were to be constructed in Harlem and the Bedford-Stuyvesant district of Brooklyn. Twenty-two of these, it continued, would be situated so as to reduce the segregation that is developing from the housing pattern.

Then ew schools are to accommodate 25,000 pupils and will cost about $60,000,000. They are to be completed within the next three years.

Dr. Jansen objected to the listing of two additional specific steps that the Board of Education "has taken, or has under consideration." The first of these involved the transport by bus of "about 1,500 children" to other schools than those they now attend, on the request or with the consent of parents.

The second point particularly challenged was the assertion in the article that 400 Negro pupils from the Bedford-Stuyvesant area would be sent to a predominantly white school by a "permissive zoning arrangement."

'Permissive Zoning' Clarified

Dr. Jansen's statement said: "The article by Benjamin Fine in The Times on April 17 has caused considerable misunderstanding and has resulted in numerous injuiries. As a result, I was requested by the Board of Education, at its meeting on April 18, to correct some erroneous impressions created by the article, especially in the matter of permissive zoning.

"There is no plan to transport 1,500 Negro and white children after obtaining parental consent, nor is there any truth to the statement that 400 Negro children are being transferred to a predominantly white school.

"Perhaps Mr. Fine was confused by the fact that a new school building located in a white area but not far from a Negro area will be opened later this year. The school is not open now. It will be zoned so that its pupil population will be approximately 25 per cent Negro. No permissive zoning is involved.

"By permissing zoning is meant the granting of the privilege of attending a school other than the one normally attended by the children living in a neighborhood. This privilege has to be granted with great care, as it can easily lead to abuses. If permissive zoning is granted, care must be exercised so that it does not result in favoritism. It must further the cause of integration, and consideration must be given to the capacity of the school to which the pupils are permitted to go."

Flatbush School Involved

The new school referred to, Dr. Jansen subsequently explained, will be Junior High School 61. It is under construction at New York Avenue, Empire Boulevard and Sterling Street, the Superintendent of Schools said. This is in the Flatbush section, near Ebbets Field.

With regard to Dr. Jansen's statement, Mr. Fine, education editor of The Times, said:

"In reply to Dr. Jansen's comments I wish to say that I received the information contained in my story on integration from sources which I regard as highly reliable and responsible. This information was then checked with other sources of an equally reliable nature."

Dr. Jansen will discuss the school integration program at a luncheon of the Bronx Board of Trade at the Concourse Plaza Hotel on Monday. He was to have spoken on it Monday night at a meeting of the Bronx branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but he said his schedule would not permit him to make the later meeting.

NEW YORK TO BUILD INTEGRATION SCHOOLS

Daily Worker

Atlanta Ga

Apr. 21-57

NEW YORK — (ANP) — A school building program will culminate in the erection of 24 new schools designed to just naturally achieve integration here was disclosed last week by the associate superintendent in charge of the city's building program.

Dr. David H. Moskowitz made the disclosure declaring that 22 of the 24 schools will be erected in fringe areas, where the population around the schools will be mixed.

He said the schools will be located in such a way that integration of white and Negro pupils will take place naturally.

To be built over a three-year period, the schools will cost an estimated 60 million dollars.

They will include elementary and junior high schools in New York and Brooklyn's "Harlem" areas.

Fifteen of the edifices will be built in the Harlem area of Manhattan and nine in the Harlem area in Brooklyn where large numbers of Negro and Puerto Rican families dwell.

The schools will accommodate some 25,000 students.

In other moves against segregation in schools, officials revealed that 1,500 white and Negro pupils will be transported by bus to schools other than those they now attend. Four hundred Negro pupils from Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant area will be moved into a predominantly white school and special made classes around the city for superior students, where Negroes who meet the qualifications can be sent to school with whites, will be established.

Northern Cities Confront the Problem of De Facto Segregation in the Schools

P. 11-F

By BENJAMIN FINE

Integration in the schools is a nation-wide problem, not just one that belongs south of the Mason-Dixon Line. The New York City Board of Education has its own integration problem.

Last week it was disclosed that the board intends to transfer 1,000 or more teachers from their present schools next fall and send them to the "difficult" ones. Before this the board merely asked teachers to go to Harlem, Bedford-Stuyvesant and other such districts on a voluntary basis. But that did not work. A study made last week by the Urban League of Greater New York showed that the "difficult" schools had a far greater proportion of emergency and substitute teachers than did the all-white schools in more favored economic areas. For example, Junior High School 258, in a Negro section of Brooklyn has been unable to get regularly appointed teachers. Of the seventy positions listed last semester, only eight were filled by licensed teachers. The others were emergency or substitute teachers.

Teacher assignment is just one of the steps being urged on the board by thirty local community, civic, parent and labor groups, calling for the adoption of a series of anti-segregation resolutions now before the board. Open hearings were held on them on Jan. 17 and they will be voted on Feb. 28.

De Facto Segregation

What is the controversy all about?

There is, of course, no official segregation in the city. It is illegal. But, as has been pointed out by the Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is a de facto form of segregation. This is caused by the residential pattern. Children go to their neighborhood schools.

When the Supreme Court held that segregation was unconstitutional, some educators and community leaders insisted that New York re-examine its position. A commission on integration was formed, with President Charles H. Silver of the Board of Education and State Controller Arthur Levitt as co-chairmen. Five subcommissions were appointed to look into the problems arising out of the integration decision.

Three of these committees have already reported, and their findings were accepted without question. They dealt with guidance, community relations and physical standards of schools. Little controversy was stirred up by them.

But the final two reports have set off the fireworks. These deal with zoning and teacher assignment.

In essence, the zoning report called for the creation of a central zoning unit with power to redraw school district lines. In some instances new zones would permit children who now attend predominantly colored schools to go to near-by white schools. The teacher assignment recommendations would make it board practice to assign as it sees fit, including moves to the "difficult" schools in predominantly underprivileged sections of the city.

The teachers do not object in principle to the zoning, although many are opposed on the ground that it would be harmful to "bus" children traveling any great distance. (If zoning lines are changed, pupils at distant points might have to be brought by bus to their new schools.)

Teachers' Protest

It is on the question of teacher assignment that the protest has been loudest. The teachers say that morale will break sharply if they are assigned, against their will, to "difficult" schools. They say that many of their number are not psychologically prepared to teach children in such schools.

To which the board answers, in effect: "All children deserve good teachers. We don't want to penalize pupils in the poorer economic area by giving them an undue proportion of the less able teachers."

The civic groups recognize that housing is the real problem. But they now insist that the school board, acting within the present housing framework, take steps to keep even de facto segregation down to a minimum. These are some of the ways it can be done, they say:

(1) Integrate as many schools as possible on the "fringe" areas by rezoning. Build new schools at such sites that both colored and white children will attend without violating the neighborhood school principle.

(2) Change the "feeder lines" leading from elementary to junior high schools to develop a better pattern of integration.

(3) Change the pattern of high schools to permit students to attend regardless of neighborhood. There are specialized schools now that admit students from anywhere in the city. Extend that principle to other high schools.

(4) In deeply segregated areas develop a new approach to integration. If children are attending a crowded Negro school and are sent by bus now to another all-Negro school, send them somewhat farther to a white school. It might mean a somewhat longer bus ride, but the extra mile or so will matter little.

(5) Permit parents to send children out of the neighborhood through "permissive" zoning.

(6) Put special classes, such as those of intellectually gifted children, in predominantly Negro schools. Then permit children from neighboring areas to attend.

(7) See that all schools, regardless of location, get a fair share of teachers who are qualified.

These changes would take place if the board adopts the zoning and teacher assignment reports. Actually, the changes would not end all segregation in schools. It would take a housing revolution to do that. As long as there are discriminatory residential patterns, there will be segregation in the schools as well. But the new program, as proposed by the commission on integration, would certainly eliminate most of the by-products of a de facto segregation.

In Other Cities

New York City is not the only Northern community where the civic conscience is at work. Most of the major cities will be forced to take up the question soon. Chicago is already considering the problem. A commission is studying what can be done to reduce the number of segregated classes. The N. A. A. C. P. has asked the school board at Pasadena, Calif., to set up a similar commission.

Rumblings are being heard in South Bend, Ind., and in Los Angeles. Near home, the New Rochelle school board is wrestling with the problem. Complaints are received in such suburban towns as Hempstead, Freeport, Amityville and Yonkers—complaints on the manner in which school zone lines have been drawn, on the selection of cities for new schools, on the practice of permitting white children in predominantly Negro zones to transfer to other schools.

Perhaps the action in Willow Grove, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, is a model for other communities. Willow Grove integrated its school system on the so-called Princeton Plan. Two adjacent school zones were combined into a single zone and students were assigned to one of the two schools on the basis of grade. The formerly all-Negro grade school was assigned the kindergarten and grades one, two and six. A new grade school which had originally been planned as an all-white school was assigned grades three, four and five.

The two schools were put under a single principal. Thus two completely integrated schools replaced segregated schools which had resulted from strict segregated residential patterns.

Debt Limit Exemption of Half a Billion Is Presented for Use in Construction

Amendment to Constitution Would Be Needed—State Finance Agency Urged

14d(1) NY

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 11—A proposal to exempt $500,000,000 for new school construction from New York City's constitutional debt limit was submitted to the Legislature tonight.

Senator Samuel L. Greenberg of Brooklyn and Assemblyman Melville E. Abrams of the Bronx, both Democrats, sponsored the measure.

The sponsors said that Mayor Wagner and the New York City Administration had taken no official position on the proposal as yet but that it had the backing of the United Parents Association.

The measure involves an amendment to the State Constitution, which fixes a maximum debt limit for New York City. Therefore it requires approval by two separate Legislatures, with an intervening general election, and ratification by the voters of the entire state at a referendum.

Senator Greenberg and Assemblyman Abrams explained that the proposed exemption was an outgrowth of a City Planning Commission report to the Board of Estimate last November. This report said that the city's school construction program faced a "catastrophic" curtailment unless new construction funds were available.

Integration Effect Noted

Ordinarily bonds issued to finance school construction and modernization are a charge against the city's debt limit. If the Greenberg-Abrams proposal takes effect the city would borrow up to $500,000,000 for these purposes without counting it against the city's debt limit. Interest and principal payments on the bonds would be a charge against tax revenues just as in the case of bonds issued within the debt limit.

The sponsors noted that the city, in planning new schools to be built with these funds, could provide for racial integration in most schools through the choice of sites. Some schools are now all white or all Negro because they serve all-white or all-Negro areas.

Senator Greenberg and Assemblyman Abrams quoted Charles J. Bensley, chairman of the Board of Education's building and sites committee, as reporting that 180 of the existing school buildings in the city should be replaced with modern structures.

Note Sale Plan Attached

A Republican proposal to help finance new schools outside of the city came under Democratic attack in the Senate tonight. It would permit local school districts to obtain money for construction through the sale of notes instead of bonds. These notes would be redeemable within five years from the proceeds of a sale of bonds of longer maturity.

The purpose of the measure is to enable school districts to avoid paying the high interest rates now demanded in bond sales. The expectation is that these rates will be lower within five years.

Democrats contended that a much sounder way of accomplishing the same objective would be the creation of a state school building authority. This authority would buy up local district school bonds with money through the sale of its own obligations in the open market. State Controller Arthur Levitt has estimated that districts could be saved up to 1 per cent interest a year in this manner.

New York Looks Under Its Nose

Advertiser Tues. 2-12-57 Montgomery, Ala.

AS WE were saying:

Integration in the schools is a nationwide problem, not just one that belongs south of the Mason-Dixon line. The New York City Board of Education has its own integration problem.

This might have been extracted from one of The Advertiser's editorials, but it happens to be the comment of Education Editor Benjamin Fine in the Sunday New York Times. Fine goes on to say:

There is of course, no official segregation in the city. It is illegal. But, as has been pointed out by the Urban League and the NAACP, there is a de facto form of segregation. This is caused by the neighborhood pattern. Children go to their neighborhood schools.

And the neighborhood pattern is of course created by real estate segregation. That creates the de facto (actual, though not by law) situation. Nor is it confined to New York City, Fine says:

Most of the major cities will be forced to take up the question soon. Chicago is already considering the problem. A commission is studying what can be done to reduce the number of segregated classes. The NAACP has asked the school board of Pasadena, Calif., to set up a similar commission. Rumblings are being heard in South Bend, Ind., and in Los Angeles . . . The New Rochelle school board is wrestling with the problem. Complaints are received in such suburban towns as Hempstead, Freeport, Amityville and Yonkers — complaints on the manner in which school zone lines have been drawn, on the selection of cities for new schools, on the practice of permitting white children in predominantly Negro zones to transfer to other schools.

A plan to force integration in New York City by transporting Negro and white children out of their neighborhoods to schools elsewhere has met with open hostility of teachers.

If this and other "rumblings" continue, perhaps we will have less of the moralistic dogmatizing of Northern newspapers on the "Southern" race problem.

New York To Shift Students for Fuller Integration

Courier-Journal Louisville Ky. 2-28-57

New York, Feb. 28 (AP)—New York City's Board of Education today adopted a broad program to achieve fuller integration in the schools by shifting students across racial residential lines.

The plan also calls for equalizing standards in the 900 public schools—in part by rotating teachers so that faculties in both the poorer and better areas will have the same quality of instruction.

Before a packed hall of spectators, the sweeping and controversial program was adopted without a dissenting vote. Two absent members of the nine-member board sent word they favored the program.

The action, whipped through just before the meeting adjourned, produced an outburst of protests from the audience.

"A railroading job," one woman cried.

"It's just like they do things in Russia," shouted Mrs. Harriet Ramos, a member of a Queens parent-teacher group.

"Disgraceful," yelled another, trying to get a chance to make a speech.

But the meeting was rapped to a close.

Public hearings were held previously on the program. In today's meeting, there was no discussion before the vote, but the board had held a closed executive session beforehand.

Board member Charles J. Bensley, in the only official statement on the matter other than the formal presentation, said the action charted " a new frontier in better living for all groups, irrespective of ethnic or cultural differences."

Although there is no official segregation in New York City schools, racial concentrations in some areas have resulted in many schools being made up almost exclusively of white or Negro pupils.

The program calls for modifying school zoning lines when feasible to get a fuller amalgamation of racial groups, and the movement of students, especially older ones, to obtain that objective.

Getting students out of overcrowded schools in poorer neighborhoods and into less crowded schools also is an aim. School officials have said no young children would be shifted any great distances.

The plan for transfering teachers—so that schools in deprived neighborhoods will have the same ratio of regular, experienced teachers as schools in better areas—has been opposed by city teachers' groups. They said it would damage morale in the teaching force.

"The teachers don't want to be moved," a woman shouted in the hectic finale of today's meeting. "It's against their civil rights."

The program was adopted yesterday at a board meeting in Brooklyn marked by shouts of disapproval from an audience consisting largely of teacher representatives and parent-teacher groups.

Adoption of the report, read to the assembly before the meeting adjourned, involves rezoning of school districts and the rotation of teachers among the poorer and better areas of the 900 public schools.

The plan is scheduled to go into effect next September and be in full swing by 1959.

Although official segregation in New York city schools does not exist, racial concentrations in some areas have resulted in many schools being made up almost exclusively of white or Negro pupils.

In modifying school zoning lines where feasible, a fuller amalgamation of racial groups will be obtained. The plan involves only the older students.

N. Y. School Integration To Be Eased

Segregation Is Trouble To N. Y. City

Post & Times Herald Washington D.C. Mon. 2-25-57

Citizens Protest On School Racial Situation, Reports Visiting Official

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

New York City is in the midst of a controversy over school segregation.

A citizens' committee report on public schools has stirred up the controversy in a city generally thought to be free of such problems.

No law requires segregation, but many New York schools have been segregated in effect. And the report charges that the informal segregation has deprived some minority students of an education equal to white children's.

A New York City school official, in Washington for the convention of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, said yesterday the problem was largely one of housing. Miss Mary E. Meade, assistant superintendent of the high school division, said minority groups tended to congregate in cohesive neighborhoods.

Would Mix Races

The citizens' report recommends change in school boundaries to create a greater mixture of races in schools, many of which are made up almost entirely of Negro or Puerto Rican children. The Board of Education will act on the report this week.

Some parents fear changes in zonning would force their children to ride subways or buses long distances.

"These fears are a misrepresentation of what the report calls for—the report doesn't call for long trips on buses," Miss Meade said.

Present school policy now calls for neighborhood elementary schools to save children long trips. The high school policy is different. For 10 years, Miss Meade explained, school officials have made a conscious effort to achieve a racial balance in high schools.

High School Problem

"Older children can go anywhere on the subway," she explained, "and it's easier to zone for them. In Manhattan the high school districts are really gerrymandered. We've tried to split up a difficult area, so we don't have all its residents in one school."

She described the efforts of school authorities to keep Morris High School in the Bronx from becoming completely Negro when its neighborhood population changed. Officials launched a "terrific program of education and inspiration" to make the school attractive to all races, she said.

Integration in high schools has caused little difficulty, according to Miss Meade. "We're used to newcomers of all races and nationalities."

Miss Meade once was principal of Washington Irving High School for girls on the lower East Side, which now is attended largely by Puerto Ricans and Negroes.

"The Puerto Ricans have presented the usual problems of persons coming from one culture to another—everything from climate on up," Miss Meade said. "The worst problem is the almost complete breakup of the immigrant family life because both parents usually have to work.

TEACHERS CLASH OVER INTEGRATION

New York

Disagree With Civic Units on Reports Calling for Zoning Revisions and Rotation

Times 1-18-57

By BENJAMIN FINE

The city's teachers and many of its civic leaders clashed yesterday at the Board of Education's open hearing on integration.

Two reports by the board's Commission on Integration were aired. The commission had proposed five reports in the last several months. Three of these, dealing with methods to bring about a better integrated school program, were adopted without opposition.

But two created sharp controversy. These dealt with a revision of the zoning laws to permit more flexibility in the assignment of children to schools, and with teacher rotation in "difficult" schools.

Eighty-five speakers, representing more than 100 of the city's most influential teacher, parent and civic groups, appeared at the five-hour hearing. Spokesmen for such groups as the United Parents Associations, the Public Education Association, the Citizens Committee on Children, the Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools and the American Jewish Committee came out strongly in favor of the two reports.

General Tenor of Comments

The general tenor of their comments was this: Segregation whether imposed by the board or whether the result of residential patterns, has no place in this city. The speakers urged the board to take immediate action to end whatever segregation might now exist in the public schools.

Spokesmen for the leading teacher groups attacked the zoning and teacher assignment reports. They held that their adoption would lower teacher morale, disrupt school services and bring about an avalanche of resignations and retirements. The teachers specifically opposed any plan that would require them to teach in the "difficult" schools, presumably in Harlem and similar areas.

"We are very much afraid that the recommendations of the Commission on Integration, if carried out to the letter, will produce new hostilities, conflicts, resentments and separations of peoples," Mrs. May Andres Healy, chairman of the Joint Committee of Teachers Organizations, declared. "The result may well be an obvious race-consciousness that does not exist."

The hearing attracted more than 200 persons to the board's quarters at 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn. Many in the audience shook their heads in vigorous dissent. Mrs. Healy continued:

"If our school system is not to become a shambles of stop-gap teaching practices, job insecurity, poor morale and don't-give-a-care ineptness, we respectfully urge the Board of Education to reject the report of the Commission on Integration."

Guild Tempers Position

The High School Teachers Association, the Bronx Boro-Wide Association of Teachers and the Teachers Alliance all urged the board to turn down the integration reports. The Teachers Guild and the Teachers Union, independent, favored the reports. However, the guild tempered its position by opposing several sections of the teacher assignment proposals.

The stand of the majority of the teachers was assailed. Mrs. Rose Shapiro, chairman of the zoning commission report, chided the teachers for a lack of courage. She said they would lose community support for their views and create hostility for their own organizations.

"You teachers," she declared, "can learn courage from the teachers of Clinton, Tenn., where the difficulties are far greater than ours."

Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League of Greater New York, expressed "shock" at the attitude of the teachers.

"It's simply incredible," he protested." The attitude of the teachers certainly indicates that before we can get integration in our schools, we will have to re-educate our teachers. They evidently have been given nothing but lip-service to the whole problem of integration. How discouraging!"

The Board of Education will vote on the two integration reports at an early meeting, it was indicated.

Problems Not Same as South's But--

New York Finding Integration Takes Time

Miami, Fla.

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON—News that seems on its face to be confined to a locality and hence gets little attention nationally can upon occasion be of far-reaching importance in the life of a nation. A good example is the failure as yet in New York City's Board of Education to obey the Supreme Court of the United States in what lately has been emphasized as "the law of the land."

LAWRENCE

It will be surprising to many people to learn that "integration" in the school system has not been solved in the Metropolis of America where so-called "Liberalism" is very vocal. There loud voices of accusation recently have been heard denouncing the South as "backward" or as "undermining respect for the Supreme Court" or as contemptuous of the constitution.

One can hardly believe that it is in the Northern citadel of "civil rights" where public attention is being vividly drawn to the tendency of human beings to segregate according to color.

With a commendable sense of realism in assessing the weaknesses of human nature, The New York Times, in an editorial entitled "The beam in our own eye," a few days ago spoke out as follows:

"Ever since the Supreme Court in 1954 concluded that in the field of education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' had no place, and that racial segregation deprived children of a minority group of equal educational opportunities, New York City has been re-examining its conscience. A commission on integration, with various sub-commissions, has been at work for the Board of Education.

"THE BOARD did not, for the most part, have to deal with the problem found in parts of the South, where there is settled public opinion against integration. It had to cope with the more subtle forms of segregation that create, as if by accident, a school almost wholly White, Puerto Rican or Negro in its student body.

"The good intention to integrate is not enough. Real physical difficulties exist, as in the case of a school drawing its student body from a residential area almost wholly of one race. Inertia, some prejudice that must be admitted, and other obstacles too numerous to recount stand in the way of instant solution, even granted the best of goodwill."

This will come as news to many people outside New York, especially in the South. For evidently there are no "citizens councils" in New York which have brought about this situation. It will be a comfort to the Southerners to learn, however, that the problem cannot soon be solved "even granted the best of goodwill" because "obstacles too numerous to recount stand in the way of instant solution."

MAYBE ONE of the circuit courts of appeals and one of the district courts which in recent rulings didn't allow time for "gradual" change will be conscience-stricken to discover that court decisions based on "psychology" do not wipe out either prejudices or the characteristics commonly called "human nature." For even in New York City apparently it takes time to find ways to accomplish "integration."

The sympathy of the south doubtless will go out to the people of New York who are struggling so slowly "to obey the constitution."

Committee Letter Also Asks Budget Request for Funds to Implement Goals

Twenty-six civic, religious and social welfare groups called upon the Board of Education yesterday to approve twe integration reports now before it. The board was severely criticized for delaying a final vote on the proposals.

The groups, affiliated with the Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools, expressed "deep disappointment" that the board had not adopted the integration measures.

On Jan. 17 the board held a public hearing to consider the reports, which concern zoning and teacher assignment. These proposed that the school system change its current zoning and teacher personnel policies. The end result, the reports said, would be to promote racial integration and assure qualified teachers for all schools.

The community groups appearing at the open hearing were solidly behind these recommendations. However, with the exception of the Teachers Guild, A. F. L.-C. I. O., and the Teachers Union, independent, the organized teacher groups opposed the integration reports. Several administrative organizations, representing the school system, also opposed the reports.

In a letter to Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, the intergroup committee urged immediate action to approve the integration proposals. The only member group of the committee that did not sign the letter was the Teachers Guild.

"While we approve the reports in general and in most of the specifics," said David Selden, guild representative, "we do not believe that the forced transfers of teachers will accomplish school integration."

Says Leaders Favor Reports

The intergroup committee declared that all of the city's responsible community leadership favored adoption of the zoning and teacher assignment reports.

"We are aware that delay can be as effective as negative action in preventing the implementation of these recommendations on which members of the board, its professional staff and community leaders have labored so long," the committee said.

"It is our belief that without prompt, affirmative action on these two reports, the work of the commission will have been in vain, since all of the reports are interdependent in order to bring about the desired goals of improved integration."

The committee said it was concerned that the board's budget did not request funds to implement the integration proposals. Although the board has announced that it will act on the reports at its Feb. 28 meeting, the committee urged that a special meeting be called prior to that date. It said further:

"We would like your assurance that full implementation will proceed, as scheduled, this coming September."

The letter to the board was signed by Hubert T. Delany, as chairman of the intergroup committee.

According to Mr. Silver, the two integration reports are now under consideration by the Board of Education. It is known that the board members are concerned at the sharp opposition expressed by the teacher groups and by the administrative staff.

However, it is considered almost certain that the two reports will be approved by the board. Several members of the board, as well as community leaders, served on the Commission on Integration and its five subcommissions. The co-chairmen were Mr. Silver and Arthur Levitt, State Controller.

N.Y. Schools Urged To Use Non-Bias Teachers Plan

Herald Tribune 1-29-57

NEW YORK — The board of education here has been urged by Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, to adopt the recommendations submitted by a sub-commission on teachers' assignments and a sub-commission on zoning.

Mr Wilkins' communication to the board was in the form of a letter to Charles H Silver, board president. The letter was sent on Jan 14.

"As we recall the resolution of the board passed Dec 23, 1954, it set up these commi sions to study the New York City system and to make recommendations to enable the board 'to approach more closely the racially integrated school in all localities,'" the letter said.

"All New Yorkers were proud of the board of education for setting this goal," the message continued, "and the adoption of the recommendations of these two sub-commissions would serve notice that the board intends to institute a realistic program looking to the attainment of its declared objective."

A change in the assignment of teachers was suggested by the sub-commission working on that subject. Among the proposals were the following:

Teachers should be assigned to 'difficult' schools on the basis of the schools' needs rather than the teacher's preferences.

More teachers should be assigned to schools having classroom problems so that teachers can devote more time to actual teaching.

Teachers should be appointed on the basis of ability, not of race, creed or national origin, and teaching staffs should reflect the diversified nature of the city's population.

Proposals submitted by the sub-commission on zoning included these:

The primary objective of zoning should be racial integration.

Permissive zoning should be used to enable children in a school with an all-white or all-Negro composition to transfer to an integrated school.

The conversion of junior high school to elementary schools and similar changes in school organization should be utilized to diminish the number of years a child spends in a homogeneous environment.

Board of Education Is Reported Failing Of Full Compliance With Court Ruling

Washington D.C.

News that seems on its face to be confined to a locality and hence gets little attention nationally can on occasion be of far-reaching importance in the life of a nation. A good example is the failure as yet of New York City's Board of Education to obey the Supreme Court of the United States in what lately has been emphasized as "the law of the land."

It will be surprising to many people to learn that "integration" in the school system has not been solved in the metropolis of America where so-called "liberalism" is very vocal. Inertia, some prejudice that must be admitted, and other obstacles too numerous to recount, stand in the way of instant solution, even granted the best of good will.

"Now the board of education stands at the critical point where mere paying lip service to fine moral principles will not suffice to move us forward, and where the sacrifices by which high principles are translated into action must be assumed."

This will come as news to many people outside New York, especially in the South. For evidently there are no "citizens councils" in New York which have brought about this situation. It will be a comfort to the Southerners to learn, however, that the problem cannot soon be solved, "even granted the best of good will," because "obstacles too numerous to recount stand in the way of instant solution." For even in New York apparently it takes time to find ways to accomplish "integration."

But perhaps the real significance of the New York episode is that the persons who are taking the Supreme Court decision literally do not really understand how much distance they have to go. For if the logic of the high court's decision is really followed, it will become necessary for every school to admit at least a sprinkling of persons of another color in order to remove the "inferiority" complex which the pupils of one race are supposed to develop when there is any race discrimination in the schools. Theoretically, even the private schools will some day have to make their contribution to the "psychological" millennium described by the Supreme Court of the United States when in 1954 it suddenly decided that "psychological" considerations were more controlling than a legal precedent which had stood more than 100 years as "the law of the land."

The sympathy of the South doubtless will go out to the people of New York who are struggling so slowly "to obey the Constitution."

New York Reveals Segregation Views

Post 1-29-57

NEW YORK, Feb. 26 (AP)—The Board of Education has announced that school officials will continue to eliminate segregation wherever possible in the city school system.

The board said there is no official segregation in the city schools, but there is a concentration of racial groups as a result of residential patterns.

The board's position was made known yesterday by Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, and Dr. William Jansen, superintendent of schools.

Proposals Call for Teacher Transfers and Rezoning—Action Is Protested

New York, N.Y.

By GENE CURRIVAN

A two-part program designed to lessen racial segregation in the city's public schools was adopted yesterday by the Board of Education without a dissenting vote.

P. 9

The plan proposed to achieve this goal through widespread rezoning of school districts and by the transfer of regular teachers to the so-called difficult schools.

The leading teacher organizations have strongly opposed such transfers. They expressed fears that there would be an involuntary "rotation" system.

Shouts of disapproval greeted the adoption of the reports, which had been prepared by the board's Commission on Integration.

Representatives of teacher and parent-teacher groups, who thought they would be given a chance to speak, yelled "This is like Russia" and "We are being railroaded." Over the noise Mr. Silver tried to explain that the public hearing already had been held, but the shouts continued until the board members had left the hall.

The board, in a statement read at the meeting, made it clear that its approval of the reports did not necessarily mean the acceptance of every detail.

Further Study Possible

"The Board of Education," the statement said, "reserves to itself the privilege of interpreting the meaning to be attached to certain terms and phrases, of further studying and exploring the merits of specific recommendations and of resolving the administrative problems which necessarily arise in carrying out any policy for a school system as complex as that of New York City."

At the same time, the board directed Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, to take "such action as may be necessary to carry out the intent and purposes of said reports." He was given authority to make adjustments.

The progra madopted yesterday is part of an overall plan to bring about school integration. Three other parts of the general plan were adopted previously without opposition. They dealt with guidance, improvement of buildings and the raising of academic standards in underprivileged areas.

The plan is to go into effect next September and be in full swing by 1959.

Mayor's Approval Foreseen by Silver for Funds to Assist 'Difficult' Units

By BENJAMIN FINE

Plans to reduce segregation in the city's schools are under way.

The Board of Education says that it is prepared to spend $2,000,000 this year to implement its integration program. Between 700 and 800 additional teachers, supervisors and nonprofessional personnel will be needed by September, it was noted.

Under the present plan, the "difficult" schools in Harlem and other areas where de facto segregation exists will get additional school aid. Classes will be reduced, in some instances, from thirty-five to twenty-five pupils. More supervisors and guidance counselors will be employed. Nonprofessionals will serve as lunchroom monitors, relieving the regular teachers of this task.

Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, met with board officials during the last week to determine the next steps in the program.

Dr. Jansen will now submit a request for a supplementary budget to the Board of Education, probably in time for the regular meeting March 21.

Mayor's Approval Foreseen

After the budget is adopted, it will go to Mayor Wagner for approval. Since the Mayor is on record as favoring a policy of integration, it is believed almost certain that a request for additional funds will be favorably considered.

Based on preliminary discussions, it appears now that the board will ask about $2,000,000. The money will be used to help make "difficult" schools more attractive to regular teachers. Currently, these schools have a higher proportion of substitutes and emergency teachers than do schools in other areas.

In accordance with the recommendations of the Teacher Placement Commission steps will be taken to:

¶Provide more assistant principals and other supervisory personnel at "difficult" schools.

¶Increase the number of clerks and other non professional personnel.

¶Give teachers additional free time for conferences on teaching problems.

¶Provide free time so that teachers can meet with parents to discuss school problems.

¶Reduce class sizes in difficult schools with a maximum of twenty-five as the goal.

All of this, board officials point out, will cost money. The final total has not yet been made, but officials estimate that at least 700 and possibly 800 additional school personnel will be required.

'Not Going to Wait'

In the meantime, Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, reported that the school system was proceeding with its implementation program.

"We are not going to sit back and wait for things to happen by themselves," he said. "I hope that we can begin to implement the program by the time school opens this fall."

Mr. Silver, who has taken a prominent role in developing the board's policies, is cochairman, with Controller Arthur Levitt, of its Commission on Integration.

In addition to providing for more teachers, the board plans to establish a central zoning unit. This was proposed by the subcommission on zoning headed by Mrs. Morris Shapiro, former president of the United Parents Associations.

The zoning agency will have the task of rezoning school districts. Its objective will be to decrease segregation in "fringe" areas by permitting a greater interchange of students from predominantly white schools to those predominantly colored.

Head of Board Sees No More Travel Than Under the Present System—Reports to Be Weighed Today

Times 3-28-57

Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education gave assurance yesterday that the integration reports to be considered by the Board today would not change the current extent of school bus transportation.

The board is to decide whether it will adopt or table the reports of its Commission on Integration. The reports, dealing with zoning and teachers' assignments have been before the boar since Dec. 27. They have caused considerable controversy.

Mr. Silver's statement was issued to counteract reports that children would be transported from one end of the city to the other for purposes of school integration.

"I have been assured by the Superintendent of Schools," Mr. Silver said, "that all such bus transportation, now as in the past, is either (1) to transport a child who lives far from the nearest school or (2) to relieve overcrowding and make better use of school buildings.

"The Commission of Integration stated that it has not proposed any type of bus plan other than the type 'that is now being practiced for school children throughout the city' and the Board of Education contemplates no other type," he said.

Delay in Action Urged

William J. O'Shea, Manhattan membmer of the board, joined with leading teacher groups yesterday in advocating a postponement of action on the reports. In a letter to Mr. Silver he pointed out that he and two other members of the board, Cornelius J. Walsh and the Rev. John M. Coleman, had not been able to participate in recent discussions because of illness.

In favor of the immediate adoption of the reports are the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations and the Intergroup Committee on New York's Public Schools. The commission is an official city organization devoted to the protection of minorities. The committee is a group of twenty-five organizations, including the American Jewish Congress, the Urban League of Greater New York and Othe National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Board's Statement Clarifies Policy and Notes Barriers to Complete Conformance

By BENJAMIN FINE

The Board of Education made clear its position on integration yesterday. It said, in effect, that the school officials would continue to eliminate segregation wherever possible in the school system.

The board's views were made known through a statement issued, in the form of a series of questions and answers by Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, and Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools.

This is the first official pronouncement by the board since its Commission on Integration issued reports from its subcommissions recently.

The teachers have opposed vigorously several parts of the report on assignment and personnel. They have complained that teachers would be rotated from one school to another without regard to their places of residence or ability to handle "difficult" schools. They have charged that children would be sent by bus to schools far away from their own neighborhood.

Hope to Clear Uncertainties

The board and superintendent recognized that some parents and teachers were concerned by the problems raised. They hoped that the question-and-answer statement might help clear up the uncertainties that still existed.

There is no official segregation in this city, the school officials said, but there is a concentration of ethnic groups as a result of the residential patterns. Certain areas of the city, notably Harlem, are almost 100 per cent segregated.

The board has already accepted three reports of the Integration Commission. These dealt with increased guidance, improvement of school buildings and raising academic standards in underprivileged areas. No one objected to their adoption.

The final two reports — on zoning and teacher placement — created a controversy. The board is scheduled to act upon these reports on Thursday. Although the teachers have objected, and several members of the board are not quite certain as to the wisdom of the recommendations, the integration reports are almost certain to be adopted.

The board noted that it was democratic to draw zoning lines in such a way as to encourage integrated instead of segregated schools. This would apply more to "fringe" areas than in districts heavily populated by one racial group.

Inter-Borough Shifts Barred

Children would not be sent from one borough to another, but the board favored sending children from an over-crowded school to one that was not fully utilized if the distance is not great. Also, a child who was attending a nonintegrated school would be able to transftr to an integrated one if his parents permitted, provided, of course, that school conditions made that feasible.

However, despite the board's action, all of the city's schools will not become integrated. Segregated housing patterns make that impossible, the statement explained.

On the troublesome question of rotation, the board declared that this referred to an equitable staffing of all schools. What is intended, the board said, is that all schools have the same to substitutes. If the difficult schools could be staffed voluntarily by regular teachers, so much the better; otherwise, the board might assign them as a matter of policy.

Will the new policy have an adverse effect on teacher recruitment? The board said it would not.

"If anything," the report declared, it should provide an additional [illegible]

The Mania For Mixed Schools

Advertiser 3-4-57

The Richmond Times-Dispatch

IS IT "democratic' 'to force children to attend' public schools they don't want to attend, and which are less accessible to them than the neighborhood schools they have always been attending?

Montgomery Ala.

The public school authorities of New York City are shuffling students around on the theory that "mingling Negroes, Puerto Ricans and whites encourages democratic living." Apparently the democratic right of choosing a school that one can get to readily and which one may prefer for other reasons is not considered important under this fantastic concept.

Thurs. 3-7-57

EVEN Life magazine, certainly no segregationist organ, blasts this nonsensical educational setup in its March 4 issue. Under the heading "Let the Students Choose," it says editorially that "overzealous friends of integrated schools are creating a new problem." It goes on:

"Superintendent William Jansen says he will not make children 'travel unreasonable distances,' and acknowledges that housing segration will continue to set limits on how much classroom integration he can attain. In our opinion the less he tries to achieve it by restraints upon the free choices of individuals, the more painlessly will integration come to be taken for granted."

Superintendent Jansen and others deny flatly that pupils are being hauled "across town in New York," although The Wall Street Journal declared, in late January:

"All concede that hundreds of New York students are already criss-crossing the city by bus and subway to schools far from home."

The same article said that some 200 Negro children were being transported 20 city blocks or more to public school 93 in the Bronx, and that these children attended neighborhood schools until last September.

We accept the statement of Superintendent Jansen that pupils are not now being hauled across New York. Whether this was being done until recently and then was stopped, because of the mounting clamor, we are unable to say.

The admissions of the New York school authorities are sufficiently damaging, as far as we are concerned. They acknowledge that pupils are being forced to leave their neighborhood schools and taken to schools farther away. As summarized by the Associated Press, the plan involves the following:

"Rezoning school districts to embrace racially diversified sectors; transporting Negro students in some cases to white districts and vice versa; equalizing the quality of faculties in rich and poor areas; and locating new schools so as to serve mixed populations."

When this plan was presented last week at a meeting of the New York City Board of Education, there were loud protests from parent-teacher representatives that it is "discriminatory against both white and colored children," and "just like they do things in Russia."

UNDER this plan to further "democratic living," it is stated by officials that if teachers object to being taken from the neighborhoods in which they have taught all their lives and assigned to slum areas—in order to achieve a so-called balance of educational opportunity—they will be ordered to comply. If they refuse, they will be "subject to charges of insubordination."

So much for the brand of "democracy" with which the people of New York are being favored, at the behest of the NAACP. If this goes through in New York, will the same thing be tried in Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland and so on? If so, the South will be in danger of determined attempts to ram a similar system down its throat.

The integrationist fanatics seem to have lost all balance and perspective in their mania for mixed schools.

BUT the board wasn't listening to the teachers. Nor to the parents. It voted in public, before a packed hall of spectators—but only after a closed session, and without allowing any questions from the floor.

Against the board's laudable object of equalizing standards of instruction in all New York's 971 public schools surely there can be no criticism. But its method is another thing, and the rotation scheme is an astonishing admission of the board's past inefficiency in hiring and concentrating "inferior" teachers in "inferior" areas. Spreading this inferiority on a citywide basis instead of eliminating it will certainly add no strength to the public school system nor to support of it by the people of the metropolis.

In the matter of young pupils, clearly somebody's basic human rights are being violated. Hauling little children long distances through New York traffic, as one teacher put it, "is inimical to their health and safety." But it is seven- and eight-year-old tots in P S 93, to cite but one example, who since last September have daily been hauled 20 city blocks or more to their school. The children, white and Negro alike, become movable hostages to the notion that forced integration in the schools

Artificial And Arbitrary Integration

Advertiser 3-4-57

The Louisville Courier-Journal

GOING far beyond any requirement of law or reason, New York City's Board of Education has embarked on a stormy course. At tremendous cost—educationally, financially, and, quite possibly, in terms of worsening instead of improving racial relations—it is committed not to the end of compulsory segregation but to arbitrary and artificial forcing of integration.

Montgomery Ala.

The New York system has already gerrymandered school districts for this purpose. With no concession to freedom of choice, it has already knocked out the "neighborhood school" concept by transferring pupils 20 blocks or more away from their old schools, by school bus and of course at increased public expense, to help "equalize" racial mixing in the schools.

Tues. 3-6-57

It has been committed for months, in other words, to the dubious precept that forced racial integration should be the sole objective of school zoning or pupil assignment, no matter what the cost or what the inconvenience or the actual hardship to its young wards.

Last week the board put its formal stamp of approval on the program. And it went farther. Not content with transferring Negro and white pupils miles away from their homes, board members unanimously voted to rotate teachers from poorer to better socio-economic areas and vice versa—a step vigorously opposed by teachers' organizations. Such arbitrariness, as the teachers contend, will help neither teacher-morale nor the already difficult problem of teacher-recruitment.

completely overrides all other considerations.

NEW York's 724,000 elementary and junior high school pupils include 132,000 Negroes, 101,000 Puerto Ricans. There are people of all races in each of the city's five boroughs, but a combination of economics and housing, not school law, has led to a high degree of "accidental" segregation in the schools. Yet the schools are now to be used not for their primary mission but as a social weapon against New York's stubborn immovability in other fields. And a good bit of a budget-increase request for $68 million (total: $412 million) is expected to go to this cause.

This newspaper vigorously supports the ideal of one standard of citizenship for all Americans, regardless of race, creed or color. But it does not believe that the public schools should be made a laboratory for forced integration.

Something or other in New York has triumphed over common sense.

INTEGRATION PLAN GIVEN FOR SCHOOLS

Times P.31-C

A program to help the Board of Education carry out its integration plans was proposed yesterday by the Citizens Committee for Children of New York City.

Wed. 3-6-57

In a letter to Charles H. Silver, the board's president, the committee said many misunderstandings and fears had to be dispelled among personnel throughout the school system, while parents had to become better acquainted with the program.

Among the committee's recommendations were the assigning of strong teams of principals, assistant principals and supervisors to inspire teachers to accept difficult assignments as a challenge. But appeals to teachers to volunteer for "difficult" schools should be accompanied by firm assurances that all steps would be taken to create favorable working conditions, the committee added.

Among the other suggestions were:

¶Designate several schools as pivotal and work out a concentrated program.

¶Announce plans and dates for implementation as soon as possible.

¶Improve the general conditions under which teachers work to enable them to do their jobs better.

"Ending racial segregation in our public schools," the committee declared, "is the most crucial issue in American life today."

Teachers Fight Forced Transfer to Difficult Posts

New York

By FREDERICK WOLTMAN,
Staff Writer.

At the heart of the delicate issue of racial integration in New York City public schools lies a problem that officials prefer not to emphasize.

It is the matter of "difficult" schools. Educators dislike the stigma attached to the word "difficult," and so they call them "subject" schools. There are 187 of them among the city's 790 elementary and junior high schools.

Both teachers and parents rose in protest when the Board of Education's Commission on Integration recommended in January that the best and most experienced teachers be assigned to "subject" schools.

Teachers Win Fight.

The teachers apparently have won their fight against forced transfers to such schools, but the basic problem remains.

Present indications are that few, if any, teachers will be forcibly transferred this fall. Instead, virtually all newly appointed teachers will go to "subject" schools, and officials will encourage older teachers to volunteer for such assignments.

Most of the problem schools have largely Negro or Puerto Rican enrollments. But educators say the difficulty has nothing to do with race, color or national origin.

Not even discipline is a major factor. What sets off the problem schools from the rest is that the pupils tend to come from families that are economically or culturally deprived.

They have not had the breaks to prepare them for public schooling. They need extra attention, smaller classes and more teachers.

Puerto Rican children are an example. After a 10-year immigration wave, there are 101,000 of them today in the city's elementary and junior high schools. In Manhattan they constitute 32 percent of the enrollment.

Many speak little or no English. They are shy and afraid. Without auxiliary language teachers, they can make no progress.

Out of the 187 "subject" schools, 144 have 100 or more pupils who don't speak English.

Among many Negro children, the chief handicap is poor reading ability, a characteristic in all deprived areas. This throws off their IQ tests, which depend on the ability to read.

Learning Pace Slowed.

Unless corrected by special instructors, it slows up their pace of learning. This grows progressively worse. But teachers have found that with the aid of a remedial reading instructor a child can advance as many as four years in one.

Educators say many changes are needed to correct the situation—such as increasing the number of guidance counselors, psychiatrists and extra services available in slum neighborhoods.

But they say an ultimate solution will come only with the rezoning of school districts to bring better "racial balance."

How far this program will go in, say, 10 or 20 years it is impossible to say. Officials say boundaries will probably not be shifted more than a few blocks in the next year.

William Jansen, superintendent of schools, said he expects to establish an approximately equal distribution of experienced and new teachers in every section of the city. But he said this would be done gradually—by persuasion rather than force.

$2 Million Required.

An indication that the integration program will not bring any drastic changes in the immediate future is found in Mr. Jansen's estimate that about $2 million will be required for the program in the 1957-1958 fiscal year.

Nearly all the money is earmarked for improvements at the predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican schools. It would be used to reduce the size of classes and provide more assistant principals, clerks, substitute teachers and guidance counselors.

The over-all budget is about $430 million, meaning that $2 million would be less than 1 percent of the total.

New York City's school integration program will move slowly. Officials have put in considerable time assuring parents and teachers that they need fear no radical changes—such as transporting children from one borough to another by bus to break up segregated schools.

Details to Take Year.

Some details will take years to work out—on a continuing basis. The resolution by which the Board of Education approved the recommendations of the Commission on Integration put it this way:

"Be it further resolved that . . . the superintendent of schools is directed to take such action as may be necessary to carry out the intent and purposes of the said reports, making such adjustments, where necessary, in the implementation thereof as will meet the situation from the standpoint of good administration of an effective integration program."

INTEGRATION SPLITS CHAMBER IN QUEENS

Times p.21-C
Wed. 5-22-57

A supporter of the school system's integration program said yesterday he would resign from the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce because its directors refused to repudiate statements against the plan.

Dr. Lloyd Marcus, personnel director of Q-Tips, Inc., said he and nine other members of the seventeen-member educational committee had been opposed to the stand taken by the committee's chairman, Matthew J. Shevlin. Mr. Shevlin had charged the program was ill-advised and unnecessary, and would involve dangerous bus transport.

John T. Clancy, chamber president, said more than thirty of the forty-eight directors were present Monday night when Mr. Marcus' protests and a demand for a "code of ethics" for committees were discussed. They voted unanimously to "file" the correspondence on the ground the issue had become "academic" after the Board of Estimate approved an appropriation for the integration program, he said.

Committee memberships expire each April 30, but Mr. Clancy said he planned to reappoint Mr. Shevlin as chairman of the educational committee. Dr. Marcus said his company's membership would run out May 31, and he had been authorized to resign if the directors failed to repudiate the earlier stand.

School Chief Defends Plan For Rezoning

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Mon. 6-10-57

NEW YORK, June 9 (AP)—Dr. William Jansen, city superintendent of schools, said today that school integration is being used by transferring pupils from overcrowded public schools to "undercrowded" ones, but without arbitrary shifting of student population.

Jansen said "permissive rezoning" is especially being carried out in junior high schools.

Pupils, he said, are offered the opportunity to transfer from a predominantly Negro school to one that is predominantly white. He said the transfer is discussed both with the pupils and their parents and efforts are made to select the most intelligent students for the voluntary transfer.

Asked about a report students were being forced to travel by bus from one borough to another to attend school as part of an integration program, Jansen replied:

"Certainly not, and we never considered doing so."

Jansen said it was planned to construct some new school facilities on the fringe areas, which would become integrated schools.

He also said that interscholastic athletic programs with both white and Negro children participating "is working out very well."

However, Jansen said, "I would hate to leave the impression that zoning would be an end to all of our problems. It is not merely a matter of race but one of economics."

Because of the size of New York City, he said, there is no immediate possibility of achieving racial balance among the city's school population.

New Rochelle turns down jim-crow school measure

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 6-8-57

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Analyzing the results of a referendum on a proposal to build a new school in an all - colored area, the Rev. M. DeWitt Bullock, president of the New Rochelle NAACP branch, said today that the defeat of this proposal indicated that the "citizens of New Rochelle, white and colored, voted against payment for separate but equal schools."

The proposal, one of seven submitted to the electorate on May 14, would have allocated $1,516,000 for the construction of a new Lincoln elementary school on the site of the present school in the heart of the colored area.

The NAACP opposed the proposal because "it would perpetuate segregated education and insure the development and expansion of an enlargdd all - colored community," Mr. Bullock asserted.

DESPITE the opposition of the New Rochelle NAACP, the board of education insisted on submitting the proposal to the voters. Many citizens' groups also supported the board's positiin. But the voters rejected it.

"The board has been taught a lesson in integration as far as citizens of New Rochelle are concerned," Mr. Bullock declared. "It is my feeling that now the board realizes that people will no longer sit idly by in our community and allow school officials to turn their backs upon our American democracy.

The board defeated its own referendum by poor public relations, misrepresentation and pressure tactics. It lost the referdum because it is out of touch with the thinking of the majority of the citizens."

Instead of building a new elementary school in the heart of the segregated area, the NAACP contended that the present Lincoln school should be abandoned and the pupils assigned to other schools in the city. Enrollment in the school is now 90 per cent colored.

No Drastic School Integration Shifts

World-Telegram & Sun New York Tues. 8-23-57 P. 1

Parents' Fears Groundless, Officials Declare

By FREDERICK WOLTMAN,
Staff Writer.

School integration became part of the law of New York State in 1884, when Gov. Grover Cleveland signed a bill abolishing separate schools for Negroes.

Why, then, is there so much fuss today about the Board of Education's current efforts to guard against racial segregation?

Much of the answer lies in the fact that the present program involves re-drawing the boundary lines of the city's school zones. This has aroused fears among parents that their children will no longer attend the school closest to home and that youngsters will have to make long trips through unfamiliar neighborhoods.

Parents also have been afraid that teaching standards at an unfamiliar, distant school will not be as high as at the one close to home.

Fears Called Groundless.

School officials say these fears—like others spawned by the integration program—are groundless.

The program came into being as a result of the U.S. Supreme Court's historic anti-segregation decision of May 17, 1954. Although there was no formal segregation here, the Board of Education found itself under attack by pro-integration groups, which contended standards were lower in Harlem schools than elsewhere and that school districts were "gerrymandered" to encourage racial separation.

After a private survey by the Public Education Assn. and New York University's Research Center for Human Relations, the Board of Education set up a Commission on Integration in December, 1955, and directed it to draw up an integration program as rapidly as possible.

Two Reports Issued.

The commission had 37 members, only a few of them being professional educators. Its two reports, covering rezoning and teacher assignments, were made public in January of this year.

On Feb. 28 the Board of Education approved them in principle, but conceded that "varying interpretations have been placed by readers on the meaning of certain phrases in the written reports."

The board, therefore, "reserves to itself the privilege of interpreting the meaning," its resolution of approval said.

In essence, the commission urged that racial separation be discouraged by setting up school zones with a "balance" of children from all racial groups.

No Big Transfers.

A preliminary draft of one of the commission's reports, it was learned later, said that racial integration should be the cardinal principle in New York City school zoning. The final draft toned this down to make integration a cardinal principle.

William Jansen, superintendent of schools, and other officials say the rezoning, for the time being at least, will not mean mass integration or the movement of huge groups of children from one school to another.

They make these points:

● School zones will generally be drawn on an individual basis to encourage greater mixture of races. Boundaries will be moved no more that a few blocks.

● The traditional causes for rezoning will be taken into account before integration is considered. These factors, from the standpoint of an individual home, include the distance to school, possible traffic hazards on the way and the full utilization of the school without overcrowding.

See Limited Success.

● If, because of population shifts, a school suddenly becomes badly overcrowded and children must be transported to another school by bus, an attempt will be made to pick a school with a racial mixture, rather than one of predominantly the same race — provided that the distance covered is reasonable.

Officials agree that integration of all schools is impossible. For the time being at least, there will be little or no changes in the enrollment at schools in racially homogeneous areas.

The Commission on Integration conceded that until housing discrimination ends "only a limited success is possible" in school integration.

Officials also say that rezoning is a continuing process regardless of integration. Each of the school system's 25 assistant superintendents is in charge of the 775 zones in his jurisdiction, and local authorities, parents and borough presidents are consulted before a redistricting order goes into effect.

As to fears that teaching standards would be lower in the schools to which pupils might be transferred, officials say fast and slow learners are normally placed in separate classes in all schools. Thus, they say, an individual child can be expected to progress about as fast in one school as another.

Charge school board 'sitting on hands' in integration issue

Afro-American Sat. 8-3-57 P. 9

Baltimore Md.

NEW YORK— The Urban League of greater New York last week charged the board of education with "sitting on its hands while superintendent of schools William Jansen tears the heart out of the nation's most comprehensive school integration program."

The interracial agency praised the "personal efforts" of Board President Charles H. Silver "to implement public school integration and equality of educational opportunity"

But it asserted that "the majority of the board members appear to be content to let the integration program fizzle out."

IDENTICAL LETTERS were sent by Edward S. Lewis, league executive director, to President Silver, Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald.

Mr. Lewis was particularly critical of "the rewriting by Superintendent Jansen and his associates of the reports on teachers assignment and personnel and zoning of the Board's Commission on Integration."

These were the two most controversial of six reports adopted by the board over the past year on recommendation of its Commission on Integration, an official body of board, professional and lay members charged with recommending policy to improve school integration and educational opportunity.

The zoning and teachers assignment reports had been adopted by the board with "reservations," thought previously to apply only to detail and wording of the reports.

The league charged, however, that Superintendent Jansen "seized upon these 'reservations' to rewrite these reports in such a way as to preserve, in essence, the status quo ante."

"Unfortunately, the majority of the board members appear either to be indifferent to the fate of the reports or support Dr. Jansen in his efforts to incapacitate them."

The league warned that "the community cannot be expected to remain silent when three and one half years of patient investigation, negotiation and sound recommendations to correct the shocking inequities growing out of de facto segregated schools in New York City are literally thrown out the window."

NORTH CAROLINA

Whitakers White Patrons' Suit Testing School Assignment Law

News + Observer Thurs. 7-11-57 P.1

Raleigh N.C.

WHITAKERS, July 10 — North Carolina's first superior court test of its School Assignment Law is being initiated by 26 white patrons of the Whitakers School.

Attorneys Ben H. Neville of Whitakers and Joseph Branch of Enfield are now preparing papers for filing in Edgecombe County Superior Court to test the arbitrary assignment power of the Board of Education of Edgecombe.

Edgecombe's Education Board, acting under the School Assignment Law, has ordered the transfer of 26 pupils from Whitakers School in Nash County to North Edgecombe School at Leggett 13 miles away.

Advisory Committee.

R. G. Payne of Whitakers, grocer and former teacher and athletic coach at Benvenue School in Rocky Mount, is serving on an advisory committee for the Whitakers parents with F. N. Hyman and Harold A. Braswell.

Payne said today that the court action arises from the arbitrary assignment of the 26 white high school and elementary pupils to the Leggett School who have previously attended the Whitakers School, "some of them for their entire school career."

"Inasmuch as these students are the only white students of the country who have not been free to return to schools attended last year or in previous years and that students residing in Leggett go to Tarboro or other schools of their choice," said Payne, "these citizens resent what they feel is discrimination against them."

He explained that all except two of the pupils have residential and church ties with the Whitakers Community.

Lost Pupils.

The Leggett School has lost a number of pupils in tenant families displaced by the tobacco acreage cut and the Leggett Community is heavily populated with Negroes, it was explained.

Attorneys Neville and Branch, representing the patrons in question at a meeting with Supt. I. S. Inscoe of Nash County July 1, stressed that "family, social and church ties bind these residents of the Gethsemane Church Community, to Whitakers rather than to Leggett."

News + Observer

They further declared at a meeting that "the welfare, safety and happiness of the students would not be taken into consideration, since greater travel to Leggett would be a handicap for young children." P.9

High school students would be forced to leave an accredited high school staffed by five teachers and enter a school with a faculty of three members, the attorneys stressed.

Meeting four days later, the Board of Education ordered the transfer of the 26 pupils.

Long History.

Whitakers School has served the citizens of Nash and Edgecombe counties since the days of the one-room schoolhouses. Battlesboro, divided by the ACL Railroad—boundary line between the two counties—has always operated as a part of the Edgecombe system, receiving students from both counties.

"Taking advantage of the 1955 School Assignment Act," declared Payne, "the Edgecombe Board apparently has decided to increase the enrollment of North Edgecombe School at Leggett, wholly within its jurisdiction, without consideration for the happiness, welfare and best interests of the pupils thus assigned."

Discussion of a consolidation program for Edgecombe County has aroused citizens of the area, he explained.

"The desire of the Whitakers people residing in the Edgecombe section is to maintain their present school, constantly endeavoring to enlarge and improve its facilities," he declared.

Payne noted that during the 1956-57 term, Whitakers School served its patrons of the Edgecombe area in dispute through the use of an activities bus purchased by the Whitakers-Battleboro Athletic Association, of which H. E. Vernon is president, Payne vice president and Neville, secretary-treasurer.

"If other transportation is not available, the organization plans to operate this special bus for the coming year," he declared.

Payne said that the Board of Education and former Supt. E. D. Johnston of Edgecombe County "have plagued this section of the county with numerous obstacles."

"For the 1956-57 term, these citizens were deprived of a county bus for transporting the children to the school of their choice," Payne said. "At the same time, Leggett or North Edgecombe School and its feeder school, Speed, began operations several days before others in the county system and just two days prior to the opening at Whitakers."

He explained that when students chose to ride the special bus to Whitakers, officials stopped the driver, "raised numerous questions" and finally sent a request to Raleigh for a special inspection of the bus.

"The inspector declared the bus to meet all safety requirements and adequate insurance was carried," said Payne.

He said bus routes serving Whitakers School were set up and approved by the State prior to 1955.

"Each year for the past 10 years or more, buses from the Leggett School have run into the Whitakers territory, where they picked up no students," Payne said. "These runs ceased only upon orders from State bus route supervisors."

White Schools Admit 12 North Carolina Negroes

Star Wed. 7-24-57 P.5-A

Washington D.C.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 24 (AP).—Seven previously all-white schools in three North Carolina cities will admit 12 Negro children this September.

School board members in Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem—squeezed between United States Supreme Court decisions and angry segregationists—voted last night to accept the Negroes after "earnest and prayerful consideration."

They are the first school board members in any of the nine Southeastern States to voluntarily assign Negro pupils to white schools.

The move was no sweeping victory for desegregation.

While admitting 12 Negro children, the school boards rejected the applications of 41 other Negro children for assignment to white schools. Charlotte alone turned down 35.

Five of the children to be admitted are in Charlotte, six in Greensboro and one in Winston-Salem.

Can Transfer Whites

The Greensboro board announced it reserved the right to transfer to other available schools any white child whose parents objected to racially mixed classes.

State leaders have agreed that some desegregation would be necessary if North Carolina's pupil assignment act was to stand.

The act, carefully drawn by the 1955 Legislature, with no mention or race, transfers pupil assignment from State to local school boards specifying assignments shall be made "so as to provide for the orderly and efficient administration of such public schools, the effective instruction of the pupils therein enrolled and the health, safety and general welfare of such pupils."

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that threw out Virginia's pupil-placement act because it was backed by strict segregation laws ruled the North Carolina law is not "unconstitutional on its face."

Calls Mixing Inevitable

Col. William T. Joyner, vice chairman of the Governor's advisory committee on schools, which proposed both the assignment and Pearsall Plan, told the North Carolina State Bar last year:

"I think that some mixing in some of our schools is inevitable an dmust occur.

" . . . The admission of less than 1 per cent, for example one-tenth of 1 pe rcent of Negro children to schools theretofore attended only by white children is a small price to pay for the continued operation of our public schools, a small price to pay for the ability to keep the mixing within the bounds of reasonable control."

The Charlotte Observer, a paper known for its support of some school integration, said in an editorial today, supporting the decisions:

"If the law (pupil-placement) is administered fairly, and not by a yardstick of race, it probably will stand as a legal and effective instrument for keeping desegregation a limited and selective process."

Public reaction to the decision is still uncertain.

At Greensboro, a crowd so large that it could not fit inside the board room, stood outside on the lawn last night, peering through the windows and cheering a spokesman for the Anti-Integration Patriots of North Carolina.

"If this board tonight permits the integration of one single colored boy or girl to any branch of the school system in Greensboro, you shall be condemned, villified, damned and cursed," Greensboro attorney C. Leroy Shuping, sr., told board members.

"If you want to do any integrating, do it amongst yourselves," he declared as the crowd yelled its approval. "If you want to live down there with the colored people, then go ahead!"

Board members said they studied each application individually, considering among other factors closeness of the children's homes to the schools.

Board Lacks Discretion

The Charlotte board stated it had "sought the best legal advice and counsel," admitting the five because it had "no discretion to assign them elsewhere."

"The board has taken this step only with the greatest concern and after earnest and prayer consideration of the many complex factors involved. Its chief motivation has been a sincere desire to preserve the public schools of Charlotte and North Carolina," the official statement said.

Under the Pearsall Plan, the public schools could be closed.

The complicated measure provides for closing of schools through local option elections and for tuition grants so that pupils may attend private schools. It does not mention race and has had no legal test.

Chapel Hill Rejects Negro Pupil Request

News + Observer Thurs. 7-5-57 P.12

Raleigh N.C.

CHAPEL HILL, July 4 — The Chapel Hill School Board has rejected the sole application it received for transfer of a Negro pupil to a white school next fall.

As a result of the denial of the request of shoe repairman Preston R. Weaver in behalf of his 12-year-old son, James Vernon Weaver, the five local schools will again be totally segregated next year, unless Weaver appeals the board's decision and is successful in such an effort. He said today that he had not made up his mind as to whether or not he would do this.

The board issued a mimeographed account of the minutes of its committee-of-the-whole meeting of June 25 at which it unanimously agreed to deny the transfer request, but no reasons for the denial were made public.

Grey Culbreth, chairman of the board, said simply, "Mr. Weaver's reasons for wanting the reassignment were inadequate." He said the board members discussed the matter in great detail and based its committee-of-the-whole decision on many reasons, but that the members felt they should not make public these reasons.

The report of the committee-of-the-whole — denying the application — was unanimously adopted in short order with no discussion by the board at its regular meeting on Monday evening. This report listed persons present at the earlier committee meeting and carried a list of 10 factors discussed in evaluating the transfer application.

In adopting the committee-of-the-whole recommendation the board agreed to send this report to applicant Weaver and to inform him of his right to appeal this decision back to the board.

Admission of Negro Pupils Viewed As Aid to State's Legal Position

Sun 7-28-57

By JAY JENKINS

Raleigh Bureau, The Charlotte Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

P. 7-E

RALEIGH, N.C., July 27—The admission of 12 Negroes to white schools in three North Carolina cities will strengthen the state's legal position, according to one of the architects of the school legislation.

State Rep. Edward F. Yarborough of Louisburg, a member of the Pearsall Committee that drafted the revised school law, said, "I think it certainly strengthens our hand in the courts because it shows we have nondiscriminatory laws, administered by local boards."

The Charlotte city school board voted to admit five Negroes, Greensboro voted to admit six and Winston-Salem admitted one.

Patriots Protest

Representatives of the Patriots of North Carolina, Inc., ardent prosegregation organization, appeared before each of the three boards — which met simultaneously Tuesday night—to protest the action.

But C. L. Shuping of Greensboro, general counsel of the Patriots, said the organization has not met to decide what if any formal steps it will take.

Dr. Charles F. Carroll, state superintendent of public instruction, called for understanding. "I can only hope that the people of the state will comprehend and appreciate the burden of decision resting with the men and women who constitute school boards," he said.

"Such an understanding will permit boards and the communities they serve to determine and pursue a reasonable and intelligent course of action."

Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, chairman of the state school committee, said, "I would suppose, and I hope, that these school boards acted only after the most careful and prayerful study and consideration."

Pearsall said he assumed the three school boards "concluded that there was, under federal law as now interpreted by the court, no legal basis for denying the applications for reassignment. . . ."

Dr. I. Beverly Lake, Raleigh attorney who fought the Pearsall plan on grounds it was too mild, said, "I was disappointed by the action of the boards."

Lake disagreed with Yarborough on the legal effects. The admission "of Negroes to a white school by one school board would, in my opinion, have no bearing whatever on the validity of an assignment made by a different school board."

Col. W. T. Joyner, top lawyer in Raleigh and vice chairman of the Pearsall committee, told the state bar association last year that "some mixing of our schools is inevitable and must occur." He said his position is now the same.

"It is reasonable to expect that at some time in the future," Joyner said, other North Carolina school boards will likewise admit some Negroes.

NORTH CAROLINA

In Greensboro, the race relations committee of the Greensboro Ministers Fellowship adopted a resolution calling upon citizens ther to back the local school board. Said the resolution, "We approve of the program of moderation which is, on the one hand, to carry out the laws of our state and of the United States; while on the other, it is to make every effort to care for those who are disturbed by their action."

Those Tar Heels who feel admission of the Negroes will be a help legally point out that the rewritten school laws do not contain any reference to race. They think that admission of a few Negroes will buttress arguments before the court that the state is showing "good faith" in making assignments without regard to color.

Lawyer's Nightmare

Col. Joyner once put it in these words:

"One of the nightmares which besets me on a restless night is that I am in a federal court attempting to defend a school board in its rejection of a transfer requested by a Negro student, when a showing is made in the court that nowhere in all of the state of North Carolina has a single Negro ever been admitted to any one of the more than two thousand schools attended by white students."

Charlotte, while accepting five Negroes, rejected 35 more, including Kelly M. Alexander Jr., son of the state head of the NAACP. Greensboro turned down one Negro application and Winston-Salam three.

For the Patriots, Kenneth Whitsett appeared before the Charlotte board. He presented a petition he said bore 16,000 names of persons opposed to any integration. "You have put on yourself the blame for mixing the white race," he said. "You mean to tell me you can't get around this little handful of niggers?"

Patriot counsel Shuping told the Greensboro board, "There's absolutely no necessity for this board to destroy the integrity of Greensboro's public school system." In Winston-Salem, J. S. Kuykendall said the step would create "intolerable conditions—conditions that would lower the education standards and create a moral environment that prudent and wise parents will not tolerate."

Newspaper Reaction

Newspaper reaction included:

Charlotte Observer: "School commissioners in each of the three cities might have rejected all the applications for reassignment, thus inviting an inevitable court order for mandatory desegregation.

"They chose instead a saner course — conscious, evidently, that forced integration is laden with far greater hazard than a gradual, orderly, reasonable plan of compliance. They chose, too, a course that strengthens the validity of the pupil assignment law that must govern the pattern of school administration throughout North Carolina."

Greensboro Daily News: "Nobody can foresee how these experiments will work. But they do proclaim to the world that North Carolina at least will try to take a first step toward complying with the law of the land. She will not, through lack of sufficient forethought and planning, forfeit her moderate leadership to the extremists on either hand who want all or nothing."

Raleigh News and Observer: "With all deliberate speed the sensible South is showing that it can and will obey the law of the land without fear of chaos in its human relationships. . . . The small voice of Southern good sense and good will has been hard to hear above the clamor of the Kluxers and the kingpins, the demagogues and the defiant. In North Carolina the true voice of the best South has made itself heard."

The simultaneous decisions in the three cities culminated more than two years of planning on a cooperative basis. School boards from the cities met privately, in hotels and restaurants, on numerous occasions to discuss the problem.

Newspapers in the three cities wrote editorials, as the time for the announcement neared, designed to create a climate as favorable as possible for the boards' decisions. Actual board action came without any discussion and with only the issuance of a resolution dealing with the assignments.

Carolina Integrates

Atlanta Ga.

Three North Carolina communities have taken a small but significant step toward compliance with the Supreme Court's public school desegregation decision. Thurs. 7-25-57

Washington D.C.

It is a small step in the sense that only 12 Negro children (53 applied) are to be admitted to the public schools of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem next year. There is strong public sentiment against integration in North Carolina, however, and it is doubtful that the local school boards, with either wisdom or safety, could have undertaken more at this time.

It is a significant step because it reflects an awareness on the part of the Carolina school authorities that there must be some integration if the public school system is to be preserved. The State's pupil assignment plan has received tentative approval in the courts. But it certainly would not survive if used to close all white schools to all Negro applicants. So the local school boards, at least in these three cities, are moving cautiously toward some integration. At best, it will not be easy. In Greensboro, the board voted to admit six Negro children to white schools, and announced its readiness to transfer to all-white schools any white child whose parents objected to racially mixed classes. Even so, a prosegregation speaker berated the board, while an overflow crowd applauded him.

In other areas of North Carolina public reaction may be even more hostile and more bitter. But the alternative to some integration is to close the public schools, and the step which has been taken suggests that the school authorities do not propose to fall back on this drastic and, in the long run, probably unworkable device.

The Carolina action leaves Virginia, with its policy of no integration anywhere, in an isolated position. The Fourth Circuit Court, which tentatively approved the North Carolina assignment plan, has made it clear that Virginia's pupil placement plan cannot stand if it is used as a no-integration weapon. Despite this ruling, the State officials, so far, are standing pat. In our opinion, however, this can lead only to disaster for Virginia's public schools system. It is too bad that the Old Dominion authorities will not take a leaf from the North Carolina book, and turn this terribly difficult problem back to the local governing bodies for solution at the local level.

ECC Anniversary Speaker Says:

Opinion Clash Over Segregation Can Sound Educational Retreat

By JIM WHITFIELD.

GREENVILLE, March 8—One of the south's leading educators declared here today that he is willing to sacrifice some of his personal tastes and preferences to keep the cornerstone of free universal education.

Dr. Henry H. Hill, president of George Peabody College, said the clash of opinion over the question of segregation, intergration and moderation not only can prevent a modern educational renaissance, "but actually sound an educational retreat."

Principal Speaker.

He was principal speaker at a convocation in which East Carolina College blew out 50 years that glowed as candles of educational progress on its Golden Anniversary cake.

Town and gown merged on the campus to pause in a program of commemoration looking to the past half-century of teacher training here and looking to new horizons of progress for an institution that has seen its student body grow from an initial 174 to 3,500.

"I am far more concerned with the enhancement in value and scope of our public school system that I am with the precise method of living with the Supreme Court decision, "Dr. Hill, a native Tar Heel, declared.

"The cornerstone of my credo rests on free universal education", he continued, "and I am willing to sacrifice some of my personal tastes and preferences in order to keep that cornerstone." P.3

Dr. Purks Introduced.

Dr. Hill, introduced by Dr. James Harris Purks, Director of the North Carolina Board of Higher Education, said it cannot be reiterated too often than "An ignorant America cannot possibly survive or keep any of the ordinary liberties which we so value today, much less share an educational renaissance."

Noting that trends in elementary and secondary schools not only affect colleges, "but all of us ultimately," Dr. Hill said that he believes unquivocally that the dollar which North Carolinans pay in support of their public schools is their most productive tax dollar.

Convocation ceremonies began in Wright Memorial Auditorium, with Dr. John D. Messick, president of the college for a decade, presiding. Fifty-eight schools and learned societies were represented.

One Of First Students.

Among the former students returning was Mrs. Edmund H. Boyd, the former Lottie Brooks, of Greenville, Route 3, who was a member of the first student body.

Featuring the afternoon festivities was the dedication of R. M. Garrett Hall, the college's newest dormitory for women, named in honor of Radford Marvin Garrett, a former member of the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Messick presented the Garrett family. Radford M. Garrett III unveiled the portrait of his grandfather, which was accepted for the college by E. E. Rawl, member of the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Howard J. McGinnis, for many years registrar of the college and former acting president, told at a luncheon of the pioneer role East Carolina College has had in teacher training in North Carolina.

Civic clubs of Greenville held a dinner on the campus tonight to help the college wind up its activities for the day. Dr. Hill was speaker.

Students had a vacation for classes and some boys who had grown beards for the anniversary in a contest sponsored by a fraternity, proudly showed off their whiskers as they meandered about the campus.

Dean W. B. Harrell, at Western Carolina College for the past 10 years and a principal at Fayetteville, summed up the impressions many visitors got in their tour of the campus that followed the dormitory dedication.

Dean Harrell, who hadn't seen the campus in 18 years, told the News and Observer, "The thing that amazes me is the spirit I ran across as I met faculty and students. It didn't exist when I was here before. I've discovered what makes this college tick and it isn't tied up in building. Everyone seems to be caught in the spirit of where the school is going and are happy to help it go there."

3 Tar Heel Cities Are Integration Targets

Journal Sat. 6-15-57 P.1 Wilmington, N.C.

At least three North Carolina cities are being asked to integrate schools under the state's new Pupil Asignment Plan for the fall term.

Raleigh, Charlotte and Greensboro parents have filed applications on behalf of ther children to have them admitted to "white" schools.

In Raleigh, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Holt, Sr., 1018 Oberlin Rd., in a written application Tuesday urged the Raleigh School Board to reassign their son, Joseph Holt, Jr., to Needham Broughton High School from Ligon School for the 1957-58 term. The parents claimed that Ligon was more than three miles from their home and Broughton was only an eight-block distance.

This was the first formal application of a Negro for reassignment to a white school here. The board tabled the application for action at a later date.

GRENSBORO — The City of Greensboro has been asked officially for the first time to integrate its pubil schools.

Greensboro School Board officials said the board has received the first formal application from a Negro studen' for admission from a Negro student for admission to an all-white school this fall. Previously, the board has received several informal requests for school integration.

The formal request came from Josephine Ophelia Boyd, daughter of Mrs. Cora Lee Boyd of Greensboro. School board officials said the application will be considered by the school board at its next meeting, June 18.

Atty. J. Kenneth Lee earlier submitted a letter to the board asking that the girl be placed in a white school nearer her home. However, the board said the request was not formal and therefore no action could be taken.

School Supt. B. L. Smith also said the board has received a request from another Negro parent, Mrs. Geneva Bullock that her child, who will enter school for the first time this fall, be placed in a white school.

Smith said it will be up to the child to "present himself at the school of his choice" this fall, and that the matter will be settled at that time. P.2

Negroes rushed to meet a late afternoon deadline Tuesday for reassignment to white schools in Charlotte under a state pupil-assignment law designed to prevent school integration.

The morning mail brought four more applications to city school officials, raising the total number of requests to 38. Thirteen applications were received Monday.

The deadline for turning in applications for transfers was 5:15 p.m. Tuesday.

The 1955 state law gives local school boards the final decision in assignment of pupils to particular schools as a means of keeping the races separate, but it gives puplis the right to request certain schools.

The requested reassignments for the Negroes involved eight previously all-white schools. Most applicants said the white school sought would be nearer to their homes than the Negro school previously attended.

Forty-one students have filed applications with the city school board and five with the county board for re-assignment to non-segregated schools.

The action taken by these students places the school boards face to face with the desegregation of public schools.

Efforts to get the school boards to voluntarily present a comprehensive plan of implementing the U.S. Supreme Court decisions in the field of public education have been unsuccessful.

SPEARHEADING the attack are two community organizations, the NAACP, Charlotte branch and the Charlotte and Mecklenburg County Parents Committee on Education.

These groups have worked closely on the problem for two years with parent education programs and workshops on the meaning of the U.S. Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954 ruling segregation in public education unconstitutional.

The Charlotte and Mecklenburg County boards are now engaged in processing the request.

Kelly M. Alexander Jr., eight year-old son of North Carolina NAACP president, is requesting reassignment to a desegregated school.

Negro Boy Denied Seat in School

Star P.3-a Raleigh, N.C. Aug. 7-1957 Washington D.C.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 7 (AP). —The Raleigh City School Board yesterday voted 5 to 1, to deny the application of a Negro boy to enter a white high school.

Joseph Hiram Holt, jr., 14, had requested permission to attend the city's white high school, located nearer his home than the school for Negroes.

The dissenting vote was cast by Fred J. Carnage, a lawyer and the board's only Negro member. Mr. Carnage said he understood the difficulty in the first admission of a Negro student to white schools, but added, "The strain will be there five years from now. It is not fair to reject this boy's application, especially if it is on the basis of his being a Negro."

J. W. York, who made the motion to deny the application, said the board should do so "in the interest of the public and in the interest of the boy."

Leroy Martin, veteran board member, counseled a delay to "see how the matter works out in other cities." School boards in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro have assigned a total of 12 Negro students to previously all-white schools for the coming school term.

Court's School Decision Is Called New Bill of Rights'

News & Observer

KINSTON, June 5—Decision of the Supreme Court to abolish segregation in the public schools was described here tonight as a new Bill of Rights.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, mediator for the United Nations, expressed loyalty to the old Bill of Rights and his hopes in the new Bill of Rights in tying together freedom and democracy in America and freedom and peace in the world.

He addressed the graduating class of Kinston High School.

"It is a violation of the spirit of the historic Bill of Rights," he declared, "to single out for special penalties those free associations of people who were active in a lawful way regarding the decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases."

"What America does about our colored fellow citizens in stages of wisdom and good faith will largely determine in stages of wisdom and good faith the moral effectiveness of what America seeks to do in the world for the liberties of the individual, equal justice under law, peace and good will on earth, on which two-thirds of the people are colored."

Pointing to the South, he expressed the faith that "in the free minds and loyal hearts of millions of people of both races will live and growth in cooperation the unfulfilled teachings of religion, the democratic struggles of freedom for a higher freedom and the aspirations of the American dream with its message of hope in this age of suspicion, frustration and fear."

Between the "alternative of the annihilation of people and the cooperation of nations," he expressed the faith that the class of 1957 would mean the "dedication of youthful generations to universal brotherhood in the atomic age as the most necessary and practical way of human freedom, survival and progress on our shrinking little earth as the God-given home of the family of man."

He said that in the midst of high prosperity the low salaries paid teachers in America were "a violation of democratic decency, a barrier of balanced progress of the people and a blot on the greatness of a free society."

Dr. Graham expressed faith in the United Nations for:

1. Increasing the moral power of mankind through recommendations made up of two-thirds of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

2. In technical assistance and economic development programs against poverty, hunger, illiteracy and disease and for a more productive life of all people.

3. In beginning progressive steps in enforceable disarmament so that the old circle of fear, armaments, war and annihilation will give way to a new circle of faith, disarmament and more effective international cooperation with and within the United Nations.

4. Establishment of an international police force to grow from symbolic into increasingly effective power.

5. Atoms for peace, production and progress, instead of atoms for tyranny, war and human extinction.

Negro Children Put At A Disadvantage, Judge Says Of Laws

News & Courier P. 1

Wed. 6-12-57 Charleston, S.C.

By CHARLES WEST

ASHEVILLE, N.C., June 11 (AP)—Chief Judge John J. Parker said Virginia school laws put a Negro child at a "tremendous disadvantage" as he closed hearings today on two school integration cases.

Parker headed the three-judge U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals hearing of arguments concerning federal court integration orders in the schools of Norfolk and Newport News, Va. Sitting with the Charlotte jurist were Judges Simon E. Sobolof of Baltimore, Md., and Clement F. Haynsworth of Greenville, S. C.

AIM AT TWO LAWS

Attorneys for the school boards and the Negroes seeking admission to white schools concentrated their arguments on two of the state's new school laws—the pupil placement act and the law which cuts off state funds to integrated schools.

At one point during the hearing, Judge Parker asked:

"If you say the (state-wide) assignment board can place pupils, then say that to place a Negro in a white school the school will get no funds, aren't you in effect telling the board not to place Negroes in white schools"

'DON'T THINK SO'

"We don't think so, your honor," replied T. Justin Moore Sr., attorney for the Newport News School Board.

The court heard both cases together since attorneys for both sides agreed that the issues were identical:

1. Is the pupil placement act constitutional?

2. Should a three-judge court hear the case?

3. Did U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk "abuse his discretion" last February in ordering the schools to drop racial bars this fall?

The appellate court will hand down its ruling on the cases later.

"The real question," said Judge Parker, "is whether this case is controlled by the Charlottesville (Va.) case or the Warlich case."

Dist. Judge John Paul ruled last summer, before the school laws were passed, that Negro plaintiffs had no administrative relief and ordered integration of Charlottesville schools.

The Warlich case concerned a group of Old Fort, N. C., Negro students who sought to enter a white school there rather than drive several miles to another town to attend classes. A federal court ruled that the students had not exhausted their administrative relief outlined in North Carolina's pupil assignment law.

Moore said the Virginia placement law was "complete in itself." He added "the standards (for determining pupil assignment) are set out more clearly than in the North Carolina statute and far more clearly than in the South Carolina statute."

However, Spottswood W. Robinson III, National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People lawyer, contended that the assignment act should be considered in its "conjunctive relation" with the fund cut-off provision. In that respect, he said, it "does not afford an adequate relief."

Robinson told the court:

"The Legislature has made it impossible for the placement board to ever assign a student to a non-segregated school. . . The statute has it (the board) in a strait jacket."

On this same point, Judge Parker remarked:

"If you assume that the pupil placement act is constitutional, can it be said to furnish an adequate remedy if other laws prevent adequate relief?"

However, Judge Parker told Robinson, "There isn't any doubt that the Supreme Court has held we ought not to hold state statutes unconstitutional until the state courts interpret the statutes."

He added, "If you seek injunctive relief when the state Legislature affords administrative relief, the federal court is not going to enjoin state officials until you have exhausted administrative relief."

W. R. C. Cocke, appearing for the Norfolk School Board, said:

"It seems to me that under several decisions of the Supreme Court, several in the 4th Circuit and one in the 5th Circuit, it was mandatory that Judge Hoffman remit interpretation of Chapter 70 (placement act) to a state court for determination of validity. . .

"Unfortunately, Judge Hoffman appeared preoccupied with other aspects of oral argument and paid no attention to that point."

Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, Va., attorney for the Negroes, outlined the actions of the Virginia Legislature, governor and special commission since the May, 1954, Supreme Court school integration decision.

"It doesn't take any imagination to see. . . (that all this) is to maintain segregated schools," Hill said.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. concluded the arguments. He said the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia has ordered hearings on a Fairfax County, Va., case concerning the school laws.

"I see no escape from the proposition that the court would be called upon in that hearing to pass on the constitutionality of these school laws," he told the court.

"If a (Negro) child applies to Newport News for admission to a white school, the effect of the statutes would be to cut off state aid," Judge Parker said. "Wouldn't that affect the placement board?"

"Its impact operates on all children alike," Almond replied.

"I'm suggesting that this statute puts the child at a tremendous disadvantage," Judge Parker concluded.

Integration Problem Study Set

News & Observer

CHARLOTTE, June 25 (UP) — Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem city school leaders will meet here Wednesday in an attempt to develop "necessary and uniform action" on the 56 school integration requests facing them.

At the same time, the Charlotte city schools superintendent, E. H. Garinger, said many of the 41 requests asked only for "integrated schools" and failed to name a specific school, in accordance with the State's Pupil Assignment Law.

The meeting here will bring together school board chairmen and members and school superintendents and attorneys from the three cities.

All three cities have yet to take formal action on the mass of integration requests—41 in Charlotte, nine in Greensboro and six in Winston-Salem.

The Greensboro School Board at its June meeting postponed action on the request until its July meeting. The reason given was that "more time" was needed to study the reassignment applications.

Indications from Winston-Salem are that the Twin City school board is planning possible action on its six integration requests at its July meeting. These, said Asst. Supt. Marvin Ward, "were individual applications and no attorneys have appeared yet."

The Charlotte School Board has scheduled a meeting for Thursday, but no action on the integration requests is expected.

Meanwhile, two and possibly three other North Carolina cities also are confronted with school integration attempts.

One such application has been made in Raleigh and Chapel Hill each, and a formal reassignment application for a Negro student is believed in the making in Durham.

State's 1955 Pupil Assignment Act Attacked in U.S. District Court

Atlanta, Ga.

14d(1)

By JAY JENKINS

Raleigh Bureau, The Charlotte Observer
Special to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., Jan. 5—The most comprehensive lawsuit yet filed on the question of school segregation has been lodged in the U.S. Middle District Court in Greensboro.

It was brought on behalf of a group of minor Negro schoolchildren in Caswell County and seeks an end to segregation not only in that county, but in other schools in the state as well.

The suit marks the first time that this state's 1955 Pupil Assignment Act and the recently approved constitutional amendments relating to public schools have been brought under direct legal attack.

Denied admission to white schools in Caswell before the start of the 1956 school year, the Caswell Negroes appealed to the State Board of Education. The board turned down the appeal.

Seek Federal Relief

In the Greensboro action, the Negroes ask that a three-judge federal court be convened. They ask that the court enter a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining the Caswell school board and other such boards in the state from enforcing sections of the state constitution and general statutes.

These sections, the plaintiffs contend, perpetuate segregated schools.

The plaintiffs in the suit also asked the court to issue the necessary permanent orders requiring the defendants to present promptly a plan of desegregation to the court "which will expeditiously desegregate the schools of Caswell County and forever restraining and enjoining the defendants . . . from thereafter requiring these plaintiffs and all other Negroes of public school age to attend public schools in Caswell County and the State of North Carolina on a segregated basis."

The constitutional amendments, approved last Sept. 6, authorize state tuition grants for private schools, local option elections on the closing of schools, and provide a student cannot be held in violation of the compulsory school attendance law if he objects to attending a mixed school.

The Negro plaintiffs contend the amendments "have as their singular and sole purpose and effect the continuation of racial schools of the state by ciruitous methods that will abort, modify, nullify or defeat the spirit and purpose of the laws of the United States."

In addition, the plaintiffs pointed to a "Resolution of Condemnation and Protest" passed by the state legislature in July, 1955, during its special session. They allege the resolution was a declaration of "public policy" to "continue segregation of the races in public education . . . in violation of the constitution and laws of the United States."

The Caswell suit follows a somewhat similar action filed earlier from Montgomery County, an action still pending in Middle District Court. In the Montgomery case, the Negro plaintiffs have asked the court to permit them to amend their complaint so as to bring under fire the legality of the school amendments.

Meanwhile, the Advisory Committee on Education—which sponsored the school amendments—is pondering the question of proposing amendments to the assignment act when the Legislature convenes next month.

One amendment was suggested by a decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in a Tar Heel segregation suit. The court in that decision held that appeals to state courts from the rulings of school boards could not be considered part of the administrative remedy offered by the assignment act.

This means that cases will be short-circuited directly from the school boards to federal courts, thus costing the state much of the time it expected the assignment act to buy.

Some lawyers believe federal courts might look more kindly on the judicial appeal as part of an administrative remedy if the act could be changed slightly. Now it provides for jury trials in state superior courts which hear appeals from school boards.

It also provides that such trials will be "de novo," meaning the jury will disregard evidence put before the school board and consider only evidence—"new" evidence—presented to it in court.

Consider Pros, Cons

Both the jury aspect and the "de novo" proviso disturb some of the lawyers. If a judge alone could consider the appeal and base his decision on evidence presented to the school board, the state's position would be strengthened, these lawyers believe.

On the other side of the coin, state officials along with the advisory committee are afraid submission of such amendments in the next Legislature would open a Pandora's box out of which would come extreme legislation on the issue.

So long as Gov. Hodges and the committee do not propose new school legislation, they will have an excellent argument against any other school bills.

BOARD ANSWERS NEGRO PETITION

Charlotte Body Says Desegregation Initiative Rests With Individual

Sat. 3-30-57

CHARLOTTE, March 29 (AP)—The initiative for desegregated schools, Charlotte Negroes were told today, rests with the individual and not with the city school board.

This was the heart of the Board's reply to Negroes posting an appeal for the board to voluntarily initiate a desegregation plan.

14d(1)

Explanatory Answer.

The answer consisted of an explanation of North Carolina's Pupil Assignment Act and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals interpretation of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision.

School Board Chairman Herbert Spaugh told the Negroes:

"No door is closed. . . our schools bear no signs saying "No Admittance."

In replay to questions from individuals among the 26-member Negro delegation, City School Superintendent E. H. Garinger said no applications had been made by Negroes seeking tranfer from their own schools to white schools.

It was a generally calm, well-tempered session.

Led By Alexander.

The 26-member delegation, representing the Charlotte and Mecklenburg County Parents Committee on Education and including several Negroes from Winston-Salem, was led by Kelly M. Alexander of Charlotte, state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Several in the audience said afterward:

"We didn't know about making application for transfers to schools nearest us."

They indicated such applications will be made.

School Board Attorney Brock Barkley gave them this explanation of the nature of any desegregation move.

School Named for Bunche

WELDON, N.C. — Currently boasting a student body of over 1,000 enrollees the Halifax County Training School has been renamed "The Ralph J. Bunche High School." The school has been in existence since the latter part of the nineteenth century.

Pupils Seek Admission At All Levels

Newport Courier Fri. 6-7-57

Charleston S.C.

CHARLOTTE, N.C., June 6 (AP)—Seven Negro pupils applied today to attend white elementary, junior high, and high schools in Charlotte.

J. F. Hobson, vice chairman of the City School Board, acknowledged receipt of the applications and said:

"They will be given due consideration in proper order."

The applicants represented three families. Five applicants specified white schools they wished to attend and two asked reassignment to a "desegregated school." Charlotte has no desegregated public schools.

MEETS JUNE 13

Hobson indicated the applications may be considered at the next regular meeting of the school board, scheduled June 13.

The applications came from two children of Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Hawkins, four children of machine operator Murray Hamlin and one child of house worker Mrs. Clara Stitt.

Hawkins, a dentist, enclosed a letter with the application from his children. It called for a general desegregation of Charlotte schools.

RELIEVE CROWDING

"It is felt," he wrote, "that if the schools are desegregated, the children living closer to schools in their neighborhoods could attend those schools, thus relieving the crowdedness at Biddleville (a Negro school) and the end results would be better educational opportunities for all concerned and uncrowded schools."

Virginia's new segregation laws on trial

News P.14-a Sun. 6-9-57

Birmingham Ala.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., June 8—(AP)—Virginia's new hold-the-line segregation laws will get vital legal tests Tuesday in appeals of Norfolk and Newport News from federal court school integration orders.

The cases will be heard by the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

14d(1)

The court's decision could mean closing of public schools in the two Virginia cities. Three points are at issue:

1. The constitutionality of the Virginia school segregation laws, especially the Pupil Placement Act.

2. Whether U. S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk abused his discretion in ordering the schools to drop color barriers this Fall.

3. Whether the three-judge appeals court should review the decisions—a technical issue.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People brought the suits in 1956 to admit Negroes to white schools of the two cities.

HOFFMAN last February ordered the schools to begin desegregation this Fall.

A month before his desegregation orders, Hoffman called the Pupil Placement Act "unconstitutional on its face" and denied motions to dismiss the suits.

However, his ruling did not touch other phases of the state's new segregation laws—withholding of state funds from integrated schools, automatic closing of schools in which integration takes place until the governor intervenes, and state operation of schools on an "efficient" (defined by law as segregated) basis.

THE PLACEMENT ACT keeps pupils in their present schools and establishes three-man local boards to handle transfers or advancements of pupils.

The act directs the boards to consider health, welfare, aptitudes, availability of facilities and "the sociology, psychological and like intangible social-scientific factors as well prevent as nearly as possible a condition of socio-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

Raleigh School Authorities Delay Decision On Negro Student's Application

News & Observer
Raleigh, N.C.
Wed. 12-5-57

Action was postponed yesterday by the Raleigh School Board on an application for Joseph Hiram Holt Jr. to transfer from Ligon Junior - Senior High School to Broughton High School for 1957-58.

The application is to be considered at a regular meeting of the Board when all seven members are present.

Board member Leroy Martin said the Board had made a gentlemen's agreement a year or two ago not to "take up integration of races until we have a full membership of the Board present."

It was the first application of a Negro to attend a previously all-white school received by the Board since it adopted a pupil assignment policy last month. The policy is in keeping with the law passed by the Legislature in 1956 in an apparent effort to continue segregation in the public schools.

Martin pointed out that Board Member Victor Fisher had told members at the last meeting he would be in St. Louis and would not attend yesterday's meeting.

Another board member, Mrs. Harriet Pressly, attended the closed luncheon session of the Board but left at the beginning of the open session because of previous engagements. Only the election of school personnel was taken up during the luncheon session, said Superintendent Jesse O. Sanderson.

J. W. York said he was not aware that any agreement had been made not to discuss integration matters without all Board members present.

Martin said the members had agreed on it without a single dissent a year or two ago. York was appointed to the Board in March of this year.

Fred Carnage, only Negro member of the Board, concurred with Martin.

York then said he thought all such applications should be taken up at regular meetings of the Board because "everybody knows when the regular meetings are and could plan to attend."

Mayor Fred B. Wheeler, Board chairman, asked "These applications will be acted on before school starts?"

Martin said, "Yes, in the reasonable future."

The pupil assignment policy passed by the Board provides that children be assigned to attend the same school in 1957-58 attended in 1956-57.

The polcy provides also that parents of a pupil desiring a transfer of their child from one school to another must file a written application with the Board 60 days prior to the opening date of school. The 1957-58 term will begin on Sept. 4.

The Holts, who live at 1018 Oberlin Road, applied in August, 1956, for their son to attend Daniels Junior High School. The application was turned down because it did not meet time requirements established by the Board.

Joseph Holt Jr., 14, completed the ninth grade at Ligon School for 1956-57, was promoted to the 10th grade and reassigned to the same school for the coming school term. Sanderson said yesterday the boy's grades at Ligon were "reasonably good." He said the application stated the boy's father is a shipping clerk at the N. C. Equipment Company and that the mother had told him she taught in the county school system.

Mr. and Mrs. Holt gave as their reasons for wanting their son transferred to Broughton: attendance at Ligon is an illegal inconvenience; assignment to Ligon was made on racial basis to continue total segregation in the schools; Ligon is more than three miles from pupil's home while Broughton is only eight blocks away; Broughton offers fuller academic and extracurricular program; and attendance at Broughton would remove illegal stigma of racial segregation.

The Board also delayed action on several applications for children not attending Raleigh schools last year to attend them in 1957-58 and on applications of pupils for transfer from the schools to which they have been assigned to others. The transfers received from Negroes were to attend other Negro schools. The situation was the same for white pupils, said Sanderson.

Such applications for transfer are received every year, said Sanderson. He gave as an example the case of a child being transferred from the school he would normally attend to another so he might stay after school with his grandmother.

The Board agreed these applications will be taken up "as a group" later.

The Board reasigned 65 students to relieve crowded conditions at Crosby-Garfield School and Ligon Junior-Senior High School.

Thirty-five students were transferred from Crosby-Garfield to Lucille Hunter School and 15 others were transferred from Crosby-Garfield to Washington School. Also transferred to Washington were 15 Ligon students.

Sanderson explained that many people were having to move out of the Washington Terrace area leaving "plenty of classrooms at Washington School but causing other schools to be a little crowded.

Sanderson said the schools were "all pretty close together" and expressed the belief the change would not work a hardship on students.

Carnage made the motion that the suggested changes be approved.

Chapel Hill denies bid to mix school

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 12-28-57

CHAPEL HILL — A father who made application for his son to attend the Chapel Hill white elementary school about four weeks ago is pondering on the next step in his efforts to have his son admitted to the white grammar school here.

The Chapel Hill Board of Education last week rejected the application of local shoe repairman Preston Weaver, filed on behalf of his son, and notified him of the action.

HE CAN appeal the board's action to the school board but said that he had "no comment" to make on his possibly pursuing that course.

The school board accepted a recommendation made by a committee of its members that Weaver's application be denied. Reasons for denying the application were not specified.

C. W. Davis, superintendent of schools here and secretary of the board, said the school board's six members voted unanimously to follow the recommendations of the committee.

DAVIS SAID Weaver can appeal the decision to the school board. Should the board refuse to change its decision, Weaver could resort to court action. The rejection means that Chapel Hill schools will remain segregated for another year.

Weaver's application was the only such application filed and should he resort to court action it is unlikely any decision will be made before the school terms for 1957-58 begins.

41 Negro Pupils Seek Admission to White Schools In Charlotte

News & Observer
Raleigh, N.C.
Wed. 12-5-57

CHARLOTTE, June 11 (UP)—Applications for three more Negro children to attend white schools here were squeezed in under a deadline today, bringing the total of such applications for the fall term to 41.

The city schools office said Mrs. Sara Foster Spencer, a Negro, appeared at the school office at 4:45 p.m. with applications for her three children to attend different Negro schools.

A spokesman said the woman was advised her applications were not notarized and that she left. The spokesman said when Mrs. Spencer returned with the applications notarized, the forms had been changed to request transfer to white schools.

Four other applications, all asking that Negro children be reassigned to white schools nearer their homes, were received in the mails this morning.

The deadline for applications for reassignment for the fall term was 5:15 p.m. today.

City School Superintendent E. H. Garinger was out of town today, but he said Monday the application would not be taken up at the board's next regular meeting Thursday. He said the application could not be processed by Thursday.

But Garinger said all of the applications would be fully processed.

Under North Carolina law, pupils are assigned to schools solely by the local school boards. The boards' decision may be appealed to state courts.

SIX NEGROES SEEKING GREENSBORO ADMISSION

GREENSBORO, June 11 (AP)—The Greensboro school system has received five more formal applications from Negroes for transfer to all-white schools, including one to Curry School of Woman's College.

This makes six received to date. Today was the deadline for transfer applications.

The application of Cheryl Edmonds, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Edwin R. Edmonds, to transfer from Lincoln Junior High School to Curry School High School caused some confusion both in the city school office and at Curry.

Curry is not a part of the Greensboro shool system but is operated by the Woman's College and comes under the direct administration of the chancellor.

Principal Herbert Vaughn of Curry said he did not know what procedure would be followed in handling such a situation "since it never came up before."

Five White Parents Asking Court to Overrule Decision

News & Observer
Raleigh, N.C.
Sat. 8-3-57

CHARLOTTE, Aug. 2 (AP)—Five white parents today appealed to Superior Court to overrule the decision of this city's school board to admit five Negro children to white schools here.

The appellants all have youngsters attending the two high schools and two junior high schools where the Negroes were reassigned July 22 for classes starting in September.

The white parents filed their appeal under a section of North Carolina's pupil assignment law passed in 1955 providing that:

"Any person aggrieved by the final order of a county or city board of education may at any time within ten days from the date of such order appeal therefrom to the superior court . . ."

Under the law the case would be heard before a jury.

School board attorney Brock Barkley said he understood the law provided the appeal for those who were refused reassignment by the school board, adding that dissatisfied parents of either race could request transfers for their children and tuition supplements.

The appellants as "citizens and taxpayers aggreived by the order of the school board" took the appeal in the names of themselves and on behalf of "all other parents and taxpayers similarly situated."

Listed as appellants were James J. Ross, Mrs. J. P. Reid, W. E. Doster, Thomas L. Hughes and Mrs. M. H. Lowe.

In Greensboro where the school board also voted to admit Negro students to white classes, several white parents have requested that their children be transferred to other schools not admitting colored students this fall.

'Gradual' School Integration Program Unfolding In Fact Now

News + Observer Raleigh N.C. Sun. 8-11-57

By WILLIAM A. SHIRES.
United Press Staff Writer.

North Carolina's "gradual" school integration program is unfolding in fact now and for the officials who put the plans on paper it's like walking a tightrope.

These State officials feel that North Carolina adopted and enacted the most practical, sensible and workable program for meeting the school segregation problem that has yet been devised. But, because of its gradual features and its so-called "safety valve" mechanics, it drew opposition. Opposition came from both sides of the segregation fence.

These opponents were the people Gov. Luther H. Hodges called "extremists" in his pleas for patience, calmness and a chance to see if the program he recommended would work.

Crisis Ahead.

In about a month the crisis of actual integration in three major North Carolina cities will be reached. That will be the day on which Negro pupils actually attend schools in Charlotte, Winston - Salem and Greensboro which have been heretofore for white pupils only.

The framers of the State's 1955 Pupil Assignment Law Pearsall Plan are holding their breath.

Already there have been protests—protests from both sides, from segregationists who oppose mixing the races in any degree in any school, and from integrationists who say the first steps toward integration were not in "good faith," that it is still discriminatory to accept some and refuse many.

Will there be trouble? Will North Carolina be subjected to race incidents and violence such as that which flared at Clinton, Tenn., and other points last year?

The officials who thought out the North Carolina program say this depends upon how well the local school boards determine local conditions.

Raleigh Not Ready.

In Raleigh, where only one Negro pupil applied for re-assignment to a white school this year, the school board decided that the time was not yet ripe—that the city was not yet ready to accept integration. It conceded that integration in Raleigh is certain to come eventually.

Raleigh is, in its makeup, really an Eastern North Carolina town and it is in Eastern North Carolina that segregation sentiment is strongest, that the traditional separation of the races in the old agricultural economy of the South is deeply entrenched. Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro are in the more industrial Piedmont.

There are numerous local factors bearing on the segregation issue which are taken into account by local boards reaching decisions on pupil assignments. The State officials who urged placing the authority for such decisions in hands of local boards back in 1955 insist that no single policy would work for the entire State.

Conditions prevailing in Greensboro, for example, may be greatly different from those in an eastern county such as Northampton, or the town of Rich Square, when it comes to the matter of whether racial integration will work.

At the time the Pupil Assignment Law was enacted, the Legislature adopted a policy statement that integration at that time would not work in North Carolina, could not immediately be accomplished and that to attempt it would result in chaos and possible destruction of the public school system.

In two years school boards in three cities of the State have concluded that conditions have become such that, on a limited, gradual scale, integration might be attempted.

In the smaller cities such as Old Fort, Bryson City and Yanceyville where Negroes' applications have been rejected for one reason or another, the feeling is that conditions are not yet such that integration could be accomplished. That such feelings on the part of the school boards are disputed creates tension and a possible trouble spot.

At Bryson City when the school board met last week to decide on the applications of seven Negro pupils for assignment to Swain County high school, a large number of white high school students gathered on the downtown streets that night. Most of them were teen-age boys. There was no trouble. Word spread quickly that the applications were rejected. But town police went out and talked to the boys, and kept a watchful eye.

Trouble might have erupted on the streets that night had the Negroes' applications been accepted, and undoubtedly the school board knew of the local conditions which resulted in such feeling.

North Carolina's plans, as written into law by the 1955 Legislature and at a special session a year ago, includes two safeguards for both sides in the touchy, explosive issue.

Should a school board fail to act in good faith, its decisions may be appealed to the courts.

Should a school board make a mistake in judgment, the Pearsall Plan has a unique "safety valve" feature designed to prevent trouble or violence. That is the local option-tuition grants plan, whereby school patrons in a local option unit (a local school district) may petition for a vote on whether to close a school or schools because of "intolerable" situations. If the local electorate then decides to close the schools, the State would support a system of private schools with pro-rata tuition grants until such time that the public schools might be reopened.

There were many legislators who, only a year ago, told reporters that they had fervent hopes that the local option-tuition grants feature would never be used.

Legal Confusion

Journal + Sunday Raleigh N.C. Sept. 8, 1957

NORTH Carolina adopted a pupil assignment plan which gives local school boards the right to administer it. The plan contains provisions for appeal to the board and from court to court until it reaches the State Supreme court. By that time the appellant will be too old to attend grammar school, and will have to start all over again.

The Federal Circuit Court of Appeals presided over by JUDGE JOHN J. PARKER, has held that the plan is constitutional. The same court held that the Virginia plan is unconstitutional.

14d(1)

Under the North Carolina plan 12 colored pupils were assigned to schools other than those they had been attending.

N.C.

Five were Charlotte pupils. Twenty-five colored pupils were turned down by the Charlotte board.

Almost immediately, parents of 24 of those turned down gave notice of appeal. Following close on that the parents of five of the Charlotte white pupils who were assigned to the schools to which the colored pupils were ordered, gave notice of appeal.

Also there is a similar appeal by Greensboro parents.

Can anyone imagine a more complex legal situation confronting the courts?

Much of this is due to one thing—one rusty mental defect in American democracy: When the United States Supreme Court interprets a law in the light of the constitution, some rural lawyer with a criminal law practice, or some plain operating politician who happens to be a member of the state legislature, a governor, or a congressman, comes out with a manifesto which says that the Supreme Court is in error, and maliciously so. And too many people believe what the small bore lawyer or the working politician says.

N. Carolina Integration Hearing Set

Post and Herald Jerne. Herald

GREENSBORO, N. C., Aug. 23 (AP)—A Superior Court hearing has been called for next Thursday on efforts by white parents to block assignment of six Negro school children to previously all-white public schools here.

Judge L. Richardson Preyer announced the hearing yesterday, and said he would rule then on a petition for a restraining order to prevent the partial integration of three schools which open Sept. 3.

A number of parents who have children in the Gillespie Park Elementary, Gillespie Park Junior High and Greensboro Senior High Schools petitioned for the restraining order, and asked that the board's assignment of the six Negro pupils be set aside.

Noting that a civil jury trial could not be heard before schools open on Sept. 3, the petition asked that Judge Preyer issue a temporary restraining order that would keep the schools segregated.

Judge Preyer noted in his order that "the Greensboro City Board of Education should be heard before granting an injunction."

This will mark the first time since the school board decided July 23 to admit the Negro students who had applied for reassignment that the issue will be heard in the courts.

Only Wednesday the school board reaffirmed its decision to admit the Negro children. Robert F. Mosely, board attorney, said then that nothing short of a restraining order from the courts would alter the action of the school board.

North Carolina Schools to Seek Enlarged Integration

Charlotte, N. C.—Parents of 36 school children whose applications for admission to previously all-white schools were turned down by the Charlotte school board met here July 25 to prepare an appeal to the school board for reconsideration of the rejected applications.

On July 23 the school board voted to assign to white schools five of the 41 children who applied. Similar action was taken by school boards in Winston-Salem and Greensboro in accordance with the state's pupil assignment act permitting local action to integrate the schools. Winston-Salem reassigned one child and Greensboro, six. A total of 51 pupils made application for reassignment in the three cities.

Voluntary Step

The decision to admit 12 of the applicants to "white" schools was the first voluntary step towards integration of the elementary and secondary public schools in North Carolina and the first break in the hitherto solid defiance of the Supreme Court's ban on segregated education by authorities in eight southern states. In addition to North Carolina, these include Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Commenting of the action of the three school boards, Kelly Alexander, president of the North Carolina Conference of NAACP branches, said: "It is encouraging to see North Carolina move into the class of responsibility as to implementation of the Supreme Court decision in the field of public education. The school boards of Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro are to be commended for . . . approving the admission of Negro pupils to previously all-white schools. The NAACP in North Carolina had predicted that school boards in the larger cities of western North Carolina would take the leadership in the desegregation of the public schools of the state."

White Patrons' Petitions Are Thrown Out of Court

A last-ditch legal effort by white parents in two North Carolina cities to prevent integration of the public schools failed yesterday when judges in two separate actions threw their petitions out of court.

The actions of the two judges was similar. At Charlotte, Judge J. Will Pless denied the petition of a group of white parents for a temporary injunction to prevent the enrollment of four Negro children at previously all-white public schools.

Judge Pless also dismissed the parents' appeal seeking a jury hearing on the reassignment of the disputed Negro pupils.

In a similar hearing at Greensboro, Judge L. Richardson Preyer turned down the bids of white parents to halt the enrolling of six Negro children to white schools Tuesday.

"Class Actions".

Judge Pless' ruling came after he had agreed with Brock Barkley, attorney for the Charlotte board, that the original appeal by the white parents, on which all subsequent maneuvers have been based, was a "class action" on behalf of a group.

Barkley argued, and Pless agreed, that Federal court rulings have made it clear that any actions under the North Carolina Pupil Assignment Act must be on behalf of individuals, not groups.

Parker Whedon, attorney for the white parents, denied that the appeal was ever intended to be a class action. After the judge had ruled against his group, Whedon said they would appeal to the State Supreme Court.

Tribute To Laws.

Judge Pless also paid tribute to North Carolina's new school laws pertaining to the race-school issue known as the "Pearsall Plan." This legislation, adopted by the 1955 and 1956 General Assemblies, provides for the assignment of pupils by local boards, and allows "safety valves" for local use in handling desegregation problems.

The judge said this legislation "makes it possible for the state to live under the law and still avoid 'social revolution.'"

"If the Pearsall plan is not obeyed, we will find ourselves under order of a federal court that will call for integration so fast we won't have a chance to do anything about it," Pless added.

Noting that the desegregation dispute stemmed from the U.S. Supreme Court rulings in 1954 and 1955, Judge Pless declared:

"We can't secede from the union, you know. If we're going to live in these United States, we've got to obey the laws."

The appeals which touched off the series of legal events leading to today's hearings were filed early this month. At Charlotte, the original appeal was filed by five parents of children attending the four white schools to which Negroes were assigned. Since then the list of parents whose names were added to the action went up to more than 200.

The parents here and at Greensboro argued they were "aggrieved" by the desegregation decision, that effective operations of the schools would be impossible except in conformity with community attitudes and beliefs; that the move was not for the best interest of the Negro children involved, and that it "will gravely endanger the safety and welfare" of both white and Negro children involved.

At Greensboro, Judge Preyer turned down the requested injunction on grounds that the white parents were not "aggrieved" and that their petition constituted "class action."

Judge Preyer, in his judgment denying the restraining order, said aggrieved persons and the only ones who may appeal to the courts (under the pupil assignment act), are only those persons whose application for enrollment to a public school has been denied.

None of the children whose parents were parties to the two actions heard before the court Thursday had been denied enrollment.

The Greensboro jurist also noted that the purpose of the act was to give full and complete authority over the assignment of pupils to the school board:

"The Court holds that no lagal rights of the appellants have been damaged by any action of the school board . . . that its members acted after long and prayerful consideration and that they acted with the intent and purpose of maintaining the constitutionality of the Pupil Assignment Act . . . that none of the appellants is a 'person aggrieved' within the meaning of the term as used by the pupil assignment act;

"That the judgment of the court is that the appeal of the appellants is a class action and the North Carolina Superior Court has ruled that the rights given under the Pupil Assignment Act and the rights to be enforced by the courts under that act are the rights of individuals and not those of a class or a group. It is the opinion of the court that this is a class action."

School Racial Row Surprises Briton

RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 2 (AP).—The Lord Mayor of Salisbury, England, expressed amazement yesterday at the "suggestion of trouble between the whites and blacks" over educational matters in this country.

In a speech delivered at the closing session today of the 48th annual session of the North Carolina League of Municipalities, Alfred E. Batt said he couldn't imagine children "not being happy in their schools."

"I've seen the wonderful training colleges, the lovely schools you have for both colored and white. Although our schools are improving they could not compare with the schools for your Negroes," Mr. Batt said.

Integration Case Reaches High Court From Guilford

A group of white school patrons who failed last summer to block limited integration of Greensboro schools under the Pupil Assignment Act took their case to the State Supreme Court yesterday.

The appeal of the white parents from the Greensboro school board's ruling admitting six Negroes to white schools was dismissed in Guilford Superior Court on Aug. 29 as a "class action."

In their appeal to the Supreme Court, the white parents contended the Greensboro Board of Education's order mixing the schools is not in the best interests of the Negro children and "gravely endangers the health, safety and welfare" of children in the schools.

They also complain that "no adequate remedy at law is available" to them under the Pupil Assignment Act.

The board's answer to the appeal asserts that it was required to admit the Negro pupils in question to white schools under the United States Constitution and the laws of the State.

To the white parents' contention that integration "will disrupt the orderly and efficient administration" of the schools, the board answered: "It is not impossible to operate the schools in Greensboro in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of North Carolina."

The board again contends that the appeal is a class action not permitted under the Pupil Assignment Act because "the act requires that any appeal from an order of the board be confined to such an order in respect to a single person . . ."

In dismissing the appeal last Aug. 29, Judge L. Richardson Preyer also denied the white parents' request for a temporary order restraining the board from integrating the schools pending their appeal to the Supreme Court. This would have blocked the limited integration which went into effect in September.

Noting that the Assignment act has been held constitutional "on its face," Judge Preyer found that "no legal rights of the petitioners or appellants have been injuriously affected by the action of the Board of Education in making reassignments of the pupils complained of . . ."

He said the intent of the school board was to uphold the constitutionality of the Assignment Act. Greensboro school officials, along with those in Charlotte and Winston-Salem, admitted a limited number of Negro pupils to white schools on July 23.

Charlotte Board Plans to Allow Four Negroes to Enter Schools

News & Observer Sun. 8-18-57 p. 11-I

Raleigh N.C.

CHARLOTTE, Aug. 17 (AP)—The Charlotte Board of Education let it be known that it intends to allow four Negroes to enter previously all-white schools next month despite a legal effort by a group of white parents to prevent any desegregation.

The board moved in Mecklenburg Superior Court yesterday for the dismissal of the appeal by five white parents.

Board attorney Brock Barkley, said: "The Board of Education will have to proceed on the presumption that the appeal is a nullity."

This means that, barring a court order to the contrary, the board will proceed with limited desegregation as scheduled.

Parker Whedon, attorney for the white parents, has taken the position that until their appeal is acted on, the reassignments cannot be put into effect.

The appeal was filed Aug. 2 by the parents, all of whom have children in schools opened to Negroes by the board's July 23 action.

They said they were "aggrieved" by the Board's decision and asked that the whole issue of reassignment of the four Negroes to white schools be re-heard in Superior Court. They cited a provision of the Pupil Assignment Act in making their request.

In asking dismissal of the appeal Friday, the school board contended:

1. The appeal was made in the form of a class or joint action (on behalf of a group), and combined the several actions for reassignment of the Negro children. The Pupil Assignment Act allows only individual actions.

2. The appellants are provided a remedy in the form of transfers to other public schools or tuition grants to attend private schools, and are not "aggrieved" in the meaning of the Pupil Assignment Act.

3. In the event such an appeal is legal under the Pupil Assignment Act, complainants would first have to request a hearing before the school board after the board's initial decision. This the appellants have not done.

4. There is an error in the form of the appeal in that the parents of the children involved are not listed.

Charlotte School Board Kills Transfer Appeals

Post and Times Herald

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Aug. 15 (AP)—The Charlotte School Board, which on July 23 admitted five Negroes to previously all-white schools, today turned down appeals from 20 Negroes to whom it had denied reassignment earlier.

The school board issued no statement but adopted the report of the committee-as-a-whole which heard the appeals on Aug. 2.

Among those denied an appeal was Kelly Alexander Jr., son of the head of the Charlotte chaper of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

On July 23 the school board heard requests from 40 Negroes that they be reassigned to white schools. Some specifically requested white schools nearer their residences; others asked to be moved to "desegregated schools."

The board approved five of the requests and turned down 35. Of the five, it was later learned that one had moved to another location, so his reassignment to a white school was removed. Twenty of the 35 appealed their denials of reassignment.

White Teen-Agers Attack Girl As She Leaves School

Charlotte Observer

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — (ANS) — A 16-year-old Negro girl student was attacked by an estimated 150 white teen-agers as she left a Charlotte high school where she had just enrolled as its first integrated student.

Two white children were arrested shortly after the beating on charges of assault and disorderly conduct.

Thurs. 9-5-57

Dorothy Geraldine Counts, 16, one of three to attend separate high schools in Charlotte Wednesday was stoned, spat upon and hit with a stick as she left her new school. She was not seriously injured.

Her father, the Rev. Herman L. Counts, professor of religion at Charlotte's Johnson C. Smith University was accompanying his daughter at the time of the attack. There were no adults in the threatening crowd.

SMALL CROWDS

Two other Negroes attended Charlotte schools Wednesday. There was no violence, but in each case small crowds gathered shouting, "Go Home N.....r."

Four Negroes were scheduled to begin classes Wednesday, but one girl's parents notified her school she could not attend.

Six Greensboro Negro students went to classes peacefully for the second day without incident.

One student is scheduled to be integrated into a Winston Salem high school.

NO COMMENT

North Carolina Gov. Luther Hodges, when informed of the disturbance, refused an immediate comment.

Police helped Dorothy and her father get away from the unruly mob and then singled out Liston Flowers, 18, a tenth grade student who they charged threw the stick which hit the young girl.

Patricia Smith was also taken into custody for spitting on Dorothy and her father. She was charged with disorderly conduct.

Dorothy had told reporters before she entered Harding High School that she was glad to be there and did not expect any violence.

Twenty Are Denied School Entrance

Daily World Sun. 8-18-57

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Twenty Negroes here lost their appeals Thursday to enter all-white Charlotte schools.

Atlanta Ga.

After accepting five out of 40 Negroes requesting to enter the all-white schools last July 23, the Charlotte school board turned down appeal requests from 20 persons it had previously denied entrance to the schools.

Four of the original five Negro students are still planning to enter the white schools, it was disclosed. One has since moved to another location.

43 Apply For Admission To White Schools

Reminder

YANCEYVILLE, N. C. — (ANP) — The Caswell County school board received 43 Negro applications here last week for admission to previously all-white schools in the county beginning with the school term this fall. School will open Sept. 4 in the county.

Sept 8-24-57

Submitted to the school board by John L. Jeffers of Blanch, N. C., father of one of the pupils, applications gave reasons for transfer, such as: "closet school," "school nearest home," "nearest non-segregated school," "nearest fully equipped school," and "nearest school on non-segregated system."

Many of the applicants are among a group which has a suit pending in federal court asking that integration be started in the county. The board is expected to make a decision on those applications at its regular meeting later this month.

Negroes Denied Admission To White School

Wash. Post & Times Herald Wed. 10-16-57

MARION, N.C., Oct. 15 (AP) — The McDowell County Board of Education last night gave a final "no" to requests of 66 Negro students that they be transferred to the all-white Old Fort School.

This followed a statement of the board that entrance of Negro students into the white school "would probably endanger the health and safety of students."

Charleston S.C.

The board said the white Old Fort school already is overcrowded — to such an extent the superintendent of schools has been instructed to transfer as many students as possible to other units.

The board said two laboratories and a library are now being used for classrooms at the school.

Requests of the 66 students for transfer to the white school already had been turned down by the board. However, following this previous decision, attorneys for the Negroes requested a series of hearings in which evidence could be presented.

But no Negro applicants showed up at any of the hearings and the attorneys subsequently said they would waive presentation of evidence and await a final decision of the board.

The board turned down the original requests on the grounds applications of the Negroes for transfer were not properly filled out.

The board said today evidence showed that a number of the "alleged petitioners" had not authorized the Raleigh law firm of Taylor and Mitchell to act for them and this "raised in the minds of members of the board serious questions and doubts of the good faith of the applicants in each case."

State Won't Tolerate Violence Over School Mixing, Hodges Says

North Carolina, which next week moves into its first experience with integrated public schools, will not tolerate any violence, Governor Hodges said yesterday.

In a five-line preliminary statement on a "report to the people" he will make next Tuesday night, the Governor volunteered comment on school board decisions at Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro to admit some Negroes to white schools this year.

Personal Views.

"My personal views against mixing the races is well known," he said.

"Without judging whether recent actions by some local school boards are right or wrong in accepting or rejecting Negro applicants, I want to emphasize that the State and the people of North Carolina will not tolerate any lawlessness or violence in connection with this problem," the Governor said.

He indicated he'd have more to say on the subject in his Tuesday speech to the North Carolina Associated Press Broadcasters here. The Governor's office put out word Wednesday that his speech, which will be broadcast, would include comment on school and racial problems.

He chose to make his no-violence statement yesterday at his weekly press conference, the Governor said, "because some public schools will be open before Tuesday."

Previously, Governor Hodges had said he "neither approved nor disapproved" the limited integration action taken by the Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro school boards.

It was his understanding, he had said, that the State, by adopting the Pupil Assignment Law and the Pearsall Plan, had turned school segregation problems over to local school boards.

Yesterday, a reporter asked the Governor, "Would you hesitate to call out the National Guard in case of violence?"

He'd rather not say more, the Governor replied, but he thought it would be his duty "to do whatever is necessary" if trouble broke out.

Judge Awaits Board's Answer To Injunction Requests By Holts

By FRANCES WALLS.

The Raleigh School Board had made no plans late yesterday for its defense in action brought by Joseph Hiram Holt Jr., Negro youth, in U. S. Eastern District Court here to obtain admission to all-white Broughton High School.

Holt, with his parents, filed a complaint yesterday asking the Court to issue a permanent injunction against the School Board requiring it to admit Holt and restraining the Board from operating city schools on a segregated basis.

Judge Don Gilliam said he will wait for the School Board to file a plea—motion to dismiss, demurrer or answer—in the case before he takes action. The Board has 20 days in which to file a plea.

Jesse O. Sanderson, City school superintendent, said yesterday his office had not been served with the complaint and summons for answer. No attorneys have been employed to defend the Board, said Sanderson. No meeting of the Board has been scheduled to discuss the matter, he said.

The School Board does not retain a lawyer but engages attorneys as the need arises, Sanderson said.

The Holts' application for their son to attend Broughton for 1957-58 was turned down by the Raleigh Board on Aug. 6. They were granted a hearing by the Board on Aug. 23 as provided in the State Pupil Assignment Act.

At that meeting action was postponed for further consideration and study by a committee of three. On the committee's recommendation, the Board again rejected the application on Wednesday.

Permanent Injunction Asked.

In the complaint, the Holts seek a permanent injunction "forever restraining and enjoining the board from maintaining a system of public schools upon a racially segregated basis."

It states further that the Board "is in fact now maintaining a public schools system . . . maintained and operated . . . on segregated basis . . . with . . . Negro children forced to attend schools maintained exclusively for them."

The complaint asks the Court to enter a judgment declaring the policy of maintaining segregated schools is a denial of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

The complaint further asks "that the Court issue a permanent injunction forever restraining and enjoining the defendant from maintaining and operating public schools and a system of public schools in and for the City of Raleigh upon a racially segregated basis."

It states further that the Board is maintaining Broughton High School only a few blocks from the defendant's home on Oberlin Road while Ligon Junior-Senior High School, where he must attend, is about three or four miles from his home. Attending Ligon is an inconvenience for Joseph Holt Jr., said the complaint.

The Court is asked also to issue a "mandatory injunction requiring defendant forthwith to admit minor plaintiff Joseph Hiram Holt Jr.," to Broughton High School "without regard to his race or color and upon the same basis aside from race or color as other children . . . in the area . . . are admitted."

The complaint asks for an immediate hearing on the matter. Raleigh schools open on Sept. 4.

Since the School Board has 20 days in which to file an answer before the hearing can be held, it is not likely young Holt will enter Broughton on opening date even if the Court rules in his favor.

Further, an extension of time could be granted the school Board to file its answer in the Judge's discretion.

The Holts could have filed for a temporary injunction to get admittance to Broughton, said Judge Gilliam, in which case he could have ordered the boy admitted or asked for a hearing in which the School Board would have to show cause why he should not.

Herman Taylor, who with his partner Samuel Mitchell, are attorneys for the Holts, said, "We could have asked a temporary restraining order, but we preferred to let the matter run its normal legal course in court."

The complaint could have been filed in Superior Court, but in bypassing the State's courts, "at least a year's time has been saved," said Taylor.

The U. S. Fourth District Court of Appeals in the Old Fort school case ruled last December that state courts "are judicial bodies and not administrative units," said Taylor. "Therefore, the school case can be filed with the Federal Court rather than in Superior or Supreme Court."

Leroy Martin, who has been on the Raleigh School Board for 20 years, said yesterday the court action "is regrettable." He had said on Aug. 6 when the Holt application was turned down that he hoped it would "not mean going into the courts."

"There's no particular point in making a case here," he said, "since Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem are taking the lead to determine what the legal rights are. Raleigh could be expected to pretty well follow it."

Negro PTA Protesting New School

SCOTLAND NECK, Oct. 12—The first shot against what may become a test case for North Carolina's Pearsall Plan for maintaining segregation in the public schools was fired in a Halifax County Board of Education meeting this week.

A group representing the Hollister Negro School Parent-Teacher Association petitioned the county board to deny any financial aid which may be sought from the county by the Haliwa Indians, who have organized a private school near Hollister for members of the race. Up to recently children of these people had attended Negro schools, including Hollister.

The county board took no action on the request, presented by Vernon Lynch, spokesman for the PTA delegation, which stated in part:

"It is the unanimous opinion of this PTA that the creation of such a private school will create discord among the people of our community and will eventually result in the loss of teachers in our school."

The school referred to opened its doors near Hollister, but in Warren County, Sept. 9, and enrolled 206 students from Halifax and Warren counties during the first week. By last week, the number of teachers had increased to three. Grades are from one through 12, and follow a schedule identical to that of the county schools system.

If the group obtains expense money from the State, it will be the first allocation under the Pearsall Plan, which became a constitutional amendment for North Carolina in a statewide ratification last September.

Under the plan, parents who object to sending their children to public schools with children of another race may apply for education expense grants with which to send their children to private schools. The grants would amount to about $135 per year per child under the formula set up by the plan.

No financial aid for the school has yet been requested from the county.

W. R. Richardson, head of the Haliwa Indian Club, and several other leaders of the Indian group worked for several months to get the school.

Bomb Home Of Negro Who Sent Children To White School

Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 8—The home of a Negro who has sent his two children to a former all-white school was rocked late last night by an explosion. No one was injured.

The police today continued the investigation of the explosion, which occurred in the yard of Elijah Herring. He lives about two blocks from Gillespie Park School where his children attend. The only apparent damage to the house was from mud and rocks thrown by the blast. A small piece of siding was knocked off the front of the house.

This was the first violence noted here since five Negro children enrolled at Gillespie five weeks ago and one Negro girl began studies at the white senior high school.

Mr. Herring's two sons, Russell, 12, and Elijah Jr., 16, attended school today without incident.

N.C. school issue climax due in 1957

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 1-5-57

GREENSBORO, N.C. — With a Federal court decision on the Pearsall Plan almost a certainty, the year 1957 is considered one of decision for North Carolina as far as public school segregation is concerned.

Two school desegregation suits—both attacking the newly adopted Pearsall Plan for continuing segregation — are now pending in Middle District Court (U.S.) here.

One of the suits filed in 1955, names the Montgomery County School Board as defendant. The other, filed in December, names both the Caswell County board and state school officials as defendants.

EACH OF the suits asks that segregation in the public schools be abolished, but the Montgomery County case is expected to be the first to come to trial and may be the one that determines the fate of the Pearsall Plan.

Pending step in the Montgomery County suit is the decision of Judge Johnson J. Hayes on whether the petitioners in the case are to be permitted to amend their complaint.

They are seeking to amend the suit to direct any action taken by the court against the state's school officials as well as the members of the Montgomery County School Board.

In their motion for a hearing, the petitioners contend that it is necessary to amend their complaint because changes in the state school laws, including the Pearsall Plan, were made after they filed their original suit.

THE PEARSALL PLAN provides the state with what Gov. Luther Hodges and state school officials describe as two "safety valves," namely:

1. That the General Assembly has authority to provide from public funds tuition grants toward education of any child assigned against the wishes of his parents to a school in which the races are mixed and that such grants be available for education only in nonsectarian schools and only when such child cannot be conveniently assigned to a nonmixed public school.

2. That any school board unit has the authority to suspend by majority vote the operation of any public schools within that unit, notwithstanding constitutional provisions for maintaining public schools.

N.C. school suits too technical--judge

Afro American Sat. 2-16-57 P. 16

Baltimore, Md.

DURHAM, N.C. — Telling lawyers for petitioners in pending school integration suits in the state are too technical and fail to test the state's segregation laws, a Federal judge outlined last week how it should be done.

In outlining the manner in which such a suit should be brought, Judge Johnson J. Hayes said he would like to see "all the issues involved," not just the technicalities, included in the pleadings.

Judge Hayes' remarks, indicating that he would welcome an omnibus suit came last week after he had granted the attorneys' request to delay trial of integration suits involving Person County and Chapel Hill schools.

DECLARING THAT NONE of the school suits now pending squarely faces the segregation issue, he said such a test would be made if a colored child applied for and was denied reassignment to a particular white school under the state's pupil assignment law.

The attorneys asked and were granted a postponement of the Person and Chapel Hill suits until after the Supreme Court rules on a McDowell County case in which colored pupils seek to enter a "white" school.

The case is on appeal from a Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals decision in November that the McDowell plaintiffs had not exhausted their administrative remedies at the state level.

* * *

THE CIRCUIT COURT refused to order a Federal district judge to proceed with the case. The decision was handed down by Judge John J. Parker who ruled that the pupil assignment law's constitutionality was not before the court.

One other integration suit is scheduled for a pretrial hearing in Middle District Court this month and two others are still pending in the courts.

One of the suits pending, the Caswell County case, asks integration of the county's schools and a court ruling that "certain state laws," which petitioners contend promote segregation, be declared unconstitutional.

The other pending action, the Montgomery County case, is similar to the Caswell County case. Plaintiffs in that suit moved to withdraw the complaint and amend it to include "certain new state laws," including the so-called Pearsall Plan.

United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ordered to issue a writ of mandamus directing Judge Wilson Warlick of the Federal District Court for the Western District of North Carolina to vacate an order staying proceedings, to allow a supplemental complaint to be filed, and to proceed with the case as though North Carolina had never enacted its Pupil Enrollment Act.

When the case was first before the Circuit Court of Appeals, it ruled that Judge Warlick erred in dismissing the case as moot and that in further proceedings the District Court should consider whether administrative remedies provided by the North Carolina Pupil Enrollment Act of March 30, 1955, had been exhausted.

This act gives to county and local school boards authority to determine the schools to which each child in an administrative unit should be assigned.

After the Court of Appeals decision, the North Carolina Supreme Court ruled that an appeal from the denial of an application for admission of a child to a particular school must be prosecuted by the interested parent or guardian, and not by a group or organization.

THE COMPLAINANTS did not attempt to comply with the provisions of the Pupil Enrollment Act as interpreted by the Norh Carolina Supreme Court, but on July 11, 1956, counsel wrote a letter to the secretary of the Board of Education inquiring what steps had been taken for the admission of colored children to the Old Fort school.

The secretary replied that since no colored pupil had applied to attend the Old Fort school in the school year 1956-57, "the board had had no cause to take any action in this connection."

After receiving this reply, the petitioners on July 12, last, filed a supplemental complaint asking for a declaratory judgment and an injunction to compel the admission of colored children to the school in Old Fort.

Judge Warlick denied the motion on the ground that the petitioners had not exhausted their administrative remedies and stayed the proceedings until such remedies were exhausted.

The petitioners then filed in the Court of Appeals an application for a writ of mandamus to require Judge Warlick to vacate the order staying proceedings, to allow the supplemental complaint to be filed, and to proceed with the case "as though the Pupil Enrollment Act had never been enacted."

The Court of Appeals denied the writ of mandamus on the ground that it nowhere appears that the petitioners had exhausted their administrative remedies under the North Carolina Pupil Enrollment Act and they were not entitled to the relief sought until they have exhausted such remedies.

THE PETITIONERS contend that the decision of the Court of Appeals is erroneous because it applies the doctrine of exhaustion of remedies to a civil rights action as though that doctrine had the same vigor in public school desegregation cases as in other actions and that school boards had no duty to provided colored pupils with non-segregated schooling.

They assert that the Court of Appeals overlooked the fact that the so - called administrative remedies must be administered by the very authorities against whom the petitioners complain of illegal racial segregation.

Negro School Is Destroyed By Washington, N. C. Fire

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C. Thurs. 2-28-57

WASHINGTON, N. C., Feb. 27—Washington Colored Elementary School was destroyed by fire while some 650 pupils slept at their homes at dawn today.

A janitor discovered the fire. Possible defective kitchen wiring was advanced as the cause. Supt. E. A. West said the building was insured for $224,000 and equipment for $30,000. Firemen saved nearby buildings. Emergency facilities were provided for the students.

Supreme Court review asked of Old Fort School verdict

Old Fort Integration Squabble To Be Settled By Supreme Court

News & Observer Raleigh, N. C. P. 12

Sun. 2-3-57

Lawyers for a group of Negro children seeking admission to a white school at Old Fort are asking the U. S. Supreme Court to review their case.

Herman L. Taylor mailed to the Supreme Court a petition for certorari asking the court to review the decision in the case handed down last Nov. 14 by the Fourth U. S. District Court of Appeals.

In its decision, the circuit court refused to order U. S. District Judge Wilson Warick to vacate a stay of proceedings. Warlick granted the stay on the ground that parents of the Negro children had not exhausted their administrative remedies under the North Carolina Pupil Assignment Law.

The circuit court held that no one is better qualified to enroll children in school than school boards and school officials and "not until they have been applied to and failed to give relief should the courts be asked to interfere in school administration."

In their petition for a U. S. Supreme Court review, Taylor and Mitchell said the circuit court decision was based no "two fallacious notions: (1) that the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies has the same vigor in public school desegregation actions as in other actions and (2) that the school boards have no pre-existing and preemtory duty . . . to provide Negro public school pupils with public school education of a non-segregated basis."

The lawyers contended that their clients had "substantially, realistically and actually" exhausted so much of the administrative remedy as the circuit court said applied to them. They argued that the standards set forth in the North Carolina Assignment Law are "too vague, subjective and arbitrary."

They also contended that the administrative remedy—the assignment law—must be administered in their case by the McDowell County Board of Education, "by the very authorities against whom your petitioners complain of illegal racial segregation and discrimination."

Pending Suits Not Testing State's Segregation Laws

News & Observer Tues. 2-5-57

DURHAM, Feb. 4 (AP) — Federal Judge Johnson J. Hayes today told a group of Negro lawyers that no school suits now pending in federal courts test North Carolina's segregation laws. Then he outlined how such a suit could be brought.

The judge declared he would like to see that "all the issues are involved," not just technicalities."

Judge Hayes' remarks came as he granted the attorneys' request to delay trial of segregation suits involving schools in Person County and in Chapel Hill.

He said none of the school suits squarely faces the segregation issue in this state. He said such a test would come if an individual Negro applied for and was denied reassignment to a particular white school under the state's pupil assignment law.

The Negro lawyers requested postponement of the Person and Chapel Hill suits until after the Supreme Court rules on a McDowell County case in which Negro students seek to enter a white school.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in November, however, that the McDowell plaintiffs had not exhausted their administrative remedies at the state level. The court refused to rder a federal district judge to proceed with the case.

Circuit Judge John J. Parker in handing down the appeals court decision said:

"We cannot hold that the (reassignment) act is unconstitutional upon its face, and the question as to whether it has been unconstitutionally applied is not before us, as the administrative remedy it provides has not been invoked."

One other anti-segregation suit is scheduled for pre-trial hearing in Middle District Court this month and two are still pending.

The schedule calls for a pretrial hearing Thursday on a suit by 10 Negroes to drop racial barriers at any golf course or park established, operated or maintained by the City of Greensboro. The case is docketed for the week of Feb. 18 in a special court session in Greensboro.

One of the suits pending, the Caswell County case, asks integration of schools and a court ruling that certain state laws, which the Negro plaintiffs claim promote segregation, be declared unconstitutional.

The other pending action, from Montgomery County, is similar to the Caswell suit. The plaintiffs moved to withdraw the complaint so they could amend it to include certain new state laws, including the so-called Pearsall Plan.

N. C. Law Not Affected

News & Observer Raleigh, N. C. Sat. 1-12-57

A Federal judge's ruling which held Virginia's pupil placement program "unconstitutional on its face" does not affect North Carolina's pupil assignment law, Atty. Gen. George B. Patton asserted yesterday.

He said the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that North Carolina's pupil assignment law is valid.

At Norfolk, Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman said yesterday it was his firm conviction that the Virginia plan is unconstitutional on its face.

Patton Comments.

Commenting on North Carolina's assignment law, Patton said "in my opinion there is nothing on its face that appears unconstitutional."

He pointed out that in a McDowell County case, attorneys for Negro children who were denied admittance to a white school argued that the pupil enrollment law is unconstitutional. Federal Judge John J. Parker wrote, however, "We cannot hold that that statute is unconstitutional upon its face and the question as to whether it has been unconstitutionally applied is not before us as the administrative remedy which it provides has not been invoked."

North Carolina's assignment law gives local school boards authority to assign pupils to the schools they think they should attend. Pupils can ask for reassignment and a hearing.

In State Board.

The Virginia law, it was explained, puts the assignment power in a three-man state board. The Virginia statute goes on to provide, it was explained, that if a school has any integration it is an "inefficient school" and all state funds will be withdrawn from that school.

Patton said "We don't have anything like that in our statutes."

He added that in effect, the Virginia judge ruled that Negro plaintiffs would not have to exhaust administrative remedies under the Virginia pupil assignment statute. In North Carolina, all administrative remedies would have to be exhausted.

"Little Integration" in North Carolina

Herald Tribune New York 9.18

Wed 9-14-57

By Waldo Proffitt Jr.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—In the first week of September a handful of Negro children will enroll at previously all-white schools in North Carolina.

Only a minute fraction of the state's 300,000 Negro students are directly involved. But the figures give little indication of the importance of the event. For North Carolina is not a border state. It is in the South—the Deep South by many definitions. Charlotte, the largest city in North Carolina, lies as far south from Richmond, Virginia, as Richmond does from Philadelphia.

The Charlotte school board on July 23 admitted five Negroes to white schools. In simultaneous meetings, the Greensboro school board "integrated" six Negroes; the Winston-Salem board, one. Action on applications pending elsewhere may add slightly to this total of 12 by the time schools open.

The decision of the school board in each of the three cities was unanimous. Yet the board members are overwhelmingly opposed to integration; and they acted under authority of a state law designed to forestall it. The explanation of this apparent paradox lies in the state's official "vaccination" concept of resisting integration.

A leading segregationist, Col William T. Joyner of Raleigh, put it this way:

"One of the nightmares which beset me on a restless night is that I am in a Federal court attempting to defend a school board in its rejection of a transfer requested by a Negro student, when a showing is made that nowhere in the State of North Carolina has a single Negro ever been admitted to any one of the more than 2,000 schools attended by white students . . . A state taking the inflexible course of massive resistance faces the dilemma of either integrating under court order or of going out of the public school business. . . .

"I think that the result of free choice and of honest assignment, according to the best interest of the child, will be separation so complete as to be tolerable to our people."

There are some who say it is impossible to have a "little integration." This school of thought has among its adherents the North Carolina Patriots, a white supremacy organization with chapters throughout the state. Many pro-integrationists, white and Negro, agree with the Patriots on this issue. They have, almost without exception, praised the actions of the three school boards and refrained from comment on their motives.

The president of the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Kelly M. Alexander, a Charlotte mortician and hotel owner, has kept silent except for a simple statement, "The Charlotte board acted wisely in making the decision to admit the Negroes they did." Kelly M. Alexander jr. was one of thirty-five Charlotte Negro children denied admission to white schools.

Is it possible to bring about even limited desegregation in North Carolina without civil violence? Most informed observers think it is.

North Carolina has a history of moderation in racial relations. Industrialization has brought to the state many people who do not share the traditional Southern views on Negroes. There is already a substantial amount of integration in certain areas, chiefly public transportation and recreation. Negroes vote in large numbers throughout the state. Negroes, in small numbers, already attend the state university at the graduate and undergraduate levels.

Desegregation is slated to begin in the three largest cities of the state—the best places possible from the point of view of those who hope to see desegregation proceed smoothly. The six daily papers in these cities have editorially praised their school boards and urged that the decisions be accepted gracefully.

The state's political leadership is also a favorable factor—in a negative fashion. It is sitting this one out. A law passed in 1955, at the first session of the Legislature after the Supreme Court ruled that segregated schools are inherently unequal, places the full responsibility for pupil assignment in the hands of local school boards. Tar Heel politicians, by and large, are happy to leave it there. Gov Luther Hodges set the pace by declaring he did not either approve or disapprove of what had been done by the three school boards. Gov. Hodges is widely believed to be planning to run for the United States Senate.

On the other side of the ledger, there is no doubt that a majority of North Carolinians oppose integration. How strongly they oppose it is still to be determined; but leaders of the Patriots have promised to try to close every school that mixes Negroes and whites.

A school can be closed, under the provisions of the so-called Pearsall Plan, by a majority vote within the school district. The Pearsall Plan, named for the head of the study commission that conceived it, is a package of legislation and constitutional amendments which went into effect following four-to-one approval in a statewide referendum a year ago.

The plan, frankly promoted as an "escape hatch" to ease pressures in "intolerable" situations, also offers private school tuition grants to students who don't want to go to an integrated school and, for various reasons, can't be accommodated in a segregated one.

Whatever the outcome, it is clear that North Carolina expects to handle its own problems. John Kasper, who was convicted of contempt of court for interferring with school desegregation in Clinton, Tenn., on the same day the three North Carolina school boards announced their school assignment rulings, said he would come to North Carolina to conduct an "educational" campaign. Tar Heel editors immediately raised an outcry. The typical reaction was that of "The Raleigh News and Observer" think of any one more universally unwelcome in this state. . . . He should be treated by one and all with the contempt which he has impotently tried to show to the courts."

Even the North Carolina Patriots want no part of Kasper. A spokesman for the Charlotte Patriots group said, "We're not going to have any horseplay and we're not going to have any Kaspers. . . . If they (Patriot members) go to playing with him, we're going to root 'em out."

Court Issues Order On School Integration

Evening Star Washington D.C. 8-27-57 p. 11-A

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Aug. 27 (AP).—Twenty-one white parents, in a last minute effort to keep four Negro students out of white schools here, obtained a show-cause court order yesterday against the Charlotte School Board.

Judge Hugh B. Campbell issued the order for the school board to appear in court Thursday to defend its admission of the Negroes to the previously all-white school.

Earlier, 42 white parents at Greensboro obtained a show cause order against the school board there. It, too, will be heard Thursday.

Limited Number

School boards of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem last July 23 admitted a limited number of Negroes to white schools of those cities. Charlotte admitted five, Greensboro six and Winston-Salem one. Later, the Charlotte number was reduced to four when one Negro child moved to another neighborhood.

The Charlotte parents said they had asked for an injunction to bar the Negroes because:

"There has never been any intermixing of white and Negro pupils.

"Effective operation of . . . public schools is so closely entwined with the customs, ideas and beliefs of the parents, teachers and pupils in each community that such schools cannot be operated effectively and properly without due regard to and in substantial conformity with such customs, ideals and beliefs."

Trial After Opening

The parents said they believed a jury trial on the injunction request could not be scheduled before the September 3 opening of schools.

Charlotte School Board Attorney Brock Barkley said that the board would comply with any court order, but that he did not think such an appeal was proper under the State's pupil assignment laws.

He said the proper remedy under the laws would be for the parents to apply for transfers to other schools or for private tuition grants.

CARROLLTON (Special) — Critics of the South's public school system for Negro students should take a trip to Carroll County. They would find three new Negro school buildings that excel the four whites.

One of Mississippi's oldest and largest counties (638 square miles), but one of the poorest and most sparsely populated, Carroll is the first in the state to complete in June, 1957, a school reorganization and equalization program prescribed by House Bill No. 3 of the Legislature's 1953 extraordinary session.

DEDICATION SUNDAY

One of these buildings, Marshall School at North Carrollton, will be dedicated Sunday afternoon at 3, with Dr. J. L. Fortenberry, state coordinator of Negro education, as the principal speaker, and other State Department of Education and Education Finance Commission representatives and Carroll County School Board members participating.

Jackson

The Negro elementary School at Black Hawk was the first in Mississippi to be completed under the new school program, in November, 1956. Marshall School at North Carrollton, and Vaiden's Negro High school, both 12-grade schools, were completed in June, 1957.

Sun. 8-25-57

NO LEGAL SKIRMISHES

The program was completed without a single legal battle, while in some counties, reorganization plans were not submitted by county education boards until the July 1, 1957 deadline specificied by the School Bill, and the court battles over some consolidations are still pending.

Daily News

The Carroll County school board, however, got an early start. In July, 1954, their reorganization plans were ready for approval of the State Education Finance Commission.

In this county composed of 5 per cent Negroes, or about 8829 out of a total of 15,492 according to the 1950 census, the number of Negro schools had been reduced from a total of 62—with enrollment of 3,157 in the 1944-45 session—to 29 for the 1954-55 session, with enrollment of 2,794, and average daily attendance of 1,986.

NAMED FOR EX-OFFICIAL

Twelve small frame schools were consolidated into the Black Hawk Elementary School.

The Marshall School, named for former county superintendent of education, Miss Louise Marshall, is built adjacent to a 7-classroom brick building in North Carrollton, which was built in 1951 under Miss Marshall's administration and also named for her. Four schools were consolidated into the newly completed Marshall school.

Six schools were consolidated into the Vaiden school, located on Highway 51 just north of Vaiden, and students from five schools are transported by bus to attend nearby Leflore County schools, at Carroll County expense.

The new brick schools at North Carrollton and at Vaiden each contain 10 classrooms; science, commercial and homemaking departments; library; agricultural-vocational shops; and combination gymnasium-auditorium - cafeteria. Cost of the new Marshall School was $183,000, and Vaiden's school cost $198,000.

With an enrollment of 956, Marshall school has 24 teachers, and Jerry McKinney is principal. The Vaiden Negro school principal is Percy Hathorn, and there are 17 teachers, and an enrollment of 804. All three Negro schools operate on split session terms, the months of July and August, and November through April. Attendance for the July-August sessions, started in 1953 to allow students time to pick cotton, is 100 per cent higher than previous September-October attendance of former sessions.

FOUR WHITE SCHOOLS

White schools, which numbered nine with enrollment of 1,870 during the 1944-45 session, had been reduced to four schools with enrollment of 1,373, with average daily attendance of 1,163, during session 1954-55.

Now that the Negro school-building program is completed, improvements are being begun on white schools. At Vaiden a Band Hall is under construction, four classrooms are to be added, and gymnasium repairs and new lighting in classrooms are scheduled. Indoor toilets will be added at Valley School, and elementary and high school buildings will be added within the coming year at Carrollton.

The problem now in Carroll County, according to Supt. Lovell, is to equalize schools for the Whites with those for the Negroes.

NORTH CAROLINA

DR. FRANK GRAHAM SAYS:

'School Decision Is New Bill O'Rights'

Afro American Sat. 6-15-57 Baltimore, Md.

P. 11

KINSTON, N.C.— Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in the public schools was a "new Bill of Rights," Dr. Frank P. Graham told graduating seniors of the local white high school last week.

Dr. Graham, United Nations mediator, expressed his loyalty to "the old Bill of Rights" and the "new Bill of Rights" in linking together freedom and democracy in America and freedom and peace in the world.

THE FORMER U. S. senator from North Carolina and former president of the University of North Carolina was delivering the commencement address at Kinston High School. He declared:

"It is a violation of the spirit of the historic Bill of Rights to single out for special penalties those free associations of people that were active in a lawful way regarding the decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases.

"WHAT AMERICA does about our colored fellow citizens in stages of wisdom and good faith will largely determine the stages of wisdom and good faith the moral effectiveness of what America seeks to do in the world for the liberties of the individual, equal justice and law, peace and good will on earth, on which two thirds of the people are colored."

Pointing specifically to the South, he expressed the belief that:

"In the free minds and loyal hearts of millions of people of both races will live and grow in cooperation the unfulfilled teachings of religion, the democratic struggle of freedom for a higher freedom and the aspirations of the American dream with its message of hope in this age of suspicion, frustration and fear."

* * *

IN A challenge to the Class of 1957, he asserted that between the "alternatives of the annihilation of people and the cooperation of nations, "he hoped that classes like their own would mean:

"The dedication of youthful generations to universal brotherhood in the atomic age as the most necessary and practical way of human freedom, survival and progress on our shrinking little earth as the God-given home of the family of man."

He asserted that in the midst of high prosperity the low salaries paid teachers in America are "a violation of democraic decency, a barrier to balanced progress of the people and a blot on the greatness of a free society."

Negroes Granted School Hearing

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

MARION, N.C., Aug. 12 (AP)—The McDowell County Board of Education today granted the requests of 44 Negro students that they be given hearings concerning their applications for transfer to the all white school at Old Fort.

The board will begin the hearings at 6 p.m. Aug. 20 in the office of County Superintendent of Schools Melvin Taylor.

The students have asked that they be transferred to the white school to avoid having to commute to the consolidated Negro school at Marion, 13 miles away.

The requests for hearings came after the McDowell board earlier rejected transfer applications of 66 Negroes on the grounds they were improperly prepared and weren't sent through the correct channels.

State Organizes Long-Range Program For Better Schools

News & Observer Thurs. 1-24-57 Raleigh, N.C.

North Carolina is organizing a long-range campaign to awaken its citizens to the problems and opportunities of the public schools.

Gradual improvement of the schools is the announced aim of the program, and the job will be done at the local level. The organizational work began here yesterday at sessions of the North Carolina Citizens Committee for Better Schools and its advisory panel.

Governor Luther H. Hodges, who addressed the group at a dinner last night in the Sir Walter Hotel here, spoke of the occasion as "a new day in public school education in that we are recognizing at a state level the need for a non-professional, non-paid citizens to represent the hundreds of communities of the State" in the campaign.

Holt McPherson, High Point newspaper editor, who is chairman of the committee, stated the objectives of the group would be "to help North Carolinians realize how important our public schools are to our expanding democracy and to arouse in each community the intelligence and the will to improve our public schools."

News & Observer

The Governor said that McPherson's statement "says to each of us in this good State that we are going to take a good look at our schools at all levels and in all communities. It also indicates that action will follow this look."

To Governor Hodges, the committee which he appointed about two weeks ago, represents a sincere and open approach. "It has nothing of professionalism in it," he said, "and it should never have, except for technical advice."

So there could be no misunderstanding, the Governor again pointed out the committee "has nothing to do with, nor will it have anything to do with, the problem of segregation. That problem has no place here. We are interested in good schools for all our children."

Several Negroes are members of the committee.

Hodges also insisted the committee was not to report to anybody except to the public. Contrary to what he intimated in a speech in Durham when he refered to the fact that the committee "might have something" for the 1959 General Assembly, it is not proposed, he said last night, that the committee make a report to any Assembly.

"It is possible that by 1959, it may through other channels have things to suggest to the General Assembly," he explained, "but there will be no official report, as I understand, from the group."

The Governor strongly recommended that the committee should not become involved with school budgets, or other such matters which may come before the 1957 General Assembly. He said the group would lose its influence immediately if its members participated in the oncoming budget discussions.

As the State took over more and more of the school business in North Carolina, the Governor observed, the localities felt less and less responsibility. What should be done now, in his opinion, is to bring about a better balance between the State and the communities in school problems.

"We should take time . . . to raise questions and to get the answers," he said.

McPherson told the group, he was concerned "at some disturbing trends in schools in recent years" and that he did not share the belief that "there's nothing wrong with the schools that money won't cure."

Money can help, he admitted. "But the trouble runs deeper," he said. "It reaches into the homes, to attitude of parents. I fear that when North Carolina out of necessity, leveled the school structure it paid a price for what was gained. In causing schools to conform to that pattern we cut off the head instead of the feet."

"Our job, stated as simply as it can be put, is to put a head back on the schools.

"That won't be easy.

"But it is necessary if schools are to have the power and force to move and act for themselves."

As an example of a successful effort at organizing for better schools at the local level, Dallas Herring of Rose Hill, a member of the State Board of Education, discussed the job done in Duplin County.

"The objective investigation which these citizens were making of their schools was not long underway before it was unanimously agreed that the basic problem in their situation was too many schools, few of which were really large enough to do an effective job," he said. "They then urged the board of education to consolidate them in new buildings with improved education programs. They took their case to the people with our blessing and they came back to us with unanimous support for the consolidation of seven of the 10 high schools.

Herring was, at that time, chairman of the education board.

Late in the afternoon, the committee was divided into three discussion groups. Each group prepared a set of answers to 16 questions on organizing for better schools and getting the State committee off to a good start. The groups reassembled at 6 p. m. and reported on the discussions.

Of necessity, the busy Governor usually remains at a meeting just long enough to make his scheduled address. It was a different matter yesterday. So interested was he in the school meeting, he showed up at the hotel shortly before 3 p. m. and remained until the meeting adjourned shortly before 9 p.m.

The Governor also presented the committee his personal check for $100 to help cover the costs of the meeting.

Greensboro School Board:

News + Observer 1-16

Delays Negro Application Decision

Thurs. 6-20-57

GREENSBORO, June 19 (UP)—The Greensboro School Board has put off for at least another month decisions in requests by nine Negro students that they be admitted to all-white schools in Greensboro this fall.

Raleigh, N.C.

But in doing so, the Board may have set the wheels of another integration suit into motion, similar to one which has resulted in a federal court decision that a Greensboro golf course must be desegregated.

Indications of such a suit came from Negro Attorney J. Kenneth Lee of Greensboro, who represented four of the nine Negroes who have asked for reassignment to all-white schools here.

Following the Board's decision Tuesday night to defer action on the integration requests until its July meeting, Lee said that time would be so short for an appeal that "if we have to go to Federal Court, we wouldn't have time. You give us a remedy, but it's not a remedy."

However, following the meeting, Lee would not say whether he definitely plans to take the matter to the courts.

He did say, however, that he believed the Board had had sufficient time to study the applications, and that should the Board turn them down in its July meeting "that would mean we would have to wait until the latter part of August to come before you for a hearing.

"That hearing would be only a week or so before school opens."

Board Atty. Robert Moseley had said earlier that "All of these requests . . . should be scrutinized carefully. We have not had sufficient time to go into these matters—and for that reason only and for no other reason, I believe we should wait until further study is given to the matter."

The Board previously had deferred action on the requests in its May meeting, giving as a reason the fact that the applications were not made formally.

Ruling In Louisiana School Case

News + Observer Raleigh, N. C. P.1

Not to Affect N. C., Patton Says

Tues. 6-18-57

Atty. Gen George Patton said yesterday he did not think a U.S. Supreme Court decision which, in effect, struck down Louisiana's pupil assignment law would have any effect on the school segregation situation in North Carolina.

The decision in the Louisiana case "is not going to affect North Carolina's pupil assignment law "one way or another," Patton told newsmen when asked for comment on the Supreme Court decision.

The Supreme Court, in a decision announced in Washington, declined to review a circuit court decision which held the Louisiana law unconstitutional.

Patton said there is a big difference in the Louisiana and the North Carolina assignment laws.

His comments were echoed and amplified by Asst. Atty. Gen. Robert Giles who has specialized in handling segregation matters in the Attorney General's office.

Giles said he did not think "the decision in the Louisiana case affects North Carolina's situation at all."

Giles pointed out that the Louisiana Legislature at the same time it enacted its assignment law which says, "All public elementary and secondary schools in the state of Louisiana shall be operated separately for white and colored children. This provision is made in the exercise of the state's police power."

In carrying out the assignment law, Louisiana parish school superintendents were forbidden to violate the provision of the law calling for separate schools, Giles added.

The laws, he said, are "nothing at all like North Carolina's assignment statute" which provides that local boards shall assign pupils to schools using a number of criteria which do not include race.

In addition, Giles pointed out that the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled the North Carolina assignment statute to be constitutional and the Supreme Court had declined to review the circuit court decision.

News + Observer

He said the attorney general's office had interpreted this to mean that the Supreme Court had upheld the constitutionality of North Carolina's Pupil Assignment Law.

The Supreme Court let stand a decision striking down Louisiana's pupil assignment plan. The plan was adopted in 1954 after the Supreme Court ruled against racial segregation in public schools.

The decision which the Supreme Court refused to review was given by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans. It was appealed by the Orleans parish school board—the first time any pupil assignment plan has been involved in such an appeal.

The Circuit Court in the same decision held invalid a 1954 Louisiana law calling for racial segregation in the state schools. The Circuit Court also said Louisiana constitutional provisions for maintenance of segregated schools were invalid.

Seek Enlarged Integration In North Carolina

Black Dispatch

Fri. 8-2-57

Oklahoma City

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Parents of 36 school children whose applications for admission to previously all-white schools were turned down by the Charlotte school board were scheduled to meet here today to prepare an appeal to the school board for reconsideration of the rejected applications.

On July 23, the school board voted to assign to white schools five of the 41 children who applied. Similar action was taken by school boards in Winston-Salem and Greensboro in accordance with the state's pupil assignment act permitting local action to integrate the schools. Winston-Salem reassigned one child and Greensboro, six. A total of 51 pupils made application for reassignment in the three cities.

The decision to admit 12 of the applicants to "white" schools was the first voluntary step toward integration of the elementary and secondary public schools in North Carolina and the first break in the hitherto solid defiance of the Supreme Court's ban on segregated education by authorities in eight southern states. In addition to North Carolina, these include Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Commenting on the action of the three school boards, Kelly Alexander, president of the North Carolina Conference of NAACP branches, said: "It is encouraging to see North Carolina move into the class of respectability as to implementation of the Supreme Court decision in the field of public education. The school boards of Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro are to be commended for . . . approving the admission of Negro pupils to previously all-white schools. The NAACP in North Carolina had predicted that school boards in the larger cities of western North Carolina would take the leadership in the desegregation of the public schools of the state."

Tri-State School Group Meets For Integration Talk

Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

Fri. 7-5-57

WINSTON SALEM, N. C.—(ANP) School officials from three cities that are preparing to act on applications from Negro students to attend white schools next fall met at Charlotte, N. C., last week to discuss the situation but no decision in the matter had been made as of press time.

The meeting was to bring together officials from this city, Charlotte and Greensboro where a total of 56 applications for admittance into white schools have been made by Negro students.

E. T. Pullen of Winston-Salem said the group would discuss integration request as well as other mutual problems facing the three school systems.

School Racial Meets to Continue

Raleigh N.C.

CHARLOTTE, June 26 (AP) — School officials from North Carolina's three largest cities indicated after a closed meeting here today that they will continue joint consultation on desegregation problems.

The three cities — Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro—all have pending applications from Negro children seeking to attend white schools.

None of the school boards involved has acted on the applications.

A statement issued after today's meeting said that the session was held "to continue discussion of problems involved in the consideration of recently received applications for change of assignment in three school systems."

No action was taken by the group, the statement said.

It concluded: "Plans for continued study of the problems involved were made with the possibilities of future meetings also being discussed.

The Charlotte school board will meet tomorrow morning, but officials have indicated that the 41 Negro applications for changes will not be considered.

Greensboro has nine applications and Winston-Salem six.

Board In Raleigh to Meet Soon

News & Observer Sun. 7-28-57

Raleigh N.C.

BY FRANCES WALLS.

Threatened bombing of the home of a Negro applicant to attend a Raleigh white school and action by school boards in three cities in the State to integrate schools seem to be having little effect on the local situation.

The Raleigh School Board is to meet Aug. 6 to consider the application of Joseph Hiram Holt Jr., 14-year-old Negro boy who is seeking transfer from Ligon to the all-white Broughton High School.

Only Application.

It is the only application of a Negro for transfer to a white school received by the board for 1957-58.

Mrs. Holt received a telephone call from a man who threatened to bomb her home "if you don't quit sending messages to the school board."

She received another call from a woman who said she did not want her children attending school with the Negro boy.

The Holts also received a letter from the "Wake County Patriots of North Carolina" stating, "We should like to have conditions of peace and good will to continue between the white and Negro people of this region. Your act helps to destroy that peace and good will."

Holt said the threats were an apparent attempt to frighten him into withdrawing the application.

Mr. and Mrs. Holt said yesterday they would not withdraw the application.

Wife Upset.

"I think it is ridiculous that such things like this have to happen," said the father. "I try to ignore it but the calls have, of course, upset my wife."

The decision of the Greensboro, Charlotte and Winston-Salem school boards to admit Negroes to white schools will not "affect our decision," said Raleigh School Board member Victor Fisher yesterday.

"There are seven people on that Board (Raleigh) and I'm only one of them but I think each will deliberate in his own mind and vote his own conviction," said Fisher.

He said he thought the decisions to admit the Negro students were the result of the "deliberation of a lot of well-thinking people."

"We're not going to make everybody happy, no matter what we do. I hope we will do the right thing. I trust the good Lord gives us the right decision," said Fisher.

Fred J. Carnage, only Negro member of the Raleigh board, commented, "I certainly think they acted in accordance with the law set out by our Legislature and the laws of the Federal government. As I see it they were doing what was legally and morally right."

Another member Leroy Martin, asked about his reaction, said, "I don't know what their problem or situation was. It's hard to know what to think." He said he believed they thought they were "facing the inevitable and went ahead and acted accordingly."

Martin said he had no idea what the school board here will do regarding the Holt application.

Board Members J. W. York, Mrs. J. L. Stough and Lewis H. Powell would make no comments on the matter. W. G. Enloe, Raleigh mayor and ex officio chairman of the Board, was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

Jesse O. Sanderson, Raleigh school superintendent who is vacationing on the Coast, said he had no comment to make. He said plans are still for the Board to consider the application on Aug. 6.

The Holts said yesterday they would not attend the school board meeting to which they have been invited.

Mrs. Holt said, "I don't think it's fair for us and our son to be subjected to questions. No one else is having to appear before the Board."

Although the Holt application is the only one from a Negro seeking admission to a white school, the Board has received numerous applications for students to attend other schools of their own race. None of these applicants have been requested to appear before the Board.

School board action on the Holt application has been postponed twice because the full membership of the school board was not present. An agreement was made among board members that matters concerning integration would not be discussed except in the presence of the full board.

At the last meeting, however, members voted to dispose of the application at the Aug. 6 meeting regardless of the number in attendance.

66 ask integration of Old Fort school

Afro-American Sat. 7-27-57

Baltimore Md.

MARION, N.C. — Some 66 children last Thursday beat the deadline by a matter of hours by applying admission to Old Fort school for whites. There is no school for colored in Old Fort.

The move was made in accordance with a recent court decision that all administrative remedies must be exhausted before relief can be sought in the courts.

SAMUEL H. MITCHELL, attorney for the children, said that he would take the issue back to the courts if the McDowell County Board of Education did not act favorably on the applications.

Melvin H. Taylor, superintendent, acknowledged that the applications had been received in the mail. He indicated that the board may act on the requests early in August.

He pointed out that the board was originally scheduled to meet Aug. 5 to discuss a matter which has been postponed. "Now, maybe we'll meet anyway," Taylor said.

Appeals of 20 Negro Pupils Denied By Charlotte Board

News & Observer Fri. 8-16-57

Raleigh N.C.

CHARLOTTE, Aug. 15 (UP)— The City School Board today denied the appeals of 20 Negro pupils to be reassigned to white schools here.

Negro leaders have hinted that the cases may be the basis for a court test of the State's Pupil Assignment Law.

The Board had no comment on its denials of the petitions. All Board members voted unanimously to adopt the report.

The 20 students were among 24 who originally appealed decisions denying them entrance to white schools. The other four, along with a brother who was assigned to a white school, have moved, making them ineligible to attend the school to which they applied.

The School Board last month accepted five Negro pupils and rejected 35 to be reassigned to white schools this fall. Twenty-four of the pupils asked the board for a re-hearing.

At hearings on the appeals Aug. 7, leading Negro attorney, C. O. Pearson hinted the cases might result in lawsuits.

He said "Everybody knows these decisions are bound to be tested somewhere."

At that time, Kelly M. Alexander, head of the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said it was "premature" to say if the cases could be appealed to the courts.

Alexander's son was one of the appellants denied today.

NORTH CAROLINA SETS SCHOOL TEST

Times Sun. 7-28-57

Majority of Reaction Favors Cities' Plans for a Modest Start on Integration

New York

Special to The New York Times.

RALEIGH, N. C., July 27— The decision of school boards in North Carolina's three largest cities to admit a limited number of Negro students to previously all-white schools has aroused pro and con comment in the state. The majority of the reaction to the proposed change in September has been favorable.

Editorials generally have endorsed the action. The tenor of these in the larger papers was that the school boards had acted courageously. The modest start of integration will be invaluable, many editorials contended, when the state is called upon to defend its 1956 pupil assignment statute in Federal courts.

The cities deciding to permit some integration were Charlotte, which accepted applications of five Negroes; Greensboro, six; and Winston-Salem, one. Last year in its segregated schools, Charlotte had 19,141 white pupils and 9,742 Negroes; Greensboro, 12,906 whites and 5,019 Negroes; and Winston-Salem 10,398 whites and 7,898 Negroes.

Raleigh Negro in Plea

Raleigh is to act in August on the application of one Negro student. Durham has several applications still to decide upon and Swain County is to consider six applications next week. In most schools, the deadline for applying for a transfer to another school has passed.

W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, vice chairman of the advisory committee that developed the state's pupil assignment system, said it would be "reasonable" to assume that some other boards would admit Negroes to white schools. He repeated a statement he made last year, that "some mixing of our schools is inevitable and must occur."

Other members of his committee said the state's hand had been strengthened by the move. However, the chairman, Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, observed merely that he hoped the board had "acted only after the most careful and prayerful study and consideration." He said they probably had concluded that there was "no legal basis for denying the applications for reassignment."

Gov. Luther H. Hodges said he neither approved nor disapproved the action.

Leaders of the North Carolina Patriots, a white supremacy organization, denounced the move but did not indicate what they would do. In Greensboro, parents of half a dozen white children indicated they would seek to have their children transferred to all-white schools.

Governor Noncommittal

I. Beverly Lake, former assistant Attorney General and leader of an anti-integration group, expressed disappointment over the changes. He also doubted that the admissions of Negroes would help in court tests of North Carolina's law. In Raleigh, anonymous persons telephoned threats of bombings and burnings to parents of the Negro child who had applied for admission to the white school.

Outside North Carolina, John Kasper, convicted of contempt that he would come to North Carolina to help organize citizens councils in a racial case at Clinton, Tenn., said in a telephone interview

3 No. Carolina Cities Vote To Integrate Public Schools

Weekly Sat. 8-3-57 P. 1

New Orleans, La.

Winston-Salem, N.C. - (ANP) North Carolina became the first state of the "Deep and Solid" South to lift the white racial curtain off its public school system last Tuesday when three cities voted simultaneously to admit 12 Negro children to previously all white schools.

The cities acted through meetings of their Boards of Education at the same hour and same date, July 23. The cities and the pupils admitted were as follows:

Winston-Salem - Gwendolyn Yvonne Bailey, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. E.E. Bailey. She will be transferred from all-Negro Atkins High School to Reynolds High School in the 11th grade. The board also approved the admission of two sisters, Gwendolyn and Velma Louise Smith, but their mother, Mrs. Geneva Smith, withdrew the applications for "personal reasons."

Greensboro - Josephine Ophelia Boyd from Dudley High School to Pisgah High School. Harold McDuffie Davis, Elijah J. Herring, Jr., and Russell Herring from Lincoln Junior High School to Gillespie Junior High School, and Brenda Kay Florence and Jimmy B. Florence from Bluford School to Gillespie Elementary School.

Charlotte - Dorothy Geraldine Counts, 15, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. H.L. Counts, 10th grade, from West Charlotte High School to Harding High School; William Pinkney Hamlin, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs Murray Hamlin, and Dolores Maxine Huntley, 12, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Huntley, seventh grade, from York Road Junior High School to Alexander Graham Junior High School.

Giraud Lilly Roberts, 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Roberts, eighth grade, from Second Ward High School to Piedmont Junior High School, and Gustavus Allen Roberts, 16, Girvaud's brother, 11th grade, from Second Ward to Central High School.

Weekly P. 8

At their meetings, the Winston-Salem board rejected three Negro applications for transfer; the Greensboro board rejected one and transferred one to Woman's college for consideration, and the Charlotte board rejected 35. Included among the 35 in Charlotte was the child of Kelly Alexander, state president of the NAACP.

In Greensboro, Cheryl Edmunds will await action by Woman's college for admission to the Curry High School, operated by the college. Greensboro also reserves the right to transfer a white child from the newly integrated schools

Chapel Hill Board Spurns Integration

Wkly. P. 4

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. — (ANP) — Without saying why it did so, the Chapel Hill school board here last week turned down the bid of a Negro student for transfer to an all-white school this fall.

Sat. 8-24-57

The integration petition was brought by 12-year-old James V. Weaver through his father, Preston R. Weaver, a shoe repairman.

The older Weaver said he had not made up his mind whether or not he would appeal the decision. Unless he does and is successful, the five local schools here will be completely segregated next year.

The school board made no public statement in its denial of the Weaver application, but the board unanimously rejected the bid.

66 Old Fort Negroes Rejected For Transfer to White School

News & Observer Sun. 8-4-57

Raleigh, N.C.

MARION, Aug. 5 (UP) — The McDowell County School Board today rejected the applications of 66 Negro pupils to attend the white school at Old Fort, the first white school in North Carolina where Negroes attempted to break color bars.

The refusal came on a technicality. The board ruled the applications were not made on the proper forms, and were not made to the proper official.

The 66 applications were received July 17 by County School Superintendent Melvin Taylor. They were received in the mail from Negro Attorney Samuel S. Mitchell of Raleigh.

The board held today that such applications for transfer must be made to the principal of the school to which application is made.

Standard Form.

It also said the county has a form, used here for several years, on which such applications must be made.

The children, all of Old Fort, now attend the Negro elementary and high schools at Marion. Old Fort has no Negro school. It was closed in 1951.

The applications were the second attempt to gain entrance for Negroes to the Old Fort School. The previous attempt came in 1955 when five Negro children showed up at the white school on opening day. They were turned down.

That case has been before state and federal courts for almost three years. And it brought the first test of the constitutionality of the State's Pupil Assignment Law.

Both the state supreme court and federal courts have upheld the act in the Old Fort case.

The case also produced the state's only recorded incident of violence concerning school segregation. Albert Joyner, the Negro man who took the five children to the school, was involved in a fist fight with a white man in downtown Old Fort after the incident.

The Negro parents appealed to Federal Court and Judge Wilson Warlick ruled they had not exhaused all remedies available under state courts. The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals later upheld this ruling.

The Negroes filed a suit in Superior Court. Judge George B. Patton, now Attorney General, ruled that the Negroes should not have applied as a group, but should have applied individually.

Commenting on the action of the three school boards, Kelly Alexander, president of the North Carolina Conference of NAACP branches, said: "It is encouraging to see North Carolina move into the class of respectability as to implementation of the Supreme Court decision in the field of public education. The school boards of Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro are to be commended for...approving the admission of Negro pupils to previously all-white schools. The NAACP in North Carolina had predicted that school boards in the larger cities of western North Carolina would take the leadership in the desegregation of the public schools of the state."

NAACP Seeks Enlargement Of De-Segregation

Kansas City, Mo.

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Parents of 36 school children whose applications for admission to previously all-white schools were turned down by the Charlotte school board were scheduled to meet here today to prepare an appeal to the school board for reconsideration of the rejected applications.

On July 23 the school board voted to assign to white schools five of the 41 children who applied. Similar action was taken by school boards in Winston-Salem and Greensboro in accordance with the state's pupil assignment act permitting local action to integrate the schools. Winston-Salem reassigned one child and Greensboro, six. A total of 51 pupils made application for reassignment in the three cities.

The decision to admit 12 of the applicants to "white" schools was the first voluntary step towards integration of the elementary and secondary public schools in North Carolina and the first break in the hitherto solid defiance of the Supreme Court's ban on segregated education by authorities in eight southern states. In addition to North Carolina, these include Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Rejected children appeal board ruling

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 8-17-57

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The local school board had under consideration last week appeals filed by parents of 24 children who have been denied admission to "white" schools in a recent decision of the board.

While the board last month transferred two colored children to formerly all white schools, it rejected applications for transfers from 24 others. It said it would rule on the appeals, but set no date.

C. O. PEARSON of Durham, chairman of the legal redress committee of the NAACP, counsel for the parents, refused to say whether legal action might be expected if the school board turned down some of the appeals.

In a broad hint that legal action might be expected in such an eventuality, however, Mr. Pearson added: "I think that everyone understands that this procedure will be tested legally."

* * *

AMONG REASONS given in the statements asking for reassignment are:

1. The child lives closer to a "white" school, yet has the hardship of traveling a greater distance to a "colored" school.

2. Segregated schools provide ineffective education. "Our children cannot be taught in a segregated school to live in an unsegregated society," one statement said.

3. Segregated schools cannot be tolerated because they are illegal and teach disrespect for law.

4. Segregated schools are inherently unequal because of their psychological effect on colored children.

Editor Cites Heart Of Integration War

Afro-American Sat. 1-26-57 Baltimore, Md.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — "I doubt that very many colored people object to going to schools attended exclusively by other members of their race.

"I do believe that most colored people probably object strenuously to being required to go to schools limited to their own race.

"They do not like the implication that they are inferior. Their protest is not so much against colored schools as it is against enforced segregation."

That view of the colored man's fight to knock out segregation in the South was expressed last week by Reed Sarratt, executive editor of two Winston-Salem daily newspapers, before the local Lions Club.

* * *

"NORTH CAROLINA school boards, in my opinion, can remove race from consideration in assigning children to schools without causing much change in the racial complexion of the student bodies of the schools," he said.

Mr. Sarratt added:

"All that the courts require is that no child shall be excluded from a school because of race which he otherwise is entitled to attend.

"School officals who delay action until confronted with a court order to desegregate lose the initiative for making policy decisions on the matter.

"Evidence grows that leaders, in shaping North Carolina's policy, would welcome a start somewhere in the state toward voluntary compliance to demonstrate the workability of the North Carolina 'gradual' plan.

In his opinion, Mr. Sarratt said, the following factors will tend to keep the schools segregated in the absence of legal compulsion:

1. THE RISE of "equal" schools for colored children.

2. The inadequacy of present school facilities. He said "Most schools are overcrowded to the extent that it would be physically impossible to admit additional pupils to them in any large numbers."

3. Residence. "Most children, whether colored or white, attend schools which are nearest their homes. This practice probably will continue, at least in the cities."

4. VESTED interest of colored people in their schools. "Facilities, administrative officials, students and the community have gained a great deal through the development of fine colored schools.

"They will not relinquish these gains lightly, provided they can keep them with honor and pride."

Admissions May Help State's Legal Position

News + Observer Wed. 7-24-57 P. 1

Raleigh, N.C.

CHARLOTTE, July 23 (AP) — The action of three North Carolina school boards in assigning a few Negroes to previously all-white schools is expected to bolster the legal position of the state Pupil Assignment Act and Pearsall Plan statutes.

State leaders who have studied the 1955 and 1956 legislation in the light of federal court decisions have contended that some desegregation would be needed to meet judicial tests.

They cite the Virginia pupil-placement act which was overthrown by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals because it was backed up by strict segregation laws.

North Carolina's act was drawn so that it made no mention of race. The Pearsall plan legislation which followed also was framed so that desegregation decisions would be left entirely to local authorities.

The circuit court has said that the North Carolina law is not "unconstitutional on its face" and left open the matter of whether it might be applied in an unconstitutional manner.

Instances of scattered desegregation in the state would be evidence of good faith if the constitutionality of the law is challenged, legal observers say.

The most widely quoted expression of this point of view came last year from Col. William T. Joyner, vice chairman of the governor's Advisory Committee on Schools, which proposed both the assignment act and the Pearsall Plan.

In a speech to the North Carolina State Bar, Joyner said the Pearsall Plan made the assumption there would be some racial mixing in public schools.

"I think that some mixing in some of our schools is inevitable and must occur," he declared.

The veteran attorney went on:

"I do not hesitate to advance my personal opinion, and it is that the admission of less than 1 per cent, for example, one-tenth of 1 per cent of Negro children to schools theretofore attended only by white children, is a small price to pay for the continued operation of our public schools, a small price to pay for the ability to keep the mixing within the bounds of reasonable control."

He then suggested the legal alternative:

"One of the nightmares which besets me on a restless night is that I am in a federal court attempting to defend a school board in its rejection of a transfer requested by a Negro student, when a showing is made in that court that no where in all the state of North Carolina has a single Negro ever been admitted to any one of the more than 2,000 schools attended by white students."

The Pupil Assignment Act, under which the school boards of Charlotte, Winston - Salem and Greensboro acted tonight, was passed by the 1955 General Assembly — the first to meet after the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

Schools to Comply In Charlottesville

Star 8-15-57 Thurs. 8-15-57 Washington, D.C.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 15 (AP).—Public schools of this city will comply with a Federal injunction against requiring pupil placement applications, Supt. F. R. Ellis announced yesterday.

Mr. Ellis said the city school board members decided, after consultation with the board's counsel, John S. Battle, to comply with a ruling by Federal District Judge John Paul.

Only July 26, Judge Paul enjoined the local board from "denying entrance" of any pupil to Charlottesville's schools because the parent or guardian failed to apply for assignment to the State Pupil Placement Board, as required by legislation enacted last September by the Virginia General Assembly.

At the same time, Judge Paul declined to order the schools desegregated this fall pending a ruling by the United States Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act, in the Norfolk and Newport News school desegregation cases.

However, Judge Paul, assuming the lower court would be upheld, ordered that his decree calling for desegregation in Charlottesville schools be effective at the start of the first semester after the Supreme Court's decision is given.

66 Negro Pupils Rejected In Bid In North Carolina

Defender P. 5 Thurs. 8-15-57 Louisville, Ky.

Marion, N. C. (ANP) — The applications of 66 Negro pupils to attend the white school at Old Fort were rejected early last week by the McDowell County School Board.

Old Fort is the first white school in the state where Negroes have attempted to break the color barrier.

14d(1)

The refusal was made on a technicality — that applications were not on the proper forms and not made to the proper officials.

The applications were received through the mail last July 17 by County School Superintendent Melvin Taylor. They were sent by Attorney Samuel S. Mitchell of Raleigh.

According to the school board, the applications should have been made to the principal of the school to which transfers is desired, and that the prescribed form, used by the county for several years, should have been submitted.

The pupils, all of Old Fort, are now attending the Negro elementary and high schools at Marion. Old Fort has had no Negro school since 1951.

This marks the second time Negroes have sought to enter Old Fort school. The first attempt was in 1955 when five children showed up at the white school on opening day. They were not permitted to register.

N. C. School Action Virginia Political Issue

News + Observer P. 1 Thurs. 7-25-57 Raleigh, N.C.

RICHMOND, Va., July 24 (AP)—The admission by three North Carolina school boards of 12 Negroes into previously all-white schools brought quick—and divergent—response today from Virginia's two leading contenders for the governor's chair.

Republican Ted Dalton has long advocated for Virginia a North Carolina type pupil assignment plan—one administered by local school boards. He said: "Apparently the school boards in North Carolina preferred to strengthen their position by token compliance with the Supreme Court decision. . . ."

14d(1)

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond saw in the North Carolina development proof that "the assignment plan advocated by Mr. Dalton embraces and accepts the principle of race mixing in the public schools."

Dalton said the action was voluntary on the part of the three cities Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro in North Carolina.

"Under their pupil assignment plan they could first have fought the individual cases through the state and federal courts, whereas Virginia under the Byrd-Stanley-Almond program is already near the end of the rope in the federal courts," Dalton said.

He said North Carolina authorities "are not under court order to admit a single Negro child."

Almond said an assignment plan such as North Carolina's "invites and promotes integration."

'Just Like Other Children,' School Board Is Told

Body votes 5-1 to keep color bars

RALEIGH, N. C. — "I think we would be right morally. Legally, I know we would be right. . . I think the sooner a few colored children enter school and the public finds they are just like other children, the sooner the whole thing will be settled."

Fred A. Carnage, Raleigh attorney and school board member, had this to say while putting up a singlehanded and losing battle Wednesday for favorable action on a colored pupil's request for transfer to Needham - Broughton High School.

The pupil, 14-yearold Joseph Hiram Holt Jr., is currently attending Ligon High School, which is located three miles from his home at 1018 Oberlin Rd.

HOLT'S PARENTS, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Holt, applied in June for the transfer to Broughton High School, located only eight blocks from their home.

Action on the application has been passed over twice before because the full membership of the board was not present. The matter was finally brought up Wednesday by School Superintendent Jesse O. Sanderson, who serves as board secretary.

Board member J. W. York remarked that the application "had been pending for some time" and that the members were familiar with it.

"In the interest of the public and the boy, I move the application be denied."

The motion was seconded by Victor Fisher.

Mr. Carnage, the only colored member of the board said:

"I would think this. We ought to have some concrete reason for denying the application. My opinion is the sooner we go ahead and admit, where there's only one like this — a colored boy — the sooner we will relieve the strain people are under.

". . . Unless we have good reason for denying to him a right he is legally entitled to, I think the sooner a few colored children enter school and the public finds they're just like other children, the sooner the whole thing will be settled.

"I think this matter at this time ought to be looked on with favor."

MR. CARNAGE voiced understanding of the strain attached to admitting the first colored student to an all-white school, but added:

"The strain will be there five years from now. If he is rejected purely on the basis that he is colored, I don't think it sufficient."

BOARD MEMBER Leroy Martin said: "I feel for the best interest of this boy and Raleigh schools this action (denial of the transfer) should be taken."

"It's been my hope through the years we would be able to avoid court action. I think we have the finest relationship between the races here. I don't think we can forever maintain a school system without taking some colored children. I think the people ought to know that.

". . . But just now, I hope our people will have patience. I'm more interested in appealing to the parents of this boy to give us more time in Raleigh and see how the matter works out in other cities," Mr. Martin concluded.

"Primarily," Mr. Carnage interposed, "my interest is in the Raleigh schools, and if I thought for one instant that admission of the boy would upset the equilibrium of the school, I wouldn't vote for his going."

"No one here doubts that," Mr. Martin said.

MAYOR W. G. ENLOE, ex-officio chairman of the board, pointed out:

"A number of people have said we could admit this child and it would give us the right to refuse 34 children in the Oberlin Rd. area. Personally, I don't want to be a party to that kind of subterfuge.

"Once the time is right to admit them, the number won't matter. We're doing everything for them citizenwise. I hope there will be no court action to upset the good relationship here."

"I think the board ought to take action in keeping with the law," said Mr. Carnage. "I don't expect the public to approve of it."

The board voted 5-1 against the transfer.

Mr. and Mrs. Holt said that they had not yet decided whether to ask the board for a rehearing and reconsideration.

"At the present time I can not act," said Mr. Holt. "I would have to think about it. In any event I would not go further without legal advice."

Young Holt was an honor pupil with an average between 88 and 91. Upon completion of the 9th grade at Ligon last year.

Raleigh Board Postpones Final Integration Ruling

1+9 ne

By FRANCES WALLS.

"I don't think this means the Board will change its mind," said Raleigh School Board member Leroy Martin yesterday following the Board's postponement until Aug. 28 of final action on a Negro youth's application to attend a white school.

Joseph H. Holt Jr., was denied reassignment from Ligon High School to Broughton in action taken by the Board Aug. 6. His parents requested a hearing on the rejection as provided by law.

At the hearing yesterday Martin moved that action be postponed until the next meeting for study by a committee appointed at the last meeting to study the integration matter.

On the committee are Martin, J. W. York and Fred J. Carnage, only Negro member of the Board.

Motion Renewed.

Prior to Martin's motion, York made the same motion he made at the Aug. 6 meeting—that the Holt application be turned down "for the welfare of the public and the boy."

Neither the Negro youth nor his parents were at the hearing. They were represented by Raleigh attorney Herman Taylor. Taylor read a petition to the Board stating the Board was in error in declining to change young Holt's present school assignment from Ligon to Broughton.

Sat. 8-24-57

The Rev. S. F. Daly appeared before the Board as a citizen and friend of the Holts. He read a statement saying, "one of the reasons advanced" for not admitting Holt was the fact that he would have been the only Negro at the school.

He said:

"The purpose of this letter, therefore, is to say that if the idea of young Holt's being a lone member of his race in the school is a sincere basis of objection on the part of the Board against assigning him to Broughton school, not only is this objection groundless, but the Board itself has in its power full authority to remove this objection completely and summarily: Let the Board assign to accompany young Holt some of his classmates and schoolmates whom the Board would assign to Broughton were they white."

Observers Present.

In addition to Taylor and Bailey three other Negroes attended the meeting to observe. They were Dr. Marguerite Adams, M. D. Haywood and Clark DeVane of Shaw University.

In other action the Board authorized change of assignment of 71 students because of a change in residence and 14 for hardship reasons. Twenty-six tuition students were accepted and 260 original requests for assignment, mostly first graders, were accepted.

The executive committee of the Methodist Home board of trustees notified the Board by letter that it would recommend to the full board of the Home that the orphanage children be transferred to the city system. The students now attend Methodist-Lewis school on the campus along with a number of town children. The changeover would take place not before the 1958-59 term and when room is available at Wiley and Myrtle Underwood schools, said Jesse O. Sanderson, Raleigh school superintendent.

The Board elected the following new teachers:

Mrs. Margaret T. Capps of Raleigh to special education position at Hugh Morson; Mrs. Mary Harold Novak of Knoxville, Tenn., to elementary position; Mrs. Lydia B. Lowie of Wake Forest to science position at Daniels; Miss Edna Earle Nation of Chattanooga, Tenn., to English, dramatic and speech position at Hugh Morson; Mrs. Patricia A. Slagle of Raleigh to elementary position; Mrs. Dorothy Hollifield of Raleigh to girls health and physical education position at Broughton.

Also, Charles W. Wilkerson of Raleigh to biology, swimming and track position at Broughton; Samuel D. Morgan of Marion, to shop position at Broughton; Neill M. Beatty of Elizabethtown to shop position at Broughton; James E. Williams Jr., of Goldsboro to junior high position at Ligon; Mrs. Dorothy C. Thomas of Raleigh to grammar grade position at Washington; Mrs. Louise L. Seawell of Raleigh to elementary position at Washington; and Mrs. Geneva P. Brown of Raleigh to elementary position at Oberlin.

14d(1) 1957 NORTH CAROLINA

County Has 4 "Races," 4 Schools

Norfolk, Va.

Special to Journal and Guide

LUMBERTON, N. C.— The Smiling Indians are really smiling this week.

They'll have their own school bringing to four the number of "different" schools the county must support.

THE SMILING Indians refuse to go to school with colored students; are not accepted in other Indian schools, and - of course- -are not allowed to attend white schools. Thus, they'll have to have their own, even though only 40 are now eyeing high school studies.

14d(1)

North Carolina law provided schools for white, colored and Indian pupils but Robeson county is doing the state one better by adding facilities for Smiling Indians. The cost of the venture will be $50,000.

SMILINGS NOW attend a 2-teacher frame school that supplied education only up to the eighth grade. After that grade, they were compelled to leave the county if they planned to continue their education.

Robeson's Lumbee Indians deny the Smilings' claim that they are Indians. The Smilings first came into Robeson county in 1911 claiming they were Lumbees from Sumter, S. C. "Not so" replied the Lumbees who asked that some "safeguard" be set up so that they would not have to accept "migrants coming into the county claiming to be Indians."

SMILING INDIANS mostly have European features with complexion ranging all the way up and down the scale.

Many of them have—in the past—gone to McColl, S. C. for high school training, but the addition of a teacher and the building of their new school will give them a chance at education "at home" in the future. The school is to be located on Highway 130 south of Maxton.

Old Fort Gets 66 Negro Applications

News & Observer

MARION, July 18 (AP)—Sixty-six Old Fort Negro children today applied for admission to the white school at Old Fort, beating by a matter of hours the deadline for asking for racial integration in McDowell County schools this year.

Melvin H. Taylor, county superintendent of schools, said the applications were received in the mail this morning. Today was the last day that pupils, through their parents, could ask for reassignment to other schools. McDowell assigns its pupils to schools by publication of a legal notice in the local newspapers.

The applications represent the latest step in drawn-out attempts by Old Fort Negroes to have their children attend the Old Fort school rather than a Negro consolidated school at Marion, 13 miles away.

There is no Negro school at Old Fort.

Taylor said the Board of Education had planned to meet Aug. 5 and that the principal item of business was to have been the inspection of construction at various school buildings in the county. However, because an architect would be unable to keep the date, it had been planned to change it to a later date.

"Now, maybe we'll meet anyway," Taylor said, implying that they did not say the matter of the assignment application would be considered.

The board last met on July 1.

In Raleigh, Samuel H. Mitchel, attorney for the Old Fort Negroes, said the applications were made in accordance with a federal court decision that "administrative remedies" under the state's pupil assignment law must be exhausted before relief can be sought in court.

Mitchell also indicated he would take the matter back to the courts if McDowell board didn't act favorably.

Greensboro Parents Hope To Halt Integration Move

News & Observer

GREENSBORO, Aug. 3 (UP)—Three white parents have filed an 11th hour court appeal in an attempt to prevent racial integration at previously all-white schools in Greensboro, United Press learned today.

The three appealed to Guilford County Superior Court the decision by the Greensboro Board of Education last week to open the doors of three white schools to six Negroes starting with the fall term next month.

The appeal by J. E. Turner Jr., James A. Strunks and James W. Cudworth, each of whom said he is a parent of a white child attending at least one of the three schools, was filed at 11:35 p.m. Friday—only 25 minutes before the appeal deadline.

Friday Deadline.

Notice of the action was given members of the Board of Education 15 minutes later. Midnight Friday was the deadline, under the State's 1955 Pupil Assignment Law allowing 10 days for appeal from reassignment decisions by a board of education.

Thus by the margin of a few minutes Greensboro came to follow similar action taken in Charlotte, where the Board of Education has opened the doors of all-white schools to five Negro students. The move by five Charlotte parents was made Wednesday.

And as in the Charlotte case, the Greensboro parents said they were "being aggrieved" by the board's orders, and that, in making the appeal, they acted "on their own behalf and on the behalf of all other parents and taxpayers similarly situated."

J. J. Shields, attorney for the three parents, told United Press he sees "only a very slim chance" that the case will be heard before the scheduled opening — and integration — of the schools here next month.

No Integration Yet.

However, Shields added, "It is our position that while this case is in litigaiton, there can be no integration of the schools." He said the Pupil Assignment Law provides that for as long as such cases are in the courts "the situation is just as if the board had not acted on the applications."

Shields also said that if the appeal was unsuccessful in the Superior Court, it would be taken to the State Supreme Court.

He said the appeal is based on that section of the Pupil Assignment Law that says reassignment shall be made on the basis that it " . . . provides for the orderly and efficient administration of such public schools, the effective instruction of the pupils therein enrolled, and the health, safety and general welfare of such pupils . . ."

Tarheelia Leaders Accept Integration

Afro-American Sat. 8-3-57 P.3

Baltimore Md.

RALEIGH, N.C. — The responsible leaders in North Carolina have generally responded favorably to the action of three school boards in the state in accepting a few colored pupils in formerly all white schools.

A veteran white attorney declared that it is reasonable to expect that "at some time in the near future" there will be more than three school boards in the state that will admit colored pupils to "white schools."

The man, Col. W.T. Joyner of Raleigh, chairman of the N.C. Advisory Committee on Education, said this is expected because of the many school districts and different conditions existing in the state.

SPEAKING AT his beach cottage at Morehead City, Mr. Joyner said his position had not changed from last year when he told the state bar association in a speech that "some mixing in our schools is inevitable and must occur."

Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, chairman of the advisory committee on education said, "I would suppose and I hope that these school boards acted only after the most careful and prayerful study and consideration."

Mr. Pearsall, author of the "Pearsall Plan," added that he could "only assume" that the three boards "concluded that there was, under Federal law as now interpreted by the court, no legal basis for denying the applications for reassignment."

* * *

THE RACE relations committee of the Greensboro Ministers Fellowship called on "the good people of Greensboro to stand behind the school board in its policy regarding the admission of students to our schools without distinction of race or color."

Five ministers signed a resolution adopted by the committee, which stated in part:

"We approve the program of moderation which is, on the one hand, to carry out the laws of our state and of the United States; while on the other it is to make every effort to care for those who are dsturbed by their action."

Dr. Charles F. Carroll, state superintendent of public instruction, said:

"The assignment of pupils imposes upon each local school board the moral and legal obligation to act in good faith and with appropriate regard for the best interests of all persons concerned.

"I CAN only hope," Dr. Carroll added, "that the people of this state will comprehend and appreciate the burden of decision resting with the men and women who constitute school boards.

"Such an understanding will permit boards and the communities they serve to determine and pursue a reasonable and intelligent course of action."

C. L. Shuping, Greensboro lawyer and general counsel for the segregationist "Patriots" of North Carolina, said he could not say just now what the Patriots plan to do.

Negroes Must Go 40 Miles to School

World-Telegram & Sun New York P.8

By the Associated Press.

BRYSON CITY, N. C., July 31.—Six Negro students must continue to travel 40 miles a day to attend a Negro high school for their own protection, says the Swain County School Board.

Board members last night unanimously turned down the applications of the six students for reassignment to a white school near their homes.

County School Superintendent T. L. Woodard said he feared admitting the Negroes could cause "a real rough time, in my estimation something like Clinton, Tenn."

Mountaineus Swain County, near the Tennessee border, has no Negro schools. Negro students must travel to a high school in Sylva in Jackson County, 20 miles away.

The board said it acted "for the protection of the applicants."

Carolina Cities Vote To Accept Negro Students

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 7-24-57

CHARLOTTE, N.C., July 23 (AP) — Three North Carolina cities tonight voted to accept Negro pupils in previously all-white public schools.

It marked the first move toward voluntary desegregation in the public schools in any southeastern state.

Meeting in separate sessions, school boards here and at Winston-Salem and Greensboro voted to reassign 12 Negro children from the all-Negro schools they attended last year to previously all-white schools nearer their homes.

Five of the children are in Charlotte, six in Greensboro and one in Winston-Salem.

55 APPLICATIONS

The boards passed on a combined total of 55 applications from Negro children requesting reassignment to white schools. Of these, 41 were rejected. Charlotte alone turned down 35.

The school boards emphasized that decisions were made on their merits in individual applications and in accordance with the provisions of the state's Pupil Assignment Act.

That act, passed by the 1955 General Assembly, gives local education boards authority to assign pupils to specific schools "so as to provide for the orderly and efficient administration of such public schools, the effective instruction of the pupils therein enrolled, and the health, safety and general welfare of such pupils."

Race is not mentioned in the act.

The act has been held "not unconstitutional on its face" by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, presumably because it does not preclude possible admission of a Negro student to a white school.

A break-through of the racial barriers in North Carolina's larger cities had been expected by many since the U.S. Supreme Court's antisegregation rulings in 1954 and 1955.

In the opinion of many legal experts, the limited desegregation approved tonight will improve the state's legal position in administering the Pupil Assignment Act, and a companion act which provides for local option elections to close schools and tuition grant payments as steps to avoid forced integration.

North Carolina Cities To Integrate Public Schools

(Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P.1 Thurs. 7-25-57)

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — (INS) — North Carolina's three largest cities, Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro, prepared Wednesday to admit Negroes to public schools this fall in the first voluntary end to school segregation in the Southeast.

The decisoin announced simultaneously late Tuesday night, brought bitter protest and some dark but vague threats from some prosegregation leaders.

In sum total, the three school boards approved admission of 12 out of 55 Negroes who had applied for admission to White Schools. There are a total of 22,659 Negro and 24,445 white pupils in the three cities.

One Negro will be admitted to white schools in Winston-Salem, five in Charlotte and six at Greensboro.

There are no integrated schools below the College level in North Carolina.

TO TEST CLOSING PLAN

Kenneth Whitsett, of Charlotte, local official of the Patroits of North Carolina, Inc., declared: "We will test the plan of closing the schools. The citizens of this State are indignant and surprised at this school Board action."

The pro-segregation Patroits have been dormant, and Whitseell admitted: "We didn't expect this action, we were caught without a plan." He emphasized, however, that his organization stands for "law and order," and added, "if there is no way out in the long run, we will just have to accept it.

Another Patroit leader C. L. Sheping, told the Greensboro Board at its meeting, "If this Board permits integration of one single colored boy or girl to any branch of the school system of Greensboro you shall be condemned, vilified, damned and cursed. If you want to do any integrating, do it amongst yourselves. If you want to live down there with the colored people, then go ahead."

John Forster, chairman of the Winston-Salem School Board, pointed out that the board still reserves the right to re-assign to other schools "within the limits of available facilities those children whose parents desire such re-segregation." he added:

"The Board will do all it can to elimimate and dissatisfication which may grow out of the Board's action tonight."

Negro Pupils

School Boards in Charlotte, Winston - Salem and Greensboro Approve Negroes For Admission to Previously All - White Public Schools Under Pupil Assignment Act; 41 Applications Are Rejected

(News & Observer Wed. 7-24-57)

By ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Three North Carolina cities — Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro—tonight approved 12 Negro pupils for admission to previously all-white public schools.

(Raleigh N.C.)

The action, marking the first move toward voluntary desegregation in any Southeastern state, came in separate meetings of school boards in the three cities.

Five of the children are in Charlotte, six in Greensboro and one in Winston-Salem.

The boards passed on a combined total of 55 applications for reassignment of Negro pupils. Of these. 41 were rejected. Charlotte turned down 35, Greensboro one and Winston-Salem three.

Basis For Decision.

The school boards emphasized that decisions were made on the merits in individual applications and in accordance with the provisions of the state's Pupil Assignment Act.

That act, passed by the 1955 General Assembly, gives local education boards authority to assign pupils to specific schools "so as to provide for the orderly and efficient administration of such public schools, the effective instruction of the pupils therein enrolled, and the health, safety and general welfare of such pupils."

Race is not mentioned in the act.

The act has been held constitutional "on its face" by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, presumably because it does not preclude possible admission of a Negro student to a white school.

Break-Through.

A break-through of the racial barriers in North Carolina's larger cities had been expected by many since the U.S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation rulings in 1954 and 1955.

Since early June, the Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston - Salem boards had been considering the reassignment requests filed just after the last school year ended.

The Charlotte board issued a statement explaining its action.

The decision to reassign five pupils came after the board found "it had no discretion to assign them elsewhere," the statement said.

Legal Advice.

The board declared that it had sought the best legal advice "to determine its responsibility under the Pupil Assignment Act and the governing opinions of the United States Supreme Court and the Fourth Circuit Court of appeals."

The statement concluded with these words:

"The board has taken this step only with the greatest concern and after earnest and prayerful consideration of the many complex factors involved. Its chief motivation has been a sincere desire to preserve the public schools of Charlotte and North Carolina."

Reasons given for the actions of the Winston-Salem board followed the language of the Pupil Assignment Act.

Both Winston-Salem and Greensboro also considered a number of reassignment applications from pupils desiring to change to another school of their race.

The Charlotte board confined its consideration to the desegregation requests.

Charlotte's five approved requests were from three girls and two boys, ranging in ages from 12 to 16.

Three were reassigned to junior high schools and two to high schools.

The three Winston-Salem Negroes were all high school students.

Five of the Greensboro pupils were approved to enter a school containing both elementary and junior high school grades and one is a high school student.

In the opinion of many legal experts, the limited desegregation approved tonight will improve the state's legal position in administering the Pupil Assignment Act and the Pearsall Plan, which provides for local option elections to close schools and tuition grant payments as steps to avoid forced integration.

One other large Tar Heel city — Raleigh — still has a pending request by a Negro for reassignment to a white school.

Five such requests have been made to the Mecklenburg Board of Education, with no action taken.

Negro Students Refused At North Carolina Schools

(Advocate Jackson, Miss. Sat. 8-10-57)

Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 5 (Special) —An appeal from the school board decision rejecting the requests of 24 Negro pupils for reassignment from Negro to white schools was filed here Tuesday.

The Charlotte school board, in an historic move, lowered the segregation barriers in the schools here by voting to admit five Negro students to all white schools.

In accepting the five, the school board turned down 35 others who had applied.

Notices of appeal from the decision by the 24 parents were received at the school office Monday.

Kelly Alexander, whose son was refused reassignment, said he and other parents were asking for a hearing on the applications to find out specifically and definitely what criteria and standards the board used in admitting some students and refusing others."

Alexander pointed out that the notice received by the parents who were refused gave no explanation why the students request for transfer were turned down.

The Swain County Board of Education also refused to lower segregation barriers to admit six Negro students to white school at Bryson City, and instead voted to reassign the six to an all Negro unaccredited school at Sylvia in the next county.

Charlotte Negro Parents Carry Appeals to Board

(News & Observer Thurs. 8-8-57)

CHARLOTTE, Aug. 7 (AP)—The Charlotte School Board took under consideration tonight appeals filed by parents of 24 Negro children denied admission to white schools here in a recent board decision.

The board transferred five Negro children to white schools last month and rejected 24 applications. The board said it would rule soon on the appeals.

C. O. Pearson of Durham, chairman of the Legal Redress Committee of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and Thomas H. Wyche, a local lawyer, represented all the parents.

Asked if legal action was expected if the school board turned down some of the appeals, Pearson would not say.

He added, however, "I think everyone understands that this procedure will be tested legally."

Among the reasons given in the statements asking reassignment were these:

1. The child lives closer to a white school, yet has the hardship of traveling a greater distance to a Negro school.

2. Segregated schools provide ineffective education. "Our children cannot be taught in a segregated school to live in an unsegregated society," one statement said.

3. Segregated schools cannot be tolerated because they are illegal and teach disrespect for law.

4. Segregated schools are inherently unequal because of their psychological effect on Negro children.

Langston Graduate Accepts Unique Position

Miss Verlene Bennett, a recent graduate of Langston university, has been employed in the public school system of Gackle, North Dakota. She will be the only Negro living in the community, and is the first of her race to be employed in the city's school system.

Miss Bennett received the Bachelor of Art degree in Home Economics from Langston university in May of this year. She was recommended to the position by Langston university's placement service and Miss Lenouliah Ganry, professor of home economics and itinerant teacher trainer. Miss Bennett is the daughter of Mrs. Belle Gunley of Henryetta, Okla., and is a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority.

Bias Transferred From Home To School, Survey Concludes

Daily World Fri. 6-14-57

TOLEDO, Ohio — (ANP) — A study by a Toledo elementary school faculty has underscored a long standing belief that racial prejudices can be erased only if they are acknowledged as such.

The study was conducted by the school in cooperation with the Board of Community Relations and had the approval of the Toledo Board of Education.

EYES OPENED

Miss Bell Schuh, principal of the school, said her 30-teacher study group had its "eyes opened to what is happening around us."

As a result, she said, her teachers became aware — many for the first time — that group prejudices exist in school and affect both teachers and pupils.

The report took the position that children tend to bring family attitudes to school with them, and prejudices increase with age.

The survey group suggested neighborhood programs as one way to "create an awareness among parents as to prejudices in the home and to stimulate parental thinking."

A COMMON SIGHT on Cleveland's East Side, where schools are completely integrated, shows this unposed group of Mount Pleasant elementary school children about to cross street near the school. Integration in the schools is not faring so well in other parts of the country. INP

CAN'T RIDE BUS TO BETTER SCHOOL FOR "HEALTH REASONS" PATRONS SAY

Black Dispatch

Negro patrons in the Paden school district have opposed sending their children to the Paden school or to Boley, which is outside their school district, for the past two years, for "health reasons." Their children are not physically able to ride buses and it would seriously impair their health to ride public school buses less than three miles to Paden, or four to Boley. Last July 6, the West End school was burned to the ground which served this community, but patrons eager to continue "protecting the health" of the students involved have provided facilities on the farm of Rev. J. W. Tomlin, who acts as spokesman for the group.

(1) View of the temporary West End school, a room which measures about 20x12. (2) Rear view of school showing toilet in foreground. (3) An outbuilding with no floor, where recent digging indicates a new toilet will be placed. (4) The Paden grade school, less than three miles west, but due to "health reasons" the West End patrons have not even applied for admission of their children.

Teacher Integration Asked in Oklahoma City Schools

Citizens Action Committee Cites Examples of Success in Other Places

Supt. Approves Merit as Basis of Teacher Selection

Following newspaper reports that the pending closing of two all-Negro elementary schools the policy would be continued of taking Negro pupils without taking competent Negro teachers, the Citizens Action Committee intensified its two-year effort to secure integrated faculties at these two schools to be attended by Negro pupils when Banekar and Woodson schools are abandoned in September. Success in this respect appears brighter than ever, although by no means certain as we go to press.

Monday afternoon, July 22, the Educational Committee of the Citizens Action Committee met with Dr. M. W. Barnes, new superintendent of Oklahoma City schools, and requested his support in securing the adoption and implementation of a policy by the Oklahoma City board of education which would permit the selection of teachers and all other staff members on a basis of merit and without regard to race.

In support of their policy request, the members of the Citizens Action education committee cited with approval similar policy statements coming from boards of education of St. Louis, Baltimore and Washington, D. C.

The Washington, D. C. statement: "Appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions, ratings, or any other matter respecting the officers and employees of the Board shall be predicated solely upon merit and not upon race or color."

Baltimore policy statement: "In the assignment, promotion, and transfer of staff members, the policy of respecting relative merit shall be scrupulously observed. It shall be the purpose of the Department of Education to assign each employee to that position in which he is likely to render his best service to the school and to the community. No person shall be denied any opportunity because of his race."

The committee informed Dr. Barnes that Baltimore, during the school year 1956-57, had 464 Negro teachers employed in racially integrated faculties of 29 different schools, consisting of 14 elementary schools, 10 junior high schools and 5 senior high schools. There were 151 more Negro teachers employed in the Baltimore schools in 1956-57 than the total employed when segregated schools existed. The facts were called to the attention of the new superintendent. West Virginia, it was pointed out, now has 253 Negro teachers on integrated faculties.

St. Louis policy: All teachers pass a national teachers examination. When school were desegregated, teaching staffs were integrated along with student bodies. Harris Teachers college, for instance, has 25 Negro teachers out of a total of 70, the committee reported.

After listening to the committee, Dr. Barnes made clear that the selection of staff members solely on a basis of merit, as requested by the committee, and arranged for the iCtizens Action Committee to appear before the Board of Education at 4:30 Thursday, July 25, in the Board room of the Board of Education building, 900 N. Klein.

Following the report of the Educational committee to the regular meeting of the Citizens Action Committee, Tuesday afternoon at the St. John Baptist church, the same committee was directed to meet the Board of Education, Thursday afternoon.

The committee consists of the following citizens: F. D. Moon, chairman; Mrs. Cernoria Johnson, secretary; Rev. Robert Alexander, Rev. E. J. Perry, Earl Temple, Dr. Frank Cox, Rev. J. C. West, Meredith Mathews, Atty. J. J. Bruce and Rev. W. K. Jackson, president of the Citizens Action Committee.

"CHARMIN' SCHOOL MARM, Mrs. Mauderie Hancock Wilson is already "busy as a bee" at the State O. E. A. meeting convening here today and tomorrow. Secretary-treasurer of the Visiting Counselors and Attendance Workers section of the State Teachers group, Miss Wilson is psychometrist and visiting counselor in the city public system. Recipient of a number of awards for Oklahoma Negroes in the field of education, the attractive school teacher was among the first Negroes admitted to Oklahoma university and also among the first to receive a Master's degree from the University's Graduate school. A more recent accomplishment, Mrs. Wilson was a recipient of a state scholarship last summer to the George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tenn., where there is a quota for Negro students—these being "handpicked." Of this experience, the young teacher says, "I was made to feel as a student and not a Negro." Presently she is enrolled at OU where she is doing part-time study on the doctoral level.

NAACP Committee Approves Court Action In Dispute Over School Transfer Policy

The decision to seek federal court action for a ruling against the existing Oklahoma City school's pupil transfer policies was the outcome of a committee meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the N. E. Fourth Street YMCA.

Following this meeting comprised of members of the education committee of the Oklahoma City NAACP, a statement recommending "that the branch seek proper relief in the federal courts should these discriminatory practices continue to exist," was issued.

Refuse Transfers to 7

The Tuesday meeting was the outgrowth of an earlier refusal of the Oklahoma City school officials to transfer seven Negro pupils from the integrated Culbertson elementary school to the all-white Harmony elementary school.

The issued statement explained that the recommendations of the education committee were "made in the light of the unfavorable attitude resulting from the conference with the Board of Education concerning the transfer of the pupils from the various school zones in the Oklahoma City districts, which we believe to be discriminatory."

It continued, "We have in our possession very reliable information and this information was called to the attention of the school board where pupils of the majority race who live as far south as the 1700 block on N. E. 15th and the 1600 block on North Kelham were allowed to transfer to the Harmony school zone.

It further stated that, on the other hand, "Negro students who live as far south as the 2100 block on North Kelham and the 2200 block on North Hood were denied transfers to the Harmony school zone."

Culbertson is located at 1201 N. E. 12th and Harmony at 1537 N. E. 24th.

The action by the school officials was taken at the monthly board meeting when NAACP offiicals attended the Monday session to ask a clarification of the board policy on special transfers.

Atty. John Green, counsel for the Oklahoma City NAACP, pointed out to the board that a number of white students living in the Culbertson school district have been granted special transfers to attend Harmony although they live a greater distance from Harmony than the Negro students requesting transfers.

Ask Board's Policy

Green asked the board if it was the "policy of the board to permit students of the majority race to transfer freely, but to put restrictions on the minority race."

Superintendent Melvin Barnes said the policy set at the time city schools desegregated was to allow a student to transfer to a school where his race predominates in cases where the move appeared to be "in the best interest of the pupils" and where space and facilities permitted.

Dr. Barnes continued, "It seems to us a transfer policy that provides an escape valve for those who cannot take integration has helped integration proceed smoothly here."

The school board head said that changes in transfer policy are not normally made during the year because it would necessitate the shifting of teachers due to the change in location and enrollment of the pupils.

NAACP Meeting Sunday

According to Jimmy Stewart, local NAACP president, the school transfer policy will be a part of the agenda of the monthly meeting of the city NAACP which is scheduled to meet at 4 p. m. Sunday at the Bethlehem Star Baptist church, 9 South Ellison.

School Burning In Oklahoma Blamed On Integration Bid

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Mon. 7-22-57

OKEMAH, Okla., July 21 (AP)—A wapish 64-year-old Negro deacon was charged here with second-degree arson in what officers describe as Oklahoma's first "flare-up" since a Supreme Court mandate started segregation crumbling in state schoolrooms two years ago.

Eli Watkins was accused of burning to the ground a frame Negro schoolhouse that stood only about 100 yards from his farmhouse, 2½ miles east of Paden. He was charged with trying to force integration.

Two state officials said today to their knowledge this is the first criminal act in Oklahoma attributed to the integration movement. They are O. K. Bivins, head of the State Crime Bureau, and E. H. McDonald, assistant superintendent of public instruction.

Integration has spread quietly and orderly through many districts of this so-called border state since the Supreme Court mandate was handed down in May 1955. Oklahoma now has 178 integrated high schools, 90 integrated junior high schools and 172 elementary schools with white and Negro pupils.

The July 6 school-burning incident involving the mild, elderly Negro farmer is strange because of the concerted effort by his Negro neighbors to delay integration.

The three-room schoolhouse also had served for many years as the meeting place for the 60-odd members of St. John's Baptist church of which Watkins was a deacon.

Sheriff E. L. Jeter said Watkins told him he wanted Negro children in the district to be integrated with white children at Paden. Watkins has no children.

The Negro deacon admitted he wanted the school closed because he feels there are not enough students to warrant paying the teacher's salary.

"I'm a taxpayer and we support these schools, "he explained.

Oklahoma Integrates 20 Per Cent of Negroes Enrolled in Schools

Times-Herald Dallas

OKLAHOMA CITY, Oct. 2 (AP)—More than 6600 Negro pupils now are attending classes in 431 integrated public schools in Oklahoma.

New Orleans

Dr. Oliver Hodge, state superintendent of public instruction, reported the new figures Tuesday and said integration has progressed faster than he expected.

He reported on the first major study of integration in Oklahoma in two years.

Dr. Hodge estimated the 6600 represent about 20 per cent of the school-age Negroes in Oklahoma. The state no longer tabulates school-age children by race.

Commenting on the absence of any disturbances of consequence, Dr. Hodge said:

"The state board of education has treated integration as a local problem. The people have accepted integration in some areas and in some other areas they apparently are not yet ready for it."

14d(1)

The state policy has been to discontinue financial aid to school districts maintaining separate schools for whites and Negroes. The districts may continue separate schools but must foot the bills themselves.

Hodge noted 138 Negro schools have been closed since integration started, 26 of them this year. Some 298 Negro teachers have lost their jobs.

There still are 184 all-Negro schools, but many of them are in all-Negro communities or in parts of larger towns where some pupils attend integrated schools and others attend Negro schools.

Integrate Quietly In Oklahoma

Courier-Post Camden, N.J. Sat. 10-5-57

OKMULGEE, Okla. — (INS) — A teenage Negro boy entered previously all-white Preston High school without incident while four other Negro children failed to show up at another Okmulgee county school following a federal court integration order.

14d(1)

The four Negro youths who failed to appear at Morris High school south of Okmulgee, had been expected. School Superintendent J. Broadhead said however, that they probably would be enrolled during the week.

At Preston, noth of Okmulgee, high school superintendent Frank Duke said that the ninth grade Negro boy, Mark Simms, was enrolled without disturbance.

He had been attending St. Anthony Parochial school in Okmulgee since the start of the fall term.

The five Negro children were ordered admitted to the previously all-white schools under an integration order issued by U. S. District Judge Eugene Rice Saturday at Okmulgee.

However, Judge Rice delayed action of court-ordered integration at Preston's white elementary schools requested by attorneys for the NAACP.

He asked Preston School District Atty. Harland A. Carter to submit findings of facts and rulings within 20 days on which to base the decision on integration at elementary schools.

Judge Rice's ruling on the Morris suit came after attorneys for the school board said Negroes would be admitted. Parents earlier complained their children were barred from the school by school officials.

Meantime, NAACP officials said they would seek repeal of all segregation features still on Oklahoma's statute books, including transportation, at the 1959 session of the legislature.

Bus segregation has been eliminated and most schools in the state integrated under Oklahoma's official policy of compliance with the U. S. Supreme Court desegregation order.

NAACP state youth advisor John White said the present situation results in confusion.

LOCAL BOARD OF EDUCATION REFUSE TO INTEGRATE OKLAHOMA CITY TEACHERS

Negro Teachers Qualified; Other Cities And States Integrate Faculties

Black Dispatch Fri. 8-30-57

Oklahoma City, Okla.

Although all signs seemed to point to the beginning of teacher integration in the Oklahoma City schools, the local board of education last Friday afternoon voted not to permit Negro and white teachers to integrate at Walnut Grove and Riverside elementary schools for the school year 1957-58. The majority of the Oklahoma City board of education took this action, although Superintendent M. W. Barnes earlier in the summer had stated that the Negro teachers were qualified.

A reporter for the Black Dispatch, in checking into the school board's reason for this action, finds that two Negro teachers from the abandoned Carter G. Woodson school had not been assigned to any school until after the board took action last Friday, apparently being held for assignment at the Riverside school as part of an integrated faculty. Other Negro teachers in the Walnut Grove area, deprived of job assignments when the board of education voted to discontinue the recently built Bannaker elementary school were not assigned until after Friday.

What happened? More than a half dozen people report that a principal was transferred from the Riverside school because she was opposed to having Negro teachers and a new principal, willing to accept Negro teachers, was sent to Riverside. The principal of Walnut Grove is reported to have expected Negro teachers. A large number of white parents in the Walnut Grove and Riverside areas gave in writing and by telephone their strong endorsement of having Negro teachers in their schools.

Did publicity, especially a prejudiced blast from the North Star, a weekly paper published by Walter Harrison, recently defeated first ward councilman, frighten the majority of the school board away from what seems very definitely to have been planned?

Harrison was defeated for mayor two years ago by Mayor Allen Street because, as Harrison put it in his North Star, "I did not get enough votes south of Tenth street (Negro area) to wad a shotgun."

Prior to the recent action of the Oklahoma City board of education, the Education Committee of the Citizens' Action Committee (representatives of 36 organizations make up the Citizens' Action Committee) had appeared before the board of education and the superintendent of schools and furnished information relative to the progress of faculty integration in other places.

A copy of the material furnished the Oklahoma City board of education reveals that Baltimore has increased from five Negro teachers, serving on racially mixed faculties, two years ago, to 464 Negro teachers on such faculties this past school year, serving in 29 Baltimore schools. There were 253 Negro teachers on integrated staffs in the state of West Virginia. Schools in Joplin, Kansas City, Springfield, St. Loius and many other points in Missouri have integrated teachers. There are more than 500 white and Negro teachers working together on faculties in St. Louis alone.

Even the smaller communities of Oklahoma have Negro teachers serving on racially mixed faculties. To name a few, there is now, or has been, one each at Dover, Fay, Wellston, Sulphur, Perry, Kingfisher, Nowata, Luther (elected but took a position in Oklahoma City), and Crescent. Other cities with integrated staffs include three at Ponca City, two at Arcadia, two at Boynton, and two at Slick. Integrated coaches include one each at Cushing, Beggs, Wewoka, and a Catholic school in Oklahoma City.

What is the matter with the school board majority in Oklahoma City? See Walter Harrison's biased blast elsewhere in this issue; also Harrison's backtracking and board members' replies to Harrison's request for the board members' attitude on teacher integration.

As the Black Dispatch goes to press, we learn that the Citizens' Action Committee has voted to file a protest with the board of education relative to its discriminatory policy of taking Negro children to be taught by all-white faculties and denying qualified Negro teachers the privilege granted white teachers, namely, instructing Negro and white children together in the same classrooms.

The Black Dispatch will continue next week to seek an answer for the school board's refusing to integrate qualified Negro teachers when it transferred the Negro pupils to Riverside and Walnut Grove.

Oklahoma Board Stalls For Time

OKLAHOMA CITY — (INS) — The Earlsboro Independent school district in central Oklahoma promised a federal court Friday that it would integrate during the coming fall term, but pleaded it could not admit Negro children immediately.

Attorneys for the Earlsboro board told federal district Judge W. R. Wallace here that a permanent injunction against the board now would have the effect of causing crowded classrooms which are not yet prepared for integration.

Two Negro families have asked for a permanent injuntion against the board which has denied admittance of their children to the Earlsboro school.

4 YOUNGSTERS

The parents, who had sought to have their children start mid-term classes beginning Jan. 11, are J. C. Carr, father of Frances Jean Carr, and Cole Permeter, father of John Earl, Betty and Coyle. All are high school students.

The federal judge denied a temporary restraining order earlier and was preparing to hear the suit in a full trial when litigants said they were not ready.

The suit was then switched to an injunction hearing.

John Goode, Shawnee attorney representing the board, said it fully intended to abide by the U. S. Supreme Court decision on integration.

However, he told the court "If we are required to integrate now, it means we will have to take two grades out of our high school to make room for the Negro students, and put the white children in grade schools that wouldn't be capable of handling them with the added burden of Negro children."

AUGUST DECISION

Earlsboro school board president C. W. Cole, read a decision made last Aug. 8, and affirmed as being in the best interest of students during a Jan. 7 meeting, in which the board said it had become "necessary to integrate for the school year 1957-58," under the Supreme Court ruling.

In the interim, the board specified, Negro students would have to attend Douglass and Shawnee Dunbar schools.

The families are represented by U. S. Tate, Dallas, Negro attorney, who claimed that J. C. Smith, Earlsboro superintendent, and the school board, made public announcements as far back as June, 1955 that schools would be integrated.

Permeter also told the court he tried to register his children last fall, but Smith told him:

"I told you not to bring the children up here, because I am not going to let them in."

Sues To Enter School For Deaf In Oklahoma

Call P. 4

Tue. 5-22-57

Kansas City, Mo.

OKLAHOMA CITY — (NNS) — An Oklahoma City couple Friday filed suit in federal district court seeking admission of their 10-year-old daughter to Oklahoma's School for the Deaf at Sulphur.

The integration suit was the third filed in two days in Oklahoma by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and was the first involving the State Board of Education since the historic Supreme Court desegregation ruling.

The suit was filed in behalf of Veronica Bailey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Bailey Jr., and also "all other Negro minors... who are deaf and dumb to the extent that they cannot acquire an education in the common schools of the state and who are similarly situated because of their race and color."

Call P. 4

NAACP attorneys, U. Simpson Tate, Dallas, and Albert Alexander, Oklahoma City, filed the suit which specifically names defendants as Leroy B. Hall, superintendent of the Sulphur school; Dr. Oliver Hodge, state superintendent of public instruction and board president; Roy Craig, of Leedey; V. A. Coleman, Harjo; Tom F. Hames, and G. L. Hollabaugh, Broken Arrow; Jack Malin, Idabel, and Dion C. Wood, Duncan.

Two suits were filed in federal court in Muskogee by the NAACP attorneys seeking admission of 30 Negro children to public schools in Morris and Preston in Okmulgee county.

Oklahoma state officials said Monday that Negro children can be enrolled in the Oklahoma School for the Deaf at Sulphur when funds to accommodate them become available.

Dr. Oliver Hodge, state superintendent of public instruction, said there was full agreement on integration at the Sulphur school, but now "it is just a matter of finances."

INTEGRATION GAIN IS FOUND IN TULSA

School-Sponsored Activities Include Negroes—But Lag Is Seen After Classes

Wed. 5-22-57

This is the fifth of several articles on the integration of Negro and white students and teachers in the public schools in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision.

New York

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

TULSA, Okla., May 17 — A teacher at the Daniel Webster High Cchool here took several members of her class, Negroes and whites, to a near-by lunchroom.

"Sorry," the waiter said, "we don't serve Negroes here."

"In that case," a white student retorted, "we won't eat here, either."

They all marched out. For a moment the teacher's spirits drooped. Suddenly she brightened and said:

"Let's all go to my house for lunch. We'll be able to put something together."

They did. And had a grand time doing it.

More recently, eleven high school girls spent a pleasant Saturday morning together at Tulsa University. They had been guests of the journalism department.

10 of 11 Passes Honored

Upon departing, each of the girls received a pass for a downtown movie house. When they presented their passes at the theatre, ten of the eleven students received tickets. The eleventh was rebuffed:

"Sorry, we don't admit Negroes here."

The ten white girls returned their tickets to the manager.

"If Juanita can't go in, we won't go, either," they said.

"We couldn't walk out on our friend," the girls explained later.

These incidents would not have taken place three years ago. At that time the schools were entirely segregated. But a new day has come to the Tulsa school system. It may not be too bright, measured in terms of what still remains to be done. But compared with many other communities in the Southeast, it is a giant step forward.

Integration, begun here less than two years ago, has been quiet. No violence has followed the step, taken by the Board of Education in the fall of 1955.

Negro and white children ride school buses together, they sit side by side in the classroom, and they play together on the football and baseball teams. Negroes have been elected to prominent positions of leadership.

Few Negro Students

But there is another side to the picture, school authorities say. Thus far the numbers involved are relatively small. Only 112 Negroes attend formerly all-white schools. They are in three high schools, a junior high and four elementary schools. This may not be too many in a system of 56,000 of which 4,500 are Negroes. But it is a tremendous step forward in this southern community of 250,000 persons of whom about 10 per cent are Negro.

More Negro students are expected in the schools this fall. After all, it is explained, this is only the second year of integration. About eighty students entered the first year.

Dr. Charles C. Mason, Superintendent of Schools, says that there always will be a considerable amount of de facto segregation here. The Negro population is concentrated in the north and northeast sections of the city.

For the most part, the Negroes in these areas will go to school in their own neighborhoods. This is comparable to the situation in Harlem or the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn However, as the housing patterns change, more Negroes can be expected to attend mixed schools.

Integration has not taken place on the faculty level. There are no Negro teachers in the white or mixed schools. The Urban League is seeking ways to bridge this gap. At a special meeting yesterday the league voted to appoint an education committee to work on the issue.

"I believe that teacher integration would be accepted in Tulsa," Louis Taubman, vice president of the league, said. "Parents want good teachers for their children, regardless of color."

The superintendent is not quite as sanguine. "The community is not ready for it," Dr. Mason said. "We have to take one step at a time."

First Step Called Success

The first step has succeeded, from all indications. Negro students are accepted in the classroom and on the playing field. This is a "first" for both whites and Negroes—the first time that Negroes are in mixed classes, and the first time that white students are in academic competition with Negroes.

Are the Negroes able to keep up with their white classmates? It is too early to tell, the teachers say. Besides, the numbers are not large enough to have scientific validity. Some students are failing, while others head the honor roll. However, in the main, the Negro students generally are among the poorest in their classes.

"I'm working much harder now than I did when I went to the all-Negro school," a ninth-grade girl said. "Before I just played around. My grades have improved here. I want to show my white friends that I can do work as well as they can."

"I never dreamed of going to college when I attended Carver [an all-Negro school]," another student said. "I certainly plan to go now. My work is more stimulating here. I hope to become a home economics teacher some day."

"She's one of my brightest students, and she will make a good teacher," her instructor said. "Everyone in class likes Georgianna."

At the Daniel Webster High School, where twenty-six of the 800 students are Negroes, mixed classes are now accepted as a matter of course. The dire predictions of some that integration would never work simply have not come to pass.

Nor is it solely a question of numbers. It would not matter, Dr. Carl A. Ransbarger, the Webster princial said, just how many Negroes came here eventually. The old-time tradition of separation of the races has been breached, and that is the important thing, he added.

"Whether we have twenty or 200, the situation will be the same," Dr. Ransbarger declared. "White and Negro students accept each other in the classrooms."

Negroes partiicpate in various extra-curricular activities. They go to the school dances together. However, here, as in the other border cities, the Negroes and whites while attending the same dances dance with their own race. There is no mixed dancing. Three Negroes are on the school band.

"We've had no trouble whatsoever," said Dennis Kelliher, the band leader. "They go with us on trips when we visit other cities. We only eat where both colored and whites are esrved."

One of the three-leter men in the school, Kenneth Lewis, a football, basketball and track star, is a senior at Webster.

"No one looks at my color when I shottfaSHRDLUHRDL when I shoot a basket," he observes. "If I get a good shot, they cheer. If I pull a boner, they jeer."

However, it is not easy to overcome the mores of a lifetime. It will take more than law to make school integration acceptable to all. The school's music teacher, Louis W. Ballard, says that prejudices sometime are found in unexpected places.

"I have a chorus of fifty boys and girls," he said. "Ten are Negroes. At first I placed them the way I thought they should go, based solely on their voices. The white students objected to being placed next to Negroes. Now the whites are in one section, the Negroes in another."

High school students, it seems, are more prejudiced than the elementary grade children. In the lower grades, the white and Negro boys and girls play and study together. They appear to be totally color blind.

For example at Emerson School, where there are thirty-four Negroes in about 400 children, the youngsters were playing fairyland games common to children the country over.

They put on "Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater," — remember, that's the story of Peter who had a wife and couldn't keep ner, so he put her in a pumpkin shell, where he kept her very well.

A 7-year-old Negro lad, Jimmy, when his turn came to be Peter, chose as his "mate" a blue-eyed white girl, Suzy, who had become his best friend. He pushed his white "wife" into the papier-mache pumpkin shell, and the game went on merrily.

"No one even said boo," the teacher remarked, smiling. "At this age color just does not exist."

At the beginning of junior high school, as was found in Kansas City, Mo., attitudes begin to change. And by senior high, if Tulsa is typical, prejudices are in full bloom.

You can recognize the clichés and stereotypes concerning the Negro race. The Webster High School students are not too happy that they have become interracial.

"I believe in equal rights for Negroes," a senior declared, "but I also feel that they should go to their own schools."

"If you let Negroes come to school ti won't be long before they marry white girls," a 14-year-old girl said.

"They're dirty. They take a bath once a year," still another insisted.

"I'd hate to see our school overrun with Negroes," a sophomore said, "they certainly would pull our standards down."

None of the students seemingly objected to any individual Negro. They would cheer a Negro if he made a touchdown with the same gusto that they cheered a white student. And they would object to a restaurant turning a Negro away, if he were in their group.

"It's the principle of the thing we oppose," the white students said. "We want to keep the races separated."

The students would frequently begin their comments with: "My Daddy says" or "My Mother feels" and then go on to repeat the prejudices they hear at home.

"It's the adults," one of the officials said. "If you leave the students alone, they'll come out all right. They have the proper democratic instincts."

Do Negro students want to attend integrated schools? Many of those now at Booker T. Washington High School, the all-Negro school at Tulsa, said that they did.

"I'd like to go to a mixed school," said Elizabeth Humphrey, a senior. "It would be a challenge to work with white students and teachers."

The Negro students accept stoically the limitations of integration. They know that there are certain taboos that they cannot break.

Richard Tiger, one of the most intelligent and popular students at Booker T. Washington, is president of the student council. Each of the five high schools—the one Negro and the four white — has its own student council. The officers of the five councils are planning a joint city-wide picnic, to take place May 29. The other four presidents are white. One of the presidents, a girl, invited the other four to meet at her house for an evening business session. Picnic plans were to be considered. The day before the meeting she phoned Richard.

"I'm sorry," she apologized. "We can't meet at my house. Daddy has invited some friends over for a meeting of his own."

"I rather expected to get that call," 18-year-old Richard said. Then he added: "We just can't let things like that upset up too much. After all, we are doing things that our parents would not have believed would happen in their lifetime."

That is evidently true. The Tulsa high schools cooperate together, regardless of race. The high school teams play against each other. When the all-Negro Washington team plays the all-white Roosevelt or Edison teams, racial cheering is kept to a minimum. Negro and white students sit together on a first-come, first-serve basis. Negro and white referees—one Negro, one white—have been used to officiate the intramural, interracial games.

Both Negro and white referees are booed or cheered on the basis of their decisions, not their color.

The high schools have joined to issue one newspaper for all. The editors, Negro and white, meet together to determine policy. The schools sponsor an all-boys chorus and an all-city orchestra. The teachers are fair and unbiased, the Negro students say. "I'd just love to buy all the teachers vacation presents, my child is so happy," one of the mothers whose daughter attends Daniel Webster said.

Here, as in the other cities visited in this survey, integration ends with the end of the school day. Or with the end of the school-sponsored activity. There is a subtle distinction. White children will go to a restaurant or a dance with Negro classmates if the event is connected with their school program. Otherwise the separation of the races is complete.

Dissident Whites Seek Other Way Out of School District When Annexation Move Fails

Black Dispatch
Oklahoma City, Okla.
Fri. 6-7-57

C. E. Grady, county superintendent of schools, refused to grant transfers to 21 white children from the Rrcadia school district, following a hour's conference in his office Wednesday, on the ground that the request for transfers violated the law. One of the patrons requesting transfer is a resigned member of the board.

Grady told his conference that he was trying to uphold the law on integration, and all of their requests violated state and federal laws on that subject. Grady gave three legal reasons why he could grant transfers: (1) topography of the neighborhood in question; (2) health of the child, accompanied by a doctor's certificate; (3) failure of the district where the child was assigned to teach the grade and type of work the patron wanted his child to secure.

One of the patrons said he wanted his child transferred because the enrollment at the Arcadia school was largely Negroid, and that his child was being denied social advantages in not attending an all-white school.

Two of the protestants are teachers in the Luther schools and they stated they were unable to attend social functions at Arcadia and wanted their children along with them.

"None of your reasons for wanting transfers conform to the law and I am attempting to uphold the Supreme Court decision on this subject, so your requests will be denied," said Grady.

The Arcadia school has been in turmoil for the last two years, despite the fact most of the white parents have accepted integration and everything is moving along nicely. It is the only school in Oklahoma, known to this writer, which is integrated as to school board members, teachers and pupils.

Earlier this year the dissident ones sought to work out an annexation plan. This failed on the day of election, three to one, showing that those who oppose integration are sadly in the minority. The Wednesday plan was another move in attempt on the part of the "segregationists" to serve their ends.

Okla. Schools To Integrate Fall Classes

Daily World Fri. 1-18-57 Atlanta Ga.

OKLAHOMA CITY — (INS) — The Earlsboro Independent School District in Central Oklahoma promised a Federal court Thursday that it would integrate during the coming fall term but pleaded it could not admit Negro children immediately.

Attorneys for the Earlsboro board told Federal District Judge W. R. Wallace in Oklahoma City that a permanent injunction against the board now would have the effect of causing crowded classrooms which are not yet prepared for integration.

Two Negro families have asked for a permanent injunction against the board which has denied admittance of their children to the Earlsboro high school.

PARENTS NAMES

The parents, who had sought to have their children start mid-term classes beginning Jan. 11 are, J. C. Carr, father of Frances Jean Carr, and Cole Permeter, father of John Earl, Betty and Coyle. All the children are high school students.

The Federal judge denied a temporary restraining order earlier and was preparing to hear the suit in a full trial when litigants said they were not ready. The suit was then switched to an injunction hearing.

John Goode, Shawnee attorney representing the board, said it fully intendent to abide by the U. S. Supreme Court decision on integration. However, he told the court that "if we are required to integrate now, it means we will have to take two grades out of our high school to make room for the Negro students, and put the white children in grade schools that wouldn't be capable of handling them with the added burden of Negro children."

Daily World P. 7

DECISION READ

Earlsboro School Board President C. W. Cole, read a decision made last Aug. 8, and affirmed as being in the best interest of students during a Jan. 7 meeting, in which the board said it had become "necessary to integrate for the school year 1957-58," under the Supreme Court ruling. In the interim, the board specified, Negro students would have to attend Douglass and Shawnee Dunbar schools.

The families are represented by U. S. Tate, Dallas, Negro attorney, who claimed that J. C. Smith, Earlsboro superintendent, and the school board, made public announcements as far back as June 1955 that schools would be integrated.

Permeter also told the court he tried to register his children last fall but Smith told him they would have to attend Dunbar Negro high school and then declared:

"I told you not to bring the children up here, because I am not going to let them in."

Integration Starts At Okla. School

EARLSBORO, Okla. — (INS) — Three of four Negro children began classes without incident Monday at the Earlsboro high school where integration was ordered recently by a Federal Court Judge.

The three children of Coyle Permetter -- John Earl, Betty, and Coyle Lee -- moved into the previously all-white school, but the school superintendent, C. J. Smith, said the fourth youngster, Francis Jean Carr, had not yet enrolled for the term.

Smith discussed class schedules for the Negro children and said it was probable that two of them who are seniors may be graduated at the end of the current term. earlier Smith said this was unlikely because the Earlsbro school did not have subjects which they needed to complete high school. He said they could acquire the needed courses through correspondence from the Univers ty of Oklahoma or some other qualified college.

The teen-agers attended classes for the first time since last Sept., when their parents had refused to place them in the segregated Shawnee Dunbar High School in another district. The elder Perm tter and J. C. Carr, father of the unregistered student considered the racially segregated school unequally as educational as the Earlsboro School in the district.

The parents won an injunction hearing last week in Oklah ma City in which U. S. District Judge W. R. Wallace ordered the Earlsboro H gh School not to interfere with enrollment of the four Negro children.

The Earlsboro School Board had pleaded for more time to prepare for increased classes that they claimed would result from immediate integration in the school. The board noted that it had scheduled full integration at Earlsboro during the coming fall school term.

Children Enter Oklahoma School Without Incident

U. S. District Judge W. R. Wallace ruled January 17 in Oklahoma City that the Negro students could not be refused admittance to the Earlsboro high school under the U. S. supreme court decision. The parents pleaded their case before the jurist.

The school board claimed that overcrowded classrooms would result if Negro students were permitted to enroll at Earlsboro from nearby schools. The board had scheduled integration at the schools to start with the fall term.

During the hearing, the Earlsboro independent school district in central Oklahoma promised the court that it would integrate during the coming fall term but pleaded it could not admit Negro children immediately.

Oklahoma Pupils File Bias Suits

Defender Sat. 3-23-57

Chicago Ill.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA. — (INS) — Suits charging discrimination by two Okmulgee county school districts were filed in federal district court in Muskogee last week by the parents of 39 Negro children who want to enter white schools at Morris and Preston.

Two suits seek admission of the Negro students in the white schools next autumn and charge that the youngsters' constitutional rights have been violated by the school boards of the districts discriminating against the Negro children.

The Morris suit also names as defendents W. E. Long, board president and Mrs. Edith Wilson, secretary.

Parents of 27 Negro children in Morris and 12 Negroes in the Preston district filed "class-action" suits in behalf of all school-age Negroes in the districts.

U. Simpson Tate, regional attorney from Dallas for the NAACP prepared the cases, and the actions were filed in behalf of the plaintiffs by Oklahoma City Attorney Albert Alexander.

Both ask for a permanent injunction against "unlawful" discrimination, and admission of the Negro youngsters "on the same terms and conditions" which apply to other students.

In a similar suit filed earlier against the Earlsboro high school in central Oklahoma, Negro students won admission to the Pottawatomie County high school on a federal court order.

School Situation in Terrible Mess in Okfuskee County

Black Dispatch

Oklahoma City Okla.

Fri. 7-26-57

By J. E. STEWART

PADEN, Okla.—There's something in the woodpile over here in Okfuskee county near the town of Paden and we think 'tis more than the fact that Eli Watkins, 64, Negro church deacon, has been accused of burning the little West End Negro school to the ground July 6.

This writer visited with Mr. and Mrs. Watkins in their well kept cottage, some 2½ miles east of Paden, which would be about three miles west of the all-Negro town of Boley, Sunday shortly after they had returned from church. The school which he is accused of burning is within a stone-throw of his house and nothing seems to remain except the chimney and some playground equipment.

The tall, rawboned deacon and his wife talked freely with us on the issues at hand but he steadfastly denied that he burned the school. He did say that he had strong convictions, although he has no children of school age, that the Negro children in his community should have the advantage of better schools at Boley or Paden. Buses transporting children to both the Paden and Boley schools pass down the highway in front of the Watkins home and within 200 yards of the burned school, however we were told Negro parents of the children in this community in order to retain the West End school for a community center, church and school, had signed statements to the effect that their children were not physically able to ride these buses (they are really in the Paden school district) the distance of approximately 2½ miles. Through these means we were told the West End school was allowed to exist for the past two years although there seems to be a great difference of opinion as to the enrollment and the actual daily attendance at the school.

This reporter was told by Rev. J. W. Tomlin, who lives a half mile from Watkins and was in the process of fixing up a ramble-shack house on his farm when we were there so that school could open the next morning, that there would be 22 or 23 pupils. Watkins says if they enroll pupils from Boley, Chicago and their community, they still wouldn't have 22 attending classes.

There is division of opinion in this community as wide as the two poles are apart. Rev. Tomlin favors "gradual" integration and says the community needs a community center and church which the burned school served as. He says within two years or so, the people in the community could purchase the proposed new West End school building for a community center and then the children could be integrated with Paden or Boley. He also expressed apprehension as to the reception Negro children from his community would get in Paden, which is rightfully their school district, and said he doubted if Negro teachers would be hired. When asked if any attempts had been made to negotiate with the Paden school board relative to the pupils of his community as well as the hiring of Negro teachers, he stated that there had been none to his knowledge.

Schoolhouse Not Fit for Hogs

We visited the proposed site and shack for the temporary location of West End school while in this community. The old rundown shack appears to have been built before statehood and never painted. New windows and a composition roof seem to have been installed within the last few days. Inside, on floors which seem to have as much ripple as the North Canadian river during the spring rains, there were 24 desks and one desk for the teacher. Otherwise, the room was empty.

There are several outhouses. One which seems to have been a toilet was boarded up and could not have been in use within recent years. In another outhouse, which may have been a barn, fresh dirt and a spade gave evidence that there may be plans to convert this into toilet. There is no running water on the site and your writer didn't find a well. When we mentioned to Rev. Tomlin that this shack was not only a firetrap, but could be uncomfortable to the pupils even in the summertime, he stated that they would probably hold classes out under the trees.

Teacher Agrees

We asked Rev. Tomlin if they had consulted the teacher, Mrs. Johnson, relatives to the building and holding school there until a new West End school were built. He said she had agreed that this situation was adequate. We were told that although there are no appreciable amount of crops to gether in this area, the Negro schools still cling on to the schedule of early opening during the summer and closing down in the fall to allow the students to help gather crops.

Integration Verdict Canceled Gains By Men of Good Will, Byrnes Says

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 5-18-57

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 17 (UP) Former U.S. Supreme Court Justice James F. Byrnes said tonight the court's school desegregation decision has "undone all that men of good will in both races had accomplished" in the South.

"Thoughtful people of both races know that an order of a court cannot change overnight the minds and hearts of people and they fear the future," the 78-year-old Byrnes told the Ohio State Bar Assn.

Byrnes, former governor of South Carolina, U.S. senator, representative, "assistant president" to President Roosevelt, secretary of state and Supreme Court justice, has addressed the bars of several states since he retired as governor in 1955.

"If the Supreme Court can alter the Constitution by its decisions, then five men—a majority of the court—can make the court a constitution maker instead of a constitution defender," he warned.

Byrnes cited the high court's reversal of a New York State Supreme Court decision upholding the right of New York City to fire a college professor who refused to answer questions about Communist activities.

"How can local government survive . . . if, by state statutes, you cannot declare that your children shall not be taught by a Communist or by a man who refuses to tell . . . whether he is or not a Communist?" Byrnes asked.

He cited a Supreme Court decision declaring unconstitutional Pennsylvania's sedition act, which in effect invalidated similar laws in 42 states.

"The Communists cannot destroy this union of states as long as we have 48 state governments which first must be destroyed," Byrnes said. "However, if they can make it impossible for the states to protect themselves, they will make easier the task of destroying the United States."

Byrnes said the segregation decision not only affects the lives of 40 million white Southerners, but "establishes legal precedents that will affect the people of all states."

Observing that a U.S. district judge in Clinton, Tenn., had denied a jury trial to a man charged with violating an integration order, Byrnes said:

"If the precedent should be established of expanding the injunctive power and denying jury trial in school cases, it will have far-reaching effects in restricting the right of free speech and the activities of organized labor."

Byrnes said Article Four of the U.S. Constitution gives Congress the power to curb the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. "Congress should exercise that power," he said.

He said the degree of race tension is dependent upon the percentage of Negro population.

In Ohio, he said, less than seven per cent of the population is Negro and "there is relatively little tension."

In the school district where the Clarendon County, S. C., segregation suit began, however, there are 2,900 Negro pupils and only 290 whites, he said.

"The parents of those pupils live in constant fear of what the courts may do," Byrnes said.

Byrnes Warns Of Dangers In Supreme Court Decisions

Advertiser Sat. 5-18-57 Montgomery, Ala.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 17 (AP)—James F. Byrnes of South Carolina said today the Supreme Court's school desegregation order and recent decisions striking down state subversive laws threaten the existence of state and local governments.

In an address before the annual convention of the Ohio State Bar Assn., the former associate justice, Secretary of State and ex-governor of South Carolina said:

"If the Supreme Court can alter the Constitution by its decisions then five men—a majority of the court—can make the court a constitution maker instead of a constitution defender. . . "

Byrnes cited a recent case in which the high court reversed the dismissal of a New York College professor who pleaded the fifth amendment when asked by a congressional committee about alleged communist affiliations.

Byrnes commented:

"How long can local governments survive. . . if by state statute you cannot declare that your children shall not be taught by a communist or a man who refuses to tell a congressional committee whether he is or is not a communist?"

Byrnes called the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision a "social experiment" that has "undone all that men of good will of both rances had accomplished."

He said Congress should use its consitutional powers to "deny to the Supreme Court the power to invalidate the provision of a state schools or affecting the security of the states or the United States government." He continued:

"It is useless for men to argue whether the racial instinct is right or wrong—it exists. It is nothing new. . ."

State of Oregon Puts Teeth in Anti-Bias Laws

Rules Apply to Areas of Housing, Jobs, Recreation, Schools

PORTLAND, Ore., (ANP) — The Legislature of the State of Oregon has amended the 1949 enacted Fair Employment Practices Act, 1951 and Professional Schools Act, and the 1953 enacted Public Accommodation Act so as to expand and strengthen these laws. The Legislature also enacted a law which prohibits discrimination, based on race, religion, color or national origin, in publicly-assisted housing. The amendments and the new law become effective August 20, 1957.

Amendments to the Public Accommodation Act extended coverage to "places of public accommodations" to include: (1) trailer parks and camp grounds. (Places of public accommodation named in the original law are hotels, motels, and motor courts, place offering to the public food and drink on the premises; and, places of public entertainment, recreation or amusement). (2) forbidding discrimination by any person acting on behalf of such place. (The Act proviously named only the operator, manager or employe of such place.

The newly-created housing law forbids discrimination in the sale, lease or rental of a dwelling unit (apartment or building) owned, operated or managed by a person who owns, operates or manages five or more other such dwelling units on contiguous land, notwithstanding that the land is separated by a public or private street or road, provided the dwelling unit is one benefiting from public aid the acquisition, construction, rehabilitation, repair or maintenance of which is financed in whole or in part by a loan that is made, insured or guaranteed by governmental body or is located on land owned or assembled into a parcel for dwelling units by a governmental body. However, upon the payment or expiration of the loan, insuring agreement or guarantee, the unit shall no longer be deemed to be benefiting from public aid.

The Fair Employment Practices Division of the Bureau of Labor has been expanded into a general Anti Discrimination Division with jurisdiction and powers of administrative enforcement of the civil rights laws of Oregon. (The Fair Employment Practices Act, the Public Accommodation Act, the Vocational, Trade and Professional Schools Act, and the Publicly-Assisted Housing Act).

Segregated Schools Found in Pennsylvania

Evening Star p. 25-b
Washington, D.C.
14d(1)
Wed. 5-15-57

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 15 (AP).—Pennsylvania, where racial segregation in schools has been outlawed for decades, found itself today with three public school districts admittedly practicing it.

Gov. George M. Leader immediately promised to stamp it out—but without saying how. His State superintendent of public instruction, Charles H. Boehm, said it was a local law enforcement problem.

Gov. Leader, a 39-year-old Democrat who long has championed civil rights, ordered a survey last October on how the State's more than 2,400 school districts were doing on the controversial segregation issue.

The results came out last night—the nature of them surprising many on the official Harrisburg scene.

Officials of three school districts admitted in a State questionnaire that Negroes were kept apart from white students in an elementary school in each district.

One Near Harrisburg

The schools are at Coatesville, a steelmaking community about 30 miles east of Philadelphia; in the Kennett Consolidated System in the same county as Coatesville and at Steelton-Highspire, near Harrisburg, the State capital.

In each case, the local school superintendent said integration efforts were under way and would be completed in periods ranging from six months to three years.

The segregated school in the Kennett Consolidated District is named the Thaddeus Stevens School. Stevens, a Pennsylvania member of Congress, was one of the Nation's strongest abolitionist voices more than a century ago.

School Supt. H. T. Griffith said a new school building would bring an end to segregation in his district, but he wrote the Department of Public Instruction:

"If the Steelton situation is left to itself, complete integration will be achieved by September, 1958, without incident or the arousal of tensions which could very easily destroy the fine working relationship which now exists in our high school and other integrated schools.

"With coercion or interference with present plans, existing elements could very easily be 'jarred' into a pattern of dissension similar to the deplorable and tragic events which we have been reading about in areas as close as our neighboring States."

Penalties Provided

Pennsylvania law prohibits racial segregation in any public place including schools, under penalty of a $100 fine and a 90-day jail sentence.

There was no indication that this statute would be invoked against the three school districts. State Attorney General Thomas D. McBride told a newsman:

"Bigotry is against the law in Pennsylvania. Segregation must end, but you don't get these problems solved by hitting them on the head with criminal prosecutions immediately."

The survey of 849 school superintendents or principals showed that 49 of them were in charge of school districts which emloyed Negro teachers and that no district had any kind of policy on this point.

Another survey is planned for next October.

Bias in Schools Still Practiced in Chester County

Inquirer p. 1
Philadelphia Pa.
Wed. 5-15-57

Two nearby school districts—both in Chester county—are still practicing racial segregation, despite a 1939 State law which prohibits the practice, it was disclosed yesterday by the Department of Public Instruction at Harrisburg.

The districts are the Coatesville and the Kennett Consolidated, which includes Kennett Square and adjacent communities.

In releasing the results of a survey of 849 school superintendents and principals in the Commonwealth, the department declared that "all but three" public school systems had integrated schools.

The other district in which segregation was reported was the Steelton-Highspire Joint District, near Harrisburg.

CALLED CONFIDENTIAL

The three segregated areas were not identified when the survey results first were announced late yesterday afternoon. Dr. Charles H. Boehm, Superintendent of Public Instruction, insisted that their identities were "confidential information" and he referred further questions to Gov. George M. Leader.

About an hour later, however, the department issued a supplementary statement which named the three districts.

The later statement said that steps are being taken in each of the three districts to alleviate segregation practices in their schools.

PROMISES INTEGRATION

The Kennett Consolidated School District "reports segregation of 50 third grade students and two teachers, and M. E. Prettyman, supervising principal, declares that complete integration will be developed by September, 1957," the statement said.

It continued:

"The Coatesville City District sports a condition of segregation existing in the elementary school and the James Adams Junior High School. By redistricting attendance areas, the superintendent reports thhe condition in the elementary school will be changed to one of integration."

"However, one school will remain predominantly colored. The superintendent reports that the elimination of tuition students from the Gordon Junior High School will permit the integration of the James Adams Junior High School students within the next three years."

"The Steelton-Highspire Joint District reported that segregation is being practiced at the present time. Plans to alleviate this condition are under way, and are contingent upon completion of a new school building. The district reported that these plans have been approved by representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

The supplementary report also declared, without explanatory details:

"The Steelton-Highspire District reports that Negro teachers teach students of one race.

"Chichester Joint School District (Delaware county) reports that their Negro teachers teach one race, because the Thaddeus Stevens School is 100 percent Negro.

"The Valley Township School District (Chester county) reports that one school in the district is made up of Negro teachers and Negro students.

"The following school districts reported that certain student activities (such as dances) are segregated: Steelton-Highspire and Scranton City."

Negro Teachers Hired for Strife Area of Levittown

Washington, D.C.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug 28 (AP).—Two Negro teachers have been hired for schools in this Southeastern Pennsylvania community of 60,000, where violent protests recently greeted the arrival of its first Negro family.

School authorities disclosed the appointments at a school board meeting yesterday. The names of the new teachers—a man and a woman—will not be announced until school starts.

It was said that the Myers incident has nothing to do with the appointments. Other Negro teachers will be assigned after school opens.

TWO NEGRO TEACHERS HIRED FOR LEVITTOWN

LEVITTOWN, Pa. — Protests against a Negro family moving into this unofficially segregated northern community, apparently have not halted the carrying out of appointing teachers on a non-racial basis.

This became known when school authorities announced two Negro teachers have been hired to teach in this community of 60,000 which greeted its first colored family with protests.

Names of the teachers were withheld pending the opening of school. This, however, is a standard established practice, and not an evasive move, school heads said. It was disclosed later that one of the teachers is a woman, and the other a man.

One teacher will teach at the new James Buchanan elementary school which is located near the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Myers, and their three children.

The immediate area, which has 15,000 homes, was the scene of near riots for nine straight nights, with the Myers family moved in. Picketing, jeering, and on occasion hurling stones, was carried out. However, officials said it was felt that most of the trouble makers came from other areas.

Demonstrations came to an abrupt halt after a police sergeant was struck down by a rock while he guarded the Myers home. State police banned more than three people gathering near the house. They continue to patrol the area.

It was said that the Myers incident has nothing to do with the appointments. Other Negro teachers will be assigned after school opens.

in line with established practice.

One of the teachers has been assigned to the new James Buchananl Eementary School, near the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Myers and their three children. The Myers were the first Negroes to move into this planned suburban town of 15,000 homes. For nine nights crowds gathered in the vicinity of the Myers house, jeering, picketing, and, on occasion, hurling stones.

The demonstrations ended after a police sergeant was struck by a stone as he guarded the Myers home. State police banned gatherings of more than three persons in the neighborhood after that incident. State police continue to patrol the area. A school official said the appointments had "absolutely no connection" with the fact that the Myers had moved to the neighborhood.

Educator Tells Need Of Thinking

Post and Times Herald Dat. 1-12-57

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11 (AP)—Dr. Willis M. Tate, president of Southern Methodist University, said today that Americans must begin thinking for themselves and control such group actions as "the teen-agers' reaction to Elvis Presley."

Dr. Tate, addressing the National Association of Schools and Colleges of the Methodist Church, said the American college and university has a responsibility to emphasize independent thinking and "help the individual rediscover himself as a child of God."

"There is a tendency in our society for the individual to be swallowed up in the crowd and to take his cues for thinking and action from pressure persons and groups. The teen-agers' reaction to Elvis Presley is a current example," the educator said.

People today are "informed on everything under the sun" but also "misinformed on a gigantic scale," he said.

"Through the printed page, the billboard, movies, radio and television, we are subjected to the most powerful pressures of suggestion focused at our basest emotional urges. People see, hear and feel so much that their responses are exhausted and confused," he said.

Dr. Tate declared that Christian education must "place more emphasis on educating the whole man" and must "send into our culture men and women whose spiritual values are as clearly articulated as are their intellectual ideas."

School Segregation Survey Cloaked by 10-Week Silence

Inquirer Phila., Pa. p. 27 Wed. 2-6-57

1200 State Districts Got Queries

Ten weeks after the deadline for completion of a survey of segregation in the 1200 school districts of Pennsylvania, the results were still bottled up yesterday in the State Department of Public Instruction.

Carl D. Morneweck, director of the Bureau of Research and Statistics, said he had nothing to make public on questionnaires submitted to county school officials.

His attitude was that it was a private matter of concern only to the department.

"We are going to turn everything over to Gov. George M. Leader," said Morneweck. He said 50 of the 1200 questionnaires were incomplete or had not been properly filled out.

QUERIED ON LEGISLATION

The importance of the bottled up survey returns was highlighted in a letter to Gov. Leader by Floyd M. Logan, president of the Educational Equality League.

After complimenting the Governor on his civil rights recommendation to the Legislature for action on banning racial and religious discrimination in State-aided schools, Logan said:

"We would like very much to know the type of legislation you have in mind, if it is at all possible for you to brief us.

ASK CAREFUL CHECK

"It seems logical to assume that the results of your present survey of public school desegregation in the State may have some bearing on the prospect for passage of such legislation.

"Hence, we sincerely hope that the survey results will be carefully checked as to their accuracy before any information concerning such results is released to newspapers.

"In so checking survey results, we will deeply appreciate it if you will give representatives of our organizations, namely, the Educational Equality League, the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Fellowship Commission of Philadelphia an opportunity to participate."

The questionnaire were issued by Dr. Charles H. Boehm, superintendent of the State Department of Public Instruction under orders of Gov. Leader.

Deadline for return of the questionnaire was Nov. 30.

QUESTIONS LISTED

The administrative unit or official in each of the 1200 school districts in the State were asked to answer yes or no to these five questions:

Are any schools of the area under supervision segregated?

Are Negro teachers employed in any of the schools of the area under supervision?

Do Negro teachers if employed teach integrated classes?

Is there a school board policy, either written or unwritten, prohibiting the employment of Negro teachers?

Are the activities sponsored by the school outside of regular school hours or so-called extracurricular activities during school hours fully integrated?

Appended to this last was a list of such activities: Interscolastic athletics, school clubs, dances, dramatics, forensics, journalism and music.

Church Council Urges Teaching on Religion In the Public Schools

Inquirer Phila., Pa. Jue. 4-2-57 p. 1

By DON SCOTT

• Without infringing upon the principle of separation of church and state, the Greater Philadelphia Council of Churches has embarked on a program to stress teaching about religion in public schools.

The council, which represents 1700 Protestant churches in the metropolitan area, emphasized that the separation principle should be upheld in the light of its original purpose, to insure religious liberty, not to separate religion from one of the major phases of a child's life, his educational experience."

MAY TEACH ABOUT IT

It said: "The schools may teach about religion or its values as a fundamental factor in our National life. They may not teach in such a way as to serve the sectarian needs of any ecclesiastical institution individually or collectively."

A State law now requires the daily reading of 10 verses of the Scriptures, without comment, in all Pennsylvania public schools.

SEEK BEST MINDS

It was recommended that the Council of Churches seek the best minds of school and church for a representative Protestant committee to keep abreast of the latest developments in this controversial field; that it support the public school in its efforts to relate religion and public education; and that it alert the denominations and local churches in this area to their roles in this developing picture.

Among the various channels suggested where churches could voice their concerns was the calling together of representatives of the many and varied Protestant schools to pool financial and program resources to assure a say in educational television. It was pointed out that parochial schools are classed as "educational institutions" eligible to serve as charter members for control of educational television stations.

SEVEN-MONTH STUDY

The program is the result of a 24-page study document on "Religion and Public Education" adopted by the council. The document represents the seven-month findings of a committee of 27 representative schoolmen and Protestant churchmen from this area.

Dr. Oliver B. Gordon, director of Christian education of the Greater Philadelphia Council of Churches, said a continuing committee had been appointed to implement the findings of the study document.

One of the first moves, he said, will be a fellowship conference for teachers and administrators in public and private schools, tentatively planned for early in October. The speaker will be Dr. Rolfe Laneer Hunt, director of the Department of Religion and Public Education of the National Council of Churches.

HOPE TO STRENGTHEN

"It is hoped we can do much to undergird and strengthen the hand of teachers in their stress on spiritual values." Dr. Gordon said. Jue. 4-2-57

The study document centers on 10 problems raised by the National Council of Churches at a conference in St. Louis, Mo., as they specifically apply to Philadelphia.

Commenting on the State law requiring daily Scripture reading in public schools, the council held that the present practice offers very little spiritual help to the pupils, mostly because of "indifference, inattention and, all too frequently, boredom."

WOULD GRADE READINGS

In addition to suggesting careful grading of Bible readings to meet the interests and needs of the group, the council said that the Bible finds its most effective use in the public school when it has a bearing on the course of study.

It suggested:

"In the treatment of history, the public school should help young people to appreciate the relation of the Bible to the development of the Judaic and Christian cultures . . .

RECOGNIZED GOD

"In tracing the distinctive qualities of the American citizen, the public school should point out that the founding fathers and succeeding generations recognized the Supreme Being and looked to Him as the author of liberty and justice . . .

"In teaching the arts, the public school should recognize the influence of the Bible in art, music, sculpture, etc. . .

"In teaching social living, the public school should make reference to the Judaic and Christian principles of conduct that have been a vital factor in shaping American law and standards of behavior. . .

LITERARY ASPECTS

"In teaching literature, the literary aspects of the Bible should be treated on a similar basis with other great literary masterworks. . .

"In teaching the great universally accepted ethical ideas and principles of societies, the public school should use the Bible as a source book on the same level as other sources. . .

"In teaching biography, the public school should make use of the biographies of Biblical personalities as well as those of other individuals. . .

LANGUAGE INFLUENCE

"In teaching English, the public school should make use of the Bible and show the influence it has had on the development of the language."

Preschool nurseries, sponsored by churches, were strongly recommended as a means for setting the stage for the use and appreciation of the Bible and other religious resources by public schools.

Governor Vows To End Segregation In Pennsylvania

Atlanta Ga.

HARRISBURG, Pa. — (SNS) — Gov. George M. Leader Wednesday vowed to end segregation in three state school districts.

The Governor, a former civil rights champion, became concerned over the issue when it was disclosed that [illegible] were segregated from whi[illegible] two schools located [illegible] and one at Steelton-Highspire. Local school superintendents said the schools should be integrated in six months to three years.

This deliberate separation of the races was discovered when the Governor made a survey to determine how the Pennsylvania school districts were faring on the segregation issue.

A supplementary statement which named the three districts was issued an hour later.

Steps are being taken to alleviate segregation practices in their schools a later statement said.

M. E. Frettlman, supervising principal, declares that complete integration will be developed by September 1957, the statement said. The Kennet Consolidated School District "reports segregation of 50 third grade students and two teachers.

It continued.

"Segregation is existing in the James Adams Junior High School and in the elementary school the Coatsville City District. The superintendent reports the condition in the elementary school will be changed to one of integration, by redistricting attendance areas.

House Members Slate Caucus To Find Way To Stop Supreme Court

Meeting Is Set During Weekend

News + Courier P.1
Wed. 6-26-57 Charleston S.C.

By Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 25 — Southern members of the House, concerned by a mounting tide of high court decisions they believe adverse to the interests of the states and the nation, will caucus here this weekend to seek "some way to stop the Supreme Court."

14d(1)

The meeting, Rep. L. Mendel Rivers said, will make it impossible for him to attend the annual watermelon festival at Hampton Thursday. Rivers said it would be "a great pleasure for me to be at Hampton, but it is my duty to be here for this caucus."

It was understood that the meeting would be attended by all or practically all of those House members who signed the Southern "Manifesto" in opposition to the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decisions in the Southern school cases, but that some conservative Midwestern Republicans also will attend.

SPEARHEADING MEETING

Spearheading the drive for the meeting is Rep. James C. Davis (D-Ga.), who headed last year's controversial investigation of the effects of desegregation on Washington's public schools.

There was no clear indication in advance of the meeting what methods the group will lean to in the effort to "stop the supreme court," but some members talked about some type of constitutional amendment, while others discussed the possibility of an attempt to impeach all or some members of the high court.

Some interest was displayed among the House members in a constitutional amendment proposed jointly in the Senate last night by Sens. Olin D. Johnston and James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), which would require members of the Supreme Court to be subject to quadriennial approval by the Senate.

SERVE FOR LIFE

Members of the court now serve for life unless impeached or unless they retire voluntarily. Their original presidential nominations are subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Meanwhile, Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R-Wis), again introduced in the House a proposed constitutional amendment which would require reconfirmation by the Senate every 10 years of members of the high court.

Smith said, however, that his amendment was not inspired by the recent decisions of the court. He recalled that he had first introduced the proposed amendment in 1953 and had done so again in 1955.

South Carolina to Sit Tight With Anti-Integration Setup

Journal + Constitution P.5-E
Sun. 8-18-57

Governor Has Decided Against Calling Assembly Extra Session

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

COLUMBIA, S.C., Aug. 17—Despite the feeling in some quarters that a special session of the South Carolina General Assembly might be in order in the light of a recent United States Circuit Court decision upsetting the Virginia student placement law, it is definitely settled that the governor will not call the lawmakers back to Columbia unless there is some unforeseen development—and none is anticipated.

When the Union County delegation in the General Assembly—the senator and both representatives—expressed hope that the governor would reconvene the legislature, the chief executive called upon the Gressette Committee — South Carolina's official school segregation watchdog—to meet, discuss the situation and recommend to him what to do.

This the group did, its studied opinion being that South Carolina is "well prepared to meet any situation arising regarding the integration of public education and that no extraordinary meeting of the Assembly is needed at this time." And the governor will be guided by this group's views.

Blocks Integration

The committee felt it was not necessary, as a result of the Virginia ruling, to repeal any law now on the South Carolina books, but, on the contrary, ample legal means existed to counter any integration order that might be issued.

In a statement after the conference, Sen. Gressette of Calhoun, chairman, for whom the committee is named, expressed anew the belief that the "cutting-off" law now on the statute books is a perfect weapon of defense. Under this provision, state aid would be denied any school accepting a pupil on court order, with the same penalty to apply to the school from which the child was transferred.

Also at present it is stated in the appropriation bill that funds allocated are not to be used in integrated schools. If it should be ruled that funds already set aside cannot be so separated, the assembly, of course, would simply leave those schools entirely out of the next annual appropriation bill.

The 'cutting-off" law is described by Sen. Gressette as "interposing" the authority of the state between the courts and the people.

Sen. Gressette said also that

during the course of the meeting his committee "canvassed the situation regarding public schools and colleges of the state as a whole and concluded that the public attitude is one of peace and good will and that no difficulties will attend the opening of the schools and colleges this fall."

It was therefore recommended that all schools and colleges of the state "prepare to open on the same basis on which they have operated in the past."

South Carolina has been conducting its schools, and is planning for the future, just as if the Supreme Court had never returned its decision of May 17, 1954, or issued its implementing order of May 31, 1955.

Old Order Rules

The multimillion-dollar construction program is proceeding as usual with projects definitely designated as being for white or Negro occupancy, appropriations for operation are higher than ever before, and various improvements are being made, but all on the basis of the dual system.

So far this state has been remarkably free from untoward instances on the school front, since the Supreme Court's ruling in 1954. Yet the prime case before the Supreme Court when it upset the separate but equal doctrine arose from Clarendon County, South Carolina. Even in the district where the pro-

Editor Waring Warns

Racial Problems Imperil Republic

ATLANTA, Nov. 4 (AP)—A Southern spokesman on racial segregation declared tonight that the South must be heard and understood on this issue if the Republic is to survive.

"I do not say that the country will die if the federal government continues to enforce integration," explained editor Thomas B. Waring of The News and Courier. "People can live under the most difficult and obnoxious circumstances. Generations have a way of adjusting.

"But the Republic as we have known it, a combination of local and national authorities tailored to the needs of every section, will disappear if this race problem is not resolved."

The South Carolinian conceded that advocates of segregation are outnumbered but declared, "Sooner or later right will triumph." He charged professional agitators, greedy politicians and others are arrayed against us" and that brainwashing is practiced in the South as well as elsewhere.

Believers in segregation, he counseled, should "hold down the crackpots and hoodlums," stand firmly but calmly for their cause, "persuade but not antagonize."

SPEAKS AT EMORY

Waring stated his views in a speech prepared for delivery at Emory University as one of a series under the heading, "Editors View The South". He has been widely in demand as an exponent of the Southern viewpoint since writing an article for Harper's Magazine on the issue.

He said that the pattern of racial separation often changes and if left alone would work itself out in the normal course. As an example he cited the treatment of the Negro in stores where "he deserves and must get his money's worth not only in goods but in courtesy and service."

But, he continued:

Professional agitators, both white and colored, have not been willing to leave the Negro's development to natural and normal circumstances. They won't let him grow in his own way. The American Negro is being shoved forward faster than his capacity permits him to move.

"In the process, the Negro is being made unwelcome among white people who would like to be his friends. He is also being used as a tool to bring about a political and social revolution.

"That revolution is a part of a world movement for leveling off the human race and stamping all men in a faceless pattern."

In the essence, he maintained neither Southerners nor most of the northerners want "a mongrel population." But, he held, that will be the result if lines of separation are broken down.

And yet, he recounted, "a constant stream of abuse against the South and its racial customs has polluted the minds of Americans."

CITES DELINQUENCY

As argument for racial separation, Waring cited juvenile delinquency and what he said will happen in the schools in the event of forced integration.

He said that the incidence of juvenile delinquency in the mixed populations of such large centers as Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Detroit and Washington proves that racial separation in the formative years is good.

As for the schools, he contended, integration can lead only to deterioration. Gradually, he said, the better class of white people would send their children to private schools "to avoid contact with Negro culture, manners and morals" and eventually "only the poorest whites would mingle in classrooms with Negroes."

Solution To School Integration Problem

(Editor's Note: The following article, outlining a plan for solution of the school integration problem by abolishing public schools was submitted to the News and Courier by a Southerner now residing in Los Angeles, Calif.)

By ELIZABETH TRUEHART

There are two things which seem to absorb public attention exclusively in relation to education in the South: the matter of color, and the principle of States' Right.

May there not be a third factor, as pertinent as either of these other two, the question of the indispensibleness of the public school system?

Do we have to dismiss the idea of education completely if we consider dispensing with public schools? Have we forgotten our American history? Have we evolved any more intelligent or able men in later generations than those who formed and launched these United States of America? Not one of them had the benefit of a free school education! Many read and studied at their own firesides, under direction of their own parents. Have our free public schools turned out parents less able to guide their offspring than the parents of those remote days?

At first glance, repudiation of the public schools may appear appalling, any substitute for them too fantastic to conceive. This should not be the case. Past generations have received education outside a public school system. Children are today educated in other countries without free public schools.

Our public schools are supported, in general, by their local communities, with some grants in aid from state legislatures. Their school buildings and equipment are owned by the municipality in which they are located. It would be a simple matter to transfer these grants to private schools of good standing, and for municipalities and school boards to allocate funds to private schools instead of to public schools.

The buildings already owned by the municipality or school district might be rented to new private schools. I believe there would be found an abundance of capable talent among our school principals and teachers, with executive as well as scholastic qualifications, to organize and assume the responsibility of conducting these schools, with the backing of financial grants from state and-or local bodies.

If there were a dearth of publicly owned buildings, residences might be rented for an overflow of pupils. More and smaller neighborhood schools would be convenient and satisfactory. In schools of limited attendance, greater attention could be given students, more individuality and initiative cultivated. It might help break the yoke of excessive conformity and the "herd" character which has been fastened upon us in recent generations. There might even be a chance (glorious thought!) to teach our offspring manners again.

This program would not necessitate depriving Negro children of educational opportunities. No doubt there are capable businessmen among the Negro members of the community who could inaugurate and manage private schools in their own neighborhood, for their own children, with teachers of their own race. Grants in aid to these, as to other private schools, out of tax funds, would cost no more than the former maintenance of "equal but separate" schools, if as much.

Well and good — but where is the money coming from to pay for all this desirable private tuition? Heavens to Betsy, are we under the delusion that our public schools are really "free?"

In the past our school system has been supported by community issued bonds, and our citizens have redeemed these obligations when they came due. As for this fetish of "a limitation on bonded indebtedness," that is simply a matter of property assessment. Assess real property at its true market value instead of the minimum per cent at which it is now assessed. Make the rate collected against that assessment as low as consistent with the need to be met, but let the assessment itself indicate the true value against which bonds may be issued. Then we shall see whether our states are paupers, to be treated as economic indigents and incompetents by the Federal government. We shall then be in a position to command the respect due a financially independent sovereign institution.

New $700,000 Negro School Dedicated Here

A crowd of about 800 persons, including local school and legislative officials, attended the dedication of ultramodern Columbus Street (Negro) Elementary School.

They heard Dr. Howard Jordan praise the school structure but at the same time cite the importance of education along with fine buildings.

COLLEGE DEAN SPEAKS

Dr. Jordan, dean of education at South Carolina State College, Orangeburg, spoke on the characteristics of an educated man. He said an improved school plant such as Columbus Street Elementary, was important to the students and community. But of greater importance, he added, are the products — students — the school turns out, whether they've gained sound fundamentals toward acquiring an education.

SEVERAL SPEAKERS

Special guests included County School Supt. G. C. Frampton; State Sen. T. Allen Legare, Reps. Augustine T. Smythe and Clyde M. Dangerfield, representing the county legislative delegation; John T. Welch Jr., vice chairman of the city school board; T. A. Carrere, superintendent of School District 20; and school board member Mrs. W. Allan Moore. Each made brief remarks.

Also honored at the dedication program Sunday were Charles D. Miller, who was chairman of the school building committee at the time the school was started, and retired teachers of District 20.

A band from the city elementary schools and the Columbus Street School chorus, provided music. School Principal Wilhelm R. Meriwether presided. Leonard C. Gaines, school architect, also attended.

The 24-classroom school, built and equipped at a cost of $700,000, was opened to classes in September.

Ike Expresses Disappointment At School Bill Defeat

Daily World Sat. 7-27-57 Atlanta, Ga.

BY KENNETH WEISS

WASHINGTON, — (INS) — President Eisenhower declared his "great dispointment" Friday that the House killed the school bill but Democrats retorted that defeat of the measure was his own fault.

The legislation which would have provided one and a half billion dollars to help the states build new school facilities was beaten by a 208 to 203 vote Thursday.

SHORTAGE OF SCHOOLS

Assistant White House news secretary Ann E. Wheaton issued the following statement: "The President expressed great disappointment that the House did not see its way to pass an appropriate measure to meet this critical shortage of schools."

However, Rep. Augustine Kelley (D) Pa. chief Democratic sponsor of the bill, contended blame for the rejection of the program "lies squarely at the feet of President Eisenhower."

Kelley told newsmen: "I think if he had come out with a strong statement we could have won .... we only lost by five votes."

One hundred and eleven Republicans and 97 Democrats voted to spike the bill while 126 Democrats and 77 Republicans sought to keep it alive. Among those voting for its rejection were assistant GOP leader Charles Halleck of Indiana and GOP whip Leslie Arends of Illinois.

SECOND YEAR IN ROW

It marked the second year in a row that the House has turned down a school aid bill with an antisegregation amendment playing a key role both times.

Daily World

The legislation was considered in serious trouble before debate even began because the President gave the bill only a lukewarm endorsement. Adoption of an amendment which would have denied funds to any school district refusing to end racial segregation doomed its chances of passage.

The amendment sponsored by Rep. Stuyvesant Wainright (R) N. Y., removed all chances of Southerners supporting the measure and Rep. Howard Smith (D) Va., offered the move that the bill be killed.

The President apparently discussed the outlook for the legislation with Senate GOP leader William F. Knowland of California at a White House conference but advocates of the bill rule out chances that it could win aproval even next year.

IKE SCHOOL AID BILL DIES AGAIN IN HOUSE ARENA

West Virginia Mail Fri. 7-26-57

Rejection of Entire Measure Follows Adoption of Anti-Segregation Item

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP)—The 1½-billion-dollar school aid bill, which had an "acceptable" label from the White House, was killed in the House today.

This was the second year in a row that the House has rejected an aid bill, and the pattern of destruction was the same—adoption of an antisegregation amendment and then rejection of the whole thing.

The final vote was closer this year, however—208-203 as compared to 224-194 last year.

And there was some last minute interest in an argument over whether President Eisenhower really cared very much whether the bill passed or not.

After it was all over, press secretary James C. Hagerty said the White House would have no comment.

On the final test, 111 Republicans—including Rep. Halleck of Indiana, the assistant GOP floor leader—and 97 Democrats voted to kill the bill. Against killing it were 125 Democrats and 77 Republicans.

The antisegregation amendment was offered by Rep. Wainwright (R-NY), over administration opposition. Eisenhower had asked that what he called the separate problem of racial integration not be thrown into the school aid controversy.

But Wainwright was unmoved. He [illegible] that no federal funds be u[illegible]elp schools in districts which do not comply with the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation.

West Virginia Mail

"It is the rankest hypocrisy," Wainwright told the House, "to vote civil rights with one hand and put up the other the next day to take these precious rights away."

Fri. 7-26-57

On the other hand, Rep. Kelley (D-Pa), a foremost school aid backer, said adoption of the Wainwright amendment "will be a stigma upon the colored race. They will be blamed for defeating the bill."

With Reluctance.

Rep. Diggs (D-Mich), a Negro, said he opposed the amendment with reluctance, but was convinced other "remedies" were available. Rep. Roosevelt (D-Calif) said the amendment was introduced "merely for the defeat of the measure."

The Wainwright amendment was adopted on a standing vote of 136 - 105. The House thereupon voted 153-126, again on a standing vote, to kill the whole bill.

Smith's motion prevailed 208-203.

The Children Be Damned

West Virginia Herald

Well, it was just like taking candy away from kids. Those who wanted to kill Federal aid to school construction adopted the strategem of burdening it with an amendment that made its death inevitable. Their amendment had a pious sound. It provided that no Federal funds should be allotted to schools in districts where segregation is maintained. They now have the dubious satisfaction of knowing that they have barred segregation from schools that are not going to be built.

Sat. 7-27-57

There have been honest doubts among some legislators about the degree of Federal control that might stem from Federal aid. But the issue was not met on this basis. It was evaded through a cynical maneuver which is no salve for anyone's conscience.

Washington, D. C.

President Eisenhower and some of his party's leaders on Capitol Hill, lamentably, played no small part in facilitating the sabotage of school aid. By his vacillation, inertia and concentration on trivial aspects of the legislation, the President encouraged defeat of a measure that differed only in degree from the measure which, over and over again in the course of the 1956 campaign, he had pledged himself to promote. Two of his party's principal leaders in the House, Rep. Charles Halleck and Rep. Leslie Arends, voted in favor of the antisegregation rider and then voted to kill the bill. So, incidentally, did the new author of the Powell amendment, Rep. Stuyvesant Wainwright — thus demonstrating clearly the maneuver.

The consequences of this recorded indifference to public education will be felt not only by the children deprived of decent classrooms but by the whole country. Who can call this a "victory"?

Antisegregation Amendment Kills Off School-Aid Bill; House Vote Is 208 to 203

Interment May Prove Permanent

Courier-Journal Fri. 7-26-57 Louisville Ky.

By ROBERT E. RIGGS
The Courier-Journal Washington Bureau

Washington, July 24.—By a margin of five votes, the House today buried, for at least this session—and probably forever—the attempt to provide federal funds to help States construct public-school classrooms.

The count, at the end of a suspense-filled and dramatic roll call, was 208 in favor of burying the bill, 203 in favor of keeping it alive.

President Eisenhower, who began his Administration less than lukewarm toward federal school aid, had made it a major item in his legislative program. The House's rejection of his recommendation followed by one day the Senate's action in removing from the civil-rights bill a portion the Administration has called vital.

Smith Deals Death Blow

The final blow to the school bill was struck by that veteran enemy of the "welfare state" and leader of the southern Democratic-Northern Republican conservative coalition, Howard W. Smith of Virginia.

But Smith was joined by one of Eisenhower's principal lieutenants in the chamber, Assistant Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck of Indiana.

The cause of death was the same as last year—an amendment, adopted 136 to 105, that would have forbidden the expenditure of federal funds on segregated schools. Last year's amendment was by the New York Negro Democrat, Adam Clayton Powell, who was absent today. The current amendment was offered by a New York Republican, Stuyvesant Wainwright.

Perkins Makes Accusation

When Wainwright submitted the amendment, Carl D. Perkins, Hindman, Ky., who, as a member of the Education Committee, has striven long for federal aid to schools, accused the New Yorker of being against the bill, of offering his amendment solely for the purpose of killing the bill.

Eisenhower has long opposed the antisegregation amendment to the school bill. Despite that fact, both Halleck and Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin of Massachusetts, as well as Republican Whip Leslie Arends of Illinois, voted for the amendment.

Even after the antisegregation amendment was put into the bill, supporters of federal aid thought they had found a way out. Democrats, among them Perkins of Kentucky, who has been criticizing the Administration sharply for what they called its failure to give whole-hearted support to the proposal, suddenly joined up with the Republican supporters of federal aid.

It's Virtually Ike's Formula

They got behind an amendment offered by Republican William H. Ayres of Ohio. The Ayres amendment was virtually the Eisenhower formula, which Democrats rewrote both this year and last.

It would have distributed federal aid under a formula based on need and upon the efforts the states made to help themselves. It also would have emphasized federal loans more than would the Democratic bill.

The chief reason the democrats were lining up strongly behind the Ayres proposal was that his amendment was not weighted down by the Wainwright amendment and there were Republican assurances that enough votes would come from that side of the aisle to keep the antisegregation amendment out of the bill entirely.

Sees Coalition Breaking Up

A bipartisan chorus arose to support the Ayres amendment. Among them was the President's spokesman, Halleck. At this point Smith of Virginia, apparently seeing his coalition breaking up under his eyes, moved in with his dramatic sudden-death motion. He offered a resolution that the bill be killed.

At that moment the House was sitting in committee of the whole, a situation in which it takes no roll-call votes. But on a teller vote, with members marching down the middle aisle to record their views, Smith won, 153 to 126.

Immediately after the teller vote the chamber went back into a House session and the same issue was voted on by roll call. As the clerk droned through the names, suspense built up as it became obvious the result would be close. The tension showed when snickers broke out over the chamber as Halleck, who had spoken in support of the Ayres amendment, cast his vote in favor of the Smith burial resolution.

Outcome Broken Down

The outcome of 208 to 203 was broken down this way: of those wanting to kill the bill, 111 were Republicans and 97 were Democrats. Of those seeking to keep it alive, 77 were Republicans and 126 were Democrats.

A year ago this month the outcome was 224 for killing the bill containing the Powell amendment and 194 for keeping it alive. The breakdown then was: for killing the bill, 119 Republicans and 105 Democrats; for keeping it alive, 75 Republicans and 119 Democrats.

School Aid Bill Doomed In House By Racial Rider

Congressmen KO Proposal For 2nd Year

Advertiser Fri. 7-26-57 Montgomery Ala.

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP)—The 1½-billion-dollar school aid bill, which had an "acceptable" label from the White House, was killed in the House today.

This was the second year in a row that the House has rejected an aid bill, and the pattern of destruction was the same—adoption of an antisegregation amendment and then rejection of the whole thing.

The final vote was closer this year, however—208-203 as compared to 224-194 last year.

And there was some last minute interest in an argument over whether President Eisenhower really cared very much whether the bill passed or not.

NO COMMENT

After it was all over, press secretary James C. Hagerty said the White House would have no comment.

On the final test, 111 Republicans—including Rep. Halleck of Indiana, the assistant GOP floor leader—and 97 Democrats voted to kill the bill. Against killing it were 125 Democrats and 77 Republicans.

The antisegregation amendment was offered by Rep. Wainwright (R-NY), over administration opposition. Eisenhower had asked that what he called the separate problem of racial integration not be thrown into the school aid controversy.

NO FEDERAL FUNDS

But Wainwright was unmoved. He proposed that no federal funds be used to help schools in districts which do not comply with the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation.

"It is the rankest hypocrisy," Wainwright told the House, "to vote civil rights with one hand and put up the other the next day to take these precious rights away."

On the other hand, Rep. Kelley (D-Pa), a foremost school aid backer, said adoption of the Wainwright amendment "will be a stigma upon the colored race. They will be blamed for defeating the bill."

Rep. Diggs (D-Mich), a Negro, said he opposed the amendment with reluctance, but was convinced other "remedies" were available. Rep. Roosevelt (D-Calif) said the amendment was introduced "merely for the defeat of the measure."

The Wainwright amendment was adopted on a standing vote of 136 - 105. The House thereupon voted 153-126, again on a standing vote, to kill the whole bill.

This standing vote had only tentative status, and Rep. Howard Smith (D-Va) moved for a roll call vote to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, thus killing it finally.

A veteran member of Congress closely connected with the school bill had an explanation of the combination of Republicans and Northern Democrats who succeeded in attaching the antisegregation amendment.

He said: "Some genuinely believed in the purpose of the amendment. Some voted for it who were against the bill. The amendment would have been defeated if the Southerners had stayed on the floor and voted against it."

STAYED OFF FLOOR

The congressman, who asked not to be quoted by name, referred to what was clearly observable from the House galleries:

REP. WAINWRIGHT
His Amendment Fatal

Many Southern Democrats stayed off the floor during the unrecorded vote and did not vote either for or against the antisegregation amendment.

Quite a number of non-Southern Democrats were seen voting against the amendment, and they were joined by a group of Republicans. But their total, without support from the nonvoters, fell short of the votes won by backers of the amendment.

Smith's motion prevailed 208-203.

Rep. McCormack (D-Mass), the House majority leader, twitted the Republicans. He said 57 per cent of the Democrats voted to keep the bill alive and 59 per cent of the Republicans voted to kill it.

McCormack said the GOP record shows that Eisenhower is "going in all directions at the same time."

During closing debate, Rep. McGovern (D-SD) had criticized the President on the same grounds saying that Eisenhower provides anything but clear guidance on "such tormenting issues as the school shortage."

"Just about the time we wonder whether the presidential car is swinging right or left, the brakes go on," McGovern said.

Rep. McConnell (R-Pa) replied that there is no question but that Eisenhower is interested in legislation to alleviate any shortage of classrooms.

McConnell added that the bill before the House was not "the most preferred bill" from the President's standpoint—that Eisenhower preferred one where there was more emphasis on need in the distribution of federal money.

The bill would have authorized 300 million dollars a year for five years in federal grants to help states build classrooms. The distribution would have been half on the basis of state needs, half on the basis of school age population. The states would have had to match federal outlays.

Ike Blamed In Defeat of School Aid

President Sorry House Killed Bill

BY JOHN D. MORRIS

(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, July 26 — The White House said today that President Eisenhower was disappointed over the failure of the House to pass a school-aid bill.

House Democrats said they were disappointed, too. They said the President himself was largely to blame.

"I lay defeat of the bill squarely at the feet of the President," said Rep. Kelley of Pensylvania, Democratic sponsor of the measure. "If he had come out with a strong statement we could have won."

Rep. Bailey of West Virginia, the bill's chief Democratic manager, said a half-dozen telephone calls from the White House to Republican members would have done the trick.

"NO TEARS"

"I dont care to see any crocodile tears shed by the White House," he added. "The President didn't do anything as far as I can determine, although as late as Wednesday I was promised a letter or statement."

Some Republicans privately agreed that the House would have acted favorably if the President had taken a stronger stand. But Rep. Martin of Massachusetts, Republican floor leader, insisted the bill was doomed from the start and nothing could have saved it.

"They picked the worst time to bring it up," he asserted. "The economy crowd was in there strong."

FEDERAL GRANTS

The bill, killed late yesterday on a ballot of 208 to 203, called for $1,500,000,000 in federal grants to states for school construction over a five-year period.

Ninety-seven Democrats, nearly all from the South, were joined by 111 Republicans in voting to kill the measure. They were opposed by 77 Republicans and 126 Democrats.

Mrs. Anne Weaton, associate White House press secretary, told reporters this morning of the President's reaction. She said:

"The President has expressed great disappointment that the House did not see its way clear to pass a measure to meet this critical shortage of schools."

There was no possibility of school aid legislation being revived at this session of Congress and apparently little in the foreseeable future.

Constitution

Rep. Bailey, who has been fighting for favorable House action for a decade, observed that "a clear majority of the Republicans are against such legislation."

WON'T AID GOP

P. 3

"I'm not going to be a party to bringing out a bill next year to help them win an election," he said. "They've had their opportunity — and they blew it."

Rep. Martin, the only one of three principal Republican leaders to vote against killing the bill, refused to abandon hope of action next year.

Atl. Const. 7-27-57

"I think there is enough sentiment in Congress to pass legislation if it is restricted to need," he said. "I think the (education and labor) committee members ought to work toward that end during the recess."

BOLTING LEADERS

The two Republican leaders who voted with the opposition were Reps. Halleck of Indiana and Arends of Illinois. None of the three took the floor to speak for the bill.

Martin attributed the measure's defeat mainly to the House sentiment for government economy. He also noted that the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. had campaigned against federal aid schools.

He said the time was inappropriate for consideration of the measure because of the economy mood, because members had just concluded a bitter fight over the mutual security bill and because a controversial bill to ease federal control of natural gas prices was about to be brought up.

'THEY KNEW IT'

Those responsible for bringing up the bill knew this, he said, adding: "One group wanted to bring it out because this was the time to kill it. The other wanted to put the Republican party on the spot."

It was agreed that the bill's defeat could not be attributed mainly to the House's tentative adoption of a proviso barring the use of federal funds to build schools in districts where racial segregation was practiced in violation of Supreme Court rulings.

The proviso would have been eliminated by adoption of an amendment to replace an entire section of the bill by President Eisenhower's "Need" formula for allocating school aid funds among the states. The amendment was pending and gaining support when the successful sudden-death move was made by Rep. Smith (D-Va).

Democrats Join With Republicans To Halt Measure

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri 7-26-57

By KENNETH WEISS

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (INS) — The House voted Thursday to kill the Administration's federal school aid bill. The vote was 156-126, immediately following the proposal of an antisegregation amendment which would have denied aid to areas practicing segregation.

P. 7

Opponents of the amendment charged the rider would kill the school measure by removing any change of Southern support and making it virtually impossible to get the legislation through the Senate.

IN DEFIANCE

Sponsored by Rep. Stuyvesant Wainwright (R) N. Y., the amendment would hold back federal grants for school construction from any school district that maintains segregated schools in defiance of the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation.

Approximately a score of Democrats voted with Republicans in favor of the Wainwright amendment, which was adopted after most of the school bill supporters assailed the proposal. Nearly 30 Republicans voted against it.

Before the vote, Rep. Carl Perkins (D) Ky., told the House that "passage of this bill depends on defeat of this amendment."

But Wainwright contended that the provision was the only right thing to do.

LIBERAL FRIENDS

Speaking to Democratic liberals who refused to support his amendment, Wainwright commented: "I would be astonished if my liberal friends were in favor of building segregated schools with these funds."

Rep. Wayne Hays (D) Ohio, retorted that "colored children are not going to get any more schools with a dead bill."

Daily World

Referring to the fact that the Wainwright amendment was sponsored in virtually the same form last year by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D) N. Y. Hays charged: "Mr. Powell was trying through the gentleman from New York (Wainwright) to get his amendment into law while he is on the Riviera."

P. 6

ADEQUATE REMEDIES

Rep. Charles Diggs (D) Mich., one of the three Negro members of the House, urged defeat of the amendment saying that conditions today were "not the same as a year ago" when he fought for the same proposal.

Diggs said at that time there were "not adequate remedies" for Southern Negroes but that the House-passed civil rights bill now being debated in the Senate improves this situation.

Atl. 7-26-57

Before acting on the segregation amendment, the House voted 130-96 to kill an amendment by Rep. Errett Scrivner (R) Kans., which would have returned to the states for school construction one per cent of the personal and corporate income taxes they paid the Federal Government.

Drawing near final action on the school bill, House members assailed and defended President Eisenhower's attitude toward the measure.

School Placement Device Also Loses, Survey Shows

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. F.M. 4-5-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Pupil placement — a device popular with legislatures seeking to delay or to avoid racial desegregation — both won and lost in recent key court decisions, Southern School News reported Thursday.

Meanwhile, said the publication, one additional school district, in West Virginia, was disclosed to have begun the desegregation process last fall. This brought to 674 the number of districts where desegregation is under way or accomplished, leaving some 3,000 still segregated.

The key court tests, reported Southern School News, were in cases involving Virginia North Carolina and Louisiana placement laws. Four other states have pupil placement legislation and a fifth, Texas, has a bill of this type in the legislative mill.

In the Virginia case, noted Southern School News, a federal district court held the state's placement legislation unconstitutional, while Court to order admission of a Negro student to the University of Florida law school despite an order from the U. S. Supreme Court. Southern School News said "it has been suggested that the Florida decision is one of the strongest assertions of the doctrine of states' rights to appear in a legal opinion."

During March Delaware reported 32 per cent of its school population in "integration situations" and Missouri reported plans for desegregation of an additional high school, leaving only four segregated in the state. Major developments state-by-state were:

ALABAMA — Legislation to implement a "freedom of choice" measure adopted last year is expected to come before the General Assembly when it meets in May, partly as a consequence of a federal court decision in Louisiana attacking in a case reaching the U. S. Supreme Court from neighboring North Carolina the high court refused to review a lower court opinion holding the Tar Heel law "not unconstitutional on its face." The North Carolina law makes no mention of race in directing the assignment of pupils. The Virginia law came under court attack because of the alleged intent of accompanying legislation to maintain segregation.

In a third case, involving Louisiana, a circuit court held that a placement law as it applied to New Orleans schools has "implied as its only basis for assignments the prohibited standard of race."

Attorneys were also studying the refusal of the Florida Supreme pupil placement.

ARKANSAS — Three pro-segregation candidates were defeated and one was victorious in spring school board elections.

Daily World

DELAWARE — The state saw (in Kent County) the first federal court order calling for school integration plan. A statewide count showed 32 per cent of Delaware's school population in "integrated situations."

F.M. 4-5-57

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Congressional leaders expect to see civil rights legislation reach the Senate floor for action before the Easter recess.

P 6

FLORIDA — The state supreme court refused to carry out an order of the U. S. Supreme Court for admission of a Negro graduate law student to the University of Florida because this course might result in "violence."

GEORGIA — School segregation is already a political issue 18 months in advance of the gubernatorial primary, with prospective candidates vying for support as all-out segregationists.

KENTUCKY — Use of racial epithets "is to make an avowal by conduct and words of stirring up strife," a Kentucky court ruled in acquitting a newspaper publisher and a police chief of charges of criminal slander made by a segregationist.

LOUISIANA — A year-old court order to desegregate New Orleans was affirmed in a circuit court decision which held that a state's right to administer schools as it desires can be overridden by "matters of fundamental justice that the citizens of the United States consider so essentially an ingredient of human rights as to require a restraint on any state that appears to ignore them."

MARYLAND — The State Board of Education turned down an appeal from 11 Negro pupils in Harford County seeking admission to white schools not included in the first stage of a limited program — restricting desegregation to the first three grades of two schools in the current year.

MISSISSIPPI — Alcorn College, where some 580 Negro students walked out in protest over a professor's newspaper criticism of the NAACP, was back to normal at the end of the month with a new president. Gov. James P. Coleman, whose attitude heretofore has been described as one of "patient understanding," took a strong stand against "outsiders" who would foment trouble in Mississippi.

MISSOURI — Only four high schools in the state remain segregated after the decision of a school in the "bootheel" section to admit Negroes next September.

NORTH CAROLINA — The state's pupil assignment law apparently has been upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court in a test over admission of Negro children to a McDowell County school. An NAACP national official blamed "timidity" of public officials for lack of desegregation in state schools.

OKLAHOMA — Three lawsuits have been filed seeking admission of Negro students to white schools while one of the earlist systems to end segregation at the high school level announced plans to integrate all grades next year.

SOUTH CAROLINA — One house of the legislature has approved a bill giving the governor broad powers "for the protection of persons and property". Other pro-segregation measures are pending.

TENNESSEE — Segregationist John Kasper was re-arrested on a second charge of criminal contempt of court at Knoxville. Nashville school board members authorized the superintendent to start work on plans to "inform, elucidate and help solve problems" which may be involved in September desegregation at the first grade.

TEXAS — Pro-segregation legislation was reported to be making progress in the legislature, which adopted a resolution urging the states to resist federal encroachment on their authority.

VIRGINIA — The U. S. Supreme Court has refused to review court orders directing Charlottesville and Arlington County to begin school desegregation. A state official told the school authorities invloved that they were helpless to obey under Virginia law. A federal district court judge made formal an opinion holding the state's Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional.

WEST VIRGINIA — With desegregation a reality in most school systems the legislature has abolished the Bureau of Negro Welfare and Statistics — over criticism of some Negro citizens. Six Negro pupils are now attending formerly all-white Martinsburg High School in Berkeley County, leaving only two counties with schools wholly segregated.

325,000 Negro Children Now Attending With Whites

Memphis, Tenn.

NINE STATES INVOLVED

Sun 5-5-57

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, May 4. — Some 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children in southern and border states are now in "integrated situations," Southern School News reported Saturday.

The publication also reported, however, that some 2,400,000 Negro children and more than seven million white children remain in segregated school districts on the eve of the third anniversary of the United States Supreme Court decision against public school desegregation.

A total of 685 school districts in nine states have begun or completed the desegregation process, while about 3,100 biracial districts remain segregated. The Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools came on May 17, 1954.

Acts Little Used

Southern School News noted relatively little use thus far of the "pupil placement" acts which seven states have adopted in an effort generally regarded as closing ranks against desegregation.

Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated during the year in Missouri—with their location reported only this month. Three state legislatures — Florida, South Carolina and Texas—are in session with a heavy volume of pro-segregation legislation on their calendars. Alabama's legislature, which meets later this month, was expected to receive some 100 measures of this nature.

State Summary Given

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA—The Alabama legislature, convening this month, is expected to get a private school bill and a proposal to create a State Sovereignty Commission, in a flow of pro-segregation legislation which may run as high as 100 proposed new measures.

ARKANSAS—Little or no use of the state's new placement law was reported by state school officials who pointed out that the local districts are autonomous. Little Rock, which won a "good faith compliance" court test of its gradual desegregation plan, said it expected to go ahead with high school desegregation in the fall.

DELAWARE — Questioning by a federal judge hearing a motion in a school-entry suit against six southern Delaware school boards was interpreted as indicating that the court will order desegregation.

Resolution Criticized

FLORIDA — The legislature adopted a resolution of interposition, which was criticized by Gov. LeRoy Collins, and debated six bills designed to curb activities of organizations taking part in litigation on racial matters.

GEORGIA — The State Board of Regents tightened entrance regulations at the University of Georgia Law School, which a Negro graduate student has sought to enter, requiring character references from alumni and public officials in the applicant's home county.

KENTUCKY—Holding its last meeting before dissolution, the Kentucky (Negro) Teachers Association was told that 75 per cent of the state's Negro pupils are in districts which have begun or have completed the desegregation process.

LOUISIANA — United States District Court invalidated two college segregation laws and enjoined four integrated colleges where the state sought to bar Negro enrollment. New Orleans began placement of elementary pupils on a segregated basis under a stay of a federal court order invalidating the pupil assignment law and ordering integration.

Maryland Gets Order

MARYLAND — United States District Court in Maryland advised Harfor County to work out a new plan for secondary school desegregation, calling the present gradual plan to slow "too vague."

MISSISSIPPI — The state laid plans to market its first general obligation bonds for a building program to equalize facilities in still-segregated schools.

MISSOURI — Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated during the year, with nine more reported planning the step next year.

NORTH CAROLINA — The school board of Charlotte, North Carolina's largest city, told parents of Negro children that initiative for desegregating the schools rests with individuals and not the board. One board member told the group: "No door is closed. Our schools bear no signs saying 'No Admittance'."

NAACP Bill Repealed

SOUTH CAROLINA—The legislature, considering a number of new pro-segregation measures, repealed a bill prohibiting government employment to NAACP members—then under attack before the United States Supreme Court—and enacted in its stead an employment measure couched in more general terms.

TENNESSEE—Nashville, first of state's large cities to begin desegregation, said 3,200 children (41 per cent of them Negroes) will be affected by a fall first-grade desegregation plan approved by United States district court.

TEXAS—Bills delaying desegregation advanced in the legislature but faced the challenge of a filibuster. United States Supreme Court ruled against Wichita Falls in suit involving judicial review of school desegregation.

VIRGINIA — A first challenge of the state's new pupil placement law arose in Fairfax County. Republican and Democratic political figures who may oppose one another for governor debated the segregation-desegregation issue.

WEST VIRGINIA—With desegregation general, West Virginians were studying problem of employment for young Negroes who, after finishing school, reportedly are having difficulty finding jobs.

674 Districts In South Held Desegregating

Courier-Journal Fri. 4-5-57 Louisville, Ky.

But 3,000 Reportedly Haven't Started Yet

P. 4

Nashville, April 4 (AP) — Southern School News reported today that desegregation has been completed or started in 674 school districts in the South. About 3,000 remained segregated. 1400

Southern School News is published by Southern Education Reporting Service and maintains close watch on developments in the area's school-integration program.

One Law Upset

It noted that pupil placement has won and lost in two recent key court decisions. A federal district court ruled Virginia's placement legislation was unconstitutional. However, in a North Carolina case the United States Supreme Court declined to review a lower-court ruling that the North Carolina placement law was "not unconstitutional on its face."

The Tennessee Legislature recently passed a pupil-placement law giving local school boards authority to assign pupils to specific schools, without mentioning whites or Negroes.

The newspaper said Delaware has reported 32 per cent of its school population in "integrated situations."

685 SOUTHERN SCHOOL DISTRICTS INTEGRATED

Daily World Atlanta Ga. P. 9 Sun. 5-5-57 400

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Southern School News reported Saturday that 685 school districts in nine states had begun or completed the desegregation process on the eve of the third anniversary of the U. S. Supreme Court decision against public school desegregation.

The publication said that about 3,100 bi-racial districts remained segregated. Legislatures in 11 states have adopted more than 130 pieces of pro-segregation legislation since the May 17, 1954 court ruling, Southern School News reported.

The publication's files showed that 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children—most of them in the border states—were now in "integrated situations." Some 2,400,000 Negro children and more than 7,000,000 white children remained in segregated school districts.

Southern School News noted relatively little use thus far of the 'pupil placement' acts which seven states have adopted in an effort generally regarded as closing ranks against desegregation.

Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated during the year in Missouri—with their location reported only this month. Southern School News also noted that three state legislatures—Florida, South Carolina and Texas—were in session with a heavy volume of pro-segregation legislation on their calendars. Alabama's legislature, which meets later this month, was expected to receive some 100 measures of this nature.

3,100 Schools In South Still Remain Segregated

Call Kansas City, Mo. Fri. 5-10-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Approximately 3,100 bi-racial school districts in the South remain segregated as the U. S. Supreme Court decision calling for public school integration nears its third anniversary.

The Southern School News, a non-partisan, non-political, educational publication, reported May 4, that 685 school districts in nine states have begun or completed the desegregation process.

Since the May 17, 1954, court ruling, the publication says that 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children—most of them in the border states—are now in "integrated situations," some 2,400,000 Negro children and more than 7,000,000 white children remain in segregated school districts.

It was pointed out that legislatures in 11 states have adopted more than 130 pieces of pro-segregation legislation. However, little use has been needed thus far from the "pupil placement" acts which seven states have passed.

The Southern School News noted that three state legislatures—Florida, South Carolina and Texas—were in session with a heavy volume of pro-segregation legislation on their calendars. Alabama's legislature, which meets later this month, is expected to receive some 100 measures of this nature.

10 Others Plan To Desegregate

Defender Chicago, Ill.

NASHVILLE — More than half of the school districts in a 17-state area have been desegregated, Southern School News reported here last week.

With recent consolidation of school districts, there are now 2,980 biracial districts in the 17-state area affected by the U. S. Supreme court decision against school segregation. Thus, 2,219 remain segregated.

Southern School News said that nine more Kentucky districts and one additional Texas district have adopted desegregation policies. The Texas district is Pleasanton, south of San Antonio, which is the first to vote to integrate by referendum under new laws in the state.

Sat 11-16-57

The publication reported that Houston, the nation's largest segregated school district, is now under court order to integrate — but at no specific time.

Meanwhile, reverberations of the Little Rock school crisis have been felt in schools and legislative halls as far away as West Virginia and Florida, Southern School News reported. It noted also that 10 school districts in the southern and border region have been listed as desegregated in the last month, bringing the total to 761 since 1954.

Demonstrations occurred at several schools in West Virginia, the first state to desegregate all its biracial districts. In Florida the legislature adopted a law requiring that schools be closed in any district where federal troops are sent to enforce integration. The Texas legislature was expected to consider a similar measure. Houses of both legislatures passed resolution condemning President Eisenhower's action in dispatching paratroopers to the Arkansas capital.

In a comprehensive survey of industrialists, political leaders and industrial development agencies, Southern School News found that racial incidents and tensions have set back industrial expansion in some areas but that for the most part the region has not been affected. To the question, "Is the region being hurt industrially?" the publication said the answer is: "yes, and No, with 'yes, and No, with much if not most of the weight on the No."

A state-by-state summary of for developments follows:

ALABAMA — State officials placement act, which they said was different from Virginia's invalidated law, would stand up in court as a test neared in Birmingham.

ARKANSAS — A stalemate continued at a troop - occupied Little Rock high school as state and federal officials sought a solution to the controversy involving President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval Faubus. Classes went on more or less normally at the school.

DELAWARE — State Police conducted a two-day indoctrination course on the legal aspects of school segregation - desegregation in anticipation of an eventual "showdown" on the issue. A survey showed 43 percent of all Negro children in desegregated districts and 36 percent in desegregated buildings.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Washington's school board president said the schools face the dangerous problem of a "disproportionately high" ratio of Negro students. Unofficial estimates show white enrollment has declined from 56 percent in 1945 to 30 percent this year.

FLORIDA — The legislature adopted a measure requiring the immediate closing of any school where federal troops are assigned to enforce integration and failed to readopt a "last resort" measure vetoed by Gov. LeRoy Collins at the session last June.

GEORGIA — A group of 60 southern segregation leaders met in Atlanta to discuss tightening of voter requirements and plans for presenting their argument to the nation, but no special southwide organization was expected to result.

KENTUCKY — Eleven additional Kentucky districts were shown to have "integrated situations" bringing the state total to 114. A federal court postponed a desegregation order for Fulton city high school.

LOUISIANA — Court - backed integration at four once all-white colleges continued "remarkably uneventful" with between 160 and 175 Negroes in attendance. A survey showed the peak was 650 during the 1956 summer session.

MARYLAND — A survey showed the number of Negroes attending formerly all - white county schools doubled this year, with some re-segregation.

MISSISSIPPI — A Mississipp editor outlined a 10-point program for "the day the heat of integration" is put on the state and Gov. J. P. Coleman called a special legislative session to modernize the Constitution and tighten segregation laws.

MISSOURI — A special study made of Kansas City showed how the school attendance pattern of a typical border - state city was being affected by the U. S. Supreme Court decision and an influx of Negro population.

NORTH CAROLINA — In what bids to become the first real test of the state's pupil placement law the Raleigh school board filed an answer to a suit by a Negro seeking admittance to a white school.

OKLAHOMA — The state became a sounding board for expressions of federal policy and interstate legislative policy on the states' rights issue and the Little Rock controversy.

SOUTH CAROLINA — The Little Rock situation brought numerous expressions from public officials condemning President Eisenhower's action. A group of ministers published a booklet of "moderate" statements on race relations contributed by laymen.

TENNESSEE — John Kasper, figure in the Clinton and Nashville school disturbances, was taken into custody in Washington pending a new appeal to the US Supreme Court after the court had once refused to hear his appeal from conviction for criminal contempt. Eleven children remained in integrated Nashville schools.

TEXAS — Pleasanton became the first Texas community to vote to integrate its school system under new state laws. A school official at San Marcos said too-rapid integration had hurt Negroes and caused them to drop out of school. A federal Court ordered Houston to desegregate but set no time limit.

VIRGINIA — The U. S. Supreme Court struck a blow at the state's placement law by refusing to review a lower court decision holding it invalid in the Norfolk-Newport News case. Segregation debate dominated the forthcoming gubernatorial election.

WEST VIRGINIA — Tensions attributed to the Little Rock situation set off a chain of demonstrations in three communities, breaking a year's calm.

NEGRO ENROLLMENT DOWN IN TEN STATES

Study Of Southern Schools Shows Some Increases

NASHVILLE, Dec. 5. — Southern School News reported here Thursday that the Negro proportion of school enrollment in Southern and border states has declined in 10 states and increased in seven states and the District of Columbia in the five years since the original school segregation cases went to the United States Supreme Court.

While there were absolute increases in enrollments for both races, Negro percentages were down from 1951 to 1957 in Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia, states which have no desegregation in public schools, and in Texas, North Carolina, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

Up In Alabama

Negro percentages were up only in Alabama, of the segregated states, and in Arkansas, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee and the District of Columbia.

Decreases ranged from .4 per cent in Oklahoma to 2.5 per cent in Georgia.

The District of Columbia, where Negroes now make up 71.2 per cent of school enrollment, had a 15.6 per cent increase between 1951 and the start of the present school year, said Southern School News.

"Two principal factors seem to explain the relative Negro decline in the Deep South," the publication said. "They are: (1) Negro out-migration and (2) booming white enrollments.

"However, it has been pointed out that in these areas Negro enrollments are rising, too, probably in response to better school buildings (though segregated) better economic conditions among Negroes, especially in the cities.

"Demographic experts say, additionally, that Negro school age population throughout the region is increasing at a greater rate than in the white population. Yet these decreases appear," the paper concluded.

Front All Quiet

Southern School News also reported a "quiet" month on the school segregation-desegregation front during November and noted only one additional desegregated district. This was Kinta, in Oklahoma, bringing to 762 the number of desegregated districts out of 3,008 with biracial school enrollments.

A summary of major developments state-by-state during the month follows:

ALABAMA — Birmingham's schools may provide the first test of Alabama's pupil placement law. Parents of children at three all-white schools have been sent a questionnaire asking how they would react to the enrollment of four Negro children who are seeking entry to the schools and who have been given placement examinations.

ARKANSAS—Federal-state negotiations over removal of troops at Little Rock's Central High School (where only federalized National Guardsmen remain) were at a near stalemate, while inside the school teaching and learning were said to go on "at a near normal pace."

Laws Expected

DELAWARE—Legal resolution of the segregation-desegregation issue in South Delaware schools was expected during 1958. There was stepped-up activitiy by both pro-integration and pro-segregation groups.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Negro enrollment in Washington's integrated schools reached 71.2 per cent, up 3.2 per cent since last year. All but one senior high school, all but two junior high schools, and 105 of 122 elementary schools reported mixed classes.

FLORIDA—Efforts to force a pro-segregation resolution failed in the Florida Council of Parents and Teachers, while on the local level the Dade (Miami) County school board decided not to consider a segregation policy resolution as attorneys were instructed to renew efforts to get dismissal of a school entry suit by Negro children.

Voting Is Issue

GEORGIA—Officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People mapped a voter registration drive at an Atlanta meeting, while the state moved toward tightening voting laws.

KENTUCKY — Gov. A. B. Chandler urged acceptance of racial integration in Southern schools. A state survey showed Negro enrollment in desegregated schools ranging from one pupil in several small districts to 7,647 in Louisville.

LOUISIANA—Legislative leaders planned new laws for introduction at the May, 1958, legislative session for "temporary" closure of any schools which are integrated, reopening them later "racially segregated."

MARYLAND — An Eastern Shore grand jury indicted two persons who picketed schools in

LOUISIANA—Legislative leaders planned new laws for introduction at the May 1958 legislative session for "temporary" closure of any schools which are integrated, reopening them later "racially segregated."

MARYLAND — An Eastern Shore grand jury indicated two persons who picketed schools in Easton. Fall enrollment figures showed 13 counties (districts) had some mixed classes—the same number as last year—with an increase in the number of pupils affected.

MISSISSIPPI — The state presently is "legally naked and legally defenseless' against school integration, Gov. J. P. Coleman told a special legislative session called to change the 1890 constitution by convention and to strengthen segregation laws. A House majority which favors amendment rather than convention defeated the governor's proposed constitutional move.

MISSOURI—A special study of Clark School in St. Louis, once all-white and now 80 per cent Negro, showed a variety of experiences of educators in meeting problems raised by desegregation.

NORTH CAROLINA — Admission of Negroes to all-white schools in Greensboro was under attack in the state supreme court by 41 white parents appealing a lower court decision which denied them an injunction against the Negroes' school entry.

OKLAHOMA — A federal court gave an eastern district, desegregated at the high school level, additional time to end elementary school segregation. One more district—Kinta, in Haskell County—was disclosed to have desegregated.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The home of a contributor to a "moderate" booklet on race relations was bombed and the act was strongly criticized. A large number of statements by political leaders opposing integration was made during the month.

TENNESSEE — Six state colleges were instructed by the board of education to admit all qualified students next fall who meet entrance requirements, in effect ending segregation at these institutions. John Kasper was sentenced to six months in federal penitentiary for his part in the 1956 Clinton disturbances and six codefendants received suspended sentences. Front-running candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor took pro - segration stands.

TEXAS—A special session of the legislature passed a law authorizing closing of any school to prevent the using of troops. Dallas asked a three-judge federal court to give it until at least the summer of 1958 to present a plan for school desegregation.

VIRGINIA—J. Lindsay Almond was elected governor by a nearly 2 - to - 1 vote in a campaign testing the state's official policy of 'massive resistance" to desegregation, which he endorsed. A federal district court order which refused to set a deadline for desegregation in Prince Edward County was reversed by the Fourth Circuit Court.

WEST VIRGINIA—A $100,000 study of instructonal deficiencies was critical of the achievement of West Virginia pupils. School districts where there were disturbances at the beginning of the term were reported as quiet.

Easton. Fall enrollment figures showed 13 counties (districts) had some mixed classes—the same number as last year—with an increase in the number of pupils affected.

Mississippi 'Defenseless'

MISSISSIPPI—The state presently is "legally naked and legally defenseless" against school integration, Gov. J. P. DECISIONS DISAGREE ON DESEGREGATION

Contradictory Pattern Is Found In Survey

DEVELOPMENTS LISTED

Memphis, Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, April 4. — Contradictory decisions on the constitutionality of pupil placement laws have been handed down by Federal courts, Southern School News reported Thursday.

Meanwhile, said the publication, one additional school district in West Virginia, was disclosed to have begun the desegregation process last fall. This brought to 674 the number of districts where desegregation is under way or accomplished, leaving some 3,000 still segregated.

Tests In 3 States

The key court tests of pupil placement — a device popular with legislatures seeking to delay or to avoid racial desegregation—were in cases involving Virginia, North Carolina and Louisiana measures. Four other states have pupil placement legislation and a fifth, Texas, has a bill of this type in the legislative mill.

In the Virginia case a United States District Court held the state's placement legislation unconstitutional, while in a case reaching the United States Supreme Court from neighboring North Carolina the high court refused to review a lower court opinion holding the Tar Heel law "not unconstitutional on its face." The North Carolina law makes no mention of race in directing the assignment of pupils. The Virginia law came under court attack because of the alleged intent of accompanying legislation to maintain segregation.

In a third case, involving Louisiana, a circuit court held that a placement law as it applied to New Orleans schools has "implied as its only basis for assignments the prohibited standard of race."

Attorneys were also studying the refusal of the Florida Supreme Court to order admission of a Negro graduate student to the University of Florida law school despite an order from the United States Supreme Court. Southern School News said, "it has been suggested that the Florida decision is one of the strongest assertions of the doctrine of states' rights to appear in a legal opinion."

Other Developments

During March, Delaware reported 32 per cent of its school population in "integrated situations" and Missouri reported plans for desegregation of an additional high school, leaving only four segregated in the state. Major developments state-by-state were:

ALABAMA—Legislation to implement a "freedom of choice" measure adopted last year is expected to come before the General Assembly when it meets in May, partly as a consequence of a Federal Court decision in Louisiana attacking pupil placement.

ARKANSAS—Three pro-segregation candidates were defeated and one was victorious in spring school board elections.

DELAWARE—The state saw (in Kent County) the first Federal Court order calling for a school integration plan. A statewide count showed 32 per cent of Delaware's school population in "integrated situations."

FLORIDA—The State Supreme Court refused to carry out an order of the United States Supreme Court for admission of a Negro graduate law student to the University of Florida because this course might result in "violence."

GEORGIA—School segregation is already a political issue 18 months in advance of the gubernatorial primary, with prospective candidates seeking support as all-out segregationists.

KENTUCKY—Use of racial epithets "is to make an avowal by conduct and words of stirring up strife," a Kentucky court ruled in acquitting a newspaper publisher and a police chief of charges of criminal slander made by a segregationist.

LOUISIANA—A year-old order to desegregate New Orleans schools was affirmed in a circuit court decision which held that a state's right to administer schools as it desires can be overridden by "matters of fundamental justice that the citizens of the United States consider so essentially an ingredient of human rights as to require a restraint on any state that appears to ignore them."

MARYLAND—The State Board of Education turned down an appeal from 11 Negro pupils in Harford County seeking admission to white schools not included in the first stage of a limited program restricting desegregation to the first three grades of two schools in the current year.

MISSISSIPPI—Alcorn College, where one 580 Negro students walked out in protest over a professor's newspaper criticism of the NAACP, was back to normal at the end of the month with a new president. Gov. James P. Coleman, whose attitude heretofore has been described as one of "patient understanding," took a strong stand against "outsiders" who would foment trouble in Mississippi.

MISSOURI — Only four schools in the state remain segregated after the decision of a school in the "Boot Heel" to admit Negroes next September.

NORTH CAROLINA — The state's pupil assignment law apparently has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court in a test over admission of Negro children to a McDowell County school. An NAACP national official blamed "timidity" of public officials for lack of desegregation in state schools.

OKLAHOMA — Three lawsuits have been filed seeking admission of Negro students to white schools while one of the earliest systems to end segregation at the high school level announced plans to integrate all grades next year.

SOUTH CAROLINA — One house of the Legislature has approved a bill giving the governor broad powers "for the protection of persons and property." Other pro-segregation measures are pending.

TENNESSEE — Segregationist John Kasper was re-arrested on a second charge of criminal contempt of court at Knoxville. Nashville school board members authorized the superintendent to start work on plans to "inform, elucidate and help solve problems" which may be involved in September desegregation at the first grade.

TEXAS — Pro-segregation legislation was reported to be making progress in the Legislature, which adopted a resolution urging the states to resist Federal encroachment on their authority.

VIRGINIA—The United States Supreme Court has refused to review lower court orders directing Charlottesville and Arlington County to begin school desegregation. A state official told the school authorities involved that they were helpless to obey under Virginia law. A Federal district court judge made formal an opinion holding the state's Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional.

WEST VIRGINIA — With desegregation a reality in most school systems, the Legislature has abolished the Bureau of Negro Welfare and Statistics—over criticism of some Negro citizens. Six Negro pupils are now attending formerly all-white Martinsburg High School in Berkeley County, leaving only two counties with schools wholly segregated.

Tell Progress In School Mixing

Defender Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 5-11-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Approximately 3,100 bi-racial school districts in the South remain segregated as the U. S. Supreme Court decision calling for public school integration nears its third anniversary.

The Southern School News, a non-partisan, non-political educational publication, reported that 685 school districts in nine states have begun or completed the desegregation process.

Since the May 17, 1954, court ruling, the publication says that 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children — most of them in the border states — are now in "integrated situations," some 2,400,000 Negro children and more than 7,00,000 white children remain in segregated school districts.

It was pointed out that legislatures in 11 states have adopted more than 13 pieces of pro-segregation legislation. However, little use has been needed thus far from the "pupil placement" acts which seven states have passed.

The Southern School News noted that three state legislatures — Florida, South Carolina and Texas — were in session with a heavy volume of pro-segregation legislation on their calendars. Alabama's legislature, which meets later this month, is expected to receive some 100 measures of this nature.

Progress Report

DESEGREGATION

P. 11

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Southern Schools News reported here that 805 school districts in nine states had begun or completed the desegregation process on the eve of the third anniversary of the U. S. Supreme Court decision against public school desegregation.

The publication said that about 3,100 bi-racial districts remained segregated.

Lgislatures in 11 states have adopted more than 130 pieces of pro-segregation legislation since the May 17, 1954 court ruling Southern School News reported.

The publication's files showed that 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children — most of them in the border states —were now in "integrated situations."

Some 2,400,000 Negro children and more than 7,000,00 white children remained in segregated school districts.

Southern School News noted relatively little use thus far of the "pupil placement" acts which seven states have adopted in an effort generally regarded as closing ranks against desegregation.

Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated during the year in Missouri —with their location reported only this month. Southern School News also notedt hat three state legislatures—Florida, South Carolina and Texas—were in session with a heavy volume of pro-segregation legislation on their calendars.

Alabama's legislature, which meets later this month, was expected to receive some 100 measures of this nature.

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA—The Alabama legislature, convening this month, is expected to ge a private school bill and a proposal to create a State Sovereignty Commission, in a flow of pro-segregation legislation which may run as high as 100 proposed new measures.

ARKANSAS—Little or no use of the state's new placement law was reported by state school officials who pointed out that the local districts are autonomous. Little Rock, which won a "good faith compliance" court test of its gradual desegregation plan, it expected to go ahead with high school desegregation in the fall.

DELAWARE—Questioning by a federal judge hearing a motion in a school-entry suit, against six southern Delaware school boards was interpreted as indicating that the court will order desegregation.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Asst. School Supt. Carl E. Hansen, author of Washington's "four-track" plan, told the education board that "unusual gains" under this diversified curriculum, growing out of desegregation, have been made since last fall.

FLORIDA — The legislature adopted a resolution of interposition, which was criticized by Gov. LeRoy Collins, and debated six bills designed to curb activities of organizations taking part in litigation on racial matters.

GEORGIA—The State Board of Regents tightened entrance regulations at the University of Georgia Law School, which a Negro graduate student has sought to enter, requiring character references from alumni and public officials in the applicant's home county.

KENTUCKY—Holding its last meeting before dissolution, the Kentucky (Negro) Teachers Association was told that 75 per cent of the state's Negro pupils are in districts which have begun or have completed the desegregation process.

LOUISIANA—U. S. District court invalidated two college segregation laws and enjoined four integrated colleges where the state sought to bar Negro enrollment. New Orleans began placement of elementary pupils on a segregated basis under a stay of federal court order invalidating the pupil assignment law and ordering integration.

MARYLAND — U. S. district court in Maryland advised Harford County to work out a new plan for secondary school desegregation, calling the present gradual plan too slow and "too vague."

MISSISSIPPI—State laid plans to market its first general obligation bonds for a building program to equalize facilities in still segregated schools.

MISSOURI — Nine additional school districts were repotred to have desegregated during the year, with nine more reported planning the step next year.

NORTH CAROLINA — The school board of Charlotte, North Carolina's largest city, told parents of Negro children that initiative for desegregating the schools rests with individuals and not the board. One board member told the group: "No door is closed. Our schools bear no signs saying 'No Admittance."

OKLAHOMA — Integration will be expanded in at least three school districts next year as the result of school board decisions during April.

SOUTH CAROLINA — The legislature, considering a number of new pro-segregation measures, repealed a bill prohibiting government employment to NAACP members — then under attack before the U. S. Supreme Court — and enacted in its stead an employment measure couched in more general terms.

TENNESSEE — Nashville, first of state's large cities to begin desegregation, said 3,200 children (41 per cent of them Negroes) will be affected by a fall first-grade desegregation plan approved by U. S. district court.

TEXAS — Bills delaying desegregation advanced in the legislature but faced the challenge of a filibuster. U. S. Supreme Court ruled against Wichita Falls in suit involving judicial review of school desegregation.

VIRGINIA — A first challenge of the state's new pupil placement law arose in Fairfax County. Republican and Democratic political figures who may oppose one another for governor debated the segregation-desegregation issue.

WEST VIRGINIA — With desegregation general, West Virginians were studying problem of employment for young Negroes who, after finishing school, reportedly are having difficulty finding jobs.

JUMPING CIRCIES — Frank Barron, Columbus, Ohio; Margaret Harris, Thomasville, N. C., and William Tootle, Scotland Neck, N. C., all majors in engineering at A & T college, Greensboro, N. C., observe a demonstration in "jumping circles" at the Science and Engineering Open House at the college. On the scale at right are circles moving at a rapid speed — put into action by a sudden and powerful electric-magnetic power.

Desegregation Round-Up

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 7-20-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The U. S. Supreme Court has acted 22 times on school segregation-desegregation since 1954, according to a survey published by Southern School News.

In the 22 cases which have gone through state and local courts to the U. S. high court, said Southern School News, desegregation has been effected in six. Two other cases did not specifically involve school entry. The most recent Supreme Court action, the publication pointed out, was a decision upholding a lower court ruling which ordered desegregation in New Orleans schools and invalidated Louisiana's pupil placement law.

Other major developments, Southern School News reported, state-by-state, as follows:

• ALABAMA—With a backlog of an estimated 25 to 40 pro-segregation bills, the legislature, which convened May 7, had passed one local measure. The consensus of legislators was that the state's pupil placement law was the principal defense against forcible integration.

• ARKANSAS — Four school districts—Little Rock, North Little Rock, Fort Smith and Van Buren—plan desegregation this fall. More than 200 Arkansas districts will remain segregated.

• DELAWARE — Local initiative should govern desegregation, the State Board of Education ruled again, in a move interpreted as reducing the likelihood of general desegregation in the fall.

• DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Washington's nine-member school board got a new chairman as the District also continued its quest for a superintendent to succeed Hobart M. Corning.

• FLORIDA — The legislature adjourned without enacting any major new law on segregation-desegregation.

• GEORGIA — The state's request to dismiss an entry suit to Georgia State College was refused by a Federal court. An assessment of more than $17,000 in back income taxes was clapped on the NAACP.

• KENTUCKY—Two state institutions of higher education — the predominantly white University of Kentucky and the formerly all-Negro Kentucky State College, joined to sponsor extension courses at Frankfort, the state capital.

• LOUISIANA — Orleans Parish (New Orleans) School Board lost its appeal from a desegregation order in the U. S. Supreme Court, which also upheld a lower court order ruling the state's pupil placement law unconstitutional.

• MARYLAND—A Federal court approved "selective integration" in Harford County, a plan involving the screening of Negro applicants. Negro plaintiffs said they would appeal the ruling.

* MISSISSIPPI—Gov. J. P. Coleman issued his strongest statement to date on school segregation, saying that "we have no intention of complying with the decision that we regard to be utterly unconstitutional."

• MISSOURI—A survey of desegregated John Pitman School in Kirkwood, a suburb of St. Louis, showed that desegregation was "easier on the whole this year than last," when difficulties were reported at the second-year mark.

• NORTH CAROLINA—Applications for school entry, governed by the state's pupil placement act, have been filed in Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh and Winston-Salem, plus Mecklenburg (Charlotte) County.

• OKLAHOMA — A state survey showed that a "Little Dixie" district planned complete desegregation this fall and that two other districts had "policy desegregation," while all-Negro high schools would be maintained in 34 and possibly 40 districts.

• SOUTH CAROLINA—The next-to-longest session in the state's legislative history ended with new pro-segregation laws.

• TENNESSEE—Knoxville asked a Federal court to dismiss a school entry suit as John Kasper, pro-segregation organizer, appeared in Nashville, which plans first-grade desegregation this fall (under court order). Kasper said he has organized a Citizens Council in opposition.

• TEXAS—A Federal court was asked to set a definite date for desegregation of Houston's school system as Galveston announced it would postpone desegregation because of new state laws. Appeal was announced of a state court order restricting NAACP activities.

• VIRGINIA—Pupil placement, as provided by state law, was under challenge in both Federal and state courts.

• WEST VIRGINIA—Hardy County announced it would take its first desegregation steps this fall and Mason County said it would adopt complete desegregation, leaving two counties in the state with segregated school systems.

Desegregation Is Affected In Six Decisions

MOST PLEAS REJECTED

Memphis Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 6.—The U. S. Supreme Court has acted 22 times on school segregation-desegregation since 1954, according to a survey published here today by Southern School News.

During June, the publication said, eight school districts in border and mid-South states announced desegregation plans for next fall, while in Delaware a state education board policy restatement appeared to have arrested general desegregation in Delaware predicted for September.

In the 22 cases which have gone through state and local courts to the U. S. high court, said Southern School News, desegregation has been effected in six. Two other cases did not specifically involve school entry. The most recent Supreme Court action, the publication pointed out, was a decision upholding a lower court ruling which ordered desegregation in New Orleans schools and invalidated Louisiana's pupil placement law.

Pupil placement, or assignment, which seven states have adopted since 1954, was also being tested in North Carolina and Virginia. Southern School News said that 58 Negro pupils in four North Carolina cities had applied for transfer to all-white schools. A state court in Virginia and a Federal Circuit Court had before them cases challenging Virginia's placement law,

200 Remain Segregated

Districts announcing desegregation this fall included one in West Virginia, three in Oklahoma and four in Arkansas, where more than 200 districts apparently will remain segregated.

In its survey of Supreme Court actions since 1954, the paper found that a majority of the pleas for review by the court have been rejected. On 11 of 22 occasions the court has denied certiorari and on two others denied petitions for different handling by district courts. Decisions have been issued on nine occasions, including two in the original case of Brown vs. Board of Education.

"Thus in the 20 cases dealing with school segregation specifically," Southern School News said, "it would appear that the court has adhered with considerable consistency to the policy it established in the 1955 Brown decision when it remanded the cases to the federal district courts for implementation consistent with this opinion."

Other major developments, Southern School News reported, state-by-state, as follows:

State By State

ALABAMA—With a backlog of an estimated 25 to 40 pro-segregation bills, the Legislature, which convened May 7, had passed one local measure. The consensus of legislators was that the state's pupil placement law was the principal defense against forcible integration.

ARKANSAS—Four school districts—Little Rock, North Little Rock, Fort Smith and Van Buren—plan desegregation this fall. More than 200 Arkansas districts will remain segregated.

DELAWARE—Local initiative should govern desegregation, the State Board of Education ruled again, in a move interpreted as reducing the likelihood of general desegregation in the fall.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Washington's nine-member school board got a new chairman as the District also continued its quest for a superintendent to succeed Hobart M. Corning.

No New Laws

FLORIDA—The Legislature adjourned without enacting any major new law on segregation-desegregation. It failed to override a gubernatorial veto of a "last resort" bill allowing local districts to abandon public schools faced with desegregation orders.

GEORGIA—The state's request to dismiss an entry suit to Georgia State College was refused by a Federal Court. An assessment of more than $17,000 in back income taxes was clapped on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

KENTUCKY—Two state institutions of higher education—the predominantly white University of Kentucky and the formerly all-Negro Kentucky State College, joined to sponsor extension courses at Frankfort, the state capital.

LOUISIANA — Orleans Parish (New Orleans) School Board lost its appeal from a desegregation order in the U. S. Supreme Court, which also upheld a lower court order ruling the state's pupil placement law unconstitutional.

MARYLAND—A Federal Court approved "selective integration" in Harford County, a plan involving the screening of Negro applicants. Negro plaintiffs said they would appeal the ruling.

Strongest Statement

MISSISSIPPI—Gov. J. P. Coleman issued his strongest statement to date on school segregation, saying that "we have no intention of complying with the decision that we regard to be utterly unconstitutional."

MISSOURI—A survey of desegregated John Pitman School in Kirkwood, a suburb of St. Louis, showed that desegregation was "easier on the whole this year than last," when difficulties were reported at the second-year mark.

NORTH CAROLINA—Applications for school entry, governed by the state's pupil placement act, have been filed in Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh and Winston-Salem, plus Mecklenburg (Charlotte) County.

OKLAHOMA—A state survey showed that a "Little Dixie" district planned complete desegregation this fall and that two other districts had "policy desegregation," while all-Negro high schools would be maintained in 34 and possibly 40 districts.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The next-to-longest session in the state's legislative history ended with a sprinkling of new pro-segregation laws.

Kasper Appears

TENNESSEE — Knoxville asked a Federal Court to dismiss a school entry suit as John Kasper, pro-segregation organizer, appeared in Nashville, which plans first-grade desegregation this fall (under court order). Kasper said he has organized a Citizens Council in opposition.

TEXAS—A Federal Court was asked to set a definite date for desegregation of Houston's school system as Galveston announced it would postpone desegregation because of new state laws. Appeal was announced of a State Court order restricting NAACP activities.

VIRGINIA—Pupil placement, as provided by state law, was under challenge in both Federal and State courts. In one instance, the Fourth Circuit Court heard (at Asheville, N. C.) a case involving Norfolk and Newport News.

WEST VIRGINIA — Hardy County announced it would take its first desegregation steps this fall and Mason County said it would adopt complete desegregation, leaving two counties in the state with segregated school systems.

Desegregation Slowed Down By Dixie Laws

Black Dispatch
Sw. 8-16-57
Oklahoma City

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A new state law has arrested planned desegregation in several Texas communities, Southern School News reported Monday in its August issue, while in other areas of the southern and border states 25 more school districts have begun or announced desegregation.

Port Arthur, Galveston and other communities which had planned to desegregate their schools this fall have been informed by state authorities that they cannot do so except by a vote of the people—or they will lose all state aid. More than 100 districts in Texas previously had desegregated and are not affected by the new state law.

Three of the 25 new districts which have begun or announced desegregation are in North Carolina. There, the populous Piedmont cities of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem have accepted 12 Negro children for enrollment in previously all-white schools under the state's assignment law. This is the first integration "break-through" in the eight Southeastern and Deep South states where resistance to the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 has been strongest.

Other districts included five in Arkansas, two in Oklahoma and 15 in Missouri.

According to Southern School News, this brings to 694 the number of districts already desegregated and to 712 the number desegregated or planning such a move in September. Some 3,000 districts remain segregated.

In key court decisions during July, the paper reported, the Fourth Circuit Court sustained a ruling against Virginia's pupil placement act, and the schools of Dallas, Texas were ordered to desegregate, but at no specific time. A suit against Florida's placement act was dismissed while the Fifth Circuit Court ruled against a lower court which dismissed a desegregation suit in Dade (Miami) county. A federal district judge in Delaware, in the first decision of its kind, ordered wholesale desegregation of segregated schools in the state.

The State of Mississippi reported difficulty in floating school bonds, as did the university system of Georgia, where the state auditor blamed the "segregation bugaboo." However, Atlanta accepted low bids on bonds for 10 new schools, including seven for Negroes.

A sumamry of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA—A bill gerrymandering most of Tuskegee's Negroes out of the city limits and thus out of a vote in municipal affairs became law as Negro voting, rather than school desegregation, dominated the state's affairs.

ARKANSAS—Little Rock, planning high school desegregation in September, heard protests from segregationist groups but said it would go ahead. One more district was reported to have desegregated and another announced desegregation for September.

DELAWARE—In the first such ruling of its kind, a federal judge ordered all school districts of the state desegregated. State and local authorities planned to appeal to higher courts.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Washington's school board approved a request for $58.2 million to operate the schools in fiscal 1959—a record budget for the de- tion for the Advancement of Colored People.

LOUISIANA—An effort to remove Democratic National Committeeman Camille Gravel, who endorsed the party's 1956 civil rights plank and predicted eventual school desegregation, apparently was stalled by a ruling of the national committee.

MARYLAND—A district court decision upholding Harford county's "selective integration" (screening of prospective Negro students) plan was under fire from the NAACP, which announced an appeal.

MISSISSIPPI—High costs of Mississippi's equalization program were borne home in increased

MISSOURI—A survey showed nine more school districts desegregated with six others planning a similar move in September.

NORTH CAROLINA—In the first projected desegregation in the Southeast, three Piedmont cities accepted 12 Negro pupils for enrollment in previously all-white schools under the state's Pupil Assignment Act.

OKLAHOMA—Tentative settlement in a federal court case opened the state school for the deaf to Negro registrants. Some faculty integration in Oklahoma City may occur this fall because of the closing of two Negro schools.

SOUTH CAROLINA—An effort by some ministers to obtain "moderate" expressions of sentiment on school segregation-desegregation was disclosed by Gov. George Bell Timmerman jr., who criticized it by inference.

TENNESSEE—Zones for first grade integration in the schools of Nashville this fall (under court order) were disclosed as opposition mounted. In a nationally prominent case, a jury at Knoxville convicted seven and acquitted four defendants in a contempt-of-court case involving disturbances last year at Clinton.

TEXAS—Port Arthur, Galveston and other communities planning desegregation were held in check by a new state law which provided penalties (in particular, loss of state aid) for districts which desegregate without a popular vote.

VIRGINIA—The state's Pupil Placement Act was held unconstitutional by the Fourth Circuit Court in a ruling affirming a lower court decision. Desegregation orders against Norfolk, Newport News and Charlottesville were stayed pending a U. S. Supreme Court ruling, but a district court ordered Arlington county to begin desegregation in September.

WEST VIRGINIA—School superintendents predicted no trouble at school opening time this year in two districts where there had been flare-ups previously, and this appeared to be the picture throughout the state.

NEGRO STUDENTS DIP IN 10 STATES

But Survey in South Also Shows a Rise in Ratio In 8 Other Areas

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 7 —A decline in the last five years in the proportion of negro students enrolled in public schools in ten southern and border states has been reported by Southern School News.

The survey, covering the five-year period since the original school segregation cases went to the United States Supreme Court, showed yesterday that the proportion of Negro students had increased in seven other states of the region and in the District of Columbia.

Despite the changes in percentages of students, the publication said there had been an increase in the total enrollment of Negro and White races throughout the region.

Between 1951 and 1957, percentages of Negro students decreased in Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia, in which the schools remain completely segregated, and in Texas, North Carolina, Oklahoma and West Virginia, where there have been degrees of desegregation.

An Increase in Alabama

Of the segregated states, the ratio of Negroes to the total number of students has increased only in Alabama. Increases also were shown in Arkansas, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee and the District of Columbia.

Of these, the degree of integration ranges from slight in Tennessee and Arkansas to complete in the District of Columbia.

Decreases of Negroes in proportion to total enrollment ranged from four-tenths of 1 per cent in Oklahoma to 2.5 per cent in Georgia, according to the survey.

The District of Columbia, where Negroes now make up 71.2 per cent of the school enrollment, had a 15.6 per cent increase between 1951 and the current school year. All but two junior high schools and 105 of the 122 elementary schools in the District reported mixed classes.

"Two principal factors seem to explain the relative Negro decline in the Deep South," the publication said. "They are: (1) Negro out-migration and (2) booming white enrollment.

"However, it has been pointed out that in these areas Negro enrollments are rising, too, probably in response to better school buildings (though segregated) and better economic conditions among Negroes, especially in the cities.

"Demographic experts say, additionally, that Negro school age population throughout the region is increasing at a greater rate than in the white population. Yet these decreases appear."

Quiet Month

Southern School News said November was a "quiet" month in so far as developments in the segregation - desegregation field were concerned.

Only one additional district (Kinta in Oklahoma) was reported to have been desegregated, bringing to 762 the number of desegregated school districts out of 3,008 with biracial enrollments.

The publication, devoted to recording developments impartially in race relations as they affect public schools, listed a possible test of Alabama's pupil placement law as among major developments. The test is expected to result from efforts of four Negroes to gain admission to three all-white schools.

In Tennessee the State Board of Education, in effect, voted to end segregation next fall in the six institutions of higher learning under its control. The board directed the colleges to admit all qualified students regardless of race, but authorized each college to propose new entrance requirements.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi declared his sttae was "legally naked and legally defenseless" against public school integration and urged a complete revision of the state's constitution. The House of Representatives, however, voted down his proposal in favor of amending the present Constitution.

Admission of Negroes to all-white schools in Greensboro, N. C., was under attack in the State Supreme Court, after forty-one parents appealed a lower court decision denying them an injunction against the entry of Negroes.

After Three Years—

3100 School Districts Still Segregated

Today is the third anniversary of the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation in public schools. The following review from Southern School News tells of what has been done since that time in the South.

On the eve of the third anniversary of the U. S. Supreme Court decision against public school segregation, Southern School News files showed that 685 school districts in nine states had begun or completed the desegregation process, while there had been no lower school desegregation in the eight remaining states of the 17 having statutory segregation in 1954.

Current school records list some 3700 school districts in the region as having both white and Negro pupils. Thus about 3100 districts remained segregated.

Meanwhile, legislatures in 11 states had adopted more than 130 pieces of pro-segregation legislation. During April, three of these legislatures were in session and were dealing with additional bills to preserve segregated schools under state laws. Among them, Florida had adopted a resolution of interposition.

Three states—Louisiana, North Carolina and Virginia—were implementing their school assignment, or pupil placement, laws in preparation for the 1957-58 school year. No apparent use had been made of similar recent legislation in Arkansas.

Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated in Missouri during the year, with nine more reported in April as planning this step next Fall. Most recent data showed 325,739 Negro pupils and 1,852,846 white pupils in "integrated situations"— mostly in the border states.

For the first time in several months few court decisions were reported. Little Rock, Ark., which plans to begin desegregation this Fall at the high school level, won a circuit court decision upholding its "gradual" plan. Louisiana federal judges invalidated two college segregation laws and enjoined four state colleges from barring enrollment of Negro graduate students. In a case outside the region but based on the May 17, 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decision, that court ruled against private school segregation where state agencies administer such schools.

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

Alabama

The Alabama legislature, convening this month, is expected to get a private school bill and a proposal to create a State Sovereignty Comission, in a flow of pro-segregation legislation which may run as high as 100 proposed new measures.

Arkansas

Little or no use of the state's new placement law was reported by state school officials who pointed out that the local districts are autonomous. Little Rock, which won a "good faith compliance" court test of its gradual desegregation, said it expected to go ahead with high school desegregation in the Fall.

Delaware

Questioning by a federal judge hearing a motion in a school-entry suit against six southern Delaware school boards was interpreted as indicating that the court will order desegregation.

District of Columbia

Asst. School Supt. Carl F. Hansen, author of Washington's "four-track" plan, told the education board that "unusual gains" under this diversified curriculum, growing out of desegregation, have been made since last Fall.

Florida

The legislature adopted a resolution of interposition, which was criticized by Gov. LeRoy Collins, and debated six bills designed to curb activities of organizations taking part in litigation on racial matters.

Georgia

The State Board of Regents tightened entrance regulations at the University of Georgia Law School, which a Negro graduate student has sought to enter, requiring character references from alumni and public officials in the applicant's home county.

Kentucky

Holding its last meeting before dissolution, the Kentucky (Negro) Teachers Association was told that 75 per cent of the state's Negro pupils are in districts which have begun or have completed the desegregation process.

Louisiana

U. S. district court invalidated two college segregation laws and enjoined four integrated colleges where the state sought to bar Negro enrollment. New Orleans began placement of elementary pupils on a segregated basis under a stay of a federal court order invalidating the pupil assignment law and ordering integration.

Maryland

U. S. district court in Maryland advised Harford County to work out a new plan for secondary school desegregation, calling the present gradual plan too slow and "too vague."

Mississippi

State laid plans to market its first general obligation bonds for a building program to equalize facilities in still-segregated schools.

Missouri

Nine additional school districts were reported to have desegregated during the year, with nine more reported planning the step next year.

North Carolina

The school board of Charlotte, North Carolina's largest city, told parents of Negro children that initiative for desegregating the schools rests with individuals and not the board. One board member told the group: "No door is closed. Our schools bear no signs saying 'No Admittance.'"

Oklahoma

Integration will be expanded in at least three school districts next year as the result of school board decisions during April.

South Carolina

The legislature, considering a number of new pro-segregation measures, repealed a bill prohibiting government employment to NAACP members—then under attack before before the U. S. Supreme Court—and enacted in its stead an employment procedure measure couched in more general terms.

Tennessee

Nashville, first of state's large cities to begin desegregation, said 3200 children (41 per cent of them Negroes) will be affected by a Fall first-grade desegregation plan approved by U. S. district court.

Texas

Bills delaying desegregation advanced in the legislature but faced the challenge of a filibuster. U. S. Supreme Court ruled against Wichita Falls in suit involving judicial review of school desegregation.

Virginia

A first challenge of the state's new pupil placement law arose in Fairfax County. Republican and Democratic political figures who may oppose one another for governor debated the segregation-desegregation issue.

West Virginia

With desegregation general, West Virginians were studying problem of employment for young Negroes who, after finishing school, reportedly are having difficulty finding jobs.

9 Legislatures Consider Segregation

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 5 (A)—Measures dealing with the school segregation issue will be introduced in nine Southern and border state Legislatures this year, the Southern School News said today.

The News said lawmakers of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Texas and possibly Maryland will be asked to enact laws aimed at continuing segregated schools.

Legislators in Missouri, Maryland and Delaware, the publication added are expected to get bills designed to hasten school integration.

The paper noted that since the U. S. Supreme Court decisions against school segregation, eight Southern Legislatures have adopted 107 measures in an effort to retain separate schools for whites and Negroes.

The News is published here monthly by the Southern Education Reporting Service, a nonpartisan, fact-finding agency under the direction of a group of Southern newspaper editors and educators.

Types of pro-segregation legislation expected to be introduced this year, the publication said, include provisions for pupil assignment, revision of compulsory attendance laws, tuition grants for private education, restrictions on or investigations of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, enactment of reference requirements for college admission and "free choice" of schools.

REPORT ON DESEGREGATION

Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 6-15-57

Final Survey For School Year Shows Only 18% Of School Districts Integrated; 8 States Holding Out

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Segregation has been ended or is in the process of being abolished in 684 school districts, the Southern Education Reporting service said last week.

The fact-finding organization, reporting on a survey as schools in the South closed for the summer, disclosed that 18 per cent of the 3,700 biracial school districts in southern and border states have been desegregated since 1954.

Public schools remain segregated in eight of the 17 southern states which required racial separation when the Supreme Court decision was issued, Southern School News said.

States where no desegregation has taken place are Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Of the 684 school districts which had begun or accomplished the desegregation process, all but seven districts were in "border state" areas. Five of these seven districts are in Arkansas; two in Tennessee.

Two Arkansas cities and one Tennessee city, along with nine school districts in Missouri are scheduled to begin integration in the fall. Segregation will end, generally, in Delaware in the fall.

In the still-segregated region, four school districts in Virginia are under court order to end segregation, but the decrees are being contested in court. Two suits to gain entrance for Negroes to segregated schools are pending in Florida, and another is pending in Georgia.

Additional pro - segregation legislation meanwhile, is under consideration by legislatures in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina.

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

* * *

ALABAMA — The legislature began its 1957 session May 7 with a large number of pro-segregation bills — most of them concerned with school-closing — before it for action. Contrary to predictions, Gov. James E. Folsom did not mention the issue in his address to the legislature.

* * *

ARKANSAS — Pro - segregation laws were under fire from a church group. The White Citizens Council asked Gov. Orval Faubus to "order" whites and Negroes to attend separate schools at Little Rock, where high school desegregation is to begin this fall.

* * *

DELAWARE — Law enforcement agencies were preparing for a general desegregation order this fall, with special courses of instruction in police - community relations, after the state's chief deputy attorney general said "desegregation in the public schools (now confined largely to north Delaware) will come sooner than expected — possibly by September."

* * *

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — District Supt. Hobart M. Corning, 68, who guided the school system during three years of desegregation, announced he would retire next year.

* * *

FLORIDA — The state legislature neared the end of its regular session tangled in debate — but taking no final action — on several pro-segregation measures, including a "last resort" local opinion bill.

* * *

GEORGIA — An Atlanta Negro was re-elected to the city's school board and another Negro was defeated for election to the board of aldermen in a runoff. A segregated audience attended the first meeting of the state AFL-CIO.

* * *

KENTUCKY — A special survey of two years of school desegregation in Lexington disclosed that 30 of the city's 2,750 Negro pupils were attending mixed classes under a free - choice plan.

* * *

LOUISIANA — In the first such forecast from a political figure, Louisiana's Democratic national committeeman predicted his state and other states would eventually desegregate their schools. Meanwhile, the state was seeking new trials in suits which have produced federal court desegregation orders in four colleges.

MARYLAND — The state court of appeals upheld the legality of school desegregation as several counties prepared to extend their integration programs.

MISSISSIPPI — Some 1,000 local taxing districts are completing consolidation into about 150 such districts in 82 counties as the first phase of a physical equalization plan.

MISSOURI — At the end of the school year, only five high school districts in the state remained segregated, with fewer than 7,500 out of 68,000 Negro pupils in all Missouri schools still in segregated systems. Old statutes authorizing segregation were repealed by the legislature in a little-noticed action.

NORTH CAROLINA — Legislators were studying proposed new laws to open NAACP financial records and to make "barratry" a crime. School officials of the three largest cities disclosed they had been meeting privately for several years to discuss mutual problems — including segregation-desegregation.

OKLAHOMA — The legislature failed to remove segregation sections from its school code though state school districts generally are complying with the U. S. Supreme Court decision.

SOUTH CAROLINA — The end of the school year found public schools tightly segregated, with the state legislature in session and adding more laws aimed at continued segregation.

TENNESSEE — Trial of segregationist John Kasper and 15 other persons charged with contempt of court in the Clinton disturbances was set for July as Clinton High school graduated its first Negro.

TEXAS — Legislators adopted a pupil assignment law and a measure requiring elections before other school districts desegregate (more than 100 have done so), while a state court issued a modified injunction against the N. A. A. C. P.

* * *

VIRGINIA — Virginia's pupil placement law is being challenged by a number of school patrons who refuse to sign required forms. A federal judge who held the law unconstitutional has come under attack from state authorities.

* * *

WEST VIRGINIA — A special survey of integrated schools indicated that desegregation has brought savings which range from a few hundred dollars to $250,000 annually.

18 Per Cent Of Southern, Border States Integrated

P. 12

DEEP SOUTH IS ADAMANT

Memphis Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, June 4. — Eighteen per cent of Southern and "border" states have desegregated since the May, 1954, Supreme Court decision against school segregation, Southern School News reported here Tuesday.

In a "year-end" survey, covering the three years since the decision, the publication said that as school doors closed this year for the summer in 17 states and the District of Columbia, 684 of an approximate 3,700 districts had desegregated, or made a start toward it.

Deep South Adamant

However, the so-called Deep South remained adamant. Of the [illegible] districts, all but seven were in so-called border-state areas.

Five of the seven were in Arkansas and the other two in Tennessee, but public schools continued to remain segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

The publication noted that the state of Missouri in its recent legislative session took a step which drew little notice at the time.

"The Missouri Legislature quietly repealed old statutes authorizing school segregation," it pointed out. At the end of this school year, only five high school districts in the state remained segregated, with fewer than 7,500 out of 68,000 Negro pupils in all Missouri schools still in segregated systems.

Kasper Trial Soon

One of the hot questions coming up in the next few months on the segregation question will be the trial of segregationist John Kasper and 15 other persons charged with contempt of court on charges growing out of last year's racial disturbances at Clinton, Tenn., High School, Southern School News noted.

The Clinton school graduated its first Negro pupil this year. The trial of Kasper and the others is set for July 9.

Southern School News correspondents reported that additional desegregation steps are scheduled this fall in two Arkansas cities, one Tennessee city, nine districts in Missouri and "generally" in Delaware, where state and local police are receiving special instruction in police-community relations.

Four districts in Virginia are under court order to desegregate at specified times but are fighting these orders in the courts. Elsewhere in the area still segregated, two school entry suits, described as "key" cases, are pending in Florida.

Additional Legislation

As the school year ended, Legislatures in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas were adopting or debating additional pro-segregation legislation.

A state-by-state summary of major developments included:

ALABAMA—The Legislature began its 1957 session May 7 with a large number of pro-segregation bills—most of them concerned with school-closing—before it for action. Contrary to predictions, Gov. James E. Folsom did not mention the issue in his address to the Legislature.

FLORIDA—The Legislature neared the end of its regular session tangled in debate—but takin gno final action—on several pro-segregation measures, including a "last resort" local option bill.

GEORGIA—An Atlanta Negro was re-elected to the city's school board and another Negro was defeated for election to the board of aldermen in a runoff. A segregated audience attended the first meeting of the state AFL-CIO.

KENTUCKY—A special survey of two years of school desegregation in Lexington disclosed that 30 of the city's 2,750 Negro pupils were attending mixed classes under a free-choice plan.

LOUISIANA—In the first such forecast from a political figure, Louisiana's Democratic national committeeman predicted his state and other states would eventually desegregate their schools. Meanwhile, the state was seeking new trials in suits which have produced Federal court desegregation orders in four colleges.

MISSISSIPPI—Some 1,000 local taxing districts are completing consolidation into about 150 such districts in 82 counties as the first phase of a physical equalization plan.

NORTH CAROLINA — Legislators were studying proposed new laws to open NAACP financial records and to make "barratry" a crime. School officials of the three largest cities disclosed they had been meeting privately for several years to discuss mutual problems—including segregation-desegregation.

TEXAS—Legislators adopted a pupil assignment law and a measure requiring elections before other school districts desegregate (more than 100 have done so), while a state court issued a modified permanent injunction against the NAACP.

VIRGINIA — Virginia's pupil placement law is being challenged by a number of school patrons who refuse to sign required forms. A Federal judge who held the law unconstitutional has come under attack from state authorities.

WEST VIRGINIA—A special survey of integrated schools indicated that desegregation has brought savings which range from a few hundred dollars to $250,000 annually.

740 Dixie School Areas Now Mix

Journal + Guide P. 24-C Jun 4-8-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 7—(UP)—Southern School News said Saturday that nearly 2,500,000 Negroes and 7,000,000 white children are still in segregated school systems in Southern and border states. Atlanta Ga.

This figure compares, the publication said, with 350,000 Negro and 2,000,000 white children who are in integrated situations.

The report said 2,300 school districts in the area are still segregated, while 740 have been integrated. 1400

The publication, issued by Southern Education Reporting Service, said [illegible] districts were scheduled to desegregate this fall.

Seven of those were in Missouri, six in Kentucky, five in Arkansas, four in Oklahoma, three in North Carolina and one each in Tennessee and Maryland.

The publication said that schools remain segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia although Negroes are enrolled in colleges in Virginia and Louisiana.

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS 18% INTEGRATED SINCE 1954

Daily World Wed. 6-5-57 Atlanta, Ga.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Eighteen per cent of the some 3,700 biracial school districts in the southern and border states have desegregated since the May 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decision against school segregation, Southern School News said here Tuesday in a year-end survey.

As school doors closed for the summer in 17 states and the District of Columbia, 684 districts had begun or accomplished the desegregation process, according to the newspaper. Of these, all but seven were in the border state area.

Five of the seven were in Arkansas and the other two in Tennessee.

Public schools remained segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS correspondents reported that additional desegregation steps are scheduled this fall in two Arkansas cities, one Tennessee city, nine districts in Missouri and "generally" in Delaware, where state and local police are receiving special instruction in police-community relations.

Four districts in Virginia are under court order to desegregate at specified times but are fighting these orders in the courts. Elsewhere in the area still segregated, two school entry suits, described as "key" cases, are pending in Fla.

As the school year ended, legislatures in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas were adopting or debating additional pro-segregation legislation. The Missouri legislature had quietly repealed old statutes authorizing school segregation.

MAJOR DEVELOPMENTS

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA—The legislature began its 1957 session May 7 with a large number of pro-segregation bills—most of them concerned with school closing before it for action. Contrary to predictions, Gov. James E. Folsom did not mention the issue in his address to the legislature.

ARKANSAS — Pro-segregation laws were under fire from a church group. The white Citizens Council asked Gov. Orval Faubus to "order" whites and Negroes to attend separate schools at Little Rock, where high school desegregation is to begin this fall.

DELAWARE—Law enforcement agencies were preparing for a general desegregation order this fall, with special courses of instruction in police-community relations, after the state's chief deputy attorney general said "desegregation in the public schools (now confined largely to north Delaware) will come sooner than expected—possibly by September." after the state's chief deputy attorney general said "desegregation in public schools (now confined largely to north Delaware) will come sooner than expected——possible by September."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—District Supt. Hobart M. Corning, 68, who guided the school system during three years of desegregation announced he would retire next year.

FLORIDA—The state legislature neared the end of its regular session tangled in debate—but taking no final action—on several pro-segregation measures, including a "last resort" local option bill.

GEORGIA—Dr. Rufus E. Clement was re-elected to the city's school board and another Negro was defeated for election to the board of aldermen in a runoff. A segregated audience attended the first meeting of the state AFL-CIO.

KENTUCKY—A special survey of two years of school desegregation in Lexington disclosed that 30 of the city's 2,750 Negro pupils were attending mixed classes under a free choice plann.

LOUISIANA—In the first such forecast a political figure, Louisiana's Democratic national committeeman predicted his state and other states would eventually desegregate their schools. Meanwhile, the state was seeking new trials in suits which have produced federal court desegregation orders in four colleges.

MARYLAND— The state court of appeals upheld the legality of school desegregation as several counties prepared to extend their integration programs.

MISSISSIPPI—Some 1,000 local taxing districts are completing consolidation into about 150 such districts in 82 counties as the first phase of a physical equalization plan.

MISSOURI—At the end of the school year, only five high school districts in the state remained segregated, with fewer than 7,500 out of 68,000 Negro pupils in all Missouri schools still in segregated systems. Old statutes authorizing segregation were repealed by the legislature in a little-notice action.

NORTH CAROLINA—Legislators were studying proposed new laws to open NAACP financial records and to make "barratry" a crime. School officials of the three largest cities disclosed they had been meeting privately for several years to discuss mutual problems—including segregation desegregation failed to remove segregation sections from its school code though state school districts generally are complying with the U. S. Supreme Court decision.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The end of the school year found public schools tightly segregated, with the state legislation in session and adding more laws aimed at continued segregation.

TENNESSEE—Trial of segregationist John Kasper and 15 other persons charged with contempt of court in the Clinton disturbance was set for July as Clinton High School graduated its first Negro.

TEXAS— Legislators adopted a pupil assignment law and a measure requiring elections before other school districts desegregate (more than 100 have done so), while a state court issued a modified permanent injunction against the NAACP.

VIRGINIA—Virginia's pupil placement law is being challenged by a number of school patrons who refuse to sign required forms. A federal judge who held the law unconstitutional has come under attack from state authorities.

WEST VIRGINIA—A special survey of integrated schools indicated that desegregation has brought savings which range from a few hundred dollars to $25,000 annually.

SERS Releases Year-End Report On Desegregation

News + Courier Wed. 6-5-57 P. 3-a Charleston, S.C.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 4 (Special) — Eighteen per cent of the some 3,700 biracial school districts in the Southern and border states have desegregated since the May 1954 U. S. Supreme Court decision against school segregation, Southern School News said here today in a year-end survey.

As school doors closed for the summer in 17 states and the District of Columbia, 684 districts had begun or accomplished the desegregation process, according to the newspaper. Of these, all but seven were in the border state area.

Five of the seven were in Arkansas and the other two in Tennessee.

Public schools remained segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Southern School News correspondents reported that additional desegregation steps are scheduled this fall in two Arkansas cities, one Tennessee city, nine districts in Missouri and "generally" in Delaware, where state and local police are receiving special instruction in police-community relations.

Four districts in Virginia are under court order to desegregate at specified times but are fighting these orders in the courts. Elsewhere in the area still segregated, two school entry suits, described as "key" cases, are pending in Florida.

As the school year ended, legislatures in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas were adopting or debating additional pro-segregation legislation. The Missouri legislature had quietly repealed old statutes authorizing school segregation.

A summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA — The legislature began its 1957 session May 7 with a large number of pro-segregation bills — most of them concerned with school-closing — before it for action. Contrary to predictions, Gov. James E. Folsom did not mention the issue in his address to the legislature.

ARKANSAS — Pro-segregation laws were under fire from a church group. The white Citizens Council asked Gov. Orval Faubus to "order" whites and Negroes to attend separate schools at Little Rock, where high school desegregation is to begin this fall.

FLORIDA — The state legislature neared the end of its regular session tangled in debate — but taking no final action — on several pro-segregation measures, including a "last resort" local option bill.

GEORGIA — An Atlanta Negro was re-elected to the city's school board and another Negro was defeated for election to the board of aldermen in a runoff. A segregated audience attended the first meeting of the state AFL-CIO

KENTUCKY — A special survey of two years of school deseggregation in Lexington disclosed that 30 of the city's 2,750 Negro pupils were attending mixed classes under a free-choice plan.

LOUISIANA — In the first such forecast from a political figure, Louisiana's Democratic national committeeman predicted his state and other states would eventually desegregate their schools. White South Shaky, But Quiet on Integration Front During November!

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p.11
Sat 12-14-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Southern School News reported a "quiet" month on the school segregation-desegregation front during November and noted only one additional desegregation district. This was Kinta, in Oklahoma, bringing to 762 the number of desegregated districts out of 3,008 with biracial school enrollments.

A summary of major developments state by state during the month follows:

14d(1)

ALABAMA — Birmingham's schools may provide the first test of Alabama's pupil placement law. Parents of children at three all-white schools have been sent a questionnaire asking how they would react to the enrollment of four Negro children who are seeking entry to the schools and who have been given placement examinations.

ARKANSAS—Federal-state negotiations over removal of troops at Little Rock's Central High School (where only federalized National Guardsmen remain) were at a near stalemate, while inside the school teaching and learning were said to go on "at a near normal pace."

DELAWARE—Legal resolution of the segregation-desegregation issue in South Delaware schools was expected during 1958.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Negro enrollment in Washington's integrated schools reached 71.2 per cent, up 3.2 per cent since last year. All but one senior high school, all but two junior high schools, and 105 of 122 elementary schools reported mixed classes.

FLORIDA—Efforts to force through a pro-segregation resolution failed in the Florida Council of Parents and Teachers, while on the local level the Dade (Miami) County School Board decided not to consider a segregation policy resolution as attorneys were instructed to renew efforts to get dismissal of a school entry suit by Negro children.

GEORGIA—Officials of the NAACP mapped a voter registration drive at an Atlanta meeting, while the state moved toward tightening voting laws.

KENTUCKY — Gov. A. B. Chandler urged acceptance of racial integration in Southern schools. A state survey showed Negro enrollment in desegregated schools ranging from one pupil in several small districts to 7,647 in Louisville.

LOUISIANA—Legislative leaders planned new laws for introduction at the May 1958 legislative session for "temporary" closure of any schools which are integrated, reopening them later "racially segregated."

MARYLAND — An Eastern Shore grand jury indicted two persons who picketed schools in Easton. Fall enrollment figures showed 13 counties (districts) had some mixed classes—the same number as last year—with an increase in the number of pupils affected.

MISSISSIPPI—The state presently is "legally naked and legally defenseless" against school integration, Gov. J. P. Coleman told a special legislative session called to change the 1890 constitution by convention and to strengthen segregation laws. A House majority which favors amendment rather than convention defeated the Governor's proposed constitutional move.

MISSOURI—A special study of Clark School in St. Louis, once all-white and now 80 per cent Negro, showed a variety of experiences of educators in meeting problems raised by desegregation.

NORTH CAROLINA — Admission of Negroes to all-white schools in Greensboro was under attack in the State Supreme Court by 41 white parents appealing a lower court decision which denied them an injunction against the Negroes' school entry.

OKLAHOMA—A Federal court gave an eastern district, desegregated at the high school level, additional time to end elementary school segregation. One more district—Kinta, in Haskell County—was disclosed to have desegregated.

SOUTH CAROLINA — The home of a contributor to a "moderate" booklet on race relations was bombed and the act was strongly criticized.

TENNESSEE — Six state colleges were instructed by the Board of Education to admit all qualified students next fall who meet entrance requirements, in effect ending segregation at these institutions. John Kasper was sentenced to six months in Federal Penitentiary for his part in the 1956 Clinton disturbances and six co-defendants received suspended sentences. Front-running candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor took pro-segregation stands.

TEXAS—A special session of the legislature passed a law authorizing closing of any school to prevent the using of troops. Dallas asked a three-judge Federal court to give it until at least the summer of 1958 to present a plan for school desegregation.

VIRGINIA—J. Lindsay Almond Jr. was elected governor by a nearly 2 to 1 vote in a campaign testing the state's official policy of "massive resistance" to desegregation, which he endorsed. A Federal district court order which refused to set a deadline for desegregation in Prince Edward County was reversed by the Fourth Circuit Court.

WEST VIRGINIA—A $100,000 study of instructional deficiencies was critical of the achievement of West Virginia pupils. School districts where there were disturbances at the beginning of the term were reported as quiet.

Increases In Washington, D.C.

Percentage Of Negro Pupils Drops In Dixie

1490

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS reported here that the Negro proportion of school enrollment in southern and border states has declined in 10 states and increased in seven states and the District of Columbia in five years since the original school segregation cases went to the U. S. Supreme Court.

While there were absolute increases in enrollments for both races, Negro percentages were down 1951 to 1957 in Florida, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina and Virginia, states which have no desegregation in public schools, and in Texas, North Carolina, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

Negro percentages were up only in Alabama, of the segregated states, and in Arkansas, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee and the District of Columbia.

Sat 12-14-57

Decreases ranged from .4 per cent in Oklahoma to 2.5 per cent in Georgia.

Wash Ill.

The District of Columbia, where Negroes now make up 71.2 per cent of school enrollment, had a 15.6 per cent increase between 1951 and the start of the present school year, said SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS.

"Two principal factors seem to explain the relative Negro decline in the Deep South," the publication said. "They are: (1) Negro out-migration and (2) booming white enrollments.

"However, it has been pointed out that in these areas Negro enrollments are rising, too, probably in response to better school buildings (though segregated) and better economic conditions among Negroes, especially in the cities.

"Demographic experts say, additionally, that Negro school age population throughout the region is increasing at a greater rate than in the white population. Yet these decreases appear," the paper concluded.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS also reported a "quiet" month on the school segregation-desegregation front during November and noted only one additional desegregated district. This was Kinta, Okla., bringing to 762 the number of desegregated districts out of 3,008 with bi-racial school enrollments.

A summary of major developments state-by-state during the month follows:

ALABAMA—Birmingham's schools may provide the first test of Alabama's pupil placement law. Parents of children at three all-white schools have been sent a questionnaire asking how they would react to the enrollment of four Negro children who are seeking entry to the schools and who have been given placement examinations.

DELAWARE—Legal resolution of the segregation-desegregation issue in south Delaware schools was expected during 1958. There was stepped-up activity by both pro-integration and pro-segregation groups.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Negro enrollment in Washington's integrated schools reached 71.2 per cent, up 3.2 per cent since last year. All but one senior high school, all but two junior high schools, and 105 of 122 elementary schools reported mixed classes.

5 Dixie States Adopt Segregation Laws

6 Must Face Court Tests

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 3-16-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., — Five state legislatures meeting this year have added more than a dozen laws to legislation bolstering segregated school systems, SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS reported last week. P. 20

Meanwhile, federal courts in Kentucky and Virginia have ordered the desegregation of six additional school districts, the publication noted. P. 20

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS, a non-partisan monthly paper, is published here by a board of southern newspaper editors and educators.

Arkansas, Georgia and South Carolina have adopted new legislation aimed at strengthening school segregation laws. In Tennessee and Texas resolutions reasserting principles of states' rights were approved, but in neither case was a statement of "interposition" used. Additionally, Georgia's legislature passed a resolution calling for "impeachment" of six U. S. Supreme Court justices.

This brings to 120 the number of state pro-segregation laws adopted since the Supreme Court decision of 1954 against public school segregation, said SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS.

The new districts ordered desegregated are Norfolk and Newport News in Virginia and Hopkins, Scott, Union and Webster counties in Kentucky. There are now 673 desegregated school districts and approximately 3,100 segregated ones in the 17 southern and border states, the publication said.

The paper also reported a step-up in legal activity during the current school year, with at least 35 new cases and 45 decisions involving the school segregation-desegregation controversy.

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows.

Alabama

A University of Alabama spokesman told SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS after reports of an exodus of "shocked and shamed" professors as an aftermath of the 1956 Autherine Lucy incident that there had been a "normal" turnover although six departing faculty members had given this explanation as a major reason for leaving.

Arkansas

Four pro-segregation bills have been enacted by the general assembly and approved by Gov. Orval Faubus. One sets up a state sovereignty commission with investigating powers.

Delaware

As public school desegregation slowed down in Delaware, negotiations were pursued for a merger of white and Negro parent-teacher associations.

District Of Columbia

Two studies, one by a school system official, called integration in the District a "miracle of social adjustment." Two southern congressmen charged that a junior high school was forcing mixed dancing.

Florida

Pro-segregation group activity stepped up with the entry of persons from other states who are critical of Gov. LeRoy Collins' stated position that mixed schools are inevitable.

Georgia

A case in which a Negro had made a seven-year effort to get into the University of Georgia law school was dismissed, in part on grounds that no racial discrimination was involved. The legislature passed five pro-segregation bills together with a resolution asking impeachment of six U. S. Supreme Court justices. A bill to ban interracial athletics meanwhile was shelved.

Kentucky

Three western counties and a fourth one in central Kentucky were ordered by a court to desegregate their schools this fall. Louisville Supt. Omer Carmichael blamed the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for much of "the chaos in the South" and the organization replied this was due rather to "open defiance of some southern spokesmen" to court decisions.

Louisiana

One hundred Negroes out of some 200 previously enrolled re-entered integrated state colleges under injunctions restraining application of new state laws which would have excluded them.

Maryland

Pro-segregation groups were more active at the current legislative session than at any time since the 1954 Supreme Court decision though no legistation they avocated was introduced.

Mississippi

Saying the state must preserve the "domestic peace and tranquility which is surprising our friends as well as our worst enemies," Gov. J. P. Coleman, who is expected to run against Sen. James O. Eastland in 1960, outlined a four-point program which he hopes to achieve before leaving the governor's chair.

Missouri

A St. Louis high school reported after its second full year of desegregation that it was operating more smoothly with a 50 per cent Negro enrollment than it did with a 33 per cent Negro minority the first year.

N. Carolina

As the teacher pay issue dominated the 1957 legislative session, the U. S. Supreme Court was asked to review a lower court decision denying Negroes entry to an all-white school.

Oklahoma

New federal court action was expected in an effort to force integration of a state training institution and a public school district.

S. Carolina

The general assembly added anti-barratry (soliciting law suits) statute to a body of legislation aimed at the NAACP and considered other pro-segregation laws.

Tennessee

An arrest order was issued by federal court for John Kasper, segregationist leader and figure in the Clinton incidents. Meanwhile, the Tennessee senate passed by voice vote the House-passed "Tennessee Manifesto" while rejecting a resolution of interposition.

Texas

The lower house of the legislature has adopted a states' rights resolution which avoids the term "interposition." Houston's school board president said it hoped that desegregation could be avoided at least until 1959.

COURT ORDERS ISSUED

Memphis, Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, March 5—Legislatures in five Southern states have added 12 laws to bolster segregated school systems, Southern School News said Tuesday. P. 23

Meanwhile, Federal courts in Kentucky and Virginia have ordered the desegregation of six additional school districts, the publication noted.

New Legislation

Arkansas, Georgia and South Carolina have adopted new legislation aimed at strengthening school segregation laws. In Tennessee and Texas resolutions reasserting principles of states' rights were approved, but in neither case was a statement of "interposition" used. Additionally, Georgia's Legislature adopted a resolution calling for "impeachment" of six United States Supreme Court justices.

SCHOOL BIAS BIDS SUCCEED AND FAIL

New York Times 4-7-57

Southern States' Placement Laws Lose in Two Tests but Pass in a Third

Sun. 4-7-57

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 6 —A court victory and two defeats for pupil placement laws were reported this week by The Southern School News.

The placement laws are popular devices with legislatures seeking to delay or avoid desegregation of public schools.

The tests were in cases involving Virginia, North Carolina and Louisiana placement laws. Four other Southern states have placement laws and a fifth, Texas, has a bill pending, according to the publication of the Southern Education Reporting Service.

The United States Supreme Court refused to review a lower court decision holding that the North Carolina law was "not unconstitutional on its face." The lower court had directed Negro students to exhaust remedies provided under the state law before appealing to the Federal judiciary.

Defeat in Virginia

In the Virginia case, Southern School News said, a Federal District Court held the state's placement legislation unconstitutional, and the Supreme Court refused to review this decision. The ruling affected the Charlottesville and Arlington County School Districts, which were directed to begin desegregation.

But a state official told school authorities they could not comply with the Federal Court order because of the state laws.

The North Carolina law, which is holding up thus far, makes no mention of race in directing the assignment of pupils.

The third case, involving Louisiana, resulted in a decision that the placement law as applied to New Orleans schools had "implied as its only basis for assignment the prohibited standard of race."

Florida Admission Sought

Southern School News said attorneys were studying the refusal of the Florida Supreme Court to order admission of a Negro graduate student to the University of Florida Law School. Of this refusal the publication said: "It has been suggested that the Florida decision is one of the strongest assertions of the doctrine of states' rights to appear in a legal opinion."

Meanwhile, the publication said, one additional school district, in West Virginia, was disclosed to have begun the desegregation process last fall. This brought to 674 the number of districts where desegregation was under way or accomplished in Southern and border states. It leaves some 3,000 districts still operating on a wholly segregated basis.

During March, Delaware reported 32 per cent of its school population in "integrated situations." Missouri reported plans for desegregation of an additional high school, leaving only four segregated high schools in the state.

Segregation is already a political issue eighteen months in advance of the Georgia Gubernatorial primary, with prospective candidates vying for support as segregationists. But in Arkansas, three pro-segregation candidatees were defeated and one was victorious in the spring school board elections.

Only One School District Began Integration In Fall

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 4-13-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Pupil placement—a device popular with legislatures seeking to delay or to avoid racial desegregation — both won and lost in recent key court decisions, Southern School News reported this week.

Meanwhile, said the publication, one additional school district, in West Virginia, was disclosed to have begun the desegregation process last fall. This brought to 674 the number of districts where desegregation is under way or accomplished, leaving some 3,000 still segregated.

The key court tests, reported Southern School News, were in cases involving Virginia, North Carolina and Louisiana placement laws. Four other states have pupil placement legislation and a fifth, Texas, has a bill of this type in the legislative mill.

VIRGINIA CASE

In the Virginia case, noted Southern School News, a federal district court held the state's placement legislation unconstitutional, while in a case reaching the U. S. Supreme Court from neighboring North Carolina the high court refused to review a lower court opinion holding the Tar Heel law "not unconstitutional on its face."

The North Carolina law makes no mention of race in directing the assignment of pupils. The Virginia law came under court attack because of the alleged intent of accompanying legislation to maintain segregation.

In a third case, involving Louisiana, a circuit court held that a placement law as it applied to New Orleans schools has "implied as its only basis for assignments the prohibited standard of race."

FLORIDA APPEAL

Attorneys were also studying the refusal of the Florida Supreme Court to order admission of a Negro graduate student to the University of Florida law school despite an order from the U. S. Supreme Court. Southern School News said "it has been suggested that the Florida decision is one of the strongest assertions of the doctrine of states' rights to appear in a legal opinion."

During March Delaware reported 32 per cent of its school population in "integrated situations" and Missouri reported plans for desegregation of an additional high school, leaving only four segregated in the state. Major developments state-by-state were:

OTHER ACTION

ALABAMA — Legislation to implement a "freedom of choice" measure adopted last year is expected to come before the General Assembly when it meets in May, partly as a consequence of a federal court decision in Louisiana attacking pupil placement.

ARKANSAS — Three pro-segregation candidates were defeated and one was victorious in spring school board elections.

DELAWARE—The state saw (in Kent County) the first federal court order calling for a school integration plan. A statewide count showed 32 per cent of Delaware's school population in "integrated situations."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Congressional leaders expect to see civil rights legislation reach the Senate floor for action before the Easter recess.

FLORIDA—The state supreme court refused to carry out an order of the U. S. Supreme Court for admission of a Negro graduate law student to the University of Florida because this course might result in "violence."

GEORGIA—School segregation is already a political issue 18 months in advance of the gubernatorial primary, with prospective candidates vying for support as all-out segregationists.

KENTUCKY—Use of racial epithets "is to make an avowal by conduct and words of stirring up strife," a Kentucky court ruled in acquitting a newspaper publisher and a police chief of charges of criminal-slander made by a segregationist.

LOUISIANA—A year-old court order to desegregate New Orleans schools was affirmed in a circuit court decision which held that a state's right to administer schools as it desires can be overridden by "matters of fundamental justice that the citizens of the United States consider so essentially in ingredient of human rights as to require a restraint on any state that appears to ignore them."

MARYLAND—The State Board of Education turned down an appeal from 11 Negro pupils in Hartford County seeking admission to white schools not included in the first stage of a limited program—restricting desegregation to the first three grades of two schools in the current year.

MISSISSIPPI — Alcorn College, where some 580 Negro students walked out in protest over a professor's newspaper criticism of the NAACP, was back to normal at the end of the month with a new president. Gov. James P. Coleman, whose attitude heretofore has been described as one of "patient understanding," took a strong stand against "outsiders" who would foment trouble in Mississippi.

MISSOURI — Only four high schools in the state remain segregated after the decision of a school in the "bootheel" section to admit Negroes next September.

NORTH CAROLINA — The state's pupil assignment law apparently has been upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court in a test over admission of Negro children to a McDowell County school. An NAACP national official blamed "timidity" of public officials for lack of desegregation in state schools.

OKLAHOMA — Three lawsuits have been filed seeking admission of Negro students to white schools while one of the earliest systems to end segregation at the high school level announced plans to integrate all grades next year.

SOUTH CAROLINA—One house of the legislative has approved a bill giving the governor broad powers "for the protection of persons and property." Other pro-segregation measures are pending.

TENNESSEE — Segregationist John Kasper was re-arrested in a second charge of criminal contempt of court at Knoxville. Nashville school board members authorized the superintendent to start work on plans to "inform, elucidate and help solve problems" which may be involved in September desegregation at the first grade.

TEXAS—Pro-segregation legislation was reported to be making progress in the legislature, which adopted a resolution urging the states to resist federal encroachment on their authority.

685 School Areas in 9 States Acting on 1954 Court Ruling

New York Times

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 4—Southern School News reported today that 685 school districts in nine states had begun or completed desegregation since the United States Supreme Court decision against public school segregation three years ago.

About 3,100 bi-racial districts remain segregated, the publication said. Legislatures in eleven states, it noted, have adopted more than 130 pro-segregation laws since the court's ruling on May 17, 1954.

Some 325,000 Negro children and 1,850,000 white children—most of them in border states—are now in "integrated situations," Southern School News said. But 2,400,000 Negro children and more than 7,000,000 white children remain in segregated school districts.

The publication is put out by the Southern Education Reporting Service. This was set up after the court's ruling to assemble and evaluate information on integration.

Survey Reveals More Schools In South Are Desegregating

Weekly Lat. 8-3-57 New Orleans, La. p.2

Nashville, Tenn. - (ANP) - The Southern Education Reporting Service last week revealed that approximately 700 school districts since 1954 have either begun or prepared to begin public school desegregation in southern and border states in America.

Of these school districts, 2 were reportedly in the mid-southern states of Arkansas and Tennessee, with the rest in border areas. No facet of integration had yet begun in deep southern states.

The following is a run-down of integration preseedings as reported by Southern News:

ARKANSAS: Schools fully or partly desegregated in 5 communities with desegregation scheduled this fall in 5 others, including Little Rock, the capital and Fort Smith, second largest city.

DELAWARE: Thirteen of 61 bi-racial districts desegregated and the rest of the districts under court order to desegregate this fall.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA: In third year of full integration.

KENTUCKY: 92 of 180 bi-racial districts desegregated, including Louisville, Frankfort and Lexington.

MARYLAND: 14 of 23 bi-racial districts desegregated in act and 6 have desegregation in policy, but no Negroes have applied. An additional district will integrate grammar schools this Sept.

MISSOURI: An estimated 193 of 244 bi-racial districts desegregated, with 9 more planning the step in Sept.

TENNESSEE: of 141 districts having Negro pupils, 2 (Oak Ridge and Clinton) are partly desegregated. Nashville will desegregate the first grade in Sept.

OKLAHOMA: Of 261 districts having Negroes, 198 are desegregated (including 12 which have had no Negro applicant.)

TEXAS: An estimated 103 of 841 districts (all of them in heavily populated white and Mexican South and West Texas) have desegregated.

Says One Of Four School Districts Desegregated

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Slightly more than one-fourth of the biracial school districts in 17 southern and border states were on a desegregated basis at the height of tension in the fourth school year since the U. S. Supreme Court decision, Southern School News reported.

Leader

Of 2,985 biracial districts, the publication said, 751 had begun or accomplished the desegregation process. All but 15 of these were in border states and the District of Columbia. P. 3

In a month which saw the first dispatch of federal troops to a scene of school strife and the first bombing of a public school building, West Virginia became the first state to end segregation in all its biracial school districts. Kentucky reported desegregation in six additional districts for a total of 105 and Oklahoma reported 2 of 243 biracial districts desegregated, two of them last month.

Seven states conducted all classes during September with public schools tightly segregated. They were Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia. Mississippi reported no school entry petitions or attempts while one effort in Alabama resulted in violence.

Southern Schools News also noted withdrawal of some Negroes from desegregated schools, notably at Ozark, Ark., and at Louisville, Ky., and the failure of any Negroes to show up at Clay, Ky., newly desegregated school which was the scene of strife last year. Negro students also withdrew from a school in Charlotte, N. C., and a school at Deale, Md., under alleged harassment by white pupils or parents.

Tri. 10-12-57

The stay of a court order in Virginia averted a showdown in Arlington County over the state's pupil placement law, and Southern School News reported that this action "also means that the showdown over the state's resistance policy may come in Norfolk, Newport News or Charlottesville where court actions are pending, just as soon as in Arlington."

A summary of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA — Public schools opened on a segregated basis with an incident at one school in Birmingham where a Negro minister was beaten after trying unsuccessfully to enroll his two daughters.

ARKANSAS — Two districts desegregated their schools as planned, but a third tired desegregation and abandoned it, and a fourth called it off. The fifth district with desegregation plans — Little Rock — saw state troops at first block Negro pupils, then demonstrations following withdrawal of the militia, and finally federal troop enforcement of the desegregation order under President Eisenhower's direction.

DELAWARE — State school officials readied a desegregation plan for all segregated districts but said they would not release it pending a court decision.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — The new president of the District's board of education said the one-year integration plan had made the changeover from segregation a success.

FLORIDA — Police barricades were erected around a Pompano Beach school after rumors that Negroes would attempt to enroll there. None appeared.

GEORGIA — Southern governors, meeting at Sea Island, arranged a conference of five of their number (one later withdrew) with President Eisenhower to discuss the Little Rock situation and school integration generally.

KENTUCKY — Minor disturbances occurred at Sturgis, where 18 Negroes enrolled under protection of state police and where, last year, National Guard troops were maintained for 18 days. The state now reports 105 desegregated districts.

LOUISIANA — Schools opened uneventfully — and segregated — with little tension and no violence reported.

MARYLAND — Whites and Negroes were reported attending classes together in 275 of the state's 1,000 schools, while some disorders occurred at one school, and a lone Negro child was withdrawn from a second school.

MISSISSIPPI — Schools opened segregated and without any entry petitions being filed as a study showed a Negro population shift into Jackson, the capital city, with whites moving to the suburbs.

MISSOURI — A third-year integration study in Kansas City showed that shifts in school population largely followed the general housing pattern, as it in turn altered.

NORTH CAROLINA — The state's three newly-desegregated school districts were reported quiet a few weeks after school opened though one Negro girl withdrew from a Charlotte school after reported white student harassment.

OKLAHOMA — Two more school districts were desegregated — both as the result of court action.

SOUTH CAROLINA — Public schools opened peacefully — and segregated — and a Negro college which had accepted a white Hungarian refugee lost acceptance of its graduates for teacher certification, reportedly because of the presence on the faculty of three persons whom the president had sought unsuccessfully to remove.

TENNESSEE — With three exceptions, Tennessee's school districts remained segregated. Schools opened without incident this year at Clinton, strife-torn in 1956, and a building was bombed in Nashville as first-grade desegregation was completed under police protection.

TEXAS — The Dallas school board voted to appeal court-ordered desegregation for the mid-winter term.

VIRGINIA — A last minute court order averted a showdown in Arlington County on whether schools would be closed to prevent integration. Use of the pupil placement law was restrained by a court in Richmond.

WEST VIRGINIA — The state became the first to end segregation in all its biracial districts when Hampshire County opened tw of its schools to Negroes.

Law Slows Texas School Desegregation

25 Other Areas To Integrate

Defender Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 8-24-57

NASHVILLE — A new state law has arrested planned desegregation in several Texas communities, Southern School News reported in its August issue, while in other areas of the southern and border states 25 more school districts have begun or announced desegregation.

p. 22

Port Arthur, Galveston and other communities which had planned to desegregate their schools this fall have been informed by state authorities that they cannot do so except by a vote of the people—or they will lose all state aid. More than 100 districts in Texas previously had desegregated and are not affected by the new state law.

Three of the 25 new districts which have begun or announced desegregation are in North Carolina. There, the populous Piedmont cities of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem have accepted 12 Negro children for enrollment in previously all-white schools under the state's assignment law. This is the first integration "breakthrough" in the eight Southeastern and Deep South states where resistance to the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 has been strongest.

22 OTHERS

Other districts included five in Arkansas, two in Oklahoma and 15 in Missouri.

According to Southern School News, this brings to 694 the number of districts already desegregated and to 712 the number desegregated or planning such a move in Sept. Some 3,000 districts remain segregated.

In key court decisions during July, the paper reported, the Fourth Circuit court sustained a ruling against Virginia's pupil placement act, and the schools of Dallas, Texas were ordered to desegregate, but at no specific time.

A suit against Florida's placement act was dismissed while the Fifth Circuit court ruled against a lower court which dismissed a desegregation suit in Dade (Miami) county. A federal district judge in Delaware, in the first decision of its kind, ordered wholesale desegregation of segregated schools in the state.

The state of Mississippi reported difficulty in floating school bonds, as did the university system of Georgia, where the state auditor blamed the "segregation bugaboo." However, Atlanta accepted low bids on bonds for 10 new schools, including seven for Negroes.

A summary of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA—A bill gerrymandering most of Tuskegee's Negroes out of the city limits and thus out of a vote in municipal affairs became law as Negro voting, rather than school desegregation, dominated the state's affairs.

ARKANSAS—Little Rock, planning high school desegregation in September, heard protests from segregationist groups but said it would go ahead. One more district was reported to have desegregated and another announced desegregation for September.

DELAWARE—In the first such ruling of its kind, a federal judge ordered all school districts of the state desegregated. State and local authorities planned to appeal to higher courts.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Washington's school board approved a request for $58.2 million to operate the schools in fiscal 1959—a record budget for the desegregated system.

FLORIDA—The Fifth Circuit Court reversed a district court which had ordered dismissal of a school entry suit against segregated Dade (Miami) County. Meanwhile, the same district court dismissed a suit challenging Florida's 1956 pupil placement law.

GEORGIA — Two Georgia gubernatorial candidates were debating the degree of segregation which each espoused. The Georgia Education Commission got a go-ahead on a $376,000 campaign for a nationwide defense of the state's segregation policy.

KENTUCKY — Both Louisville and its county, Jefferson, said there would be no integration of faculties in desegregated schools for the time being despite a request from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

LOUISIANA — An effort to remove Democratic National Committeeman Camille Gravel, who endorsed the party's 1956 civil rights plank and predicted eventual school desegregation, apparently was stalled by a ruling of the national committee.

MARYLAND — A district court decision upholding Hartford County's "selective integration" (screening of prospective Negro students) plan was under fire from the NAACP, which announced an appeal.

MISSISSIPPI — High costs of Mississippi's equalization program were borne home in increased budgets and mounting interest rates for school bonds, the latter development causing the state to withdraw a $10 million offering and to plan smaller offerings to in-state investors.

MISSOURI — A survey showed nine more school districts desegregated with six others planning a similar move in September.

NORTH CAROLINA — In the first projected desegregation in the Southeast, three Piedmont cities accepted 12 Negro pupils for enrollment in previously all-white schools under the state's Pupil Assignment Act.

OKLAHOMA — Tentative settlement in a federal court case opened the state school for the deaf to Negro registrants. Some faculty integration in Oklahoma City may occur this fall because of the closing of two Negro schools.

SOUTH CAROLINA — An effort by some ministers to obtain "moderate" expressions of sentiment on school segregation-desegregation was disclosed by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., who criticized it by inference.

TENNESSEE — Zones for first grade integration in the schools of Nashville this fall (under court order) were disclosed as opposition mounted. In a nationally prominent case, a jury at Knoxville convicted seven and acquitted four defendants in a contempt-of-court case involving disturbances last year at Clinton.

TEXAS — Port Arthur, Galveston and other communities planning desegregation were held in check by a new state law which provided penalties (in particular, loss of state aid) for districts which desegregate without a popular vote.

VIRGINIA — The state's Pupil Placement Act was held unconstitutional by the Fourth Circuit Court in a ruling affirming a lower court decision. Desegregation orders against Norfolk, Newport News and Charlottesville were stayed pending a U.S. Supreme Court ruling, but a district court ordered Arlington County to begin desegregation in September.

WEST VIRGINIA — School superintendents predicted no trouble at school opening time this year in two districts where there had been flare-ups previously, and this appeared to be the picture throughout the state.

THE QUESTION of integration in England as well as the United States is a very real one. The increase in the colored population as the result of World War II and the migration from the West Indies has tested the liberalism of the English. With no legal barriers to integration to overcome, acceptance of the colored into English schools does not present the complex problem faced by the South. Here a group of pre-schoolers celebrate the birthday of a classmate in an English kindergarten.

Integration Making Slow But Steady Progress In The South

Nashville, Tenn. - (ANP) - With the end of the school term in 17 Southern and border states, the Southern School News reported here last week that since 1954 when the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed segregation in public schools, some 18 percent of school districts in those states have achieved integration.

In round numbers, according to the report, some 684 districts in Southern and border states had begun or accomplished some facet of integration in public schools as the term ended and summer vacations began.

The reports also disclosed that more steps toward integration are eduled for the fall in two Arkansas cities, one Tennessee city, nine districts in Missouri and "generally" in Delaware.

Currently four districts in Virginia under pressure to desegregate are under litigation against integration.

The Southern News report revealed that as the school year ended more anti-integration laws were being adopted or debated in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas. Missouri has quietly repealed old segregation laws concerning school segregation.

The following are major developments on a state-by-state basis:

ALABAMA: A number of pro-segregation bills pertaining to the closing down of schools were begun May 7 in this state's legislature.

ARKANSAS: Pro-segregation laws were attacked by a church group. White Citizens Councils demanded that Gov. Orval Faubus separate the races in schools at Little Rock, where high school integration is to begin this fall.

DELAWARE: Law enforcement agencies made ready for general desegregation this fall with special courses in police-community relations.

FLORIDA: A "last resort" bias bill aimed at closing down schools was vetoed by Gov. Leroy Collins after the measure had been sanctioned by the General Assembly to give residents the power by referendum to close down schools in any area.

GEORGIA: A Negro educator was re-elected to the Atlanta School Board as the power of the Negro vote was felt in the city. A Negro aldermanic candidate was defeated also.

KENTUCKY: A surbey indicated that after two years of integration in schools, some Negro students were going to interracial schools under a free-choice plan.

LOUISIANA: A Democratic national committeeman here set a precedent among solons when he predicted this state would eventually desegregate its schools. New trials were being sought by the state against the desegregation of four colleges.

MARYLAND: School desegregation was upheld by the state court of appeals. Numerous counties began programs to extend integration.

MISSISSIPPI: No integration progress whatsoever.

MISSOURI: Only five high school districts remained segregated. Less than 68,000 Negro students are attending school under the old segregated system.

NORTH CAROLINA: Laws against the NAACP were introduced. School officials of three cities announced that they had been having private discussions for several years about segregation-desegregation.

TENNESSEE: Trials of 17 whites accused of interferring with the peaceful integration of Clinton High school were set for July.

TEXAS: A pupil assignment law was adopted and a modified permanent injunction against the NAACP was issued by a state court.

VIRGINIA: The state's pupil assignment law was attacked by white and Negro people in this state who refused to sign necessary forms. State authorities denounced a federal judge who ruled that the placement law was unconstitutional.

8 MORE DISTRICTS WILL DESEGREGATE

Four Arkansas Areas Are Included

FACTS IN PUBLICATION

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, July 5. — Eight additional school districts in Southern and border states have announced plans to desegregate this fall, Southern School News reported Friday.

The monthly publication also disclosed that the United States Supreme Court has acted 22 times on school segregation-desegregation since its ruling of May 17, 1954.

Four districts in Arkansas planning desegregation are Little Rock, North Little Rock, Fort Smith and Van Buren. More than 200 Arkansas districts will remain segregated.

Others to Desegregate

Other districts to desegregate are one in West Virginia and three in Oklahoma. In Delaware, a State Education Board policy restatement appears to have arrested general desegregation there, which had previously been predicted for September.

In the 22 cases which have gone through state and local courts to the Supreme Court, desegregation has been effected in six, the publication reported.

The most recent Supreme Court ruling was a decision upholding a lower court that ordered desegregation in New Orleans schools and invalidated Louisiana's pupil placement law.

The publication concluded that the Supreme Court has adhered with "considerable consistency" to the policy that it established in the Brown decision when it remanded the cases to Federal district courts for implementation "consistent with this opinion."

State-By-State Survey

A state-by-state summary showed:

Alabama—With a backlog of an estimated 25 to 40 prosegregation bills the Legislature, which convened May 7, had passed one loca lmeasure. The concensus of legislators was that the state's pupil placement law was the principal defense against forcible integration.

Florida—The Legislature adjourned without enacting an ymajor new law on segregation-desegregation. It failed to override a subernatoria lveto of a "last resort" bill allowing local districts to abandon public schools faced with desegregation orders.

Georgia—The state's request to dismiss an entr ysuit to Georgia State College was refused by a Fedreal court. An assessment of more than $17,000 in back income taxes was clappe don the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Kentucky—Two state institutions of higher education—the predominantly white University of Kentucky and the formerly all-Negro Kentucky State College, joined to sponsor extension courses at Frankfort, the state capital.

'Selective' Plan OK-ed

Maryland—A Federal court approved "selective integration" in Harford County, a plant involving the screening of Negro applicants. Negro plaintiffs said they would appeal the ruling.

Mississippi—Gov. J. P. Coleman issued his strongest statement to date on school segregation, saying that, "We have no intention of complying with the decision that we regard to be utterly unconstitutional."

North Carolina—Applications for school entry, governed by the state's Pupil Placement Act, have been filed in Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh and Winston-Salem, plus Mecklenburg (Charlotte) County.

South Carolina—The next-to-longest session in the state's legislative history ended with a sprinkling of new prosegregation laws.

Tennessee—Knoxville asked a Federal court to dismiss a school entry suit as John Kasper, prosegregation organizer appeared in Nashville, which plans first-grade desegregation this fall (under court order).

Asked To Set Date

Texas—A Federal court was asked to set a definite date for desegregation of Houston's school system as Galveston announced it would postpone desegration because of new state laws. Appeal was announced of a state court order restricting National Association for Advancement of Colored People activities.

Virginia—Pupil placement, as provided by state law, was under challenge in both Federal and state courts. In one instance, the Fourth Circuit Court heard (at Asheville, N. C.) a case involving Norfolk and Newport News.

West Virginia—Hardy County announced it would take its first desegregation steps this fall and Mason County said it would adopt complete desegregation, leaving two counties in the state with segregated school systems.

More Progress In Integration Of Southern Schools Reported

Daily Journal Atlanta Ga Fri. 7-5-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The U. S. Supreme Court has acted 22 times on school segregation-desegregation since 1954, according to a survey published here Thursday by Southern School News.

During June, the publication said, eight school districts in border and mid-South states announced desegregation plans for next fall, while in Delaware a state education board policy restatement appeared to have arrested general desegregation in Delaware predicted for September.

In the 22 cases which have gone through state and local courts to the U. S. high court, said SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS, desegregation has been effected in six. Two other cases did not specifically involve school entry. The most recent Supreme Court action, the publication pointed out, was a decision upholding a lower court ruling which ordered desegregation in New Orleans schools and invalidated Louisiana's pupil placement law.

PUPILS SEEK TRANSFER

Pupil placement, or assignment, which seven states have adopted since 1954, was also being tested in North Carolina and Virginia. SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS said that 58 Negro pupils in four North Carolina cities had applied for transfer to all-white schools. A state court in Virginia and a federal circuit court had before them cases challenging Virginia's placement law.

Districts announcing desegregation this fall included one in West Virginia, three in Oklahoma and four in Arkansas, where more than 200 districts apparently will remain segregated.

In its survey of Supreme Court actions since 1954, the paper found that a majority of the pleas for review by the court have been rejected. On 11 of 22 occasions the court has denied certiorari and on two others denied petitions for different handling by district courts. Decisions have been issued on nine occasions, including two in the original case of BROWN Vs. BOARD OF EDUCATION.

"Thus in the 20 cases dealing with school segregation specifically," SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS said, "it would appear that the court has adhered with considerable consistency to the policy it established in the 1955 BROWN decision when it remanded the cases to the federal district courts for implementation "consistent with this opinion."

Survey Finds Desegregation Effected in 6 of 22 Cases Clearing High Court

New York

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 6—Desegregation has been effected in six of twenty-two cases on which the United States Supreme Court has acted since 1954, the Southern Education Reporting Service said yesterday.

In its monthly publication, Southern School News, the service gave the results of a survey on Supreme Court decisions during the three years since the court ruled invalid all state and local statutes providing for compulsory segregation in the public schools.

Of the twenty-two cases that have gone through state and local courts to the highest court, two did not specifically involve school entry.

The survey showed the Supreme Court had rejected a majority of the pleas for reviews of decisions by the lower courts.

On eleven of the twenty-two occasions, the service said, the Supreme Court declined to call up the record from the lower court for review, and on two other occasions, the high court denied petitions for different handling of the cases in the district courts.

Nine separate decisions have been isued on the public school segregation question. The total includes the original two, issued in May, 1954 and May, 1955, in the case of Brown v. The Board of Education of Topeka, Kan.

"Thus in the twenty cases dealing with school segregation specifically," Southern School News declared, "It would appear that the court has adhered with considerable consistency to the policy it established in the 1955 Brown decision when it remanded the case to the Federal District Court for implementation 'consistent with this opinion.'"

Currently being tested in the courts are pupil placement, or pupil assignment, laws that have been adopted in seven Southern states since the original desegregation decision. Laws enacted in North Carolina and Virginia presently are the subject of litigation.

The Virginia law was declared invalid by a Federal District Court, while the North Carolina assignment statute was held not to be invalid on its face. An appeal in the Virginia case, involving the school systems of Norfolk and Newport News, now is before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals at Asheville, N. C.

A further test of the North Carolina statute is expected to result from the application of fifty-eight Negro pupils for transfer to all-white schools. These applications were filed in Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh and Winston-Salem and in the Mecklenburg (Charlotte) County School Districts. Presumably one or more of the applications will form the basis for a new court test of the Placement Act.

During June, the service said, eight school districts in border and mid-South states announced desegregation plans for next fall. Four of these districts are in Arkansas and involve schools in Little Rock, North Little Rock, Fort Smith and Van Buren.

Other districts for which desegregation plans for next fall have been announced include one in West Virginia and three in Oklahoma. In Oklahoma, a survey showed that a "Little Dixie" district planned complete desegregation next fall and two other districts had "policy desegregation." All-Negro high schools will be maintained in thirty-four and possiby forty Oklahoma districts.

The first desegregation steps announced for this fall by Hardy County and the announcement of Mason County that it would adopt complete desegregation left only two West Virginia counties with segregated schools.

In addition, the Nashville, Tenn., city schools will begin desegregation in the first grade next fall, acting under a court order that requires the school board to submit a more complete plan by Jan. 1.

Legislatures to consider rash of bills to strengthen segregation

Aug 1-6-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 5 —Legislatures meeting this year in at least nine Southern and border states will consider laws dealing with school segregation, Southern School News said here Saturday.

Meanwhile, said Southern School News, one additional school district (Norman, Okla.) has been desegregated, bringing to 672 the number of districts which have begun or accomplished the desegregation process. Some 3,000 more remain segregated.

The types of legislation to be introduced and the affected states include:

Pupil assignment—Tennessee, Texas and Arkansas.

Compulsory attendance law revision—Georgia, Texas and possibly Maryland.

Tuition grants for private education—Texas.

Restrictions on or investigation of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People—Georgia, Texas and Florida.

Reference requirement for college admission—Alabama.

"Free choice" of schools—Tennessee.

Legislators in Missouri, Maryland and Delaware, where desegregation is under way, were expected to get bills designed to hasten the process.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS is published here under direction of a group of Southern newspaper editors and educators as a nonpartisan, fact-finding agency.

The publication noted that, despite the U. S. Supreme Court decisions against school segregation, eight Southern legislatures had adopted 107 measures—84 of them last year—since 1954 in an effort to retain segregation.

Calling attention to the increase in legal activity over the school issue, Southern School News noted that higher courts have affirmed for the first time desegregation orders against two school districts in Virginia and said that "observers of that region saw a major legal issue growing out of the arrest of 16 pro-segregationists at Clinton, Tenn., on charges of contempt of court as federal officials moved to back up an injunction."

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA — University of Alabama trustees, facing contempt proceedings for the expulsion of Autherine Lucy last year, continued their search for a successor to Dr. O. C. Carmichael as president of the university, a task apparently complicated by the Lucy case. Meanwhile, violence flared as buses were desegregated in Montgomery and a leader in the bus boycott broadened the scope of Negroes' efforts to include voting, parks and education.

ARKANSAS — The General Assembly prepared for its second session since the 1954 desegregation decisions with apparently little to consider in the school segregation-desegregation matter except to implement the nullification and pupil assignment measures adopted by referendum in November. Economic factors were described as the main consideration in desegregating the Bentonville schools, disclosed for the first time last month, and attorneys for the Little Rock School Board said the plan to desegregate there in 1957 was not affected by the referendum-adopted measures.

DELAWARE—School district reorganization, possibly a means of facilitating desegregation, will be an issue in the 1957 General Assembly. An attorney for the NAACP in the eight desegregation cases pending in federal district court asked that sections of the defense pleadings predicting violence if segregation is ended be stricken as "insufficient in law."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Arguments were renewed over the congressional subcommittee investigation of District schools after the subcommittee majority issued its report and recommended a return to segregated schools. The report was attacked by the two minority members as dealing "with sordid headline items almost entirely."

FLORIDA — A desegregation suit in Dade County (Miami) was dismissed from federal court for the second time because of a lack of a factual, controversial situation. Another suit attacking the new state segregation laws still is pending. Meanwhile the new Pupil Placement Law, adopted in July, was described as beneficial in that it has required teachers and principals to learn more about the home background of the students.

GEORGIA—Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell, chancellor of the Georgia University System, testified in a case brought to win admittance of a Negro to the University of Georgia law school that henceforth his policy would be to consider as eligible any Negro who was academically qualified. The case now hinges on whether Horace Ward, the plaintiff, was denied admission because of race or scholastic qualifications. Meanwhile, the NAACP made its records available to Georgia tax examiners after the Atlanta branch president was jailed (for two hours) and a $25,000 fine was levied in a contempt case against the organization.

KENTUCKY — Federal district court orders in desegragation cases involving Clay and Sturgis called for desegregation plans to be submitted to the court by Feb. 4, but ruled out the "immediate" desegregation sought by the NAACP. In Louisville, a young segregationist from Detroit was denied admission to the city schools; Supt. Omer Carmichael, who was praised by President Eisenhower for desegregation there, was criticized by a teachers' union official as being "anti-integration."

LOUISIANA — New legal weapons designed to remove Negroes from state-supported universities and colleges (some 200 attended four of seven state institutions during 1956) were to be used this month. Preparations were made for hearing on Jan. 9 the appeal from the district court ruling ordering desegregation of Orleans Parish schools.

MARYLAND—The first appeal of a local school board's decision which had barred a Negro pupil from a school ended with the school board rescininding its original decision and admitting the student, as the second such case moved up to the State Board of Education, Baltimore, meanwhile, found that 80 of its schools had mixed classes as compared to 50 last year.

MISSISSIPPI — Segregation was still intact at all levels and no suits had been filed as 1956 ended. The state's Negro-white equalization program was stepped up under a decision by the state supreme court holding that final authority for approving school district reorganization plans rests with the state board of education.

MISSOURI—Kansas City desegregation continued "smoothly" and quietly after a minor flareup and threatened student strike last Spring, the Commission on Human Relations reported. In Webster Groves, a controversy with some segregation-desegregation facets continued over whether the St. Louis suburban community should build one junior high school or two.

NORTH CAROLINA—A suit attacking pro-segregation legislation adopted last year was filed in Caswell County as legislators prepared for the 1957 Pupil Placement Act might be reviewed.

OKLAHOMA — Norman white schools accepted two Negro students at the high school level in September, bringing to 183 the number of Oklahoma districts having begun desegregation, it was learned during December. A nose count in Oklahoma City, largest school district in the state, found that 7 per cent of the city's 48,116 white students and 15 per cent of the 6,584 Negro children were in mixed classes.

SOUTH CAROLINA — A white high school band director was severly beaten by a group of hooded men who accused him of having made a pro-intgeration speech. Otherwise racial tensions on the eve of the 1957 legislative session were considerably less than a year ago. No new major legislation on the segregation-desegregation question was expected. The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court in a decision ordering hearing of a Columbia transportation suit linked bus cases with the education case by ruling that the Brown and Bolling cases "left no doubt that the separate but equal doctrine had been generally repudiated."

TENNESSEE — New outbreaks of violence at Clinton led to the arrest of 16 pro-segregationists under a federal court order and the temporary closing of the school. Tennessee legislators prepared for the 1957 session which will receive proposals for pupil assignment laws, "free choice" selection of schools and measures to leave to the local boards the questions of when and how to end compulsory segregation. Associates of Gov. Frank Clement said the administration would introduce a program of its own.

TEXAS — A federal judge in Dallas, holding that the Supreme Court school segregation decisions were based on "modern psychological knowledge" rather than law, ruled for a second time that Dallas schools need not be desegregated at the present. Still another desegregation suit was filed in Houston, the nation's largest segregated school district. Eleven measures and a constitutional amendment bearing on the segregation-desegregation issue were expected to be introduced in the state legislature.

VIRGINIA — The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court affirmed district court orders calling for an end to segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington

Segregation Holds In 2,300 Districts

Commercial Appeal Sept 8 1957 P. 16

NASHVILLE, Sept. 7.—(UP)—The Southern School News said Saturday there are still 2,300 segregated school districts in southern and border states while 740 schools in that area have been integrated.

The publication, issued by the Southern Education Reporting Service, said 27 districts were scheduled to desegregate this fall. Memphis Tenn.

Seven of those were in Missouri, six in Kentucky, five in Arkansas, four in Oklahoma, three in North Carolina and one each in Tennessee and Maryland.

1440

The publication said that schools remain segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia, although Negroes are enrolled in mixed colleges in Virginia and Louisiana.

The publication estimated that nearly 2,500,000 white children are still in segregated school systems. This compares with 350,000 Negro and 2,000,000 white children who are in integrated school systems.

At least 442 school districts in the southern and border states were desegregated in the two years after the United States Supreme Court ruling in 1954, Southern School News said. It added that by the end of next year the number of desegregated districts had jumped to 710.

South Studies Plan For Handling Bias

The publication noted that, despite the U. S. Supreme Court decisions aga nst school segregation, eight southern legislatures had adopted 107 measures -- 84 of them last year -- since 1954 in an effort to retain segregation.

Calling attention to the increase in legal activity over the school issue, Southern School News noted that higher courts have affirmed for the first time desegregation orders against two school districts in Virginia and said that "observers of the region saw a major legal issue growing out of the arrest of 16 pro-segregationists at Clinton, Tenn. on charges of contempt of court as federal officials moved to back up an injunction."

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA — University of Alabama trustees, facing contempt proceedings for the expulsion of Miss Autherine Lucy last year, continued their search for a successor to Dr. O. C. Carmichael as president of the university, a task apparently complicated by the Lucy case. Meanwhile, violence flared as buses were desegregated in Montgomery and a leader in the bus boycott broadened the scope of Negroes' efforts to include voting, parks and education.

ARKANSAS — The General Assembly prepared for its second session since the 1954 desegregation decisions wth apparently little to consider in the school segregation-desegregation matter except to implement the nullification and pupil assignment measures adopted by referendum in November. Economic factors were described as the main consideration in desegregating the Bentonville schools, disclosed for the first time last month, and attorneys for the Little Rock school board said the plan to desegregate there in 1957 was not affected by the referendum-adopted measures.

DELAWARE — School district reorganization possibly a means of facilitating desegregation, will be an issue in the 1957 General Assembly. An attorney for the NAACP in the eight desegregation cases pending in federal district court asked that sections of the defense pleadings predicting violence of segregation is ended be stricken as "insufficient in law."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Arguments were renewed over the congressional subcommittee investigation of District schools after the subcommittee majority issued its report and recommended a return to segregated schools. The report was attacked by the two minority members as dealing "with sordid headline items almost entirely."

FLORIDA — A desegregation suit in Dade County (Miami) was dismissed from federal court for the second time because of a lack of a fractual, controversial situation. Another suit attacking the new state segregation laws still is pending. Meanwhile the new Pupil Placement Law, adopted in July, was described as beneficial in that it has required teachers and principals to learn more about the home background of the students.

GEORGIA — Dr. Harmon W. Caldwell, chancellor of the Georgia university system, testified in a case brought to win admittance of a Negro to the University of Georgia law school that henceforth his policy would be to cons der as eligible any Negro who was academically qualified. The case now hings on whether Horace Ward, the plaintiff, was denied admission because of race or scholastic qualifications. Meanwhile the NAACP made its records available to Georgia tax examiners after the Atlanta branch president was jailed (for two hours) and a $25,000 fine was levied in a contempt case against the organization.

KENTUCKY — Federal district court orders in desegregation cases involving Clay and Sturgis called for desegregation plans to be submitted to the court by Feb. 4, but ruled out the "immediate" desegregation sought by the NAACP. In Louisville, a young segregationist from Detroit was denied admission to the city schools; Supt. Omer Carmichael, who was praised by President Eisenhower for desegregation there, was criticized by a teachers' union official as being "anti-integration."

LOUISIANA — New legal weapons designed to remove Negroes from state-supported universities and colleges (some 200 attended four of seven state institutions during 1956) were to be used this month. Preparations were made for hearing on Jan. 9 the appeal from the district court ruling ordering desegregation of Orleans Parish schools.

MARYLAND — The first appeal of a local school board's decision which had barred a Negro pupil from a school ended with the school board rescinding its original decision and admitting the student, as the second such case moved up to the State Board of Education; Baltimore, meanwhile found that 80 of its schools had mixed classes as compared to 50 last year.

MISSISSIPPI — Segregation was still intact at all levels and no suits had been filed as 1956 ended. The state's Negro-white equalization program was stepped up under a decision by the state supreme court holding that final authority for approving school district reorganization plans rest with the state Board of Education.

NORTH CAROLINA — A suit attacking pro-segregation legislation adopted last year was filed in Caswell County as legislators prepared for the 1957 regular session with the possibility that the 1955 Pupil Placement Act might be reviewed.

OKLAHOMA — Norman White schools accepted two Negro students at the h gh school level in September, bringing to 183 the num ber of Oklahoma districts having begun desegregation, it was learned during December. A nose count in Oklahoma City, largest school district in the state, found that 7 per cent of the city's 48,116 white students and 15 per cent of the 6,534 Negro children were in mixed classes.

School Desegregation Issue Has Court For Many Months

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—The U. S. Supreme Court has acted 22 times on school segregation-desegregation since 1954, according to a survey published here today by Southern School News.

During June, the publication said, eight school districts in border and mid-South states announced desegregation plans for next fall, while in Delaware a state education board policy restatement appeared to have arrested general desegregation in Delaware predicted for September.

In the 22 cases which have gone through state and local courts to the U. S. high court, said Southern School News, desegregation has been effected in six. Two other cases did not specifically involve school entry. The most recent Supreme Court action, the publication pointed out, was a decision upholding a lower court ruling which ordered resegregation in New Orleans schools and invalidated Louisiana's pupil placement law.

Pupil placement, or assignment, which seven states have adopted since 1954, was also being tested in North Carolina and Virginia. Southern School News said that 58 Negro pupils in four North Carolina cities had applied for transfer to all-white schools. A state court in Virginia and a federal circuit court had before them cases challenging Virginia's placement law.

Districts announcing desegregation this fall included one in West Virginia, three in Oklahoma and four in Arkansas, where more than 200 districts apparently will remain segregated.

In its survey of Supreme Court actions since 1954, the paper found that a majority of the pleas for review by the court have been rejected. On 11 of 22 occasions the court has denied certiorari and on two others denied petitions for different handling by district courts. Decisions have been issued on nine occasions, including two in the original case of Brown vs Board of Education.

"Thus in the 20 cases dealing with school segregation specifically," Southern School News said, "it would appear that the court has adhered with considerable consistency to the policy it established in the 1955 Brown decision when it remanded the cases to the federal district courts for implementation "consistent with this opinion."

Other major developments, Southern School News reported, state-by-state, as follows:

ALABAMA—With a backlog of an estimated 25 to 40 pro-segregation bills, the legislature, which convened May 7, had passed one local measure. The consensus of legislators was that the state's pupil placement law was the principal defense against forcible integration.

ARKANSAS—Four school districts (Little Rock, North Little Rock, Fort Smith and Van Buren) plan desegregation this fall. More than 200 Arkansas districts will remain segregated.

DELAWARE—Local initiative should govern desegregation, the State Board of Education ruled again, in a move interpreted as reducing the likelihood of general desegregation in the fall.

NAACP Meeting Set For Sunday, July 14

The regular branch meeting of the local NAACP will be held Sunday, July 14, at the Shiloh Baptist church, 10th and Lindsay, at 3 p. m.

Delegates to the 48th annual NAACP conference in Detroit, Mich., will give reports and highlights from this meeting. Everyone is invited to attend.

Dr. Hudson Blacks Out At NAACP Meeting

DETROIT.—Dr. H. Claude Hudson, member of the national executive board of the NAACP and one of its most active and faithful members for a number of years, blacked out while he was introducing a resolution on the floor of the convention last Saturday morning.

Dr. Hudson, who was introducing an anti-Communist resolution, slumped to the floor in the middle of his talk. He was carried out of the hot, crowded hall, and was immediately revived.

It was thought that he had been overcome by the heat and by exhaustion.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—Washington's nine-member school board got a new chairman as the District also continued its quest for a superintendent to succeed Hobart M. Corning.

FLORIDA—The legislature adjourned without enacting any major new law on segregation-desegregation. It failed to override a gubernatorial veto of a "last resort" bill allowing local districts to abandon public schools faced with desegregation orders.

GEORGIA—The state's request to dismiss an entry suit to Georgia State college was refused by a federal court. An assessment of more than $17,000 in back income taxes was clapped on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

KENTUCKY—Two state institutions of higher education—the predominantly white University of Kentucky and the formerly all-Negro Kentucky State college, joined to sponsor extension courses at Frankfort, the state capital.

LOUISIANA — Orleans Parish (New Orleans) school board lost its appeal from a desegregation order in the U. S. Supreme Court, which also upheld a lower court order ruling the state's pupil placement law unconstitutional.

MARYLAND—A federal court approved "selective integration" in Harford county, a plan involving the screening of Negro applicants. Negro plaintiffs said they would appeal the ruling.

MISSISSIPPI—Gov. J. P. Coleman issued his strongest statement to date on school segregation, saying that "we have no intention of complying with the decision that we regard to be utterly unconstitutional."

Black Dispatch

MISSOURI—A survey of desegregated John Pitman school in Kirkwood, a suburb of St. Louis, showed that desegregation was "easier on the whole this year than last," when difficulties were reported at the second-year mark.

NORTH CAROLINA—Applications for school entry, governed by the state's pupil placement act, have been filed in Charlotte, Raleigh, Greensboro and Winston-Salem, plus Mecklenburg (Charlotte) county.

OKLAHOMA—A state survey showed that a "Little Dixie" district planned complete desegregation this fall and that two other districts had "policy desegregation," while all-Negro high schools would be maintained in 34 and possibly 40 districts.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The next-to-the-longest session in the state's legislative history ended with a sprinkling of new pro-segregation laws.

TENNESSEE—Knoxville asked a federal court to dismiss a school entry suit as John Kasper, pre-segregation organizer, appeared in Nashville, which plans first grade desegregation this fall (under court order). Kasper said he has organized a Citizens Council in opposition.

TEXAS—A federal court was asked to set a definite date for desegregation of Houston's school system as Galveston announced it would postpone desegregation because of new state laws. Appeal was announced of a state court order restricting NAACP activities.

VIRGINIA—Pupil placement, as provided by state law, was under challenge in both federal and state courts. In one instance, the Fourth Circuit Court heard (at Asheville, N. C.) a case involving Norfolk and Newport News.

WEST VIRGINIA—Hardy county announced it would take its first desegregation steps this fall and Mason county said it would adopt complete desegregation, leaving two counties in the state with segregated school systems.

School Report Shows 18 Per Cent Integration in South Since Decrees

Pittsburgh Courier 6-27-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., (ANP) — With the end of the school term in 17 Southern and border states, the Southern School News reported here last week that since 1954 when the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed segregation in public schools, some 18 per cent of school districts in these states have achieved integration.

14,000

In round numbers, according to the report, some 684 districts in Southern and border states had begun or accomplished some facet of integration in public schools as the term ended and summer vacations began.

The reports also disclosed that more steps toward integration are scheduled for the fall in two Arkansas cities, one Tennessee city, nine districts in Missouri and "generally" in Delaware.

Currently four districts in Virginia under pressure to desegregate are under litigation against integration.

Reveals Anti-Integration Laws

The Southern News report revealed that as the school year ended more anti-integration laws were being adopted or debated in Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas. Missouri has quietly repealed old segregation laws concerning school segregation.

The following are major deveopments on a state-by-state basis:

ALABAMA: A number of pro-segration bills pertaining to the closing down of schools were begun May 7 in this state's Legislature.

ARKANSAS: Pro-segregation laws were attacked by a church group. White Citizens councils demanded that Gov. Orval Faubus separate the races in schools at Little Rock, where high school integration is to begin this fall.

DELAWARE: Law enforcement agencies made ready for general desegregation this fall with special courses in police-community relations.

FLORIDA: A "last resort" bias bill aimed at closing down schools was vetoed by Gov. Leroy Collins after the measure had been sanctioned by the General Assembly to give residents the power by referendum to close down schools in any area.

GEORGIA: A Negro educator was re-elected to the Atlanta school board as the power of the Negro vote was felt in the city. A Negro alderman candidate was defeated also.

KENTUKY: A survey indicated that after two years of integration in schools, some Negro students were going to interracial schools under a free-choice plan.

LOUISIANA: A Democratic national committeeman here set a precedent among solons when he predicted this state would eventually desegregate its schools. New trials were being sought by the state against the desegregation of four colleges.

MARYLAND: School desegregation was upheld by the state court of appeals. Numerous counties began programs to extend integration.

14,000

MISSISSIPPI: No integration progress whatsoever.

MISSOURI: Only five high school districts remained segregated. Less than 68,000 Negro students are attending school under the old segrated system.

NORTH CAROLINA LAWS: — against the NAACP were introduced. School officials of three cities announced that they had been having private discussions for several years about segregation, desegregatation.

TENNESSEE: Trials of 17 whites accused of interferring with the peaceful integration of linton High school were set for July.

TEAS: A pupil assignment law was adopted and a modified permanent injunction against the NAACP was issued by a state court.

VIRGINIA: The state's pupil assignment law was attacked by white and Negro people in this state who refused to sign necessary forms. State authorities denounced a federal judge who ruled that the placement law was unconstitutional.

TEXAS HAS NEW LAW TO HALT INTEGRATION

COURT RULINGS CITED

Memphis Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, Aug. 5.—A new state law has arrested desegregation of schools in several Texas communities, Southern School News reported Monday.

Port Arthur, Galveston and other communities which had planned to desegregate their schools this fall have been informed by state authorities that they cannot do so except by a vote of the people—or they will lose all state aid. More than 100 districts in Texas previously had desegregated and are not affected by the new state law.

25 Districts Integrate

Three of 25 new districts which have begun or announced desegregation are in North Carolina. There, the populous Piedmont cities of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem have accepted 12 Negro children for enrollment in previously all-white schools under the state's assignment law. This is the first integration "breakthrough" in the eight Southeastern and Deep South states where resistance to the Supreme Court decision of 1954 has been strongest.

Other districts included five in Arkansas, two in Oklahoma and 15 in Missouri.

According to Southern School News, this brings to 694 the number of districts already desegregated and to 712 the number desegregated or planning such a move in September. Some 3,000 districts remain segregated.

In key court decisions during July, the newspaper reported, the Fourth District Court sustained a ruling against Virginia's pupil placement act, and the schools of Dallas, Texas, were ordered to desegregate, but at no specific time.

Suit Dismissed

A suit against Florida's placement act was dismissed while the Fifth Circuit Court ruled against a lower court which dismissed a desegregation suit in Dade (Miami) County. A Federal district judge in Delaware, in the first decision of its kind, ordered wholesale desegregation of segregated schools in the state.

The state of Mississippi reported difficulty in floating school bonds, as did the university system of Georgia, where the state auditor blamed the "segregation bugaboo." However, Atlanta accepted low bids on bonds for 10 new schools, including seven for Negroes.

A summary of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA—A bill gerrymandering most of Tuskegee's Negroes out of the city limits and thus out of a vote in municipal affairs became law as Negro voting, rather than school desegregation, dominated the state's affairs.

ARKANSAS — Little Rock, planning high school desegregation in September, heard protests from segregationists groups but said it would go ahead. One more district was reported to have desegregated and another announced desegregation for September.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Washington's school board approved a request for $58,200,000 to operate the schools in fiscal 1959—a record budget for the desegregated system.

GEORGIA—Two Georgia gubernatorial candidates were debating the degree of segregation which each espoused. The Georgia Education Commission got a go-ahead on a $376,000 campaign for a nationwide defense of the state's segregation policy.

KENTUCKY—Both Louisville and its county, Jefferson, said there would be no integration of faculties in desegregated schools for the time being despite a request from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

LOUISIANA—An effort to remove Democratic National Committeeman Camille Gravel, who endorsed the party's 1956 civil rights plank and predicted eventual school desegregation, apparently was stalled by a ruling of the national committee.

MARYLAND—A district court decision upholding Harford County's "selective integration" (screening of prospective Negro students) plan was under fire from the NAACP, which announced an appeal.

MISSISSIPPI—High costs of Mississippi's equalization program were borne home in increased budgets and mounting interest rates for school bonds, the latter development causing the state to withdraw a 10-million-dollar offering and to plan smaller offerings to in-state investors.

MISSOURI—A survey showed nine more school districts desegregated with six others planning a similar move in September.

OKLAHOMA—Tentative settlement in a Federal court case opened the state school for the deaf to Negro registrants. Some faculty integration in Oklahoma City may occur this fall because of the closing of two Negro schools.

SOUTH CAROLINA—An effort by some ministers to obtain "moderate" expressions of sentiment on school segregation-desegregation was disclosed by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., who criticized it by inference.

TENNESSEE—Zones for first grade integration in the schools of Nashville this fall (under court order) were disclosed as opposition mounted. In a nationally prominent case, a jury at Knoxville convicted seven and acquitted four defendants in a contempt-of-court case involving disturbances last year at Clinton.

VIRGINIA—The state's Pupil Placement Act was held unconstitutional by the Fourth Circuit Court in a ruling affirming a lower court decision. Desegregation orders against Norfolk, Newport News and Charlottesville were stayed pending a Supreme Court ruling, but a district court ordered Arlington County to begin desegregation in September.

WEST VIRGINIA—School superintendents predicted no trouble at school opening time this year in two districts where there had been flare-ups previously, and this appeared to be the picture throughout the state.

Poll shows accelerated integration

Afro-American Sat. 8-3-57

Baltimore Md.

NASHVILLE (ANP) — The Southern Education Reporting Service last week revealed that approximately 700 school districts since 1954 have either begun or prepared to begin public school desegregation in southern and border states.

In a surprise move early last week, three North Carolina city school boards decided to admit a total of 12 pupils to all-white schools.

The move includes the transfer of six Greensboro pupils to previously all-white schools, five in Charlotte and one in Winston-Salem.

A rundown of integration proceedings, as reported by southern news, is as follows:

ARKANSAS: Schools fully or partly desegregated in five communities with desegregation scheduled this fall in five others, including Little Rock, the capital and Fort Smith, second largest city.

DELAWARE: Thirteen of 61 districts desegregated and the rest under court order to desegregate this fall.

WASHINGTON, D. C.: In third year of full integration.

KENTUCKY: Ninety-two of 180 biracial districts desegregated, including Louisville, Frankford and Lexington.

MARYLAND: Fourteen of 23 biracial districts desegregated in act and six have desegregation in policy, but no colored have applied. An additional district will integrate grammar schools this September.

MISSOURI: An estimated 193 of 244 biracial districts desegregated with nine more planning the step in September.

TENNESSEE: Of 141 districts having colored pupils, two (Oak Ridge and Clinton) are partly desegregated. Nashville will desegregate the first grade in September.

OKLAHOMA: Of 261 districts having colored, 198 are desegregated, including 12 which had no colored applicants.

TEXAS: An estimated 103 of 841 districts (all of them in heavily populated white and Mexican South and West Texas) have desegregated. New state laws halted desegregation in Galveston, Port Arthur and other localities.

WEST VIRGINIA: Forty-one of 43 districts with colored have desegregated.

Preparations were made for hearing on Jan. 9 the appeal from the district court ruling ordering desegregation of Orleans Parish schools.

MARYLAND — The first appeal of a local school board's decision which had barred a Negro pupil from a school ended with the school board rescinding its original decision and admitting the student, as the second such case moved up to the State Board of Education, Baltimore, meanwhile, found that 80 of its schools had mixed classes as compared to 50 last year.

MISSISSIPPI — Segregation was still intact at all levels and no suits had been filed as 1956 ended. The state's Negro-white equalization program was stepped up under a decision by the state supreme court holding that final authority for approving school district reorganization plans rests with the state Board of Education.

MISSOURI—Kansas City desegregation continued "smoothly" and quietly after a minor flareup and threatened student strike last spring, the Commission on Human Relations reported. In Webster Groves, a controversy with some segregation-desegregation facets continued over whether the St. Louis suburban community should build one junior high school or two.

NORTH CAROLINA — A suit attacking pro-segregation legislation adopted last year was filed in Caswell County as legislators prepared for the 1957 regular session with the possibility that the 1955 Pupil Placement Act might be reviewed.

OKLAHOMA — Norman white schools accepted two Negro students at the high school level in September, bringing to 183 the number of Oklahoma districts having begun desegregation, it was learned during December. A nose count in Oklahoma City, largest school district in the state, found that 7 per cent of the city's 48,116 white students and 15 per cent of the 6,584 Negro children were in mixed classes.

SOUTH CAROLINA — A white high school band director was severely beaten by a group of hooded men who accused him of having made a pro-integration speech. Otherwise, racial tensions on the eve of the 1957 legislative session were considerably less than a year ago. No new major legislation on the segregation - desegregation question was expected. The U.S. Fourth Circuit Court in a decision ordering hearing of a Columbia transportation suit linked bus cases with the education cases by ruling that the Brown and Bolling cases "left no doubt that the separate but equal doctrine had been generally repudiated."

TENNESSEE — New outbreaks of violence at Clinton led to the arrest of 16 pro-segregationists under a federal court order and the temporary closing of the school. Tennessee legislators prepared for the 1957 session which will receive proposals for pupil assignment laws, "free choice" selection of schools and measures to leave to the local school boards the questions of when and how to end compulsory segregation. Associates of Gov. Frank Clement said the administration would introduce a program of its own.

TEXAS — A federal judge in Dallas, holding that the Supreme Court school segregation decisions were based on "modern psychological knowledge" rather than law, ruled for a second time that Dallas schools need not be desegregated at the present. Still another desegregation suit was filed in Houston, the nation's largest segregated school district. Eleven measures and a constitutional amendment bearing on the segregation-desegregation issue were expected to be introduced in the state legislature.

VIRGINIA — The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court affirmed district court orders calling for an end to segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington County schools. As the Pupil Assignment Board authorized by the legislature last summer went into operation, state officials and financiers undertook to show investors that Virginia school bonds are in no way affected by anti-integration legislation.

WEST VIRGINIA — Of 13 colleges and universities responding to questionnaires, eight reported declines in Negro enrollment, four reported increases and one reported no change.

TENNESSEE SEVENTH IN ASSIGNING PUPILS

INTEGRATION CREEPS UP

Memphis, Tenn.

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, Feb. 3. — Tennessee last month joined six other states in the adoption of pupil placement acts aimed at delaying or avoiding school desegregation, Southern School News reported Sunday.

The monthly publication noted that a pupil assignment measure in Virginia was ruled unconstitutional "on its face" by a Federal Court, while a North Carolina law was held "not unconsti utional on its face."

New District Integrated

One additional school district (in Oklahoma) began the desegregation process during January, bringing to 673 the number of districts in Southern and border states which have lowered racial barriers to some degree. About 3,000 districts having both white and Negro students remain segregated.

Three Western counties in Kentucky, including two where disorders last September brought out the National Guard (at Clay and Sturgis) have filed desegregation plans. Houston, Texas, the nation's largest segregated school district, has indicated it will present a plan for compliance May 1. And a Federal Court has upheld the plan of Nashville to begin desegregation next year at the first grade level.

30 Rules For Placement

In a survey of pupil placement legislation, the publication noted 30 rules under which pupils may be assigned to schools in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, with some programs nearly identical in language. It pointed out that Louisiana's law was held unconstitutional last year.

"Court decisions," reported Southern School News, "indicate the validity of express legislation for placement purposes will depend upon the intent with which the power is granted and the execution of such laws on a nondiscriminatory basis."

A state-by-state summary of major developments follows:

ALABAMA—The attempt of Autherine Lucy Foster to enter the University of Alabama apparently ended with a Federal Court ruling upholding her expulsion for unproven charges that authorities conspired in the Feb. 6, 1956, riots on the campus. The ruling was interpreted as leaving the university's doors open to other qualified Negroes.

ARKANSAS—Gov. Orval Faubus warned against tampering with the state's Pupil Assignment Act lest it be "jeopardized" as the Legislature opened a 60-day session. No bills on school segregation-desegregation had been introduced by the end of January.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—In a report to the board of education Superintendent Hobart M. Corning rejected changes in the school system recommended by congressional investigators and, in effect, charged the investigators made up their minds in advance of the hearings.

FLORIDA—Gov. LeRoy Collins told Floridians in his inaugural address that integration was inevitable as a matter of law but said the state, under its pupil assignment law, has found a way to keep schools segregated for the "foreseeable future."

GEORGIA—New legislation to augment the state's segregation laws—one giving the Governor broader powers to deal with disorders — occupied the General Assembly in the first week of its session.

KENTUCKY — Three Western counties filed desegregation plans. Under court direction a fourth filed a new plan to speed completion of the desegregation process.

LOUISIANA—A Federal Court ruling apparently opened the way to continued integration in the state colleges with a showdown predicted this month after Negroes seek to re-register.

MARYLAND—The number of Negroes enrolled in Baltimore's formerly all-white schools in the third year of desegregation is double that of the last school year, but a large majority remains in all-Negro schools. Some movement of Negroes back to an all-Negro high school is reported from desegregated Montgomery County.

MISSISSIPPI—Gov. J. P. Coleman announced that a special session of the Legislature, reportedly concerning in part the school desegregation question, would not be called.

MISSOURI—A flare-up of racial tension followed a murder and criminal assault at Sikeston, in the "bootheel," a section which has been slower than the rest of the state to begin desegregation.

NORTH CAROLINA — The Legislature may be asked to reenact pro-segregation tuition grant and school-closing legislation passed at a special session last year and later written into the Constitution by referendum.

OKLAHOMA—A Federal Court ordered four Negroes admitted to the Earlsboro District High School (the 184th District in Oklahoma to report mixed classes) but permitted the district to segregate other pupils until the 1957-58 school year. Gov. Raymond Gary, citing economies under a state integration policy, told the Legislature that these savings and improved finances would permit more "liberal" support for schools.

SOUTH CAROLINA—A handful of pro-segregation measures has been introduced in the Legislature. A suit arising over a law banning public employment of members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was transferred from Federal to state courts in a split decision by a three-judge Federal Court, one member of which held that "the fact that organizations may render themselves unpopular with the majority in a community is no reason why the majority may use its power to enact legislation denying to their members the fundamental rights of constitutional liberty." Another held the state anti-NAACP law "only prevents its members from carrying out their programs in the classrooms of public schools where it is deemed to be against the public interest to have them do so."

TENNESSEE — Tennessee is the most recent state to write the pupil placement system into its statutes, the Legislature adopting a five-point program recommended by Gov. Frank Clement within two weeks after convening. In two key court decisions a district judge upheld Nashville's projected first-grade desegregation in 1957-58 and a circuit court overruled the state's "stairstep" plan of college desegregation.

TEXAS — Eleven pro-segregation bills, including a pupil placement plan, have been introduced in the Legislature. Houston indicated it would be ready by May 1 to announce a plan of compliance with the Supreme Court's school decisions.

VIRGINIA — Virginia's Pupil Placement Act was declared unconstitutional by a Federal judge while another judge declined to set a deadline for desegregation in Prince Edward County. Meanwhile, a Circuit Court order delayed court-ordered desegregation of Charlottesville and Arlington County schools.

7 Dixie States Turn To Pupil Placement

A Key Part of Legal Strategy To Safeguard Segregation

(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 3—Increased attention in Southern legislatures and courts to pupil placement as a means of avoiding or delaying desegregation was noted today by the Southern School News.

The monthly publication devoted to race relations in the field of education said Tennessee last month joined six other states in adopting pupil placement acts providing for assigning students to specific schools under various criteria but usually excluding race as a factor.

LAWS VARY

It said the Tennessee law differs from the one enacted in Virginia and declared by a federal district court to be unconstitutional "on its face."

"The Virginia act differs from the Tennessee and other acts in that it provides for placement by a statewide board and vests special powers in the governor," Southern School News quoted legal authorities. "It was called unconstitutional because accompanying legislation, according to the court, clearly required racial segregation by its implementation."

PROPOSE SAFEGUARDS

In addition to Tennessee and Virginia, the publication listed Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana and North Carolina as states using pupil placement as an answer to the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation decision. It was noted that some 30 standards or rules under which pupils may be assigned to individual schools have been written into the laws of these states, with some of the legislation using "nearly identical language."

Louisiana's law was ruled invalid last year, but North Carolina's was held "not unconstitutional on its face."

Southern School News reported that the segregation issue has been raised in one way or another in every Southern state where the Legislature is in session.

In Arkansas, the publication said, Gov. Orval Faubus warned the Legislature against tampering with the state's pupil assignment act lest it be "jeopardized." No bills on school segregation-desegregation had been introduced up to the end of January.

FLORIDA PLAN

In Florida, Gov. Leroy Collins told the Legislature in his inaugural address that integration is inevitable but that the state, under its pupil assignment law, has found a way to maintain segregated schools for the "foreseeable future."

The North Carolina Legislature, Southern School News reported, may be asked to reenact prosegregation tuition-grant and school-closing legislation passed at a special session last year and later put into the state constitution.

Eleven prosegregation bills, including a pupil placement plan, have been introduced in Texas.

The Georgia Legislature is pushing plans to strengthen prosegregation laws and give the governor broader powers to deal with disorders.

On the other side of the picture, Southern School News reported the desegregation of one additional Southern school district—this one in Oklahoma, where the ending of segregation started in January. This brings to 673 the number of districts in Southern and border states which have lowered racial barriers, the publication said. About 3,000 districts having white and Negro students remain segregated.

LITTLE ROCK CRISIS ECHOES OVER SOUTH

Total Of 761 School Areas Now Desegregated

LAWS SHOW REACTION

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, Nov. 4. — Reverberations of the Little Rock school crisis have been felt in schools and legislative halls as far away as West Virginia and Florida, Southern School News reported here Monday.

It noted also that 10 school districts in the Southern and border region have been listed as desegregated in the last month, bringing the total to 761 since 1954.

Demonstrations occurred at several schools in West Virginia, the first state to desegregate all its biracial districts. In Florida, the legislature adopted a law requiring that schools be closed in any district where Federal troops are sent to enforce integration.

2,219 Districts Segregated

Southern School News said nine more Kentucky districts and one additional Texas district have adopted desegregation policies. The Texas district is Pleasanton, south of San Antonio, which is the first to vote to integrate by referendum under new laws in that state.

With recent consolidation of school districts, there are now 2,980 biracial districts in the 17-state area affected by the United States Supreme Court decision against school segregation. Thus, 2,219 remain segregated.

The publication reported that Houston, the nation's largest segregated school district, is now under court order to integrate—but at no specific time.

In a comprehensive survey of industrialists, political leaders and industrial development agencies, Southern School News found that racial incidents and tensions have set back indusrial expansion in some areas but that for the most part the region has not been affected. To the question, "Is the region being hurt industrially?" the publication said the answer is: "Yes, and no, with much if not most of the weight on the No."

Summary By States

ALABAMA—State officials believed the Alabama pupil placement act, which they said was different from Virginia's invalidated law, would stand up in court as a test neared in Birmingham.

ARKANSAS — A stalemate continued at a troop-occupied Little Rock high school as state and Federal officials sought a solution to the controversy involving President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval Faubus. Classes went on more or less normally at the school.

DELAWARE — State Police conducted a two-day indoctrination course on the legal aspects of school segregation-desegregation in anticipation of an eventual "showdown" on the issue. A survey showed 43 per cent of all Negro children in desegregated districts and 36 per cent in desegregated buildings.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — Washington's school board president said the schools face the dangerous problem of a "disproportionately high" ratio of Negro students. Un-official estimates show white enrollment has declined from 56 per cent in 1945 to 30 per cent this year.

FLORIDA — The Legislature adopted a measure requiring the immediate closing of any school where Federal troops are assigned to enforce integration and failed to readopt a "last resort" measure vetoed by Gov. LeRoy Collins at the session last June.

GEORGIA — A group of 60 Southern segregation leaders met in Atlanta to discuss tightening of voter requirements and plans for presenting their argument to the nation, but no special southwide organization was expected to result.

KENTUCKY — Eleven additional Kentucky districts were shown to have "integrated situations," bringing the state total to 114. A Federal court postponed a desegregation order for Fulton High School.

LOUISIANA — Court-backed integration at four once all-white colleges continued "remarkably uneventful" with between 160 and 175 Negroes in attendance. A survey showed the peak was 650 during the 1956 summer session.

Some ReiSegregation

MARYLAND — A survey showed the number of Negroes attending formerly all-white county schools doubled this year, with some re-segregation.

MISSISSIPPI — A Mississippi editor outlined a 10-point program for "the day the heat of integration" is put on the state, and Gov. J. P. Coleman called a special legislative session to modernize the Constitution and tighten segregation laws.

MISSOURI — A special study made of Kansas City showed how the school attendance pattern of a typical border-state city was being affected by the Supreme Court decision and an influx of Negro population.

NORTH CAROLINA—In what bids to become the first real test of the state's pupil placement law, the Raleigh School Board filed an answer to a suit by a Negro seeking admittance to a high school.

OKLAHOMA — The state became a sounding board for expressions of Federal policy and interstate legislative policy on the states' rights issue and the Little Rock controversy.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The Little Rock situation brought numerous expressions from public officials condemning President Eisenhower's action. A group of ministers published a booklet of "moderate" statements on race relations contributed by laymen.

TENNESSEE — John Kasper, figure in the Clinton and Nashville school disturbances, was taken into custody in Washington pending a new appeal to the Supreme Court after the court had once refused to hear his appeal from conviction for criminal contempt. Eleven children remained in integrated Nashville schools.

TEXAS — Pleasanton became the first Texas commusity to vote to integrate its school system under new state laws. A school official at San Marcos said too-rapid integration had hurt Negroes and caused them to drop out of school. A Federal court ordered Houston to desegregate but set no time limit.

VIRGINIA—The Supreme Court struck a blow at the state's placement law by refusing to review a lower court decision holding it invalid in the Norflok-Newport News case. Segregation debate dominated the forthcoming gubernatorial election.

WEST VIRGINIA — Tensions attributed to the Little Rock situation set off a chain of demonstrations in three communities, breaking a year's calm.

Education "Stands on a parity with highways in this State," Weatherspoon said in urging the Commission to change its plans.

Long-range Baptis' plans for the possible location of another church-related college in Eastern North Carolina also were discussed by Meredith leaders.

"There's a great deal of sentiment for building a four-year college at Kinston," Dr. Campbell said.

The Commission may take some action on the controversial project at its meeting in December. No action will be taken before then, officials said.

SOUTHERN SOCIOLOGICAL SOCIETY

INTEGRATION CALLED NATURAL U.S. TREND

Commercial Appeal April 14-57

Seen Necessary For Social Peace In Nation

Memphis Press

ATLANTA, April 13.—(AP)—Social peace cannot be achieved in the United States until the structure of compulsory segregation by force of law is demolished, two Tulane University sociologists said Saturday.

14d(1)

"The obvious national trend is toward integration of the public schools," Dr. Forrest Laviolette told the Southern Sociological Society. "In some areas, however, it is a local matter, depending upon local handling of the situation—it cannot be measured in a definite period of time."

Dr. Laviolette read a paper on "Educational Segregation and Integration in the South" which he prepared in co-operation with Dr. John Fenton. Both are on the faculty of the Department of Sociology at Tulane in New Orleans.

"Current movements toward integration are the natural continuation of a process of sociological change," Dr. Laviolette said. "The Negro has been integrated geographically, politically and socio-economically into the national community. Segregation is no longer a natural social order as it was in 1896."

Dr. Laviolette and Dr. Fenton attributed the changed conditions to four major factors: The rural-urban and South-North shift of the Negro population; the Depression; the requirements of national defense for economic and organizational efficiency in an era of great wars; and increased Negro participation in the political process.

"Educational integration is a major social movement, and one can not turn such movements on or off," said Dr. Laviolette. "It is a part of the process by which we achieve consensus, and history in this case is the chronology of the conflict in attempting to achieve it."

Earlier delegates to the meeting elected Dr. C. Horace Hamilton of North Carolina State College president for 1957-58.

Other officers chosen included: Dr. William E. Noland, University of North Carolina, and Dr. William L. Kold, Tulane, vice presidents, and Dr. Selz C. Mayo, North Carolina State, secretary-treasurer.

REPORT ON INTEGRATION

Sun. 5-12-57

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NASHVILLE, May 11.—Southern Education Reporting Service has announced a two-year extension of its work under a grant of $234,916 from the Fund for the Advancement of Education, an independent agency established by the Ford Foundation. The grant is effective July 1.

Makes Announcement

Since September, 1954, the Reporting Service has published Southern School News, a monthly paper which describes developments in the 17-state area affected by the 1954 Supreme Court ruling on school segregation. SERS is directed by a board of editors and educators and its headquarters are located in Nashville's university center.

Frank Ahlgren, editor of The Memphis Commercial Appeal and chairman of the SERS board, made the announcement here. Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, is vice chairman. The executive director is Don Shoemaker, former North Carolina newspaperman.

Notice of the grant came from John K. Weiss, assistant vice president of the Fund for the Advancement of Education. Expressing the Fund's satisfaction with the wide acceptance of Southern School News, Mr. Weiss wrote Mr. Ahlgren: "There can be no question that you and your colleagues on the board as well as Don Shoemaker and his staff have done an outstanding job in a difficult and sensitive area."

Mr. Ahlgren replied: "Speaking for the board of directors and the staff, I am extremely grateful for this evidence of continued confidence in SERS.

Tells Whole Story

"Through Southern School News, its other publications and reference work for literally hundreds of news media, governmental and educational agencies and scholars, the organization has endeavored to tell the whole story of school segregation - desegregation in the South factually and objectively. In these times of racial tensions, the Reporting Service believes it can perform a vital function through providing essential information which is accurate and impartial."

Mr. Ahlgren also announced two additions to the board of directors. They are Dr. Luther H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, and Bert Struby, editor of the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

SOUTHERN STATES PASS 13 BIAS LAWS

New York Times 3/14

February Survey Also Finds 6 New School Districts Ordered Integrated

Aug. 3-10-57

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 9—Addition during February of thirteen new laws to bolster public-school segregation in five Southern states was reported this week by The Southern School News.

The monthly published by Southern newspaper editors and educators also reported that in the same period six more school districts were ordered desegregated.

This brings the total of desegregated districts in the seventeen border and Southern states to 673 of an estimated total of 3,100.

The districts affected are Norfolk and Newport News, Va., and Hopkins, Scott, Union and Webster Counties in Kentucky.

Arkansas, Georgia and South Carolina adopted legislation aimed at preserving school segregation, the publication said, and in Tennessee and Texas resolutions reasserting principles of states' rights were approved.

This legislative action brings to 120 the number of state segregation laws enacted since May, 1954, when the United States Supreme Court ruled that compulsory segregation in public schools was unconstitutional.

Since the publication went to press, Tennessee has adopted three measures aimed at restricting operations of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

One of these—a prohibition against promotion of litigation in the field of race relations—is similar to one enacted in South Carolina.

Georgia Passes Bills

Georgia's Legislature approved five segregation bills and a resolution asking impeachment of six United States Supreme Court justices, but an effort to ban interracial athletics failed to reach a vote as the session adjourned.

Four segregation bills were enacted in the Arkansas General Assembly and approved by Gov. Orval Faubus. One sets up a State Sovereignty Commission with investigative powers.

The publication also noted increased pro-segregation activity in Florida and Maryland. In Florida, the report said, activity was stepped up by the entry of persons from other states after Gov. Leroy Collins declared that mixed schools were inevitable.

In Maryland, the publication noted, segregationist groups were more active during the current legislative session than at any time since the 1954 decision. However, no legislation advocated by them was introduced.

Mississippi Plan Outlined

In Mississippi, Gov. J. P. Coleman outlined a segregation program that he said he hoped to achieve while in office. He declared that "domestic peace and tranquility, which is surprising our friends as well as our worst enemies, must be preserved."

Desegregation slowed down in Delaware, the newspaper said, but negotiations are under way for a merging of white and Negro Parent-Teacher Associations. In Louisiana, a hundred Negroes of 200 previously enrolled re-entered integrated state colleges under injunctions restraining enforcement of the state's new laws intended to exclude them.

A St. Louis high school reported after its second full year of desegregation that it was operating more smoothly with a 50 per cent Negro enrollment than it did with a 33 per cent Negro minority the first year.

NAACP 'Black Night' Promise Repeated In Clarendon Area

News + Observer Thurs. 6-20-57 P. 1-B

Charleston, S.C.

BY HERB BRYANT
News and Courier Roving Reporter

SUMMERTON, June 19—In the wake of all the publicity about Clarendon County comes news from a Manning Negro National Association for the Advancement of Colored People spokesman that there is going to be a "black night soon for the Citizens' Councils" of Summerton and South Carolina.

The second in a series of articles on the South by John Bartlow Martin in the June 22 issue of The Saturday Evening Post is about Summerton [illegible] the 'Integration' Case.

Summerton and Clarendon County first came into the news in a big way in 1954 when the Clarendon County lawsuit was ruled on by the Supreme Court. At that time the high court ruled against the "separate-but-equal" doctrine in public schools, saying that pupils could not be assigned to school on the basis of race.

Today, over three years later, the schools in Clarendon County are still separate for white and Negro students. According to white persons in Summerton, they are going to remain separate.

But Billy Fleming, a South Carolina member of the NAACP thinks differently. Fleming is planning a rally for the organization to be held in Summerton on July 1. Fleming said the meeting is going to be held in Summerton because of "historical reasons." The meeting will spell a "black night for Citizens' Councils," he said.

T. D. Keels of Sumter, chairman of the State Assn. of Citizens Councils said, "I don't think that the rally will rock us at all. The Citizens Councils are too firmly entrenched to be rocked by anything like this. I've heard of the proposed rally, although I have not been officially notified of it. I don't know that it would do any good."

Fleming said, "Just because Superintendent McCord says the schools can't be integrated is no sign we are not going to do something about the situation." L. B. McCord is Clarendon County superintendent of education.

Summerton Attorney S. Emory Rogers said, "We shouldn't act contrary to the wishes of the people, and the people in South Carolina want segregation."

Rogers said South Carolina people have shown they want segregation in a number of ways:

W. B. DAVIS JR.
Citizens Council Head

"1. By their support of Citizens Councils,

"2. In the South Carolina repeal of the constitutional requirements that public schools be maintained, and

"3. Through their representation in the repeal of the compulsory public school attendance law."

And W. B. Davis Jr., president of the Summerton Citizens Council, said the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, ruling has not helped the Southern Negro any. "People just can't be forced to integrate."

Fleming said the proposed Summerton NAACP rally is going to be attended by more than the original expected number, 100. "Because of all of the news in the papers we are now expecting more than 200."

He said the meeting will have two white speakers, but he declined to name the speakers. It has been rumored that retired Charleston Federal Judge J. Waties Waring, now of New York, would be the speaker.

An earlier news story named New York Rep. Adam Clayton Powell as the possible speaker. Fleming denied that he ever mentioned Powell as the speaker. But he did say that one of the speakers will be a "Southerner."

Fleming also said that a number of newspaper men from the North have been invited to attend the rally.

"Newspapers throughout the eastern section of the United States will be represented there."

When asked if the speakers are in public life, Fleming answered with "No comment."

Fleming said the NAACP wants integration of the races so the Negro will have their "God-given rights as American citizens."

When asked if the NAACP plans to have the Clarendon County public schools integrated by this coming school year, Fleming said, "No comment."

Fleming said the organization plans to "try force" in their attempt to integrate the schools. By "force," Fleming said he was referring to "legal force."

When asked what the NAACP has mapped out in this respect, Fleming said "All of that information is in the hands of Thurgood Marshall and the NAACP."

Negro Schools To Get Priority On Repair Plan

News + Courier Wed. 6-26-57

Charleston, S.C.

Correction of drainage conditions at Burke (Negro) High School and renovation of Simonton (Negro) Elementary School were given top priority as the city school board this week reorganized plans in line with rejection of the proposed $1,100,000 bond issue.

Supt. W. Robert Gaines described the drainage work at Burke as a $7,000 item among $490,000 worth of work proposed for the school. It will be financed primarily with a "small amount" of funds remaining from the State Education Finance Commission appropriation which covered building at Burke several years ago.

Simonton, where $313,000 worth of renovation was proposed, will benefit from whatever annual entitlement is forthcoming from the SEFC July 1, Gaines said.

The sum, against which a small amount already has been borrowed, will probably run somewhere from $75,000 to $90,000, the superintendent anticipates.

All in all, Gaines said, city school authorities will be "scratching" for whatever monies they can get and applying them as far as they'll go to correct the worst problems.

Burke and Simonton, in that order, enjoyed top priority in the original improvement plans on which the bond issue was based. The total plan for Burke included a new gymnasium - auditorium building, a new shop building, painting and flooring in the old Annex and the drainage corrections. Simonton was to receive a 10-classroom addition, interior toilet facilities, complete renovation and new furniture.

Third in priortiy line was Rivers High School, slated for $302,000 worth of work including construction of a gymnasium and cafeteria, painting and floor renovation.

Supreme Court Is Criticized By Bellinger

News + Courier

Charleston, S.C.

CAMDEN, S. C., June 24 (AP) — A South Carolina circuit judge today charged that the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling outlawing racially segregated public schools was "devoid of intellectual and judicial integrity."

Judge G. Duncan Bellinger blasted the high court at length while charging the Kershaw County grand jury.

The jury met to reconsider an indictment against six men charged in the Dec. 27 flogging of former Camden High School bandmaster Guy Hutchins. Charges listed in the earlier indictment either were dismissed or reduced.

ATTACKED BY GROUP

Hutchins said a group of hooded men attacked him after accusing him of making pro-integration remarks.

Bellinger asserted that in the school ruling and more recent decisions, members of the Supreme Court "have substituted for legal principles their own personal, social, economic and political ideas, taking away the rights of states, the powers of the departments of the federal government and the rights of individual citizens.

"As a result, the Supreme Court of the United States has become more confused and confounded in their opinions."

BLASTS COURT

Bellinger, from Columbia, also asserted that the high court "emasculated certain provisions of the constitution in order to reach a preconceived result in what is now termed the school cases. By judicial decree, the members of the Supreme Court relegated to themselves the power to amend the Constitution. . .

"In the school case decisions," Bellinger continued, "the court applied what it considered would be the psychological effect upon the Negro pupil under desegregation, but never considered what would be the psychological effect upon the white pupil with integration. Truly this is foolish inconsistency without any logical reasoning."

High Court Rules Case Of Fired Teachers Void

Norfolk, Va.

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON, D. C. — On the final decision day, the high tribunal ruled that the case brought against the Board of Education of South Carolina by 17 school teachers is now "moot."

The teachers had been discharged from their positions in Elloree Training School, of Orangeburg county, S. C., because they refuse to say under oath whether they were members of the NAACP.

WHILE THE CASE was pending in the high court, the law under which they were discharged has been repealed. If they wish to be reinstated they will have to bring another case to the Supreme Court on other grounds.

If they do nothing more they have won a victory. They have forced the state to repeal its unconstitutional law which was aimed to destroy the rights of free speech and association of state employees.

Newsweek Report On Negro Schools Puts New Hole In Paper Curtain

News and Courier, Charleston, S.C.

Raymond Moley's two articles in the current issue of Newsweek have presented the fairest reports on Southern race problems that we have seen in nationally circulated publications, with the single exception of U.S. News & World Report.

Mr. Moley's reporting, and Newsweek's willingness to print what he wrote, are encouraging signs that facts can get past the Paper Curtain on a topic that is tearing the American Republic to pieces. P. 14A

Mr. Moley found "responsible, intelligent" leadership in South Carolina — "restrained in speech and action. That leadership is calmly, legally, and with great determination going to assert in action as well as in words its conclusion that South Carolina 'is not prepared' to mix the races in schools." Fri. 10-11-57

That is a plain statement of resistance to federal force to mix the schools.

How then does South Carolina educate its colored citizens? To understand the Southern method—which Southerners believe is more efficient and at the same time acceptable to both races—Mr. Moley visited schools on James Island in Charleston County. There he found, in contrast to many mixed schools in the North, a happy and well disciplined student body.

When Mr. Moley commented on the quiet, studious atmosphere among the children, the acting principal, a Negro, replied: "Oh! We never have any problems of discipline here."

How different is that statement from descriptions of blackboard jungles—or "difficult" schools, as they are known in educational jargon—in Northern cities, notably New York and Philadelphia, and in the national capital of Washington.

In actually inspecting the modern school buildings and high morale of the Negro pupils in Charleston County, Mr. Moley was only following what used to be standard procedure for journalists.

"Write the things which thou hast seen," says the biblical verse on the cornerstone of The News and Courier's publishing plant, "and the things which are."

Mr. Moley has done that. We wish others would follow his example. Then the Paper Curtain would rise, the country would know the truth and the threat of bayonet law could be lifted from the Republic.

Tragic Deterioration Of School Under Study

One-Year Old Courtenay Building Defects Cited

News & Courier P-20 A

"Tragic deterioration" of the one-year-old Courtenay Elementary School building was discussed by members of the District 20 school board yesterday at the group's first fall meeting.

Joseph E. Schneider, director of business management, cited rainwater leakage damage in several sections of the $400,000 building and a "large crack" running from roof to ground level on the Mary Street side of the structure.

The leakage, first discovered in June and thought to be due to faulty roofing, now appears to be the result of cracks in concrete parapets, design feature of the building, which extend some 2½ feet above the roof level.

SERIOUS CRACKS

Examination has disclosed, Schneider told the board, that virtually every one of these parapets is cracking to admit rain and that there is apparently no flashing installed between the parapets and the roof to prevent such leakage.

Schneider suggested plans and specifications for the school plant be examined to determine whether such flashing was called for.

Referring to the cracked wall of the building, Schneider said he had been informed the damage was due to the building "seeking its angle of repose." Board members seemed to regard the explanation as an unsatisfactory one for the extent of damage which the building has shown.

INTRODUCES FILE

The business manager introduced an extensive file of correspondence on the Courtenay damage, pointing out that the roofers, originally thought to be at fault, have been most cooperative in investigating the situation.

The board directed him to continue his investigation into cause of the trouble with the architect, Augustus E. Constantine, and the contractors, Skinner and Ruddock.

The recent eight-day rainfall which drenched Charleston also brought out faults in a number of other city schools.

Schneider reported that The Rhett (Negro) Elementary School roof, which was recently repaired at a cost of $8,000 is again leaking, and leakage has been discovered at the High School of Charleston.

The new drainage system being installed at Burke (Negro) High School has not given any definite relief as yet, the business manager said. However the effectiveness of the project cannot be determined until the work is completed, he added.

FLOODED GROUNDS

Grounds at the Negro high school have flooded with rainwater frequently in the past and installation of a corrective drainage system was begun this fall.

The board voted yesterday to authorize architects Simons and Lapham to draw up final plans for repairs to Simonton (Negro) Elementary School. The plans will be presented to the S. C. State Education Finance Commission which recently allocated $144,000 for the renovation on the basis of preliminary plans.

The appointment of W. Leigh Thompson and Mrs. Anna Mae Smith as temporary teachers in the city school system was approved by the board. Thompson will teach mathematics at Rivers High School and Mrs. Smith will teach at Burke (Negro) High School.

Mrs. Edwin S. Pearlstine, and John T. Welch Jr., board members were absent from the meeting yesterday. Absent also was Supt. W. Robert Gaines, out of the city on business.

One Bill Would Immediately Close Integrated Schools

p.3

Special to Journal and Guide

COLUMBIA, S. C. — The South Carolina legislature recently introduced three bills which would significantly alter segregation policy in the state.

The three bills were introduced to the House by Florence County Rep. George S. Harrell.

ONE BILL would hand the Governor sole authority over integrated schools and provide tuition grants for students whose schools are closed during integration wrangles.

Following present law, the Harrell bill would close integrated schools immediately. But, unlike present statutes, the Governor would have the power to reopen them after an investigation.

BEFORE SCHOOLS could be reopened, however, the Governor would have to determine that continued operation would not jeopardize the "peace and tranquility" of the community nor be objectionable to children or parents.

Thus the proposed law holds out the possibility of operating non-segregated schools if local communities do not protest.

UNDER REP. Harrell's plan, a Governor would have the power to reorganize a "school, its personnel, curriculum and facilities" if he found it could not be re-opened.

The state would take over the closed school's financial obligations and pay off remaining contract wages of its principal and teachers.

AT THE SAME time, the Governor would be given the power to reassign students to other schools in the same county or town.

Pupils who could not be housed in other schools would be given grants for use as tuition in private institutions.

IN AN attempt to ward off future legal threats, the bill declares that the state "declines and refuses" to be subject to suit "unless brought by the attorney general."

Two other bills proposed by Harrell, Tuesday would prohibit state and local officers from helping federal agents enforce integration orders and require train, plane and bus stations to maintain segregated waiting rooms.

S.C. sits tight on school laws

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Legislation designed to keep this state's schools segregated apparently will be at a minimum during the 1957 session of the General Assembly which opens Jan. 8.

In spite of the fact that it has been almost three years since the U.S. Supreme Court declared enforded racial segregation in schools unconstitutional, the state's schools remain segregated.

Sat. 1-5-57

A SPECIAL LEGISLATIVE laymen's committee, seeking ways and means through which the state hopes to keep its schools on a segregated basis, reports that it has no plans at present to recommend further laws.

p.3

"It is felt that laws heretofore enacted on this subject (segregation in the public schools) are adequate," Sen. Marion Gressette, chairman of the committee, said, adding that "additional laws will not be recommended unless they are needed."

Teachers To Appeal S. C. Court Ruling

Afro-American Sat. 2-2-57 Baltimore, Md.

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A three-judge Federal Court order directing 17 colored former teachers at the Elloree Training School to seek relief for their dismissals in state offices and courts will be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, it was declared here Saturday.

The court, dividing three ways, had heard arguments in Charleston last October which revealed that 18 of the school's teaching staff had been dismissed after they refused to sign affidavits disavowing NAACP memberships and belief in integration.

Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, N.C., who presided, held that the court should rule on the controversy, first test of a 1956 enacted state law which prohibits state employment to NAACP members.

RESIDENTIAL JUDGE Ashton H. Williams agreed with Judge Parker on the point of jurisdiction, but held the plaintiffs hadn't exhausted all state remedies.

Judge George B. Timmerman Sr., father of the state's governor, ruled for a dismissal of the case, providing the alternate action of further pleas of the plaintiffs before state administrative officers and state courts.

The court's action had the effect of stifling an appeal before the Supreme Court, one attorney said. "The Supreme Court does not accept cases until a final decree has been given by a lower court," he said.

Under the Elloree order, filed Monday in Federal Court at Charleston, the court would again take up the case after it has run its course through state channels.

JAMES M. HINTON, state NAACP president, said his organization is not sponsoring the suit, although NAACP lawyers are being used.

The case, he said, is being supported by the Palmetto Education Association, whose executive secretary, Walker E. Solomon, told the AFRO that PEA officers had accepted the case after the Elloree Teachers sought assistance.

Weekend conferences between attorneys and officers of the PEA centered around the issue of appeal before undertaking the court's order of state relief.

The teachers are represented by Lincoln C. Jenkins of Columbia and Jack Greenberg of the NAACP's national office, attorneys.

Mr. Jenkins is convalescing from a heart attack, but is being represented by another attorney pending his recovery.

THE COURT'S ORDER came after Judges Parker and Williams held the case comes within Federal Court jurisdiction. Williams and Judge Timmerman held for further state level proceedings while retaining jurisdiction.

Judge Parker, Williams said, signed the state level order so as to provide unanimity in the ruling.

The Elloree teachers, none of whom could be reached immediately for comment, brought a challenge to general southern states' action to outlaw the NAACP and make membership in the organization an offense against holding such positions as public schools teachers.

There were no plans immediately beyond testing an appeal effort before the Supreme Court.

Teachers to test latest S.C. law

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 5-25-57

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Several Charleston County school teachers are planning a test of the state's 1957 law pertaining to organization membership, the AFRO was told last week.

The new law requires teachers and others holding or applying for state, county and local public jobs to list organizations in which they have memberships.

A 1956 law specifically denied employment to employes holding NAACP memberships. The law was repealed by the 1957 State Legislature, which enacted the substitute.

THE 1957 law does not deny work to NAACP members, but state agencies employing teachers, etc., are given liberty to refuse employment to applicants on the basis of organization affiliation.

Backers of the new law make no secret of its being intended to do the assignment of the old law. However, it has slipped back into the subtle category.

Seventeen teachers at Elloree Training School, fired under the 1956 law, sued trustees in Federal court. The case is pending.

Gov. George B. Timmerman Jr. and legislative leaders said the 1956 law was unconstitutional, even in state courts. It fell into the "special legislation" category, forbidden by the state constitution.

* * *

TWO OF THE three Federal judges hearing the case last October declined to so regard the measure.

The third, presiding Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, N.C., returned a minority dissent, holding the old law illegal.

NAACP leaders here weren't prepared to comment on the generally circulated report. President J. Arthur Brown was out of the city when the AFRO tried to reach him.

The report is that several teachers will include the NAACP among the list of organizations in which they hold membership. If they are dismissed, it is probably that they will appeal to Federal courts.

Last year the school board fired two veteran city teachers under the old law. They were:

Sat. 5-25-57

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—(ANP).—A five-article series on the integration issue in America was published here last week by a University of Virginia student magazine called the [illegible]

The series includes one story by staunch recist John Kasper and four others by Floyd Fleming, vice president of the Seaboard White Citizens Council; Sarah Patton, wife of a University of Virginia drama professor; Edwin B. Henderson, president of the Virginia State NAACP conference and novelist William Faulkner, who gave permission for a re-print of his life magazine feature entitled "Letter to the North."

The article by Kasper, the 28-year-old partaker of the Clinton, Tenn., flareups last year, was written as he wait in jail in Tennessee. The story is called "Segregation or Death."

STRUGGLE VOWED

Kasper condemned the U. S. Supreme court in his yarn and advocated that it be tried for treason, he called his opponents "Marxist, usurer, race mixer, degenerate politicians" and vowed a struggle to the death with them.

In another article, Henderson states that if given the equal opportunity, Negroes will achieve as much as whites.

A third article by Mrs. Boyle declares that race mixing is a step up from man's captivity within himself.

Fleming states in his bit that Negroes are criminal and offers the House subcommittee investigations of Washington, D. C., public schools last year as proof of Negro inferiority to whites.

Faulkner gaps the bridge by taking a middle-of-the-road attitude on the controversy.

An investigation into the issue of the magazine articles has been promised by the University Student council.

Judge W. E. Miller Kills "Preference" Discrimination Law

Globe + Independent

Nashville Tenn.

Now Public Understands Strange Maneuver Of Attorneys For City School Board; Members Merely Gave Prejudiced Group "Enough Rope"; Federal Court Upholds Supreme Tribunal's Pre-Eminence in Nation.

Pitt. 9-13-57

Nashville's lawabiding citizens who were bewildered a week ago at what seemed to them as abject surrender to a noisy but not large element of the population on desegregation, saw clearly through the whole thing last Friday morning.

The school board and its very competent attorneys had merely made a strategic retreat, for a brief period. It was a case of "give 'em enough rope and let 'em break their own neck," piece of strategy.

Despite all evidence that Nashville's parents and patrons are good Americans and are disposed to obey the law, whether they like the law or not, the disagreeing brethren were making it apper that the school authorities were dictatorial—that they were refusing to employ Gov. Frank Clement's state "preference" measure, which allegedly the people wanted, and instead were approving law as laid down by the U. S. Supreme Court, which the "disagreeing elemnet did not want, regardless.

The school board, its attorneys, Messrs Reber Holt and Edwin F. Hunt had made it plain that the school law the state had enacted was no good and Assistant Superintendent W. H. Oliver had said the same thing. Attorney Z. Alexander Looby "laid low" and would say nothing.

It seems the entire intelligensia in law matters were like the disciples of the Lord on the Day of Pentecost—all of one accord, in one place.

And the Intelligensia in law matters were also like the disciples of the Lord, in that they were awaiting the arrival of District Federal Judge William E. Miller, whereas the disciples on that memorable day were awaiting the arrival of the Holy Ghost.

Judge Miller arrived in due time. He immediately took up the petition of the school board's attorneys. The attorneys had fully and fairly presented to the court the contention of the preference people and in addition went all out in making the contention of the "preference" group in contention of the school board.

It was clear to Judge Miller what was being asked of him. He was being asked to decide the Nashville school case by invoking "states rights," either that or dodge the issue by postponing any action on it until a "more convenient season."

Judge Miller seemed to relish going into the matter at full tilt and disposing of it in a manner he felt sure would meet the approval of "higher powers."

Judge Miller said with regard to what the School Preference Committee demanded:

'This (state law) "is antagonistic to principles declared by the Supreme Court It is unconstitutional on its face."

That sounded the death knell of that long and laborous effort which Gov. Clement and his followers had put forth seeking to sidetract the desesgegation ruling the Supreme Court had handed down on May 17, 1954, and clarified fully and simply on May 31, 1955.

Of course able lawyer that he is Gov. Clement must have known he couldn't get by with a contrary law passed by the 1957 state legislature.

The governor certainly knows the law and knows the metes and bounds of Supreme Court authority just as well as Mayor Ben West of Nashville. But whereas Mayor Ben West in his statesmanship attitude toward the law of the land has hewed to the line. Gov. Clement decided to play some politics with the law.

As it is the govrnor has been deprived of a chance to indulge in any campaign oratory about what a good state law he had enacted to take care of the desegregation matter.

Globe + Independent

Judge Miller passed a deserved commendation upon the attorneys for the way they went about presenting their petition. It was strictly legal procedure. But nevertheless he hinted it was delaying action and could interfere with the orderly carrying out of the desegregation program the school board had presented to the Federal Court here several months ago.

Pitt. 9-13-57

That program called for integrating the little 6-year olds at the beginning of the new school year and Judge Miller had ruled the board must complete its desegregation program by December 31, 1957.

It was thought that Judge Miller might leave a loophole in his ruling thus accomodating the Preference Committee a chance to appeal to higher courts. But he did not do so. Desegregation in all grades except the primary is to be handed into the Federal Court by the end of this year.

Apparently Federal Judge Miller did not attach any importance to the claim that the Preference Committee had rounded up more than six thousand parents and patrons and gotten them to protest against desegregation. The committee has gotten more publicity for its cause than it has seemed to deserve.

The Constitutional Government organization seemed to be the chief group helping the preference people with their project. But this group away back yonder had been denied by the court the "right to come into court with their version of how the Supreme Court ought to attend to its business.

There has been a patient submission by colored parents to what amounts to mere "token" desegregation. They have carried their little tots to schools where they have been harshly treated by lawless persons, men and women. But far more than the thirteen children scheduled to be integrated at white schools have exercised their prerogative to ask for transfers to colored schools.

Colored parents of 6-year olds have shown no disposition to resent the ugly slurs their enemies have greeted them with. Going to the schools where their children have been assigned required patience and fortitude and colored mothers and fathers have met the test, while many whites have been making themselves ridiculous.

The opposition to the law of the land as far as rdesegregation is concerned is almost wholly composed of that fast fading group in a democracy which looks in the direction of Negroes and other minorities and proclaim: "I AM BETTER THAN YOU AND ALL OF YOU. It is deemed correct nowadays to concede, "YOU ARE AS GOOD BY NATURE AS I AM."

Kasper Arrested

Nashville, Tenn.—At press time, a total of 28 persons had been arrested by Tuesday evening, among them, segregationist John Kasper, who was taken into custody in city court as he sought to make bonds for some of his followers.

Kasper was charged with disorderly and offensive conduct, vagrancy and loitering. G. H. Aikens, whom police identified as Kasper's bodyguard, also was charged with vagrancy and loitering.

Early Wednesday, Kasper had been arrested for the third time in 12 hours and charged with inciting to riot.

Nashville, Tenn.—Police arrested five men for questioning early Tuesday, a few hours after a massive dynamite blast wrecked a newly integrated half-million dolar elementary school here.

Three of the men were seized by Assistant Police Chief F. W. Muller when they refused to move from the vicinity of another grammer school. That school, like the dynamited one, was among six where white and Negro first-graders went to classes for the first time Monday, Sept. 9.

50 Feet of Wire

The other two men, including a brother of the first three, were taken into custody by Sgt. H. B. Cobb and Patrolman Robert Searsy.

The officers said they found at the pairs homes, 50 feet of wire of a type used with the explosives that wrecked the Hattie Cotton Grammar School.

The first three arrested were charged with unlawful possession of weapons and ordered held under bonds of $25,000 each. They were booked as Venson Albert Crimmons, 32; James R. Harris, 47, and J. B. Blackwell, 42.

The other two arrested, identified as Carol Crimmons, brother of Venson, and W. C. Hodge, were charged with vagrancy and held under $250 bonds each.

Dynamite Device

Muller said that in the car of the the first three men arrested he found a dynamite detonating device, a heavily weighted billy club with "KKK" carved on the handle, two heavy wooden mallets and a length of wire of the type used in setting off explosives.

The car, Muller said, was plastered with numberous "KKK" signs. Muller said the three men had been seen Monday at all grammer schools where there were violent anti-integration demonstrations.

Muller said they also had been seen at rallies held here by John Kasper, New Jersey-born segregationist.

A dynamite blast rocked the Hattie Cotton Grammar School shortly after midnight Tuesday morning, Sept. 10.

The blast rocked the entire neighborhood of the three-year-old school, shattering windows in numerous homes. There were no immediate reports of injuries.

The blast demolished the entire west wall of the west wing of the school and knocked out lights in many parts of the city.

Fifteen Negroes were admitted to first grades at six Nashvile schools Monday, Sept. 9.

Bigots Dynamite Nashville School

By BENNOS ISAACS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — One of seven newly integrated Nashville elementary schools was damaged by dynamite early Tuesday as a climax to disorders which marked the first day of integration in the southern city.

Reports of damage to the Hattie Cotton grammar school, the stoning of several Negroes Monday night and the smashing of windshields of passing Negroes' automobiles cames less than 24 hours after 19 Negro children were escorted into the seven schools by police as integration was launched at the first grade level under a federal court ruling.

Meanwhile, Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee turned down a proposal to use the National Guard to prevent integration.

A dynamite charge placed in a hallway of the Hattie Cotton school ripped the building and caused extensive damage. Police said the school, where one Negro child was admitted to classes Monday, was shut down for repairs Tuesday.

Crowd Dispersed

Some 25 policemen dispersed a surly crowd of about 500 at Fehr school Monday night after flying bottles had smashed windshields of passing Negroes' automobiles.

Other officers patrolled Nashville streets after several Negroes were stoned by mobs. Police Lt. William D. Monahan described the mobs as "just teenagers and young kids." He said they threw indiscriminately at passing cars containing Negroes. No complaints were filed and it is not believed anyone was injured.

Two persons were arrested at the Fehr school, scene of minor disturbance while the integration was in progress. Charged with disorderly conduct and breach of the peace were Mrs. Mary Helen Green, 33, who had been arrested at the school earlier in the day, and a man identified as Wilson Lee Brown, 39.

The crowd began assembling at the Fehr school shortly after dark. Two policemen arrived on the scene when reports of bottle throwing were received. They quickly called for reinforcements and fellow officers arrested Mrs. Green and Brown.

Windshields and windows of several passing cars containing Negroes were smashed as the crowd continued to grow but there were no reports of injuries and police dispersed the group.

Meanwhile, a crowd of about 500 gathered Monday night on memorial square near the state Capitol to hear segregationist John Kasper, executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens Council, and other segregation speakers urge resistance to desegregation by boycotting schools.

Kasper told his followers:

"Niggers are an inferior race. Boycott all city schools."

Some parents of white pupils withdrew their children from schools where the 19 Negro first graders were admitted to classes. An unofficial estimate was that more than 10 per cent of the white pupils have either been withdrawn or have been kept at home.

One woman, incignant over integration, said: "We told the teachers that when the colored came out, we'll go back in."

Several incidents took place at Fehr and Glenn schools where absences ranged as high as an estimated 50 per cent and 21 per cent respectively.

Three women, two white and one Negro, were arrested during the disturbances. Angry crowds shouted threats and hurled epithets while the Negro children were being escorted to classes.

Gov. Clement told a delegation which asked him to call out the militia:

"Under our laws and constitution I have no authority to use police powers unless and until law and order have completely broken down."

His stand was made clear while Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas still ringed Little Rock's Central high school with National Guardsmen "to preserve the peace."

The 19 Nashville Negro first graders entered the previously all-white schools in defiance of angry crowds who shouted threats and hurled epithets.

Kasper, executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens Council, toured the schools and kept up his demand for a boycott. He said the attendance of Negroes in the same schools as whites could only set a bad example.

One of the three women arrested, Mrs. Grace McKinley, 21, was charged with disorderly conduct and being armed with a knife. She was released on $550 bond.

The two white women, Mrs. Edna Jean Moore, 32, and Mrs. Helen Green, were charged with disorderly conduct and released on $5 bond each on charges they had struck Negro women.

Forty per cent of the city's 3,200 first graders are Negroes but because of racial concentrations in neighborhoods, only 126 were eligible to attend white schools. Most of the 126, with the exception of the 19 heretofore mentioned, obtained transfers from the white school districts to all-Negro districts.

Some 200 men and women jeered Negro parents bringing their children to school at the Glenn school. The crowd listened to impromptu speeches urging white families to boycott the school.

SCHOOL BEGINS AT NASHVILLE WITH THREAT

Six Negroes Assigned to Mixed Classes

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 28 (AP)—A day of orderly registration for Nashville's first desegregated classes wound up last night with telephone threats aimed at a school official and six of the 13 Negro first graders enrolled for mixed classes.

W. H. Oliver, assistant school superintendent, confirmed that his family had received telephone threats last night after a truck driver of the same name reported he had received such threats from callers mistaking him for the official.

Enrollment Falls Off

Enrollment yesterday was 4 per cent below expectations, officials said, but no violence or disorders were reported as Negro mothers brought their 6 year olds to their newly assigned schools.

One white first grader enrolled in a previously all-Negro school.

Telephone threats of violence and harm to their children were reported by parents of six of the Negro children last night. The parents of a seventh child said their phone rang repeatedly, but the caller hung up without saying anything.

Get Police Protection

When informed of the threats against the pupils, Oliver said:

"The police department gave us strong and complete protection yesterday and everything went smoothly. I have been assured from them that we will receive the same protection when these children return to class."

Registration day was reported quiet at Clinton high school in east Tennessee. The school 200 miles from here, scene of racial violence last fall when it became the first state-supported secondary school in Tennessee to desegregate, enrolled two 15 year old Negro freshmen without incident.

No Incidents Expected

Three Negroes registered last spring, and three others were expected to be on hand when the high school classes open Sept. 3. W. D. Human, principal, said he anticipates a year without incident.

John Kasper, northern segregationist convicted of stirring up racial disorders at Clinton last year in violation of a federal injunction, appeared at Nashville schools yesterday.

He had previously called for a peaceful registration and confined his activities to passing out pro-segregation hand

Some May Be Protesting

Oliver gave three possible reasons for the light registration at Nashville. He said some parents might hold their children out of school in protest at desegregation, others may have waited to see how things turned out the first day, and still others may not have known about the registration. It was the first special registration date for the 1st grades.

Estimates had indicated 126 Negro children were eligible to enroll in 15 previously all-white schools. Oliver said, "I don't think Negro parents were afraid to send their children—I think they just preferred not to send them."

Hand Out Bills

Segregationists met at schools to be integrated and handed out leaflets protesting the court ordered desegregation, but no violence or disorderly conduct was reported.

The school board's court approved desegregation plan calls for integrating the first grade this fall and submitting to the court by Dec. 31 plans for desegregating the other grades.

School Segregation Broken In Nashville

Daily World Atlanta, Ga Tues. 9-10-57

By BENNO ISAACS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Negro students broke the traditional segregation pattern at eight Nashville elementary schools Monday under protection of city police.

Jeering crowds carrying pro-segregation placards gathered at a number of the schools where first grade pupils attended white classes under the city's "gradual" integration plan worked out to comply with a federal court order. Quick action by a reserve police squad prevented violence at one school where an angry mob of some 250 persons encircled officers trying to clear a path for three Negro students.

GAINING STRENGTH

A boycott of the school system by white students, in protest to the admission of Negroes, appeared to be gaining strength. Many students apparently had remained at home Monday, and 50 students withdrew from the Glenn School, where the biggest demonstration was held.

Nashville Mayor Ben West, meanwhile, ordered a full-time police body guard for Negro City Councilman Alexander Looby, the president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Looby has been a leader in efforts to end racial segregation in Nashville schools. The mayor's office did not explain the order to provide Looby protection, and the attorney's office said he was out of town.

The boycott was urged by Jack Kershaw, leader of the pro-segregation Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government. He urged parents to send their children to private schools, or establish schools in private homes.

COUNCIL EMBLEMS

Most of the city's elementary schools were picketed by advocates of segregation, a number of whom arrived in automobiles bearing Ku Klux Klan and White Citizens Council emblems. The pickets carried placards reading:

"Keep our white schools white."

"Keep your kids at home."

"What God hath put asunder let no man join."

There were jeers and sharp verbal exchanges between crowds in front of the schools and Negro parents accompanying the first-grade students, but no physical violence was threatened except at the Glenn School at Northeast Nashville.

There, where the crowd began gathering some two hours before classes were to begin, a cruising patrol of police reserves broke up an angry demonstration which which treatened for a brief period to get out of hand.

The crowd at Glenn School, estimated at 250, congregated before the door of the school, blocking the entrance.

Three officers attempted to clear a path and one white man accused a city detective of shoving him. There were murmurs about police "rolling out the velvet carpet for them (Negroes)," followed by some angry remarks between white people in the crowd and Negro adults accompanying the children.

The crowd encircled the Negroes and their protecting officers and began to close in as remarks became more heated. A cruising squad of police reserves, however, moved in quickly to disperse the crowd, and officers escorted the children into the school.

A survey at the end of the first day of Nashville's plan to integrate its schools gradually showed that, instead of the 13 Negro students who last week registered at five schools, nineteen students attended seven schools.

School officials had estimated that 126 Negro students were eligible to attend previously all-white schools. The gradual plan, integrating only the first grade at the current school session, was adopted "reluctantly" by the Nashville School board after a federal court ordered it to comply with the U. S. Supreme Court School desegregation decision. The court has ordered that a complete plan for de-segregation be presented by the end of the year.

Nashville Girl's Mother Keeps Her In Mixed School

Daily World Tues. 9-15-57 Atlanta Ga

BY BENNO ISAACS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (INS)—A young mother who says she "never had any trouble with white folks before" had a great deal of it last week when she entered her daughter in an all-white Nashville elementary school.

Mrs. Grace McKinney, 21, has kept her only child, six-year-old Linda Gail, attending the Fehr Public school school since it began its fall term last Monday.

Mrs. McKinley said Saturday she has been the victim of abuse and threats. A barn in her backyard was set afire. But she maintained a perfect first-week attendance record for her child. She said:

"I'm stubborn because I feel deep down that what I am doing is the right thing, and nobody can change my mind."

It all began, Mrs. McKinley related, when Linda was rejected from an integrated Catholic school because it was overcrowded. At that time Mrs. McKinley said she did not even consider getting into any racial muddle and added:

"I just wanted to send my child to school. I would have liked her to go to a private school, but I didn't have the money. When I was told the new law made it all right for me to send Linda to the school on the next block, I decided that was what I was going to do."

Nashville Determined On Quiet Integration

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 9 (AP).—School officials, backed by 110 policemen, took the first small step in desegregating Nashville public schools today, determined to make the transition peaceful.

They called on parents yesterday to send their children to school with assurance they would be safe, while segregation leaders urged parents to keep the children at home and go themselves as pickets.

Under plans approved by United States District Judge William E. Miller, Nashville schools are beginning desegregation with first graders today. Further desegregation plans must be submitted to the court by December 31.

The new first grade zoning made about 126 colored children eligible to enter formerly all-white schools.

More than half of these have asked and obtained transfers to colored schools under provisions of the plan. Only 13 colored registered for mixed classes at five schools in advance of school opening.

Assistant Superintendent W. H. Oliver urged parents to have their children in school today and called for calmness and order as classes begin. He again assured parents they need not worry about the safety of their children, because the police will be on hand.

Police Chief Douglas E. Hosse said Saturday he would have 110 to 115 policemen assigned to keep order at the schools. He said peaceful picketing would be allowed but anybody who is disorderly or who tries to intimidate anybody would be arrested on the spot.

About 150 segregationists gathered in a drizzling rain and sat in their cars to listen to John Kasper and other White Citizens Council speakers urge all-out resistance to desegregation.

A spokesman for a more moderate pro-segregation group, the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, issued a statement reminding parents that Tennessee's compulsory school law does not apply to 6-year-olds, the age of most first graders.

Jack Kershaw, Nashville real estate man and vice chairman of the federation, said, "As a matter of fact, all parents should keep their children out of school, regardless of age, because under the . . . law, parents can send their children will be assigned to keep order at the schools.

"The education of 28,000 boys and girls of Nashville is too big a thing, too important to let anything stand in the way of its successful start," he said. "We are now ready to go to work and we hope all the children will be at school tomorrow."

A spokesman for the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional government, which has advocated legal resistance to desegregation, called for a first-grade boycott, reminding parents that Tennessee's compulsory attendance law does not apply to six-year-olds.

Jack Kershaw, Nashville real estate man and vice chairman of the federation said, "Parents should keep their children out of school if they're under seven.

"As a matter of fact," he added, "all parents should keep their children out of school, regardless of age, because under the law . . . parents can send their children to a private school or a day school and I don't see why each parent can't declare their home a day school."

Nashville schools are scheduled to begin mixed classes for the first time tomorrow under the first step of court-ordered desegregation.

Under the court-approved plan, 126 Negro first graders were eligible to enroll in formerly all-white schools. More than half of these have requested and been granted transfers. Only 13 have registered for mixed classes.

School Integration Advances Slowly

World P. 5
Sat. 9-14-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — "The Solid South" — with the exception of North Carolina — continues to defy the Supreme Court order to de-segregate schools, integration figures showed Saturday.

Southern educational reporting service statistics revealed nearly two-million whites and 350,000 Negroes are in "integrated situations" as opposed to seven-million whites and 2,450,000 Negro pupils in the 17 Southern border states and District of Columbia still segregated.

The Southern School News reported continued public school segregation in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia, while Virginia and Louisiana have Negroes enrolled in their colleges.

Continuing legislation against integration has brought to 141 the number of "Defense" enactments made by the Southern States to protect against the U. S. Supreme Court integration ruling of 1954. — Thirty-five new measures were passed this year.

The reporting service said 740 school districts have been desegregated since the high court ruling, while 2,300 still remain unmixed.

Clement Blasts 'Hypocrisy' on Race Relations

Star P. A14

Mon. 9-16-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 16 (AP).—Gov. Frank Clement, citing racial violence in Illinois, Detroit and Levittown, Pa., says he resents Northern implications that race relations are solely a Southern problem.

"If we're going to wash the dirty linen," the Governor told a national television audience yesterday, "let's lay aside hypocrisy and all go to the laundry together."

Gov. Clement was interviewed on the "Face the Nation" CBS program about the violent Nashville school integration situation last week. Declaring himself a Southerner who believes in segregation, Gov. Clement declared the bombing last Tuesday of Hattie Cotton Elementary School here did more to hasten race mixing than anyone "who favors integration."

Conscience Shocked

"It shocked the conscience of this city as I have never known anything else to shock its conscience. It put decent people who wanted to oppose integration in a position where they would not do so."

Gov. Clement, under questioning, said he would not hesitate to call out the National Guard, as he did last year at Clinton, if local law enforcement breaks down. But, he said, it has not broken down here and he has no intention of intervening in the Nashville situation.

The TV interview was Gov. Clement's first comment on the situation here. He had refused comment all last week.

He said he felt racial unrest in the South may be hurting Dixie in its quest for new industry, declaring that "unrest, violence and indecision don't attract industry to any section of the country. Asked if he felt integration trouble might also result in a stronger civil rights bill, he said, "It may."

"If the Shoe Fits"

His reference to indecision followed a question as to whether he agreed with President Eisenhower that patience was needed in dealing with civil rights.

"I certainly do," he said, "but I think from time to time we should ask ourselves whether we are using patience as a substitute for indecision." Asked if he felt the President undecided, Gov. Clement replied:

"Tonight, I see no reason to offer any criticism of the President of the United States. If the shoe fits, we'll just have to let everybody wear it (sic)."

Nashville Pupils Go on Holiday

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 16 (AP).—Nashville school children, both white and Negro, took off today for a holiday at the State Fair after a week of violence and tension at newly-integrated schools.

Mon. 9-16-57

School officials expect to resume classes with desegregated first grades tomorrow without trouble. Police planned to drop some of their emergency precautions at the schools.

The only big reminder of last week's disorders, in addition to a hole blasted in the side of Hattie Cotton Elementary School, was today's scheduled Federal Court hearing on whether an order banning interference with desegregation should be continued.

United States District Judge William E. Miller ordered segregationist John Kasper and 11 other defendants to show why the restrainer shouldn't be continued, with an injunction similar to that in the Clinton Kasper has been convicted twice of violating the Clinton injunction on grounds that he formented strife over racial integration in 1956 of Clinton High School. He is free on bond pending further action in both cases.

At present, the New Jersey-born segregationist is in Davidson County Jail here on a State charge of inciting to riot.

Nashville law kills school JC

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A new zoning layout set up by this city's school board to achieve desegregation on the first grade level in public schools has made it possible for integration to begin this fall here.

The action came after the school board drafted an integration plan that was approved by Federal Judge William E. Miller following court action in the matter.

Sat 8-17-57

THE NEW ZONING LAW changed 23 school zones that had previously overlapped, but is restricted currently only to the first grade levels. The second through 12th grade level pupils will remain segregated as before.

* * *

THE NEW LAW allows parents of pupils zoned into schools or grades predominatly attended by the opposite race to seek transfers for their children.

Due to this facet of the law, the number of schools that will actually achieve racial integration on the first grade level cannot be determined.

Nashville Completes Desegregation Plans

BY BENNO ISAACS

NASHVILLE Tenn. — (INS) — Nashville's mayor said the school board will submit its complete pans for gradual desegregation to the Federal Court for approval in December, as attendance in Nashville schools approached the normal tempo Wednesday.

THREATENING CROWDS

Youngsters who last week had been withheld from going to school by parents who feared the threatening crowds, trooped to classes today, threatened only by the cloudy weather.

At the same time, Mayor Ben West said the school board will go ahead and submit plans for further desegregation of the schools to the Federal Courts in December. The program would call for the gradual desegregation of grades until complete integration is obtained.

First grade classes were desegregated last week in a blaze of violence which subsided with the arrest of John Kasper and other "professional" pro-segregationists.

Kasper remained in a county jail cell, unable to raise $2,500 bond and a Federal Court injunction curtailing interference with peaceful school integration was in effect. Police, armed with copies of the injunction, kept traffic around the schools moving, and found no need to invoke the court order.

Sat. 9-21-57

Commenting on the 90 per cent attendance in the city's five integrated public schools where 11 Negroes are now attending classes the mayor said:

"I think the situation shapes up fine at the moment. We don't anticipate any trouble. I would like to commend the police department on their fine job of law enforcement."

Most Southern Schools Maintain Segregation

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UP) — Southern School News said Saturday that nearly 2,500,000 Negroes and 7,000,000 white children are still in segregated school systems in southern and border states.

This figures compares, the publication said, with 350,000 Negro and 2,000,000 white children who are in integrated situations.

The report said 2,300 school districts in the area are still segregated, while 740 have been integrated.

The publication, issued by the Southern Education Reporting Service, said 27 districts were scheduled to desegregate this fall.

Seven of those were in Missouri, six in Kentucky, five in Arkansas, four in Oklahoma, three in North Carolina and one each in Tennessee and Maryland.

The publicantion said schools remain segregated in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia although Negroes are enrolled in colleges in Virginia and Louisiana.

Mon 9-9-57

At least 442 school districts in the southern and border states were desegregated in the two years after the U.S. Supreme Court ruling in 1954, Southern School News said. It added that by the end of last year the number of desegregated districts had jumped to 740.

THE DAY A CHILD registers for first grade is always a big moment. Here, six-year-old Bobby Cabknor relaxes, undisturbed by it all, as his mother, Mrs. Lucy Cabknor, gives Miss Stella Mae Groomes, Fehr school principal, Nashville, registration data for her son. They receive no special attention from others in the room who quietly attend their tasks.

Tennessee orders drafting of new integration plan

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The Tennessee State Board of Education last week directed a subcommittee to draft "with all deliberate speed" a new plan for desegregation of the six state-operated colleges and universities.

The new plan would replace one voided by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals which provided for immediate desegregation of graduate schools and desegregation of undergrad schools one year at a time, beginning with the senior year.

The board also asked presidents of state colleges to propose new entrance requirements as authorized by the 1957 session of the Legislature.

Urge Halt To Nashville Integration

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Nashville parents have made another concerted effort — 5,062 of them — to keep their children from public school racial mixing.

The school board said it received a petition last week containing the signatures of both white and Negro parents urging the board not to assign pupils to integrated schools. The petition was accompanied by another 920 signatures — another concerted effort — 5,062 of them — of "interested citizens."

Nashville first grade classes are to undergo integration this fall by a Federal Court order to end compulsory segregation. The petitions, presented by the parents school preference committee, asks the board to obey the law as passed by the state general assembly, which authorizes creation of segregated schools for pupils whose parents request them.

Nashville Ministers Urge Acceptance Of Integration In 'Christian Spirit'

By BENJAMIN FINE

© New York Times News Service

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 25.—Many clergymen called upon the people of this city Sunday to accept school integration in a "Christian spirit."

They asked the citizens to avoid violence, and to support the School Board in its program under which the first grade in Nashville's schools will be desegregated when classes open in September.

Some of the clergymen spoke in general terms, urging their members to obey the law of the land and accept the concept of "the brotherhood of man."

The clergymen had been asked to speak on the subject of integration by Raymond T. Ferris, president of the Nashville Association of Churches, and Herbert S. McConnell, secretary of the Nashville Ministers Association.

While the ministers were preaching the gospel of good will and nonviolence, others at Nashville called for violent action to resist integration.

John Kasper, executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens Council, and Ace Carter, executive secretary of the Alabama White Citizens Council, urged the citizens of Nashville to reject integration. They addressed about 200 persons at an outdoor meeting.

Nashville Integrates Its Schools

Herald Tribune N.Y. Wed. 8-28-57

Registration On Without Incident

Special to the Herald Tribune

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 27.—Twelve Negro first-grade pupils were registered without incident today in three of Nashville's fifteen newly-desegregated, previously all-white elementary schools.

The dozen Negro youngsters for only three schools represented but a token registration for the first day, for about 125 Negro children are eligible for the desegregated first-grades in the fifteen schools. But more are expected to apply before tomorrow's deadline.

Historic Milestone

Token number or not, their registration made history in the South. It breached in orderly fashion another heretofore impregnable wall of segregationist tradition. For Nashville is the first major city of the South proper to desegregate any of its previously white elementary schools—and it is the elementary schools above all that the segregationists have wanted to preserve against racial mixing.

Nothing even approaching a disturbance occurred. The Police Department had ninety-two officers standing by ready to speed by prowl car and motorcycle to any scene of trouble, but they had nothing to do. Groups of teen-agers and young adults passed out "Keep Our White Schools White!" handbills put out by the segregationist Federation for Constitutional Government, and clusters of white segregationists and white anti-segregationists engaged in arguments here and there near the elementary schools.

School Superintendent W. A. Bass and Assistant School Superintendent W. H. Oliver passed much of the day tuoring around the fifteen potentially affected elementary schools, and at times they were verbally beset with complaints from segregationists.

But none of these emotional exercises could be classed as "incidents." The dire warnings of trouble made earlier by segregationist extremists, who are in the great minority in this city, did not materialize. The overwhelming sentiment of the city's population has been on the side of law and order throughout, however distasteful desegregation may seem to some persons. Ths appears to have had a strong moral effect today.

"New Era for Us"

The two school system heads, Mr. Bass and Mr. Oliver, expressed the feelings of a majority of the citizens in statements they made today.

"This occasion is a new era for us," Mr. Bass said. "We don't know what will happen, but we want the principals to be fearless, unafraid and to be able to meet the public with confidence and fairness."

Mr. Oliver said:

"We must remember that while there is a white race and a Negro race, there is also a human race, all the members of which are creatures of a great God and Heavenly Father. We ought to treat everybody with respect and fairness.

"There are a few big days in the life of every human being and the first day of school is one of them. Let's try to make this the best day for the children that we can."

Race Relations Good

Nashville is an almost ideal city to spearhead elementary school desegregation. Because of its many institutions of higher education, its numerous church organizational headquarters and its many other cultural attractions (it even has a full-scale replica of the Greek Parthenon), it calls itself "The Athens of the South."

Its race relations have been good for many years; better than in many other big Southern cities. It has a Negro member on the school board, two Negro members on the City Council, and Negroes on the police force. White and Negro leaders have for many years been used to meeting together and working out solutions to interracial problems.

Planned Desegregation

The wall of prejudice against racial mixing in the elementary schools was breached through careful planning.

First, the Federal court ordered the public schools desegregated under a two-step arrangement—one grade to be immediately desegregated and then the school board to submit to the court for approval a plan and time schedule for desegregating all other grades.

After much consideration, the school board decided that it would be easier and better to start desegregation in the first grade rather than, say, the senior year of high school. It ordered the first grades to be integrated for this school year. Under the plan to be submitted, it is expected the board will desegregate the higher elementary grades progressively.

An "Out" for Diehards

If this plan is followed and approved, Negro children entering the first grade this year could go all the way through school in integrated classes.

Next, the school authorities arranged meetings and discussions with various civic groups to inform and prepare them for the momentous step. At the same time, the state Legislature passed a series of enactments that allow an "out" for any segregationist diehards who don't want to send their children to desegregated schools under any circumstances.

Separate Schools, Too

These laws provide that local school boards can maintain separate schools for parents who elect to send their children to schools of their own choosing. This applies to either white or Negro parents. A small fraction of both white and Negro parents have, in fact, taken advantage of this escape hole by indicating they wish to send their children to the "separate" schools. This will, however, be far more inconvenient for the pupils from the travel standpoint.

Another ameliorating factor is built into the school situation by the fact that school districts generally conform to residential districts, white and Negro.

It is because of this zoning factor that the statistical effect of the desegregation is as follows: out of 3,200 first-grade pupils in the city, about 1,280 are Negroes, and only one-tenth of them live in residential areas where white schools are situated. Thus about 125 are eligible to attend the previously all-white first-grade classrooms this year.

The breakdown on today's registration by schools was, two Negro registrants for the Glenn Scholo; five for the Fehr School, and five for the Buena Vista School.

Registration at Clinton

CLINTON, Tenn., Aug. 27 (AP).—Eight Negroes apparently will start classes a week from today when Clinton High School begins its second year of integrated operation.

Two of them, both freshmen, had registered quietly by noon and three more indicated last spring they would return. In addition, Negro students registering today said they expected three more to join them in school this year.

It was the first firm word that Negroes planned to return to the high school here, after last year's stormy session which was punctuated by frequent violence and almost constant tension.

Court Action Planned

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Aug. 27 (AP).—Twenty-one white parents obtained a show cause court order here yesterday requiring the school board to appear before Judge Hugh B. Campbell Thursday to defend its admission of four Negro students in previously all-white schools. On the same day, the court will hear arguments in a similar proceeding involving the Greensboro school board's admission of six Negro students to previously all-white schools.

Negroes Register In Nashville Schools

Tues. 8-27-57 P. 1

By the United Press.

ATLANTA, Aug. 27.—Negro students registered without incident at white schools in Nashville, Tenn., today for the first time in the city's history, while in other parts of the South protesting parents fought in the courts to uphold segregation.

Four Negro boys registered in Nashville's white schools when the doors opened and others were expected to follow suit during the day.

One white woman who brought her daughter to register, returned the child without signing up when she learned the Negroes were registering. However, there was no report of trouble.

It was reported that John Kasper, segregation leader, was at the Glenn School where 25 Negro first graders were eligible to register.

The first grades in Nashville's public schools are scheduled to integrate this year as the start of a gradual desegragation plan.

The segregation developments weren't confined to the South, however. At St. Albans, Vt., a Ku Klux Klan-style cross was burned at a park after a fight between a Negro airman and a white airman in Colp, Ill. It was reported that parents of 40 white children had withdrawn from an integrated school and entered them at other schools.

In Charlotte, N. C., parents of white children went into court to stay a school integration order scheduled to take effect next week. In Clinton, Tenn., registration began in the high school for the second year of intergrated classes. Clinton last summer was the scene of an outburst of racial violence touched off following the appearance of 12 Negro students at the school.

Study Committee Calls For Improvements First

Sat. 8-31-57 P. 1

The Memphis and Shelby County School Consolidation Committee has recommended that a merger of the two systems be delayed until improvements within each system can be made.

In a letter to Mayor Edmund Orgill and members of the City and County Commissions, the committee headed by Watkins Overton pointed out that both systems can improve themselves without consolidation.

"We do not see any major improvements in our educational systems which are wholly dependent on consolidating the two school systems," the letter stated. "Major improvements in the educational systems can and should be effected regardless of consolidation."

The committee's recommendations were made after a study of an analysis made by researchers from the Division of Surveys and Field Services of George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville. The Peabody team completed its year-long $20,000 survey last month.

The survey, at times bitingly critical, pointed out that the cost of consolidating alone would be $165,000 per year.

State, Federal Police Move On Troublemakers

Sat. 9-14-57

Montgomery, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 13 (AP) —State and federal authorities moved in from three directions today on troublemakers responsible for school integration disorders here.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. District Court and the Davidson County (Nashville) grand jury all acted swiftly to prevent repetition of violence which erupted with this week's start toward mixing the races in Nashville's elementary schools.

Atty. Gen. Brownell announced in Washington the FBI is turning over to authorities here information of "possible significance" in Tuesday's dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton Elementary School.

Within minutes after Brownell's announcement FBI agents here turned over to police an unidentified man who "might have a bearing" on the dynamiting.

U. S. marshals served papers on 10 of 12 individuals named in an order yesterday by U. S. Dist. Judge William E. Miller restraining further interference with peaceful integration of first-graders in city schools. Two of those named couldn't be located.

The county grand jury indicted Northern segregationist John Kasper for inciting to riot. Kasper already fined $200 on misdemeanor charges for his activities here remained in jail in default of $2,500 bond.

These developments climaxed a week of riotous anti-integration demonstrations. A total of 39 persons, 13 Negroes and 26 whites were arrested in and around the six elementary schools where Negro children were enrolled for the first time.

Acting on orders of Judge Miller, mixed first-grade classes started Monday. Under the approved plan, 126 Negroes were eligible to attend integrated classes but all except 12 elected to transfer to Negro schools.

Nashville has approximately 3,500 first-graders in all, including about 2,000 whites.

White attendance, which fell off as much as 70 per cent at the elementary schools earlier in the week, showed a continuing increase today.

Clinton-Type Writ Handed Down After School Violence

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 12 (AP) —Federal Judge William E. Miller issued a strongly worded temporary court order today forbidding interference with officials carrying out his orders to desegregate Nashville schools.

Nashville city and school officials asked for the temporary restraining order to strengthen their hands against violence which has accompanied desegregation of first grades here.

The Clinton-type order forbids 12 individuals and anybody else acting in concert with them from interfering with school attendance in any manner.

The defendants include Northern segregationist John Kasper, who already has been convicted twice of violating similar injunctions during school integration violence in Clinton, Tenn., last year.

UNEASY CALM

The move in U.S. District Court came during the second day of uneasy calm which has replaced the violence accompanying admission of 15 Negro first-graders to six formerly all-white schools Monday.

The violence reached its peak early Tuesday with a dynamite blast which ripped open one of the newly integrated schools. Impatient police promptly turned tough and made dozens of arrests as they kept all demonstrators well scattered away from the key schools.

The Negro first-graders were admitted in the first step of a desegregation plan approved by Judge Miller.

The plan made 126 Negroes eligible to enter mixed classes. But most of them elected to transfer to Negro schools. Nashville has 3,500 first-graders, including 2,000 whites among a total enrollment of about 18,000.

HEARING MONDAY

Judge Miller set a hearing for Monday at 1 p.m. on whether an injunction should be issued to replace the restraining order.

Eighteen affidavits relating incidents of violence, threats and intimidation were read in court in support of the injunction petition presented by school board lawyers. Attorneys filed sample copies of Kasper handbills and 67 pictures of meetings he addressed here recently.

Judge Miller commented, "The facts as presented here literally cry out for issuance of an injunction at this time."

The order prohibits the defendants from "further interfering, by acts of trespass, boycott or picket, with the free operation of schools within the city of Nashville."

It also forbids them "from in any manner deterring the attendance at school of children" or "threatening or intimidating the school children or their parents" or "school officials or employes."

And it forbids "any actions of any kind whatsoever which seek to compel by force, intimidation, threats or violence the violation or defiance of the judgment of this court."

The injunction which U.S. Dist. Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoville issued to back up his Clinton integration decree resulted in the conviction of six persons besides Kasper on charges of criminal contempt of court.

SIX CONVICTED

9-13-57

The other six, who were not named in the injunction, were convicted of conspiring with Kasper to violate it. Kasper was named as a defendant.

P. 5-A

Kasper has appealed a one-year sentence on his first and new trial motions are pending in the second case against all seven, which was tried last July.

Mayor Ben West, who joined Asst. School Supt. W. H. Oliver and City Atty. Raymond Leathers in signing the federal court petition here today, has asked that Kasper's $12,000 bond on his first conviction be revoked.

Other defendants named in today's petition here included:

The Rev. John F. McCurrio of Albuquerque, N.M., who identifies himself as a nondenominational minister, and who has been a frequent speaker at Kasper's segregationist rallies here.

The Rev. Fred Stroud, pastor of the Bible Presbyterian church here, who also has been closely associated with Kasper's activities here.

Vincent A. Crimmons and James Harris, who were arrested here Tuesday and held for questioning in the dynamiting.

Others were Wilson Lee Brown, James Jarrell, Emmett A. Carr, Mrs. Margaret L. Conquest, Mrs. Mary B. Stinson, J.A. Stinson and Paul McConnell. All but Kasper and McCurrio were listed as Nashville area residents.

Home Threatened, Nashville School Officer Claims

Birmingham, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — A Nashville school official revealed new threats Thursday and an attempt to burn his home, as a result of plans to integrate the city's schools.

Sat. 9-7-57

Asst. city school supt. W. H. Oliver demanded police protection Thursday. He complained a "fireball" of burning paper was thrown on the porch of his home Wednesday night. He had received a steady stream of telephone threats since 13 Negro students were registered for integrated first grade classes this week.

Oliver said he found only a handful of charred paper, after the fireball burned paint off the porch steps. It could have caused serious damage, he said, if the fireball had fallen into leaves and shrubs near the porch.

Two principals of all-white schools where Negroes have registered for classes have been receiving telephone threats many of them also abusive in nature, Oliver said.

Nashville mayor Ben West, meanwhile, told a citizen committee claiming to represent 6,000 persons opposed to school integration that he intends to follow the law on school assignment, under which token integration is scheduled for Sept. 9. West said however, he would back the citizens' group's right to seek a court test of the law.

Intergration of Southern schools was the subject of court action in three North Carolina cities today. The school boards at Greensboro and Charlotte were attacked for a decision to allow integration to begin, and the school board at Raleigh was under attack for refusing to end segregation.

NASHVILLE POLICE GIRD FOR TROUBLE

All Leaves Are Called Off for Desegregation of the Schools Tomorrow

P. 67 L

By ROBERT ALDEN

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 7—All police leaves were canceled here today as the city prepared for the first major test in Tennessee of the desegregation of a municipal school system. The school term begins on Monday.

New York

Chief of Police Douglas E. Hosse said, as he issued his police orders today, that he did not know whether there would be trouble "but we've got to be prepared."

"When you've got outside hoodlums in the city you don't know what to expect," he added.

Jun. 9-8-57

Apparently he was referring to Frederick John Kasper, executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens Council, who has been advocating violence in nightly speeches here.

Kasper is from New Jersey. As developments of his anti-integration activities in the South he has been convicted of contempt of a Federal court and of conspiring to hinder integration at a high school in Clinton, Tenn.

90 Policemen Available

Chief Hosse will have about ninety men available Monday. He said that all the city's schools would be under police guard, but that special attention would be given to the five formerly all-white elementary schools where Negro children have registered.

He said that he planned to post a detective or policeman in plain clothes at each of these schools. The officers will mingle with the crowds. If trouble starts he will not himself try to check it but will call for help from fellow officers deployed in the area.

"Whatever comes we'll be prepared for it," Chief Hosse declared. Asked if he might call for outside help, he replied: "I don't expect we'll need any."

Gov. Frank G. Clement has taken the position that he cannot use the Tennessee National Guard except after the start of any trouble. The State Constitution dates to the Reconstruction days of 1870. It says that the state militia can be used only in cases of insurrection and then only with the consent of the State General Assembly. The General Assembly is not in session.

Because of his stand concerning use of the National Guard, Governor Clement has come under fire from a radical fringe in the state.

In Memphis yesterday an auditorium at which the Governor was speaking was picketed by men carrying signs reading "Fire Clement—Hire Faubus," "Faubus Thinks — Clement Stinks" and "Organize, Elect a Man Govornor."

The stage was set for Monday's school opening by a Federal District Court ruling yesterday. Judge William E. Miller ruled unconstitutional a specially-drafted Tennessee school law. The law would have allowed the Nashville School Board to set up separate schools in cases where parents wanted their children to be pupils only with children of their own race.

Judge Miller directed that the school board proceed Monday with desegregation of the school system, starting with the first grade. A plan for desegregation of the entire school system must be submitted to him by the school board before the end of the year.

There will be 3,200 first grade pupils in Nashville this year. Forty per cent are Negroes. However, because of racial concentrations in neighborhoods only 126 of these are in districts where they are eligible to attend previously all-white schools.

Sixty-five of these pupils have indicated that they would prefer to attend all-Negro schools outside of their own neighborhood districts. Because of a lenient transfer law they are permitted to switch schools if they desire.

Thirteen Negro first grade students, however, have enrolled in previously all-white schools.

Some Families Threatened

The families of some of these pupils have received threatening telephone calls and have been subjected to other attempts at intimidation. The parents of one have indicated lately that they wish the child to attend an all-Negro school.

The forty-eight of the 126 Negro children who have not thus far signified their intent can register Monday at integrated or unintegrated schools, which ever they choose.

The only community in Tennessee having schools is Oak Ridge, the atomic energy center that is under Federal control. It was desegregated immediately after the Supreme Court ruling ordering that step.

The high school at Clinton was desegregated last year amid disturbances.

William Arthur Bass, Nashville superintendent of the schools, who, at 69, is facing the toughest job of his fifty years in the teaching profession, said yesterday that he did not look for serious trouble anywhere in the city Monday.

"I am assuming people will act with proper respect for the law," he said.

He was more concerned over the possibility of boycott of desegregated schools by white pupils, he added than over the threat of violence.

FIRST NEGROES ENTER SCHOOLS IN NASHVILLE

Times

10 Pct. of White Pupils Stay Away

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9 [Special]—More than 10 per cent of the white pupils were withdrawn or were otherwise absent at seven elementary schools here today as 18 Negro children were escorted into the schools by police in the first integration of classes in this southern city.

Virtually the entire police force of more than 100 was on duty. Crowds ranging as high as 200 persons gathered at some of the schools. A few stones were tossed, but most of the white people's resentment was confined to jeering and scolding police for "backing the Negroes" rather than the white residents.

Jun. 9-10-57

Three Women Arrested

Three women were arrested at the Fehr school. Mrs. Grace McKinley, 21, a Negro, was charged with disorderly conduct and carrying a knife for the purpose of being armed. The woman, a manicurist, was released on $550 bond.

Two white women, Mrs. Edna Jean Moore, 32, and Mrs. Helen Greer, were charged with disorderly conduct and released on $5 bond each on charges they had struck Negro women.

Under a federal court ruling, integration was launched at the 1st grade level in the previously all-white schools. Forty per cent of the city's 3,200 1st graders are Negroes but, because of racial concentrations in neighborhoods, only 126 were eligible to attend the white schools. Most of the 126 obtained transfers from the white school districts to all-Negro districts.

Mothers Withdraw Children

The greatest commotions occurred at the Fehr and Glenn schools, where absences ranged as high as an estimated 50 per cent and 21 per cent, respectively.

After police had escorted Negro children into the school, many white mothers entered and withdrew their children.

"We told the teachers that when the colored came out, we'll go back in," Mrs. Alberta Young reported.

About 200 men and women assembled at the Glenn school. They jeered Negro parents bringing their children to school and listened to impromptu speeches urging white families to boycott the school.

Segregationist John Kasper, executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens council, made a tour of the schools calling for a boycott. Several persons carried American and Confederate flags.

Knoxville, Tenn., Pays Higher Salaries to Negro Teachers!

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. 11-17-56

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Negro school teachers are paid more than whites, on the average, according to a statement by the Knoxville School Board last week.

The statement was part of a brief filed by the board asking Federal District Court not to order local schools desegregated as requested in a suit filed last Jan. 7 by 12 Knoxville children through their parents.

The local board sought to show that schools and salaries are equal, and that the majority of both races here do not want desegregation of the schools.

Teacher salaries for white men averaged $4,221.58 a year, while Negro men drew $4,485.38. White women teachers earned $4,027.12 per year, as compared with $4,102.46 a year for Negro teachers.

Knoxville has 32 white schools and 11 Negro schools. There are 18,585 white students and 4,284 Negro students. White teachers number 697, while there are 155 Negro teachers in the local public schools.

The suit filed by Infant Dianne Ward and 11 others in January asks the court to order them admitted to schools nearest their residences.

Threats Mar Enrollment Of Negroes in Nashville

Star Wed. 8-28-57

Washington D.C. 8-28-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 28 (AP).—A day of orderly registration for Nashville's first desegregated classes wound up last night with telephone threats aimed at a school official and six of the 13 Negro first-graders enrolled for mixed classes.

Assistant School Supt. W. H. Oliver confirmed last night that his family had received telephone threats after a truck driver of the same name reported he had received such threats from callers mistaking him for the official.

Enrollment yesterday was 43 per cent below expectations, officials said, but no violence or disorders were reported as Negro mothers brought their 6-year-olds to their newly assigned schools.

One white first-grader enrolled in a previously all-Negro school.

Telephone threats of violence and harm to their children were reported by parents of six of the Negro children last night. The parents of a seventh child said their phone rang repeatedly, but the caller hung up without saying anything.

Protection Assured

When informed of the threats against the pupils, Mr. Oliver said:

"The Police Department gave us strong and complete protection yesterday and everything went smoothly. I have been assured from them that we will receive the same protection when these children return to class."

Registration day was reportion, others may have waited to see how things turned out the first day, and still others may not have known about the registration. It was the first special registration date for the first graders.

Leaflets Distributed

Estimates had indicated 126 Negro children were eligible to enroll in 15 previously all-white schools. Mr. Oliver said, "I don't think Negro parents were afraid to send their children—I think they just preferred not to send them."

Segregationists met at schools to be integrated and handed out leaflets in protest of the court-ordered desegregation, but no violence or disorderly conduct was reported.

The school board's court-approved desegregation plan calls for integrating the first grade this fall and submitting to the court by December 31 plans for desegregating the other grades.

ed quiet at Clinton High School in East Tennessee. The school 200 miles from here, scene of racial violence last fall when it became th efirst State-supported secondary school in Tennessee to desegregate, enrolled two 15-year-old Negro freshmen without incident.

Three Negroes registered last spring and three others were expected to be on hand when the high school classes open September 3. Principal W. D. Human said he anticipates a year without incident.

Kasper Makes Appearance

John Kasper, Northern segregationist convicted of stirring up racial disorders at Clinton last year in violation of a Federal injunction, appeared at Nashville schools yesterday.

He had previously called for a peaceful registration and confined his activities to passing out pro-segration hand bills.

Mr. Oliver gave three possible reasons for the light registration at Nashville.

He said some parents might hold their children out of school in protest of desegrega-

Nashville's Registration Of First Graders Follows U.S. Court Order

Wed. 8-28-57

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Aug. 27.—Thirteen Negroes signed up to attend white schools Tuesday as the South's first major city opened the doors of white schools to Negro first graders under a Federal court order.

The day was orderly and uneventful but police kept a watchful eye on developments with plainclothesmen stationed at every school and patrol cars cruising the neighborhoods where trouble was most likely to erupt.

Far Below Expectations

The number of Negro registrations at white schools fell far below advance predictions. School officials had estimated 125 Negroes would be eligible.

W. H. Oliver, assistant superintendent of city schools, said the low registration was an indication that "the Negro people of Nashville are pretty well satisfied with their schools."

He expressed the belief it was not due to "fear and apprehension among the Negroes."

John Kasper, Northern segregationist who has been convicted on two charges of violating Federal injunctions at Clinton High School, failed to visit any of the schools until registration was completed.

Then he visited several schools and asked the principals how many "Niggers" registered. He told reporters he was busy with "other matters" while registration was taking place.

Commercial Appeal

Considered 'An Intruder'

Mr. Oliver reported Kasper's visits to Detective Chief Sidney C. Ritter and said he considered the segregationist "an intruder."

The greatest opposition appeared at Glenn School in East Nashville where officials had estimated 25 Negroes would be eligible to attend under a zoning arrangement approved by Federal court.

Wed. 8-28-57

About 15 segregationists, many of them wearing buttons proclaim—"Keep Our White Schools White" gathered in front of the school and circulated literature attacking members of the United States Supreme Court and Negro leaders.

They made no attempt to molest the two Negro first graders who registered, however.

There were also indications of a boycott by white children of the school.

Leading the way was Mrs. Charles Longworth, wife of a machinist, who led her 6-year-old daughter, Sherry Elaine, away after learning the two Negroes had registered.

Would Go To Jail

Mrs. Longworth said she and her husband would go to jail before they would allow any of their four children to go to school with Negroes. The others range in age from 9 to 11.

Mrs. Lloyd Searcy, mother of a fifth grader at Glenn School, said she had a list of 57 white parents who have registered their children but will not allow them to attend classes if Negroes are enrolled. Schools will open Sept. 9.

Questioned concerning the boycott threat, Mr. Oliver said any children violating the state Compulsory Attendance Law will be turned over to juvenile authorities.

He pointed out the law applies only to children from 7 to 17 and if any 6-year-olds are held out "we won't do anything other than urge parents against it."

A tabulation at the end of the day showed the 13 Negroes registered at five formerly all-white schools. The number ranged from one at Bailey School to four at Jones School. One white child registered at a Negro school along with 26 Negroes.

Two-Thirds Of Expected

With all but two schools reporting, there were 1,406 first graders registered at white schools and 581 at Negro schools for a total registration of 1,987.

This is only about two-thirds of the expected registratio of 2,065 white children and 1,435 Negroes in the first grade.

Mr. Oliver explained, however, that it was the first time any effort had been made to register first graders only and he expected others would register in the intervening time before school starts Sept. 9.

The integration results from a Federal court order by District Judge William E. Miller of Nashville last October when he accepted the Nashville School Board's proposal to begi desegregation of the first grade this year.

He ordered the board to propose a plan for desegregation of the rest of the classes through the 12th grade by Dec. 1. The lawsuit resulted from a petition by parents of 21 Negroes who were denied admission to white schools.

this fall are expected to register here late this week, School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said Tuesday.

Less than 20 Negro students are expected to sign up for classes in the previously all-white Central High School under a court-approved "gradual integration" plan adopted by the Little Rock School Board about two years ago.

Negroes Asked To Wait

Mr. Blossom said Monday that Negro students had been asked not to register until after general registration for white students is completed Wednesday.

Classes begin here next Tuesday. Integrated classes will apply only to grades 10 through 12. In North Little Rock, integration will be started in the senior year only.

Apparently some or most of the Negro students who are expected to register have been "screened" in advance both by the School Board and Negro leaders here.

A School Board spokesman said unofficially that Negro leaders have co-operated by helping the board select Negro pupils who probably would co-operate most in keeping down any possible incidents.

675 In High School

In all, there are about 675 Negro students on the high school level here, but Mr. Blossom said most apparently plan to continue attending the all-Negro high school.

In North Little Rock, School Supt. F. B. Wright said only about 25 Negroes are eligible to attend the white school there under the present districting system there.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who heads the state Sovereignty Commission set up by this year's General Assembly to combat integration, ducked a question Tuesday on whether he opposed Little Rock integration.

"I'm not a resident here," he said. His home is in Huntsville in Northwest Arkansas.

The Governor reminded he had said "all along that I am opposed to compulsory integration, and I still stick to that." He indicated he felt Little Rock integration didn't constitute a case of "compulsory" integration.

Two Negro Freshmen Sign Up At Clinton

CLINTON, Tenn., Aug. 27. — (UP)—Two Negro freshmen enrolled at Clinton High School Tuesday and officials said five or six more Negro students are expected to enter the once-embattled racially integrated school by the time classes start next Tuesday.

The Negroes and about 250 white freshmen were processed without incident in the rambling, one-story high school building and adjoining gymnasium where court-ordered integration last year stirred sporadic outbursts of violence.

"We don't anticipate any trouble," said Principal W. D. Human. "We are hopeful of a normal, successful school year.

Mr. Human, who succeeded D. J. Brittain Jr. as principal this summer, add: "I don't expect folks to come in here and interfere with the operation of my school."

Of the 12 Negroes originally enrolled at Clinton one year ago, five were expected to return this fall. One of the students graduated in May, one was expelled for fighting with a white boy and the others dropped out when their families moved away.

Freedom Of Choice And The Tennessee Ruling

Advertiser 9-19-57
Montgomery Ala.

U.S. District Judge William E. Miller's ruling that Tennessee's voluntary segregation plan is "clearly unconstitutional" casts a shadow of unknown size over Alabama's "Freedom of Choice" plan and its implementing laws.

The similarities and differences are technical, but the intent is the same. Judge Miller didn't seem to weigh the specific provisions of Tennessee's law, holding simply that it was unconstitutional on its face. And there is little reason to suppose that Alabama's law—which gives children the freedom to choose to go to schools of their own race or not go at all—would impress him either.

This right to elect segregated schools, and thus make segregation voluntary rather than enforced, is only one feature of the Alabama plan. The defenses range all the way to abolition of schools if deemed necessary.

But the growing number of adverse rulings of the Miller type suggests we are fooling ourselves if we think cleverly worded laws will preserve segregation.

Again, Alabama will be well advised to avoid as long as possible any federal court test of either the Freedom of Choice plan or the Placement Law. They are skillfully drawn measures. But, to repeat an earlier observation, the federal courts have shown no inclination to read laws of the type.

Thus the brilliant feints and parries may be to no avail.

Nashville Completes Desegregation Plans

BY BENNO ISAACS

NASHVILLE (Tenn.) — (INS) — Nashville's mayor said the school board will submit its complete plans for gradual desegregation to the Federal Court for approval in December, as attendance in Nashville schools approached the normal figure Wednesday.

Press Herald

THREATENING CROWDS

Youngsters who last week had been withheld from going to school by parents who feared the threatening crowds, trooped to classes today, threatened only by the cloudy weather.

At the same time, Mayor Ben West said the school board will go ahead and submit plans for further desegregation of the schools to the Federal Courts in December. The program would call for the gradual desegregation of grades until complete integration is obtained.

First grade classes were desegregated last week in a blaze of violence which subsided with the arrest of John Kasper and other "professional" pro-segregationists.

Kasper remained in a county jail cell, unable to raise $2,500 bond and a Federal Court injunction curtailing interference with peaceful school integration was in effect. Police, armed with copies of the injunction, kept traffic around the schools moving, and found no need to invoke the court order.

Thurs. 9-19-57

Commenting on the 90 per cent attendance in the city's five integrated public schools where 11 Negroes are now attending classes, the mayor said:

"I think the situation shapes up fine at the moment. We don't anticipate any trouble. I would like to commend the police department on their fine job of law enforcement."

Very Little Difference Between What Foes Of Equal Schools Now "Prefer" And That the Court Has Already Held To Be Unconstitutional; Attorney Ennix Not In Agreement With Other Board Members In Latest Move Being Made

Colored leaders in public education, including professors, parents and patrons involved with the public schools of Nashville, very generally confess that "they had never heard anything like it before" as they answered questions about the thing called "Parent Preference" regarding complying with desegregation of public schools.

One citizen, however, says he once heard of a proposal like "parents preference." Says it was a proposal made by one delegate in a colored Grand Lodge meeting a number of years ago, along with his invitation to have the grand lodge hold its session the next year in his town.

Globe P.I.

He made a promise to separate the "sinners" from the Christians by having two different places for holding the entertainment features. The Christians would be sent to a hall where they would listen to a good literary and musical program, and thereafter partake of ice cream, cake lemonade and soft drinks.

Tri 12-13-57

The "sinner men" at a different hall, would be afforded a chance to dance, play cards, and partake of refreshments such as might offend the preachers and Christians, generally.

Nashville Tenn.

The presiding officer of the grand lodge had to rule the proposal for entertaining the grand lodge out of order. He found out that "sinners" had enough votes to put the novel proposal over on the Christians.

The "parent preference" proposal seems to have, if not "nine lives" like a cat, at least it has more than one life. It has come forth again after being dealt what was thought "death in full" by Federal District Judge Miller in the Federal Court here and by the refusal of the "aggrieved parties" to carry their case on up to the higher courts.

They seem to be of the opinion they will get a better "deal" in a court presided over by Judge Miller, especially since the attorneys for the school board seem to have experienced a change of faith about desegregation since John Kasper performed here.

The matter of desegregation is in charge of well-paid and prominent attorneys. Although the Nashville Board of Education all along has submitted to the guidance of its attorneys with regard to how they should go about desegregating the public schools of the city it now seems apparent, from a layman's view point, that the board may have to take another look at the plans and specifications of its own attorneys.

They very lately have come up with another and quite different plan of desegregation to the one they had presented to the District Federal Court of Nashville and duly received a "go ahead" with desegregating first grade pupils the first of the present school year but to submit to the court plans for fully desegregating Nashville schools by December 31, of this year.

Interpositionists and nullificationists hereabouts seem to be gloating over the likelihood of a "more liberal" (for them) ruling from Judge Miller. They seem, actually, to want the court to order a complete reversal of what the board has been planning to do—that is, to set forth definite plans for desegregating in grades beyond the first. This it was understood was in the making when the public read in the newspapers that the board's intention now is to recommend to the court to set up three kinds of schools all over Nashville, as follows:

1. Schools for white children only.

2. Schools for Negro children only.

Globe P.I.

3. Schools for white and colored children whose parents do not object to mixed schools.

Some of those who object to the new arrangements are said to have the opinion that it will merely be another instance of "delaying tactics" against the mandate of the Supreme Court, because, many say, there is nothing at all in the Supreme Court's unanimous decision issued May 17, 1954, that can be construed as permitting anybody to have an opition on doing away with what the Court has ruled are discriminatory schools.

Tri 12-13-57

Nashville Tenn.

This question is asked by those who think the proposed Parents Preference arrangements can only produce confusion and more trouble:

1. It is asked, suppose all white children are influenced to go to the school where only white children are expected.

2. It is asked what if colored children also are urged to attend the school where white children are expected to attend, for the reason said school, more than likely, will be provided with facilities better than either a school designated to serve colored children alone or a school that will be designated to serve mixed classes.

It is held that it is unreasonable to expect that a system of "optional" schools will serve any good purpose.

It is true that there are many colored parents who do not object to their children continuing to go to exclusively colored schools but it is doubtful that there are many of them who would insist upon exclusively colored schools in the face of the fact that the U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that such schools are inherently discriminatory. It is very unlikely that those who are insisting upon a system of "optional" schools have experienced any change of heart from that they gloated over having when the "separate but equal" formula was laid down by the Supreme Court in 1896.

Scofflaws shouted "O King, live forever" when they read the "separate but equal" edict. They never intended to carry out the EQUAL part of the formula in actual practice and never did. It is held that those parents preference arrangement means nothing less than something whereby racial segregation is to be re-introduced. Colored children will be subjected to the same kind of harshness that menaced the nine colored students of Central High, in Little Rock.

The nine colored youngsters at Little Rock, undoubtedly had the legal "right" to go to Central High but these youngsters took their lives into their own hands when they sought to exercise their right.

It became necessary for the President of the United States to send troops from Camp Campbell at a frightful cost to protect these nine youngsters in their right to attend the school that has been designated for them.

It is quite possible that the attorneys for the local school board in their new approach to the Federal Court, seeking aid in settling the troublsome question of desegregation may have taken account of what Judge Parker said. He is the Chief Circuit Judge of the Fourth Federal Circuit Court, having jurisdiction over the Carolinas, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. The August number of the Race Relations Law Reporter, published by the Vanderbilt University School of Law on page 882 says:

"In a per curiam opinion generally attributed to the Chief Circuit Judge Parker, attempted to give more precision to the principle of School Segregation Cases:

". . . it is important that we point out exactly what the Supreme Court has decided and what it has not decided in this case, (from South Carolina). It has not decided that the federal courts are to take over and regulate the public schools of the states. It has not decided that the states must mix persons of different races in the schools or must require them to attend schools or must deprive them of the right of choosing the schools they attend. What it has decided, and all that it has decided, is that a state may not deny to any person on account of race the right to attend any school that it maintains. This, unler the decision of the Supreme Court, the state may not do directly or indirectly. But if the schools which it maintains are open to children of all races, no violation of the Constitution is involved even if the children of different races voluntarily attend different schools, as they attend different churches.

Nothing in the decision of the Supreme Court takes away from the people freedom to choose the schools they attend. The Constitution, in other words, does not require integration. It merely forbids discrimination. It does merely forbid discrimination. It does not forbid such segregation as occurs as the result of voluntary action. It merely forbids the use of governmental power to enforce segregation."

Now maybe Judge Parker has correctly "diagnosed" what was in the minds of the Chief Justice and eight associate Justices when they rendered their UNANIMOUS decision on what the 14th Amendment means on May 17, 1954. The Court has not been called upon to pass upon Judge Parker's diagnosis, itself. But every Federal District Judge will need to consult the Supreme Court, itself when in doubt about what certain words and phrases in its historic opinion of three years ago mean.

Judge Parker, it will be remembered, is the gentleman who was rejected for appointment as a member of the U .S. Supreme Court back there under Hoover's administration. He was accused of having said in a speech while he was running for governor of North Carolina on the Republican ticket, that if he were elected governor and later found out that any Negro had voted for him, he would refuse to accept the governorship.

It was a widely publicized accusation and was used by both Negroes and organized labor foes of Judge Parker to accomplish his defeat for confirmation as a Supreme Court Justice.

It is said that Judge Parker has rendered some fine decisions as a Federal Circuit Judge after failing to land a placet on the Supreme Court bench. Judge Benjamin N. Cardozer was appointed by Mr. Hoover and confirmed by the senate, following the senate rejection of Judge John J. Parker.

Approve Voluntary Integration

14d(1)

Nashville Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., — (INS) — A voluntary integration plan which would allow citizens of Nashville to chose individually what schools they wish their children to attend has been approved by the Nashville board of education.

The selection plan, submitted by the school preference committee, is expected to be presented to federal court as the board's answer to a two year old desegregation suit.

Three types of schools are provided for under the plan. They are:

— All-white schools for white parents who wish to continue segregation.

— Integrated schools for those desiring mixed classes.

— All-white schools for white Negro members who objected to the plan was Coyness Ennix, the only board member. He said his objection was based on the grounds that he believed — as a lawyer — that the move was not constitutional.

Surprising Lack Of Knowledge About What Supreme Court Ruled In 1954 Shown By Several Members Of White Organization; Disgruntled Persons Want City To Renege After It Has Had Its Day In Court And Must Respect Constitution

Back in the year of 1909 a good little man known for his courage and honesty, in just one sentence took giant strides toward the Presidency, which he did actually attain a few years later.

The man's name was Calvin Coolidge. In 1919 he was the governor of Massachusetts.

In September of 1919, the police force of Boston had formed a union that was affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Three-fourths of the whole police force struck for higher wages walked off the job and left the city virtually without police protection; for one night. Gov. Coolidge in the emergency called out the National Guard. Samuel Gompers was the labor boss at that time and issued a plea to the governor and mayor to hold an arbitration conference with the striking policemen.

To this plea Gov. Coolidge replied in a telegram:

"THERE is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, at any time."

That did it. The courage of Gov. Coolidge did it. The telegram established a landmark for chief executives for all time to come. All that is required is for the people to be sure to elect as heads of their government, city, state and national, men with the moral courage to assert the authority conferred upon them by the people.

There is likely to be a number of instances when the governor of the state, and mayors of our cities and towns will be faced with the challenge to "quell riots" or strikes against their government. There is another government it is probable that somebody will dare to strike against. It is the Federal Government. But come to think about it, its head man is named Dwight D. Eisenhower, who went to the presidency from the field of battle. Not many persons relish launching a strike against five-star general Eisenhower, who is under oath to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, just like he was under oath to defend his country's flag on foreign battlefields.

"Interpositionists" who have pretended they have a legal right to defy the mandates of the U. S. Supreme Court know better. But by saying so they can mislead a lot of people.

The preceding views appear appropriate as a comment on what was a "hot time" given City Superintendent W. A. Bass Monday night when he appeared before approximately 100 members of the combined white Parent Teachers of four associtaions at a special meeting.

If the association was called to get more light than heat, apparently it failed. The fact is out of the meeting came a statement from one mother which showed she has unusual courage. They hissed her for what she said. Said she was ready to send her children to school with Negroes. "I can't see where it would hurt them any. In fact it might improve their personalities."

This lady has probably heard of what one of the young white teachers revealed in a recent meeting of white and colored teachers here. She said that in her school there were white children coming to the white schools that were just as "unacceptable" as any Negro children could be. She got no hisses for her remarks, but it was plain that there were several of the other teachers who were embarrassed for such a thing to be revealed in the presence and hearing of a group of colored teachers. Naturally the colored teachers were "aghast" for hearing a white teacher discuss the horrid problems they face daily, but which escape getting any publicity because that would destroy the "I am better than you," fiction story that has meen so industriously circulated. Even Supt. Bass probably is unaware of "what all" has existed in some of his white schools.

In his "defense" of the action of the school board and of himself, Mr. Bass was able to give good testimony on the why and wherefore of desegregation. He laid it all on the Supreme Court. One got the inference that the Court had no business commanding desegregation and indication that the School Board thought the Supreme Court committed an unlawful act. That was not so. The need is for more and more enlightened leaders—specially those having connection with our public schools to coms out and "tell the truth and shame the devil."

On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court ruled on the status of the 14th Amendment to the aConstitution. It ruled this amendment had been misinterpreted since 1896—a period of 59 years, in holiding it was legal to maintain a system of "separate but equal" schools. Now no sane person will maintain that they have been having anything like "equal" schools for colored and white pupils down through the years in any states where they had compulsory separate schools.

It has been ridiculous to pretent that the 14th Amendment, which prescribes that "all persons, born or naturalized in the United States are citizens of the United States and of the state in which they reside, is capable of meanig something other then what it says. The 14th Amendment goes further. It says: "No state shall abridge the privileges of immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

Mr. Bass might have refreshed the recollections of his audience. Might have pointed out to them that the decision upholding the majesty of the 14th Amendment was approved by every member of the Supreme Court—all 9 of them, with three of the nine being from Southern States where separate schools have existed under state law for a half century. He might have said the time had come to forego the luxury of discriminatory schools.

The Communists are taking advantage of Uncle Sam's ridiculous position—that of proclaiming equality in both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution and not practicing what he preaches when dealing with little Negro children.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee headed by Chief Justice A. B. Neal of Nashville does not question the validity of the May 17th 1954 decision of the U. S. Supreme Court on desegregation.

The two able lawyers who defended the City School's Board delay in putting desegregation into effect, nevertheless acknowledged that it admtited the state constitution's provision gor separate schools has been rendered null and void.

A Mr. Mason asked the following question at the meeting, according to Garry Fullerton. crack correspondent of the Nashville Tennessean, who evidently was in there under instructions to "nothing extenuate and naught set down in malice. All Tennessean reporters behave that way.

The question asked Mr. Bass: "Are people of other states more intelligent than we are, in fighting this sickness of integration? Why can't Tennessee take action like Virginia and South Carolina?"

It was proper to inform the questioner that the Nashville School Board is more intelligent than those who have been trying to pull the wool over the eyes of Chief Justice Earl Warren and Co. Nothing either Virginia or South Carolina has thus far done to stave off desegregation was intelligent. All of it was just as unintelligent as the rubbish turned out by the recent Tennessee legislature.

It is not going to seem so "intelligent" upon the part of the reactionary states if and when Uncle Sam grabs a big "Worry Wart" and lands his in jail for disregarding the law.

And so there were just about 100 parents out to hear Mr. Bass explain what they did about desegregation. He defended the board in reasonably good fashion, laying it all on the U. S. Supreme Court. He should have given the 14th Amendment and the Communist threat some of the "credit" for prodding all of us in Nashville to "Get right with God."

Clement Measures Permit Assignment of Pupils by the Local Boards

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 23 — The Tennessee Legislature gave final approval today to Gov. Frank G. Clement's program for dealing with the segregation problem in the state's public schools.

Governor Clement is expected to sign the five bills Friday, just two weeks and two days after he went before the legislature to appeal for enactment of his program.

New York, N.Y.

The bills vest broad powers in the local school boards. The program provides a means of maintaining segregation, but does not prohibit integration where local boards may desire it or where the courts order it.

The key measure authorizes local boards to assign individual pupils to schools in "the best interests of the child and the community as a whole."

P. 30

The other bills authorize segregated schools on a "voluntary" basis, joint operation of schools by two or more local boards, transfer of pupils from one school system to another and transportation for pupils to the schools to which they are assigned.

Governor Clement expressed gratitude to the legislature for approving his program, which he said would become a model for dealing with the segregation problem in other Southern states.

'Progressive Step'

"I feel this represents a progressive step and the soundest one taken anywhere since the controversy arose," the Governor said. "The legal rights of our citizens are protected and promoted by this legislation."

Final action in the legislature came when the House of Representatives concurred in two minor amendments added by the Senate yesterday.

The Senate debated the bills at length before passing them by one-sided majorities. The debate was between those who felt the bills were unconstitutional and those who argued that they did not go far enough toward assuring continued segregation.

Nashville's Desegregation Plan to Be Studied by Judge

Journal & Constitution Jan. 27-57

Atlanta, Ga. P. 8-C

Proposal for 'Gradual' Mixing Does Not Go Far Enough, He Rules

14 d(1)

By JOE HATCHER

Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 26—Nashville's "gradual" desegregation plan may be okay, as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough as yet, U.S. District Judge W. E. Miller ruled here the past week.

The Judge's decision was a partial victory on all sides, but left the whole matter of integration undecided, and probably on its way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Miller's decision overruled the suit of 21 Nashville Negro children for immediate integration, holding that the city's plan for integration of first grades at the Fall school term was "prompt and reasonable."

But the city's proposal to study the subject of desegregation further after that first step was presumably a delaying action without guarantee of complete integration.

Therefore he ordered the Nashville school board to submit to him a complete plan of integration by December, 1957, with reservations he would then consider the entire plan.

NAACP attorneys expressed dissatisfaction with the decision, but reserved their decision whether to appeal to higher federal courts, or whether the opinion opened any grounds for appeal until final action is taken on the over-all and complete plan of the city.

Basis of Appeal

The basis of appeal would be to get the Supreme Court to overrule both the delay in the plan and the "gradual" integration proposal in favor of immediate integration of the contesting Negro students.

The decision was Judge Miller's first in the series of desegregation suits, and his first as the sole district judge in Middle Tenneessee.

Judge Miller is the only Republican judge, the only appointee of President Eisenhower thus far. A second district court was created by congress for Middle Tennessee, with the provision that only one court would operate on the death or vacancy in the other.

Judge Elmer D. Davies, appointed by President Roosevelt, died of a heart attack recently, and no successor can be named. Judge Miller took over the combined courts, and will operate the one court unless the bills in congress creating another court are passed.

TENNESSEE

Judge Miller was a resident of Johnson City in extreme upper East Tennessee when appointed to the new court in Middle Tennessee. He was the first judge in the state to be appointed from another jurisdiction. His outstanding ability as a lawyer and his service in the state constitutional convention in 1953 brought him to the forefront in the selection by the President.

Judge Miller's approval of the gradual integration followed shortly after the U.S. Court of Appeals' decree that Memphis State College's four-year plan of integration from the senior class downward was illegal. The state probably will appeal the Memphis case to the Supreme Court.

Third University

In the meantime, the legislature advanced Memphis State College to university status, thus creating the third state university, including the University of Tennessee and the State A. & I. University (for Negroes) at Nashville.

Interrupted by the Eisenhower inauguration and the absence of some 26 Republican legislators, the legislature lost no time early this week in completing action on the segregation - integration school bills proposed by Gov. Frank Clement.

The senate stamped overwhelming approval on the bills designed to authorize school boards, all at the local level, to "assign" students, permit transfers out of school districts and operate schools jointly with other school districts.

NAACP and other Negro organizations opposed the Clement bills as seeking to evade the U.S. court decisions, while the Federation for Constitutional Government, the White Councils, and pro - segregation organizations opposed them as permitting integration and shirking state responsibility entirely.

Short of Interposition

But to all indications the Clement bills wrapped up the school segregation issue before the legislature. The house approved a resolution condemning the Supreme Court decisions, but stopped short of interposition. The senate deferred action on the resolution, lest it show intent to preserve segregation in passage of the series of bills delegating the responsibility for segregation or integration to each school board in the state.

There remains considerable question among many legislators whether the action has accomplished anything, or merely speeded up the filing of suits for integrating in many of the school districts.

No proposals have been made on the issues of bus transportation or other public facilities as yet.

Several bills are pending that would restrict NAACP and other operations, including the White Councils, by requiring registration with the secretary of state, making public of records and funds; and others defining and regulating barratry, or the encouragement of financing of litigation in which there is no direct interest.

Opposed by Clement

An effort was made to eliminate provisions of the compulsory attendance laws to protect parents from prosecution when children were removed from integrated schools. Both Gov. Clement and the state education department declared in opposition to any weakening of the attendance laws. No further move may be made along that line.

Tennessee Legislature Passes School Bias Measures

By Stanley Thurs. 1-24-57 P. 1

Des Moines, Iowa

Nashville, Tenn.—The Tennessee house of representatives Thursday gave overwhelming approval to Gov. Frank G. Clement's five bills empowering local school boards to preserve racial segregation in public schools.

Would Be Assigned

The main bill, authorizing local boards to assign pupils to schools, sailed through the house without a dissenting vote.

The other bills provide for operation of segregated schools on a voluntary basis, permit two or more local boards to operate schols jointly, authorize transfer of pupils from one school system to another and revise the pupil transportation law.

Judge Rules Alabamy Coed's Ouster Legal authorize local school boards to maintain separate schools for pupils whose parents voluntarily elect to send their children to school with members of their own race.

The measure, which swept through the 1957 General Assembly with little opposition, was the first of Governor Frank Clement's five-point school-segregation legislation to be tested in court.

Clement said:

'Skilled lawyers drafted the school-preference law with the intention that it should be constitutional and not violative in any way of the U. S. Supreme Court's decisions in the school cases.

'Passed In Good Faith'

"It was passed in good faith by the Tennessee General Assembly.

"I have not yet had an opportunity to study Judge Miller's opinion, and therefore I will reserve further comment at this time."

Miller's decision came on a request by the Nashville School Board for a declaratory judgment on the law.

It appeared unlikely the ruling would be appealed by the board.

In a half-hour review of the arguments, before a courtroom filled with both whites and Negroes, Miller said that to assume the law granted "voluntary choice for all races" would be to oversimplify the act.

Says Act Compulsory

He said that after parents had elected which schools they wanted their children to attend, separate schools would be established and freedom of choice lost. Thus, Miller said, that is a "compulsory act."

Under Nashville's court-approved segregation plan, first-grade classes will be mixed at school opening next week and the school board will submit plans by December 31 to desegregate the other grades.

It will be the second integration in Tennessee. The high school in Clinton began its second year of mixed classes quietly this week.

Governor Clement sent troops to Clinton last year when racial violence rocked the town.

Court Decision Clears Way for Integration

P. 1

From Wire Dispatches

Tennessee's new school-preference law was struck down Friday by a federal judge who said it was "antagonistic to principles declared by the Supreme Court."

The act, ruled United States District Judge William E. Miller at Nashville, "is unconstitutional on its face."

This cleared the way for Nashville schools, acting under Miller's orders, to begin desegregation at the first-grade level when classes start Monday. Thirteen Negro 6-year-olds registered last week at five previously all-white schools.

Had Little Opposition

The preference law would

'Fire Clement, Hire Faubus'

In Memphis, Clement adressed student-council leaders at East High School Friday and was confronted with signs reading, "Fire Clement, hire Faubus" carried by demonstrators. They referred to Orval Faubus, Governor of Arkansas, who has called out the National Guard to prevent integration in Little Rock.

An unidentified Negro boy, accompanied by his mother, applied to enter a white high school in Richmond, Va., Friday.

Turned Away by Principal

He was turned away by the principal, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Crouch, who explained to his mother that there was a Negro school closer to her home.

The integration of 10 Negro students proceeded quietly in three North Carolina cities.

Heckling and minor violence that punctuated openings in Charlotte, Winston-Salem, and Greensboro had virtually vanished as the abbreviated first school week closed. School and police officials believed they were over the hump.

Monteagle to hold twelve workshops on integration

Atlanta Constitution Sat. 2-2-57

MONTEAGLE, Tenn. — A Tennessee school has its own quiet answer to the White Citizens Council. Colored and white leaders are adding a new chapter to the history of the South.

More than two hundred men and women took part in the three public school integration workshops last year at the Highlander Folk School.

There are to be twelve such workshops in 1957 which started January 19, where efforts will be needed to find answers to the problems of integration.

IN THE words of the retiring chairman, Dr. George S. Mitchell, "Highlander is a place way up on top of the Cumberland Mountain in East Tennessee where everyday people in the South come and figure out how they would like the South to be and what it takes to get it that way."

Former students who will take part in the workshops include Mrs. Rosa Parks, Montgomery; L. A. Blackman, Elloree, S. C.; Esau Jenkins, Johns Island, S.C.

Other consultants will be Dr. Fred Patterson, Dr. Herman Long, Dr. Charles Gomillion, John Bolt Culbertson, Fred Routh and the Rev. Robert C. Palmer.

Colored Principals And Teachers Had Been Greatly Distressed Over Head Man's Attitude Toward Them And Their Children For Many Years; But When Bad Elements Threatened Mr. Bass, He And Staff Got Together

P-1 Jr. 5-10-57

Nashville's school teachers, white and colored have for many months been engaging in some effective educational fraternizing, just like that which had been going on in St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., and a number of other communities. The very best of fellow-teacher relationships have not come from these meetings, it all along has been admitted. But undoubtedly progress toward school integration has been made.

But this week a sudden change has taken place. Maybe prayer has done it. Maybe the examples set by two young officials of the Nashville community has effected the change. The two young officials are Mayor Ben West and County Judge Beverly Briley. They surprised many a hard-hearted bigot and sinner by recognizing the colored element of citizens as being a worthwhile part of the community, and appointed a colored leader each to responsible posts in the government that will rule affairs when Nashville tries the experiment of "one government" for the whole community.

It took real moral courage upon the part of young Judge Briley and young Mayor Ben West to make these colored appointments. But they did it and a very vital thing has resulted.

Now A Changed Man

Here it is:

Supt of City Schools, William A. Bass has become a changed man, and therefore school integration here is likely to go over like greased lightning. That is all that was needed in the first place. All that was needed for Nashville and Davidson County to say "If Louisville, Ky., can do it so can we." The leadership here has been as close to that of Louisville, ever since away back when they united to put in operation one of the most famous units of transportation in the world — THE L&N Railroad Company.

It happens that Supt. Bass was not a Big City Man, when some 20 years ago he was chosen Supt. of Nashville Schools. He came small-towner from West Tennessee. Now West Tennessee leaders for the most part think like Missippians on the race question.

Mr. Bass had been like that, and colored teachers and other leaders who have come in contact with him could not avoid believing that he considered colored people of every class hopeless inferiors.

One of the first things colored people noted about Mr. Bass that was different from the attitude of former Superintendents was that the West Tennessean showed little interest in colored schools. Right now, Mayor Ben West knows more about colored schools, colored parents and colored children than Supt. Bass. The Mayor has shown genuine interest in coloded children and their parents. He has been present at that most stirring period in a youngster's life, his commencement. Not only that, but Mayor West has thrilled each colored youngster's heart as he grasped the young graduate's hand and congratulates him or her.

Well, Mayor West had a raft of colored friends before he became mayor. He has won many new ones since he became the city's chief executive.

It Was No Secret

It was no secret that neither the Mayor, Ben West nor his predecessor,, Mayor Thomas L. Cummings "saw eyes to eye" with the superintendent in attitude toward colored people. Fortunately for Supt. Bass he did not have to run for his office during these past twenty years. He would have been a "dead pigeon" as sure as you are born.

But right now all is forgiven. Colored people who are powerfully quick to forgive and forget offenses, will be hearing soon from their colored principals and teachers that Supt. Bass is a changed man.

Attorney Thurgood Marshall who came down to Nashville to make the fight for equal salaries for colored teachers in association with Attorney Looby will certainly be glad to hear Supt. Bass is a changed man.

During the course of that lawsuit, Attorney Marshall found it advisible to ask Mr. Bass a rather long question. Al lawyers do it. In this case, Mr. Bass first reaction was to ignore the question and ask Thurgood Marshall whether he was asking a question or making a stump speech. Marshall who is a Prince of Dignity in his attitude at the bar, turned to Federal Judge Davies, and told him that he sought to develop with his question. Judge Davies promptly stated: "In that case, it is your duty Mr. Bass to answer the attorney's question. Mr. Bass did just that.

Mr. Bass is now a changed man, and you can be sure he would not now be discourteous to a colored attorney any more than would a native white lawyer at the Nashville bar. During that famous lawsuit, Mr. Bass doubtless will admit that the two colored lawyers greatly increased for him his fund of higher education.

Colored principals and teachers have felt all along that Supt. Bass would be the chief stumbling block to integration. It was a surprise to the teachers and the public when the attorneys chosen by Mayor West refused to conduct opposition to integration on the claim that it would violate the constitution of Tennessee. The Supreme Court had ruled against Tennessee's Constitution's provision, calling for separate schools and the attorneys appointed by Mayor West promptly announced that they bowed to the will of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Misery Loves Company

Maybe the fact that "Misery loves company" has had a desirable effect on Supt. Bass' outlook on life. The Superintendent first hoped to avoid publicizing the fact that an him and everybody who under took hi mand everybody who under took to obey the law as to desegregation. Mr. Bass seems to awake to the fact that he like the colored people here were now in the same boat. They no longer could respond to call to do their patriotic duty. Not even Mayor West could dare to uphold the law of the land although he repeatedly had made a pledge to do so when he took the oath of office.

Mr. Bass just hauled off and alerted the forces charged with the responsibility of enforcing law here, that he had been threatened. The "official" who had threatened him did not treat the city superintendent with the courtesy his office merits.. Just sent Mr. Bass a message on the backside of a dodger being distributed and telling the plans of attack that had been made.

Colored teachers when asked how they intended to defend themselves in the latest emergency merely said they intended to pray. Some hold that there are times when the best defense is to rely upon the protection of God and have faith He will carry you through."

Something not as strong as Faith in God carried a Jewish merchant past a Ku Klux threat to pulverize him "way down in Georgia." After the Ku Klux got through describing the regalia that he and his lodge brothers would be wearing the night of the attack, the merchant didn't get frightened, but instead, said. "Well, when you boys get ready to dress up, come and see me: I can give you a good bargain in sheets and pillow cases."

He "Joined the Ku Klux

A short time later, when the lodge paraded down through the colored community a colored teen-ager got so fascinated with the parade that he boldly marched out into it, lifted the hood from one of the marchers, put it on his own head, out-wiggled any of the trained experts while marching with them down the street.

Now maybe the Ku Klux brethren will be rougher on Mr. Bass and Mayor West here in Nashville than they were in the backward cities and maybe not. At least they know the superintendent is not afraid to report the threats made to him to the FBI.

Supt. Bass has lately called in experts on desegregation from Louisville. They are going to speak to the assembled teachers here and hope they will be able to furnish this enlightened community with plans and specifications such as will enable Nashvillians to put on as good a program of desegregation as their "cousins" of the Falls City. have put into operation. Maybe they couldn't do it in the small towns of West Tennessee but, in the final analysis, the people here are quite proud of the world-wide reputation they have built up for culture and devotion to the principles of Christianity.

Supreme Court Refuses To Consider Plea To Be Heard In Argument Against Its Authority

Nashville Tenn.

Appelate Courts Take Over For Lower Courts

Tenn. 4-26-57

The Nashville School Board, and all concerned, appear to have "gotten word" from the U. S. Supreme Court as to what is expected from them as to how they will be expected to handle cases of desegregation.

The "word" came in a case that did not originate in Nashville, but down in Wichita, Texas. In that city it appears the school board was carrying out an arrangement for operating a plan of transferring their students that was unfair to colored students.

They were acting in a way, however, that met the approval of the District Federal Court. But even the District Federal Courts, it seems will not be permitted to do as they please, if what they please to do does not conform to what is "the law of the land." The law of the land insists that the same rule will have to be laid down for governing both colored and white children when it comes to permitting any of them to transfer from schools they have attended to school that are nearest their homes or otherwise.

It will not be surprising if from now on all of the "civilized" states will refuse to be bothered with any schemes whereby white students will have free access to schools nearest to where they live but colored students compelled to conform to rule which neither colored parents nor even "Philadelphia Lawyers" can understand.

The Supreme Court on Monday of this week appeared further to have shown its impatience with school boards and even District Federal Courts that undertake to operate the desegregation edict according to what they feel is "local sentiment."

Tenn. 4-26-57

It is safe to say that not even in Nashville does local sentiment approve actual desegregation of schools. The U. S. Supreme Court of the United States after a long and patient hearing decided that the 14th Amendment does not sanction racial discrimination, and the court held that even the Pleesy v. Ferguson ruling by the U. S. Supreme Court laid down back in 1896 was contrary to the 14th Amendment, when it provided that it was not discrimination when persons could be separated according to race, if the "compartments" into which they were separated were equal.

As carried in the Tennessean for Monday morning, April 23, the Associated Press published the following on the Supreme Court's latest decision dealing with desegregation of schools written by AP correspondent Karl B. Bauman:

"The Supreme Court emphasized again yesterday that it expects federal district courts to keep tab on steps toward eliminating racial segregation in public schools.

"It did so in denying without comment an appeal brought by the Wichita Falls (Texas) school board.

"The board had appealed from a decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans directing a district court to keep on its docket a suit by Negro children for admission to public schools nearest their homes.

"The school board contended that under its policy of desegregation of all schools the Negroes' request had been granted. The district court for Northern Texas agreed with the board and dismissed the complaint.

"The Court of Appeals, however, directed the district court to retain jurisdiction in the case. It said that while the Negro children had been admitted to the public school nearest their homes, it is by no means certain that they had the same free privilege of transferring to or attendance at any school of their choice as was accorded the white children.

"The school board said in its appeal that the appelate court (at New Orleans) decision compels the district court to act as a super school board in the conduct of the public school system.

"In its May 1955 decision calling for the end of racial segregation in public schools 'with all deliberate speed' the Supreme Court directed that during the period of transmittance, the (district) court will retain jurisdiction of these cases. The cases were the five directly involved in the court a y ear earlier (May 17, 1954) that racial segregation in public school is unconstitutional."

Lawyers and other leaders hereabout who "go along" with the "law of the land" as laid down in 1954 and even in more detail in 1955, are not surprised at the latest decision of the Supreme Court which involves public schools in Wichita Falls, Texas. But what many of them are saying is that a similar decision may come down to the embarrassment of the Nashville School Board, even if that body is given a "clean bill of health" in the Middle Tennessee Federal District Court. However some say it is probable that Judge Miller of the Court here is likely to avoid being "turned down" in his decision. He is almost certain to be confronted with a case similar to the one that has been in the courts from Wichita Falls, Texas.

Judge Miller has already approved the Nashville School Board's plan of desegregation, to be put into effect at the opening of local schools next September. But he has made it plain that the school board acted lawfully as far as it went, but it did not go far enough. It did not provide for the elimination o fracial segregation for the pupils, from the second grade on up through senior high school. The board is required to "speak up Ike and 'spress yourself" on when desegregation for all grades above the first is to take place. This must be done by December 31 of this year.

Undoubtedly the board will be faced with a "housing problem" when it undertakes to complete desegregation. That however is a problem it seems that all other communities face.

But it is now clear, the U. S. Supreme Court will have the Appelate Courts keeping watch over District Courts and these are not likely to let any District Courts set at naught the sweeping decision the Supreme Court has rendered in vouchsafing the sanctity of the 14th Amendment.

It is fortunate for Judge Miller that he has an advantage over the Judge of the Federal District Court of Northern Texas who got reversed by the U. S. Appellate Court at New Orleans. It is probable that the Appellate Court of this area, with headquarters in Cincinnati, sees eyes to eye with the distinguished judge at New Orleans. That is, being determined to expound the law as written and carefully explained by the highest court in the land.

Evidently the Supreme Court which was unanimous in the decision they rendered on segregation, and unanimous in reversing the "old mossbacks" of 1896, does not intenl to be bothered with appeas to them from scofflaw school boards seeking to render their historic decision null and voil. Apparently the Appellate Federal Courts understand the mood of the Supreme Court they too have no patience with either school boards nor District Federal Courts that seek to substitute States Rights vagaries, for the supreme law of the land—the Constitution of the United States.

It has been said that segregationists have banded together to wear down the foes of segregation by keeping them involved in lawsuits from year to year and with appeals from decisions. The foes of segregation won a great victory on Monday. It was in the Supreme Court's refusal to listen to any arguments from the segregationists over the decision handed down by the Appellate Court at New Orleans. It seems that this is going to be the rule from now on. When the District Court judges do not carry out the law as it is written and has been explained, the Appellate Federal Courts will do so if the segregationists try to get a further hearing on "State Rights" in the highest Court that Court will merely gesticulate with signs, meaning:

"You boys have already had your

NASHVILLE, July 5.—Segregationist forces in the South may have learned a lesson in Nashville.

White and Negro first graders will become classmates in Nashville's schools this fall because of "a tactical blunder by the segregationists."

'Hastened Desegregation'

"They hastened desegregation," said Dr. Herman H. Long, Negro director of the Institute of Race Relations at Fisk University.

"They forced the issue and brought on a decision much faster than many Negroes would have done. If it hadn't been for their insistence on a court test, Nashville would not be integrating its schools in September."

Long cited the relationship between the disturbance at Clinton, Tenn., which followed the decision to admit Negroes to the white high school there, and integration in Nashville.

"We realize that change—to be lasting—has to come about in the broad area of informal understanding which exists between whites and Negroes in the South," Long said.

'Weren't Ready'

"Unless Negroes want to be at war with the white community, adjustment in the long run will have to come about in the day-to-day relationships that Negroes and whites have.

"We weren't ready to make a move in Nashville. We wanted to proceed orderly, picking the spots where the best chances for success exist."

When the integration decision was made in Clinton, the pro-segregationist Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government planned an immediate legal test of the United States Supreme Court's school desegregation order.

It appealed to the Tennessee Supreme Court, relying on the state's segregation laws. The court declared Tennessee's laws unconstitutional.

Got 'Sweeping Mandate'

"So, instead of an isolated instance in Clinton," Long explained, "the segregationists wound up with a sweeping mandate from the state's own Supreme Court upholding the United States Supreme Court.

"If they had been wise, at least from the white segregationists' point of view, they would have let Clinton be and done nothing."

Long sees "no possibility of massive, widespread violence" brought on by the "gradual but sure" social upheaval in the South.

"There may be isolated incidents, but that's all," he says.

Dr. Alonzo Moron Speaks At Highlander Folk Meeting

Sat. 8-31-57

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., Aug. 31.—(AP)—The integration situation in the South was described here Saturday as a combination of fear and courage by Dr. Alonzo Moron, president of Hampton Institute, at Highlander Folk School.

Memphis Tenn.

"If segregation in the public schools is destroyed, all other forms of segregation will become even more ridiculous," he said.

As examples of fear, Dr. Moron cited the revitalization of the Klan and formation of Citizens' Councils. As examples of courage he praised Rosa Parks who touched off the Montgomery bus boycott and Allen McSwain, leader in the school integration at Clinton. They are both participating in the four-day observance of the 25th anniversary of Highlander here.

Sharing the panel with Dr. Moron were Wilma Dykeman Stokely, author of Newport, Tenn.; McSwain, Septima Clark of Highlander and Dr. C. N. Parrish of Louisville, Ky.

The meetings will be climaxed Monday morning when speakers will be Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery bus boycott and Aubrey Williams, National Youth Administration director under F. D. Roosevelt.

Facts About the Tennessee Situation

Do Negroes Want Integration?

By TREZZ ANDERSON
(Courier Staff Writer)

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—A serious analysis of what happened last week in Clinton and Nashville, Tenn., projects several almost indisputable facts:

For example, when consideration is given the fact that parents of 52 of the 126 eligible Negro first-graders in Nashville asked for—and got—transfers for their children to remain in all-Negro schools, it was obvious that all Negro parents don't want integration, as such.

They have their own reasons for this. Some are reluctant to put their children with white children until a far more harmonious atmosphere has been achieved.

HOWEVER IN THE stay-backs were a number who were too uninformed about the significance of the situation and therefore held back their children. This means Negro educators and leaders have an educating job to do.

The fact that no violence occurred in Clinton or Nashville also pinpointed the cold inescapable fact that there are many, many whites in the South who put observance of law and order ahead of their emotions.

Finally, it sounds the death-knell of the reign of John Kasper, for here he was compelled to recruit people from outside Nashville city limits to even help pass out his "hate" literature.

Whites are "getting wise" to the seedy-looking New Jerseyite and his following is falling off fast.

Police force integration in Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 9 — (AP) — Police escorted Negro pupils through lines of threatening whites at Glenn Grammar Schol in Northeast Nashville today as city schools opened with white and Negro first graders going to integrated classes for the first time in this city.

White parents withdrew about 20 of their children from the school.

The whites, with pro-segregationists maintainging picket lines before the school, tried to block entry of the Negro pupils and their parents.

THE IRATE WHITE parents surrounded police standing guard at the schol and there was a heated exchange.

Angry shouts went up from the crowd of about 200 whites.

There were such shouts as, "You're putting out the red carpet for them," and "You are backing the colored and not taking up for the whites."

THREE NEGRO CHILDREN registered at lGenn School last Tuesday to attend the classes which started today. They were among 13 Negro children registered at five previously all-white Nashville grammar schools.

There were spasmodic disturbances at the other four schools where the Negro first graders were enrolled but these were minor in nature.

The lGenn School gathering finally quieted down when Asst. Police Chief Frank M. Miller stepped in and took charge.

School officials had expressed determination to peacefully effect Nashville's first small step toward integration. They had the backing of 110 policemen.

They called on parents yesterday to send their children to school with assurance they would be safe, while segregation leaders urged parents to keep their children at home and go themselves as pickets.

Under plans approved by U. S. District Judge William E. Miller, Nashville schools are beginning desegregation with first graders today. Further desegregation plans must be submitted to the court by Dec. 31.

THE NEW FIRST GRADE zoning made about 126 Negro children eligible to enter formerly all-white schools.

More than half of these have asked and obtained transfers to Negro schools under provisions of the plan. Only 13 Negroes registered for mixed classes at five schools in advance of school opening.

Asst. Supt. W. H. Oliver urged parents to have their children in school today and called for calmness and order as classes begin.

POLICE CHIEF Douglas E. Hosse said Saturday he would have 110 to 115 policemen assigned to keep order at the schools. He said peaceful picketing would be allowed, but anybody who is disorderly or who tries to intimidate anybody would be arrested on the spot.

About 150 segregationists gathered in a drizzling rain Sunday and sat in their cars to listen to John Kasper and other White Citizens Council speakers urge all-out resistance to desegregation.

THE SPEAKERS, some holding the microphone inside their cars and others standing in the open under an umbrella, urged parents to go to school as pickets and leave their children at home.

A spokesman for a more moderate pro-segregation group, the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, issued a statement reminding parents that Tennessee's compulsory school law does not apply to 6-year-olds, the age of most first graders.

Jack Kershaw, a Nashville real estate man and vice chairman of the federation, said, "parents should keep their children out of school if they're under seven.

"As a matter of fact, all parents should keep their children out of school. . . . Parents can send their children to a private school or a day school and I don't see why each parent can't declare their home a day school."

DESEGREGATION OF first graders here made Nashville the second city in Tennessee to mix the races in state-supported secondary schools. The first was Clinton, where desegregation of the high school was marked by repeated violence a year ago.

Nashville's total public school enrollment of about 18,000 was expected to include about 3500 first graders, of whom about 2000 are white.

The color barriers have already been eliminated or lowered here in many other aspects of community life. City golf courses have been desegregated under court order and segregation signs have disappeared quietly from city buses.

THE CATHOLIC parochial school system desegregated most of its schools two years ago. Vanderbilt University and Scarritt College have admitted a few Negroes. There is a Negro representative on the city council and one on the school board.

However the segregation pattern has generally been continued. The number of Negroes sitting in the front of buses, or playing at formerly all-white golf courses, or attending classes with whites has been small. Restaurants, theaters and hotels remain segregated.

NASHVILLE ON ALERT FOR SCHOOL FRICTION

More Than 100 Negro First Graders May Register With Whites Today

By JAMES EWING
From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Aug. 26.—Nashville school officials and police were prepared for any eventuality Monday on the eve of expected registration by more than 100 Negroes in white schools.

W. A. Bass, superintendent of Nashville schools, addressed a meeting of principals from the city's elementary schools.

Police Available

"Tomorrow we begin a new era," he said. "We don't know what will happen but we want you to be fearless, unafraid and able to meet the public with confidence and firmness."

Mr. Bass also told the principals that the necessary police forces will be available to meet any trouble spots. "The police chief is ready to handle any interference within the schools or any violations of the law outside the schools," he said.

Kasper To Be Active

While schools officials were hopeful there would be no trouble, there were signs that at least non-violent protests will be made.

John Kasper, Washington segregationist who now claims the title of executive secretary of the Tennessee White Citizens Council, said he will be active throughout the day and plans to visit a number of the schools.

The Parents School Preference Committee, backed by petitions bearing 6,000 signatures, continued its efforts for a stay of the Federal Court order and reminded parents that children under 7 are not bound by the compulsory attendance law.

Under a Federal Court order by Judge William E. Miller of Nashville, city schools will be desegregated at the first grade level when schools open Sept. 9.

An estimated 1,435 Negro first graders and 2,065 white first graders will register Tuesday.

However, under a districting plan proposed by the City School Board and approved by Judge Miller only 125 Negroes would be eligible to attend white schools.

Parents Asked To Come, Too

This figure has been reduced considerably by transfers. Up to Monday night 13 white children and 11 Negroes had been granted transfers and 11 other applications were pending. W. H. Oliver, assistant superintendent of schools, said he anticipated other requests at registration Tuesday.

Parents have been asked to accompany the children to the schools. The court order permits transfers if a student would otherwise have to attend a school where the opposite race is in the majority.

There are 15 white schools in the city where Negroes will be eligible to attend. The number of Negroes in each school ranges from one to 25.

The court order does not affect county schools, where enrollment exceeds that of the city.

Chester W. Mason, chairman of the Parents School Preference Committee, quoted from a recent television address by Mr. Oliver to inform parents of 6-year-olds they may legally keep their youngsters out of school.

Mr. Oliver said he made the statement in answer to a question and that while the compulsory attendance law applies only to children between the ages of 7 and 17, "I wouldn't advise that any children be kept out of school."

The parents committee was apparently making some progress in its efforts to seek a stay of the Federal Court order.

Edwin F. Hunt, attorney for the board, said he had been instructed to file necessary papers requesting the delay.

He pointed out, however, that it takes five days' notice before a motion can be filed and then only on approval by the judge.

Judge Miller is on vacation but is expected back Sept. 3, a week ahead of the scheduled opening of schools.

Attendance Put at 90% In Nashville Schools

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 18 (AP).—Attendance has risen to 90 per cent of the enrollment at the city's five desegregated elementary schools after a week of tension and violence.

"I believe our trouble is ended," Supt. W. A. Bass said yesterday.

Segregationist demonstrations and violence capped by the mysterious dynamiting of Hattie Cotton Elementary School followed the first-grade integration last week ordered by United States District Court here. Attendance dropped to less than half of normal at the affected schools.

The children returned yesterday under the watchful eyes of police officers, and all was quiet.

Eleven Negro 6-year-olds were in the five schools with about 2,000 white pupils, and a 12th Negro was expected to be on hand today. The one Negro girl at Hattie Cotton transferred yesterday to an all-Negro school.

As the classrooms filled up again, segregationist John Kasper was arraigned on a charge of inciting to riot, and his trial was set for November 18. He remained in jail in default of $2,500 bond.

Kasper and nine other persons are under a Federal court order restraining them and others acting with them for interferring with school desegregation here.

The Nashville City Council added $1,000 last night to rewards for informtaion in the school dynamiting, bringing the total to $7,000. The State has offered $5,000 and the Nashville Banner $1,000.

Boycott of School Ended by Negroes

LAKE CHARLES, La., Sept. 18 (AP).—A Negro group said yesterday it had ended its boycott of a Negro school after an effort to obtain another school closer to their homes.

The parents kept about 97 children out of the St. John School about 10 miles away and asked that the closer Melrose School for whites be turned over to Negroes.

They accepted the board offer to build a new Negro school next year.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE GROWS AT NASHVILLE

It Reaches 91 Per Cent Of Enrollment—Kasper Has New Day In Court

(Picture on Page 34)

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Sept. 17. — Attendance at Nashville schools rose to 91 per cent of total enrollment Tuesday in the first day of classes since segregationists were enjoined from interfering with the Federal integration order.

W. H. Oliver, assistant superintendent of schools, said attendance was about normal with the exception of two schools.

At Fehr school, where violence erupted a week ago with the opening of school, 267 of the 340 enrolled were present and at Jones School, 325 of 430 students were in classes.

Called Encouraging

Mr. Oliver said this was "encouraging" in view of the practical desertion of the two schools last week. He said he expected additional gains as the week progresses.

Hattie Cotton School, which was back in service despite severe damage from dynamite last week, reported 369 of 399 children present. Parents of the one Negro who enrolled last week said she will be transferred to an all-Negro school.

This left 11 Negroes in five white schools, 10 of whom attended classes Tuesday. The rest of the 125 who had been eligible under the Federal court order have been granted transfers to Negro schools.

Meanwhile, John Kasper, New Jersey-born race agitator, had another session in court. He pleaded innocent in Davidson County Criminal Court to charges of inciting a riot.

60 Days For Defense

Judge Chester K. Hart gave him 60 days in which to prepare his defense. If convicted, he could be sentenced up to 11 months and 29 days in jail and fined up to $1,000.

Kasper was returned to Davidson County jail after the arraignment, which lasted exactly one minute. He is being held on $2,500 bond.

School officials expressed the opinion developments of the past few days have "broken the back" of the organized campaign against integration of schools here.

In Maryville, Tenn.

Ask Integration of 24 Pupils

MARYVILLE, (Tenn.) — The Maryville School Board, like many other similar boards in the nation, is struggling with the problem of how to integrate, or keep from integrating, 24 Negro children who make up the entire student body of the all-Negro, unaccredited Hale Colored High School of this city, into the strictly modern, fully accredited Maryville High School, now all white.

Spearheading the request that the Maryville High School be integrated is George Coffin, a Maryville Negro who as secretary of the Blount County Improvement Association (organized in March) acted as chairman of a committee of three white citizens and five Negroes. They appeared before the board to repeat a previous request that some step be made, even on a gradual basis, to conform with the law of the land on integration.

Coffin, acting as the lone parent representative for the 24 Negro children, had first appeared before the school board two years ago and made a similar request.

Although the idea of sending the 24 Hale students to nearby Alcoa High School (colored), also in Blount County and accredited, has been discussed, the Maryville-Alcoa Daily Times, in an editorial, argued against such a move, saying that the courts would simply render a verdict that the students be allowed to attend Maryville High.

Dr. Thomas Stanley, school board member, told the interracial delegation that he felt certain that each member of the board favored upholding the law and that the board had studied and offered plans, but the problem was something like a man trying to lift a 300-pound block of ice without tongs—it's hard to find a place to take hold.

Secretary Stanley Shields said he felt the idea of an advisory committee looked as good a suggestion as had been presented.

COFFIN STATED that the improvement association of some 35 to 50 members had grown out of P-TA groups in the county as a result of the need for a step forward toward providing Negro children with a good education.

Whites attending as members of the committee making the request were: Dr. Francis Manis, 830 E. Long Road, Alcoa, associate professor of the University of Tennessee's department of social work; Rev. Carleton E. Pilseckker of Fairlawn Circle, Maryville, pastor of St. Paul Lutheran Church, and one of the members of that church, Don Richardson, Locha Poka Drive, a Civil Aeronautics Authority operations expert.

Did 'Blunder' Bring About Desegregation in Nashville?

Miami Herald-Chicago News Wire

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Segregationist forces in the South may have learned in Nashville how not to prevent integration in the public schools.

White and Negro first graders will sit as classmates in Nashville's schools this fall because of "a tactical blunder by the segregationists."

KRASLOW

"They hastened desegregation," said Dr. Herman H. Long, Negro director of the Institute of Race Relations now in progress at Fisk University.

"They forced the issue and brought on a decision much faster than many Negroes would have done. If it hadn't been for their insistence on a court test, Nashville would not be integrating its schools in September."

Long cited the relationship between the disturbance at Clinton, Tenn., which followed the decision to admit Negroes to the white high school, and integration in Nashville.

"We realize that change—to be lasting — has to come about in the broad area of informal understanding which exists between whites and Negroes in the South," Long said.

"Unless Negroes want to be at war with the white community, adjustment in the long run will have to come about in the day-to-day relationships that Negroes and whites have.

"We weren't ready to make a move in Nashville. We wanted to proceed orderly picking the spots where the best chances for success exist."

When the integration decision was made in Clinton, the pro-segregationist Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government planned an immediate legal test of the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation order.

It appealed to the Tennessee Supreme Court, relying on the state's segregation laws. The court declared Tennessee's laws unconstitutional.

"So instead of an isolated instance in Clinton," Long explained, "the segregationists wound up with a sweeping mandate from the state's own Supreme Court upholding the U.S. Supreme Court.

"If they had been wise, at least from the white segregationists' point of view, they would have let Clinton be and done nothing."

One of the most respected Negro leaders in the South and holder of a doctorate in psychology from the University of Michigan, Long has been at Fisk since the institute was begun 14 years ago.

Some of the 130 white and Negro delegates to the institute this year may seem troubled by the turmoil in the South brought on by the high court's edict on school desegregation in 1954.

But from the soft-spoken, 43-year-old race relations expert, they hear that turmoil, in this instance, "is a rather wholesome feature."

"The large measure of confusion in the minds of the people and the greater public anxiety." Long explains, "is a sure sign that change is taking place, and that it is taking place at a profound level."

Nashville takes steps toward school mixing

News Fla. Times-Union 8-1-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 1—(AP)—The city school board has taken a new step toward desegregation of the races with a revised zoning plan for this year's first-grade pupils.

The board also announced that it's instruction committee would meet within 10 days to act on petitions by segregationists asking for enforcement of the state's new "school preference" law.

The board's integration plan, approved last February by Federal Judge William E. Miller, starts with the first grades this Fall and calls for plans for further steps by December.

The new zoning layout approved Tuesday altered 23 school zones which previously had overlapped. But it applies only to the first grades. Students in grades two through 12 will attend according to the old zones.

THE COURT-APPROVED plan allows parents of pupils zoned into schools or grades predominately attended by the opposite race to seek transfers for their children.

Because of the transfer possibility, the number of schools which actually will mix the races this Fall cannot be predicted. Each of the 23 zones affected include population of both races.

The school preference law enacted by the 1957 Legislature, which segregationists have asked the Nashville board to invoke, authorizes local boards to maintain separate schools for children whose parents "elect that their children attend school with members of their own race."

5,062 Parents Request City Allow Their Children In Segregated Schools

Fri. 8-16-57

By JAMES EWING
From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Aug. 15. — City School Board officials Thursday promised an early reply to petitions from 5,062 parents requesting that their children be allowed to attend segregated schools this fall.

The petitions were presented by Chester W. Mason, chairman of the recently organized Parents School Preference Committee, and L. V. Dubose, representative of the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government.

Claims No Violations

Mr. Dubose said the plan advocated by the parents does not violate provisions of a Federal Court order abolishing compulsory segregation at the first grade level when classes reopen Sept. 3.

"The plan approved by Judge (William D.) Miller provides for liberal transfers," Mr. Dubose said. "All we ask is that those parents requesting their children be sent to segregated schools be given this privilege and those who want their children to attend integrated schools be given that privilege."

Urge Use Of 1957 Law

The parents urged that the board take advantage of a 1957 law permitting designation by a school board of voluntary segregated and voluntary integrated schools.

Under the rezoning plan adopted by the board and approved by Judge Miller, 124 of about 1,400 Negro first graders will be eligible to attend white schools next month in the city.

Many of these Negroes are expected to request transfer to school with their own race.

Nashville to Admit Negroes To First Grade With Whites

Integration to Begin This Fall Under U.S. District Court Order

Sun. 8-4-57 (14d(1))

By JOE HATCHER
Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 3—An estimated 132 Negro children will be eligible to attend previously all-white schools in the city of Nashville starting Sept. 2, the city board of education announced this week.

The board completed a remapping and rezoning of the city for first grade students, the only class to be integrated this year under the U.S. District court order.

The rezoning theoretically was made without discrimination as to race, but presumably considered the segregated residential areas in remapping.

The school population estimates are that 2,065 whites and 1,435 Negro first graders will enter the city schools on Sept. 2.

Affects 15 Schools

The estimate of 132 eligible for integrated schools does not take into consideration the possibility of requests by parents for transfer to other schools. The estimates range from 1 Negro beginner to 25. Fifteen formerly all-white schools are involved in the integration eligibility. A total of 23 formerly overlapping zones were changed, and 13 were left unchanged.

In announcing the rezoning and estimates on integration, the school board announced that a hearing would be given two protesting segregationist groups sometime in the near future. The Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government and the Parents School Preference Committee both have asked hearings before the board, urging that the board take action under the 1957 state "pupil assignment" law rather than the federal court orders for integration.

TENNESSEE

courts or not, cannot be applied to the Nashville city schools, which are under court orders handed down prior to passage of the state laws. In addition to the assignment law, the segregationists point out the law providing "separate schools for white and Negro children whose parents, legal guardians or custodians voluntarily elect that such children attend school with members of their own race."

This particular law was passed with little hope, the legislators admitted, of being upheld constitutionally under the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions, or workable if large numbers sought transfer to already inadequate schools in some cases.

Kasper in Nashville

Segregationist John Kasper, fighting two sentences for his activities in the Clinton integration case, was in Nashville declaring his purpose to organize White Councils and contest vigorously the integration plan of the city board under the court order.

Kasper first announced from Knoxville that a meeting here was being set up by the Ku Klux Klan, but Klan officials later denied any connection with Kasper. The other two segregationist organizations also have repudiated Kasper, or any participation by him in their activities.

Kasper was driving a Knoxville - licensed automobile with Confederate flags flying from the fenders. His presence was generally ignored for several days, and then Kasper sought out the newspapers on his own.

The survey made public by the school board predicted "great difficulties" are expected in the desegregation of six of the 3[illegible] city schools and "moderate difficulties" in two others. The schools were not identified, however. Presumably the difficulties will come in the schools which would get the larger groups of Negroes. The fight, of course, will be against any desegregation.

SCHOOL BOARD SEEKS DISMISSAL OF SUIT

Negroes Demand Admission At Knoxville

Sat. 6-29-57

KNOXVILLE, June 28.—(AP)—Asserting the time is not ripe school board Friday asked dismissal of a suit by 14 Negro students seeking admission to four white public schools.

In an answer to the suit filed in January, the board said it has made a "prompt and reasonable start toward tse solution of these problems" in complete good faith" with the Supreme Court decision banning public school segregation.

"But," the board said, "an unwise and too hasty attempt to carry out the order of the Supreme Court will seriously disrupt and impede the education of the pupils of Knoxville, both Negro and white."

It added: "Speedy and complete desegregation should not be attempted in Knoxville."

The suit was filed with backing of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Jan. 7, by 14 Negro students, 11 girls and three boys, seeking admission to two white high schools and two white elementary schools.

The Negroes, who were turned away from white schools when they attempted to enroll last September, said the denial of admission violated their rights under the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

In its petition Friday, the board said the rigsts of the Negroes or "those whom they may be shown to represent are outweighed by the individual rights of many more persons which will be damaged by too hasty change in the present practice."

TENNESSEE ORDERS INTEGRATION PLAN

Times P. 17-C

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 9—The Tennessee State Board of Education directed a subcommittee today to draft "with all deliberate speed" a new plan to desegregate the six colleges operated by the state.

The new plan would substitute for one previously approved by the board but voided by the United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. The previous program, effective in the fall of 1955, desegregated classes in graduate schools and provided for integration of undergraduate classes one year at a time, starting with senior classes last fall.

The Circuit Court held that the order failed to comply with the Supreme Court's decision outlawing school segregation.

Quill E. Cope, State Education Commissioner and chairman of the board, was authorized to appoint the committee to draft a new plan. It presumably will be submitted to a Federal District Court for approval.

At the same time, the board asked presidents of state colleges to propose new entrance requirements, as authorized by a 1957 act of the Legislature. State officials have denied that this law would be used to perpetuate segregation.

Nashville Ready To Desegregate

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 9-14-57 P. 2

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Desegregation takes one step forward here on Sept. 2 when 132 Negro tots begin attending first grade classes in previously all-white schools.

This city's Board of Education made the announcement upon having completed a re-zoning of the school districts insofar as the first-graders are concerned.

According to estimates, when school opens up on Sept. 2, 1,435 Negro pupils will be numbered among the city's total of 4,500 first-graders. The move made towards desegregation by the Nashville School Board is in compliance with a U. S. District Court order.

Nashville Clergy Asks Integration Support

World B'ham, Ala. P. 2

Wed. 8-28-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — More than 500 ministers of three faiths in Nashville were urged Friday to support the school board's integration policy. About 3,250 first-grade students, 1,300 of whom are Negroes, will be integrated when school officially opens here Sept. 9, according to the Nashville School board.

Letters asking support of integration were sent to the ministers by the Nashville Association of Churches and the Nashville Ministers Association. They were signed by the president and secretary, respectively of the organization.

The clergymen took their bold progressive stand on integration in the face of protests, threatened violence and boycotts. The school board has been petitioned to revoke its decision ordering immediate integration. Also, a Presbyterian minister has predicted that some white parents will not allow their children to attend the mixed schools. He said integration was "unchristian."

Meanwhile, the Nashville school board, realizing it has the backing of the ministers, the Nashville Community Relations Conference, and many citizens has been untouched by the grievances which up to now have not been widespread.

Board members said that 33 parents have requested transfers for their children. Twelve have been granted and others are under consideration, they said.

Integration Due Today

Mon. 9-9-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 8 (UP) — Negro children are scheduled to begin integrated classes with white children for the first time in Nashville's history Monday.

Raleigh N.C.

Police Chief Douglass Hosse warned that anyone causing disorder at the schools would be "arrested on the spot."

Thirteen Negro pupils, out of 126 eligible, already have registered for the first grade classes as the city launches its "gradual" desegregation plan. More are expected to show up tomorrow morning when the classes begin at 8:20 a.m.

The integration in five public schools climaxes weeks of court maneuvering and warnings by segregationist John Kasper.

Kasper said he and supporters would place pickets around the schools. Police Chief Hosse said he had no objection to the pickets provided they are orderly.

"But if there is any disorder, or if anyone gets up on the school grounds to create disorder, or intimidate anyone, they'll be arrested on the spot," he warned.

Nashville school officials were banking on police protection and cooperation from whites and Negroes to forestall any violence.

"We have gone to a good bit of trouble to prepare carefully for the opening of school," said assistant superintendent W. H. Oliver.

"We are planning a good school year and I know we can count on the police department to see that we are unmolested as we get down to the business of educating our children."

Nashville authorities have been ordered to submit further plans for desegregation of public schools by Dec. 31 by a federal court.

Police Chief Douglas Hosse has said peaceful picketing will be allowed but anybody who becomes disorderly or tries to intimidate anybody will be arrested on the spot. He said 110 to 115 policemen will be assigned to keep order at the schools.

Asst. School Supt. W. H. Oliver assured parents they need not worry over the safety of their children.

Calmness Urged as School Mixing Starts in Nashville

Jacksonville Fla.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 8 (AP)—School officials urged parents today to send their children to school tomorrow and approach the first day of first grade desegregation with calmness and order.

P. 18

Meanwhile, about 150 segregationists gathered in a drizzling rain and sat in their cars to listen to John Kasper and other White Citizens Council speakers urge all-out resistance to desegregation.

Nashville schools are scheduled to begin mixed classes for the first time tomorrow under the first step of court-ordered desegregation.

Under the court-approved plan 126 Negro first graders were eligible to enroll in formerly all-white schools. More than half of these have requested and been granted transfers.

At the segregationist rally several speakers, some talking by loudspeaker from automobiles and others from under an umbrella in the open, urged parents to leave their children at home and to go to school themselves as pickets.

Tennessee's Answer To Integration

Editorial
Wed. 1-16-57

The Memphis Commercial Appeal

ASSIGNMENT of pupils to public schools by local school boards is the Tennessee state administration's answer to the integration situation.

It is moderate in tone and realistic.

It will carry out the desires of every man and woman of good will for education of both races.

It will not satisfy the extremists on either side. The NAACP will regard it as a means of blocking their desires for immediate integration on every level regardless of abilities for assuming the responsibilities that would come with it. The radicals on the other side will regard it as appeasement, a first step in the direction of integration.

But it should satisfy the needs for tranquility.

It has the definite advantage of providing adequate schools for both white and Negro children through pooling of taxes by counties not too well endowed with tax resources.

Most of all, it has the virtue of managing schools at the local level, instead of inviting intervention by callous agencies that overthrow old institutions without caring how the substitutes work. It leaves to local boards the devising of a local method to meet local conditions. It is an authorization for many answers, as many answers as there are school boards. It seems to allow a school board with white schools and Negro schools to also have a biracial school for parents who are dissatisfied with the one-race schools.

It is a return to the tradition of Thomas Jefferson in which the best government is the government closest to the people.

Gov. Frank Clement made a convincing presentation to the Legislature. He left out the emotional appeal and oratorical fireworks of which he is capable and coolly outlined the needs of the hour and the method for meeting these needs. It is a method which commends itself to approval of the legislators and the people who elected them.

School Board Will Be Advised On U.S. Order For Nashville

Advertiser Tues. 1-24-57

Montgomery, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 23 (AP)—The attorney for the city school board will advise the board to comply with a federal court order to submit by the end of the year a complete plan and timetable for desegregating city schools.

Federal Judge William E. Miller this week approved the board's plan for desegregating first grade classes next fall but ordered the board by Dec. 31, to outline its plans for complete desegregation.

Edwin Hunt, attorney for the board, said, "we are gratified that the judge has sustained the gradual transition plan including the system of transfers. I shall advise compliance with the court's instruction to furnish by Dec. 31 a complete schedule for desegregation."

Judge Miller approved five points of the board's six-point plan which provides for voluntary student transfers where students are required to attend classes with a majority of another race.

The sixth point, which he did not accept, provided for the board's instruction committee to study the problem and recommend by the end of the year the time and number of grades to be desegregated in the next step.

'GRADUAL' PLAN

Nashville's "gradual" school desegregation plan was submitted in answer to a suit filed by parents of 21 Negro and two white children seeking admission to segregated schools.

The plan as submitted to Judge Miller provided for:

—Abolition of compulsory racial segregation in first grades of city schools next fall.

—A plan of school zoning based on location of school buildings and the latest scholastic census without reference to race.

—First graders to attend the school designated for the zone in which the student resides.

—Application for transfer of first graders from the school in their zone to another when made in writing by the student's parents or guardians.

OPPOSITE RACE

Valid conditions for applying for a transfer as outlined by the board are where a student would be required to attend a school formerly attended only by students of the opposite race or where a student would be required to attend a school where a majority of students in that school or his or her class are of another race.

Of the board's sixth point, Judge Miller said the provision for merely studying the problem before taking further desegregation steps "is in effect simply a proposal for indefinite postponement of further desegregation . . ."

Miller at the same time refused to issue an injunction sought by the 21 Negro children to erase all racial school segregation here in one fell swoop.

In discussing the transfer system, considered one of the key proposals of the board's plan, Judge Miller said that "provisions which merely confer upon white and Negro students a nondiscriminatory right to transfer would not appear to violate the constitution."

Tenn. Presses 5 School Bills

Post and Times Herald

NASHVILLE, Jan. 23 (AP)—Five administration measures, which would permit voluntary segregation and pupil assignment in Tennessee public schools, awaited today only House agreement on minor amendments and the Governor's signature to become law.

All five school bills whipped through the Senate yesterday by wide majorities but with minor changes in the original proposals.

Banner, 1-24-57

The House passed the bills last week but two must go back for concurrence on the Senate amendments.

The bill which permits the operation of separate white and negro schools if desired passed the Senate by a vote of 27-4.

Washington

The House approved by a 60-3 vote a second and stronger resolution denouncing the United States Supreme Court rulings involving states' rights. The so-called "Tennessee Manifesto," approved last week, limited criticism to desegregation rulings.

The two school bills which will go back to the House for approval of amendments give local school boards the right to transfer pupils and permit the boards to operate schools jointly with other boards.

The school bills, which recognize the Supreme Court's school rulings, is considered by some political observers as a "moderate" approach to the segregation problem.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (ANP) — A lawsuit seeking integration of this city's public schools, was filed last week by 14 colored children in the same U.S. District Court that began integration at nearby Clinton.

Attorneys in the action were listed as Carl A. Cowan, assistant Knox County attorney general; Z. Alexander Loody and Avon N. Williams, Jr., both of Nashville; and NAACP chief counsel Thurgood Marshall of New York.

Named as defendants were the city Board of Education; Thomas N. Johnson; superintendent; Gale Gardner, East High School principal; Mrs. Margaret C. Hamilton, Staub Elementary School principal; Dewey Lee, Mountain View Elementary School principal; and Frank R. Marable, supervisor city schools.

CLEMENT ASKS FOR VOLUNTARY NEGRO SCHOOLS

Daily Defender
Chicago Ill.
Thurs. 1-10-57

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 9 (AP) —Gov. Frank Clement recommended today a voluntary pupil assignment plan for preserving racially segregated public schools in Tennessee.

In a speech prepared for a joint session of the legislature —his first public stand on the issue — Clement said he is making a "moderate" approach to the problem.

"I, for one, will not be a party to any action which would imperil or endanger the continued existence of our public schools," he said.

Asks for Five Laws

He recommended five specific acts he wants the legislature to pass:

1. A law allowing local school boards to maintain separate white and Negro schools for children whose parents choose for them to "attend school with members of their own race."

2. A law permitting local school boards to "place, assign, and transfer" the pupils in their jurisdiction. This act would provide that local boards would base their decisions on "sociological, geographical, physical, psychological, fiscal, educational, and any other factors . . ."

3. An amendment to the existing law authorizing pupils to be transfered from one school system to another.

4. A law permitting two or more boards of education to establish, maintain, and operate schools jointly.

5. A law amending the present school bus statute to agree with the rest of the program.

Pattern from Other States

Clement said he thinks local school boards already have enough power in hiring, assigning, and dismissing teachers, and recommended no changes in these laws.

He also disapproved of any changes in the present compulsory school attendance law, because "any weakening of these laws is likely to lead to serious abuses."

Clement said he studied the actions and experiences of other states—where pupil assignment plans have been among the most popular proposals for retaining segregated schools—but that he did not try to adopt laws "foreign to the educational system and to the jurisprudence of our state."

Hits High Court Ruling

His program, he said, "is in harmony with and strengthens our present laws. It envisions no radical changes which would lead to the weakening, if not the destruction of our present school system."

He spoke to a legislature, which opened Monday and which already had before it two resolutions attacking the United States Supreme court's ban on school segregation. The first, submitted by Clement's top legislative aids denounced the decision as a usurpation of power by the court.

The second resulution, introduced by three Democrats struck at the Supreme court in more blistering language.

Segregation Okayed in Tenn. Schools

Pittsburgh Pa.

NASHVILLE (ANP) — Gov. Frank Clement's voluntary school segregation program and a bill known as the "Tennessee Manifesto" were approved overwhelmingly by the Tennessee House of Representatives.

Three of the bills had no opposition on the roll call. Two others each had two opponents.

The manifesto, a resolution "deploring and denouncing the U. S. Supreme Court's integration decisions," passed 71-7 with 20 members abstaining.

Lawyers weigh judge's ruling in Nashville intearation case

Afro-American Sat. 2-2-57 P. 3

Baltimore Md.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (NNPA) NAACP attorneys are weighing the question of whether an appeal may be taken from the decision of Judge William E. Miller in the Federal District Court here on Jan. 21 approving the plan of the Nashville Board of Education for ending racial segregation in the first grade in the fall.

Judge Miller, however, withheld his approval of a provision in the school board's gradual desegregation plan which allowed the board indefinite time for completing desegregation of the city public schools.

Z. Alexander Looby, NAACP attorney who represented the colored children, said he did not know whether an appeal from Judge Miller's ruling is permissable.

"I am not saying that I would approve it if it were permissable," Looby said, "but here is a question as to whether we could appeal, even if we wanted to. "I am not certain about it," he added.

LOOBY SAID the opinion "still leaves undetermined what the complete plan of desegregation will be and what position the court will take concerning it when it is submitted. "But so far, so good," Looby commented.

The attorney was apparently in doubt as to whether an appeal can be taken because Judge Miller specifically retained jurisdiction of the case "during the period of transition."

Presumably, this blocked any appeal, at least until the city school board files its complete plan, and Judge Miller approves or disapproves the plan and enters a final judgment in the case.

Normally, a case may not be appealed until a final judgment is entered, and Judge Miller gave no hint in his opinion when the final judgment may be entered.

* * *

JUDGE MILLER issued his ruling that gradual desegregation in Nashville public schools is valid despite the decision of the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals disapproving a gradual plan for desegregating Memphis State College.

He ruled the board's proposal to take "the first step" toward desegregation by beginning with the first grade this fall "is both prompt and reasonable."

The pertinent provisions of the school board's plan which he upheld are:

1. COMPULSORY segregation based upon race is abolished in grade one of the elementary schools for the school year beginning Sept. 1957.

2. A plan of school zoning or districting based upon location of school buildings and the latest school census without reference to race will be established for the administration of the first grade and of other grades as they are desegregated.

3. Every student entering the first grade will be permitted to attend the school designated for the zone in which he or she resides, subject to regulations which may be necessary in particular instances.

4. Applications for transfer of first grade students from the school of their zone to another school will be given careful consideration and will be granted when made in writing by parents or guardians when good cause is shown and the transfer is practicable, consistent with sound school administration.

* THE FOLLOWING will be regarded as some of the valid conditions to support application for transfer:

(a) When a white child would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving colored students only.

(b) When a colored child would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving white students only.

(c) When a student would be required to attend a school where the majority of students of the school or in his or her grade are of a different color.

But Judge Miller disapproved tht board's plan to direct its institution committee "to continue its study of the problem and to recommend by Dec. 31, 1957, the time of, and, the number of grades to be included in the next step to be taken in further abolishing compulsory segregation."

Would Set Aside Excess In Sales, Tobacco Taxes For Education

Governor Says Distribution Will Be Up To Local Officials — Spokesmen Of T.E.A. Opposed

P. 1

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Feb. 5.—Gov. Frank G. Clement Tuesday announced a compromise plan on the explosive teacher pay issue. Administration leaders will sponsor the compromise when the Senate considers the general education bill as its first order of business Wednesday.

The plan calls for amending the bill to set aside for education any amount the sales tax and tobacco tax bring in that is in excess of that estifated by the Governor's budget officials.

This is in addition to the $150 annual increase proposed for teachers next year and $50 the following year.

Would Distribute Excess

The amendment calls for distributing about five-sixths of any excess funds to the city and county schools systems for teachers' pay, new classrooms or whatever education needs pose the greatest problems.

The remaining one-sixth would be divided among universities, colleges and special schools operated by the state.

Governor Clement said most legislators favoring teachers' salaries above what the state believes can be done without increased taxes have assumed revenues will exceed state estimates.

"We want to see the cause of education promoted in Tennessee and we certainly do not have any desire to see anyone denied what is due them, nor do we want to unnecessarily involve anyone in political controversy," he said.

The Governor said he considers it his duty to actively oppose any increase in state taxes at this session and to guard against any action which would force an increase in local taxes.

He said, "In line with our desire to do all we can for education, in view of the fact that many legislators have been committed to do everything possible for teachers and the schools, and in line with our position that the earmarked sales tax and the tobacco tax have been and are going exclusively to education, we are proposing an amendment to the general education bill which men and women in good faith will be able to support."

Explaining that the money would be distributed as local officials saw fit, he said, "Those closest to the people in each community throughout the state, will have the power in the event such funds do come in, to use this money for any educational matters, including the payment of teachers' salaries."

Spokesmen for the T.E.A. and others who are leading the fight for a $300 guaranteed increase next year and $100 the following year were generally opposed to the suggested compromise.

Frank E. Bass, executive secretary of T.E.A., said, "It doesn't look too good for the teachers."

John Richardson, assistant secretary, said he and Mr. Bass have been instructed to work for the T.E.A. proposal and are not authoried to accept any compromise. He said any compromise would have to be settled among the legislators and the T.E.A. cannot officially endorse it.

Sex segregation bill moves ahead

News P. 32

Fri. 2-8-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 8—(AP)—The Tennessee Senate yesterday passed without opposition a bill to permit segregation by sexes in public schools. Sen. Harlan Dodson of Nashville, said his bill was designed as standby legislation, to be used in case federal court should strike down all or any of the new school segregation laws.

The bill would permit school boards to operate separate schools for boys and girls. Dodson explained the major integration problem is "not so much mixing of the races as mixing of the sexes."

In the House, a resolution was referred to the education committee inviting Rep. John Bell Williams of Mississippi, co-chairman of a committee investigating Washington, D. C. school integration, to speak to the legislature.

GATLINBURG, Tenn., Feb. 24.—The Council of the Southern Mountains, an organization of church, social and educational workers in the Appalachian South closed its 45th annual meeting Saturday by re-endorsing public school integration.

Mon. 2-25-57

The council endorsed a motion by the board of directors to "reaffirm the considered judgment and hope expressed by a vote of this council in February, 1956, that communities and local school boards in the Southern Appalachian region proceed with integration in the public schools within the framework of the Supreme Court decision."

Educated Baptist Clerics OK School Integration

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (RNS) — Thirty-nine percent of Southern Baptist clergymen in Tennessee approved the integration of Negroes and whites in public schools, a survey disclosed here.

The survey was made by students of Dr. Herbert J. Miles, sociology professor at Carson-Newman college, a Baptist school at Jefferson City, Tenn. The results were announced by the publication department of the Southern Baptist Convention here.

A total of 1,005 pastors out of 1,970 answered questionnaires. The answers indicated that younger and more educated pastors generally favor integration of schools.

Sixty-one per cent of ministers aged 29 and under approved such integration, whereas only 16 per cent of pastors in the 50 to 59 age group favored it.

Seventy-three per cent of pastors with bachelor of divinity degrees approved integration.

The survey also revealed:

1. The ministers disagree on such issues as capital punishment, integration of races otherwise and performing marriages where one party has been divorced.

2. Ninety per cent or more agree that Southern Baptists should join the National Council of Churches, should not ordain women to preach, should not take part in the Lord's Supper outside a Baptist church, and should accept by letter a non-Baptist even though he has been immersed.

3. Their differences of opinion result more from educational background than from ages.

4. The average pastor is 41 years old, has been preaching 14 years, and has held five pastorates during that span.

School Funds And Segregation Are Legislature Topics

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (NNPA) — School segregation and funds are two major problems confronting the Tennessee legislature in its biennial session which opened here Monday.

Recent surveys show that four out of five legislators favor steps to keep colored and white students in segregated public schools.

The state administration, headed by Gov. Frank G. Clement, favors "moderate legislation" on race relations. Dr. Quill E. Cope, state commissioner of education, has said he will resist any bill that would damage the schools or express defiance of the United States Supreme Court.

State Representative James L. Bomar of Shelbyville, reelected Speaker of the House, supports a pupil assignment bill to give local boards broad power to determine which schools students should attend.

Similar measures were blocked by the Clement administration in the 1955 legislature, but pro-segregation sentiment has since increased to such an extent that there is little resistance, except among colored people, to a segregation bill now.

For that reason, the administration hopes that a measure acceptable to both sides can be worked out and that the segregation issue can be settled without blocking other legislation.

As for funds, demands from all sides far exceed the amount available for additional appropriations.

Knoxville Negroes Petition For Entry To White Schools

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 9 (AP) — Fourteen Negro children filed petition in Federal Court here yesterday seeking admission to two all-white secondary and two all-white elementary schools in Knoxville.

The petition said the Negroes, 11 girls and three boys, sought admission to white schools last September but were turned away by school authorities.

The Negroes said denial of admission violated their rights under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

They asked the court to issue a permanent injunction "forever restraining and enjoining" school officials from refusing to admit them and "other persons similarly situated" as students in all Knoxville public schools.

Joint Hearings Are Planned To Consider Five Actions For Recommendation

THIRD SHELBY BILL IN

Measure Seeks To Outlaw Suits Filed By Persons Other Than Kin — Action On Manifesto Expected

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Jan. 10 — Early action on Gov. Frank Clement's five-point legislative program on school segregation was assured Thursday with announcement of joint hearings on the bills at 2 p.m. Tuesday.

Senate Speaker Jared Maddux and House Speaker James L. Bomar said the hearings will be held by the Education and Judiciary Committees of both houses meeting in joint session, probably in the House chamber.

'All Will Be Heard'

Mr. Bomar pointed out that the primary purpose of Tuesday's meeting is to consider the bills for recommendation to the Legislature.

"All who want to be heard will be heard, however," he said.

Legislative activities Thursday were highlighted by introduction of a third bill by the Shelby County delegation aimed at curtailing activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

It would outlaw "barratry," defining this as "stirring up" lawsuits. A "barrator," the act says, is an individual, partnership, association or corporation who "instigates" such lawsuits.

It would cover not only lawyers—who would be subject to disbarment—but persons or corporations who contribute to "barratry."

Only Justification

The lawsuit would be justified only if the "instigator" is related by blood or marriage to the plaintiff or has a direct interest in the subject matter.

The two other anti-NAACP bills introduced Wednesday by the Shelby delegation would require registration of persons or organizations engaged in promoting or opposing race legislation and would require filing of detailed information with the secretary of state by fund raising organizations engaged in racial litigation.

While the acts would apply equally to the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, the white Citizens Councils and others, a Shelby County spokesman said all these organizations are for the legislation.

Governor Clement has declined comment on what position he will take if the Shelby bills are approved.

The 27 Republicans in the two houses decided Thursday to follow a hands-off attitude toward the "Tennessee Manifesto," denouncing the United States Supreme Court. A spokesman said they would neither support it nor fight it when it comes up for a vote.

The House resolution has been referred to the Education Committee and the Senate resolution to the Judiciary Committee. Action is expected next week in one or both houses.

Governor Clement is expected to present his budget message to a joint session at 10:30 a.m. next Wednesday.

The Governor and a number of other state officials and legislators are expected to attend the inauguration of President Eisenhower and Vice President Richard Nixon in aWshington Jan. 21.

The lawmakers are expected to adjourn for the week end after a brief session Friday morning for the consideration of local bills only. They will return Monday night.

Meanwhile reaction continued favorable to the Governor's proposed school legislation, administration leaders said.

House Speaker Bomar said responses he has received by telephone, telegram and in person have been 10 to 1 favorable.

Mr. Ewing

one which allows school boards to maintain segregated schools on a voluntary basis.

This is the one which was immediately attacked as being unconstitutional by two Davidson County legislators.

The fact that other lawyers are confident it is constitutional may mean they are more familiar with its purpose and intent.

The principal feature of the bill, like the other four, is that it is voluntary rather than compulsory.

Plan Is Different

In this respect, it differs from a somewhat similar law in Alabama which requires school boards to maintain segregated schools.

Under the proposed act, it would be possible for a local school board to designate segregated schools for children who prefer to attend a school with members of their own race.

Many Legislators Favor Clement's Five Proposals On Segregation In Schools

Governor's Suggestions On Touchy Issue Are Termed 'Step In Right Direction'—Voluntary Aspects Of Plan Are Emphasized

By JAMES EWING

NASHVILLE, Jan. 12.—Although the 1957 General Assembly still has a long way to go, Gov. Frank Clement has clearly won the opening round in his bid to maintain harmony and work toward solution of the school segregation problem.

Even those who favored more drastic measures have termed his proposals "a step in the right direction." Most of the criticism has been by those who considered the legislation either unconstitutional or an attempt to resist the United States Supreme Court order.

The most controversial so far of the five-bill program is the [redacted]

This law, expressly authorizing voluntary segregation of white and Negro students, would replace Tennessee's compulsory segregation statutes which have been held unconstitutional.

There are a number of ways it could be used. In the case of a Federal Court order demanding that white schools be opened to Negroes, the board could designate a school presently being used by Negroes for those who wish to continue attending it.

Conceivably, a school of this kind could serve an entire county or school district and the board could make it available to all children wishing to attend it.

Similarly, a school serving a white residential area could be made available to students living beyond it who might otherwise be compelled to attend an integrated school.

A school board would also be authorized to designate a biracial school in the district for students wishing to attend an integrated school.

Voluntary Concept Untested

Regardless of whether the United States Supreme Court would eventually hold the act unconstitutional, proponents are on safe ground in the fact that the voluntary concept has not been tested yet and, judging from the reaction by most legislators, they are willing to stand with it until it is invalidated.

That same attitude also prevails on the pupil assignment act despite the fact that a Federal district judge held Virginia's pupil assignment law invalid this this past Friday.

Tennessee officials point out that their proposal is not the Virginia law or a carbon copy of any other state's law and they plan to stick with it regardless of what rulings have been made in other states.

Tennessee differs from all the other Southern states in the fact that its leaders have emphasized the voluntary concept and none of the laws seeks compulsion on the part of either school boards or students.

The violence at Clinton is another point in favor of the argument for more authority by school boards to preserve harmony.

SEGREGATION BILLS GAIN IN TENNESSEE

New York Times 1-18-57

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 17—The Tennessee House of Representatives gave overwhelming approval today to Gov. Frank G. Clement's five bills empowering local school boards to preserve racial segregation in public schools.

But State Administration leaders were balked in their efforts to get final action on the bills this week by a Senate adjournment motion that will prohibit passage in the upper house before Tuesday.

The main bill authorizing local boards to assign pupils to schools went through the House without a dissenting vote. The other bills provide for operation of segregated schools on a voluntary basis, permit two or more local boards to operate schools jointly, authorize transfer of pupils from one school system to another and revise the pupil transportation law.

TENNESSEE BILL AUTHORIZES FORMING SCHOOLS BY SEXES

Advertiser-Tri. 2-8-57 Montgomery, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 7 (AP)—The Tenessee Senate passed without opposition and sent to the House today a bill authorizing local city and county school boards to establish separate male and female public schools. The vote was 28-0.

Sen. Harlan Dodson of Nashville, author, said it was drawn up as a result of recent investigation of integrated public schools in Washington, D. C. The measure would permit white and Negro boys to attend the same schools and white and Negro girls to go to school together.

"Whether we like it or not," Dodson said, "one of the greatest problems that comes from integration is a sex problem."

The bill made no changes in laws covering construction of new schools.

Citizens' 'March' To Seek Stronger School Bills

Thurs. 2-7-57

Plans for a "citizens' march on Nashville" next week to lobby for a strong school segregation bill were announced yesterday by A. B. Wren of 1781 Warner Drive, Raleigh.

"Governor Clement's bills are good but they don't go quite far enough," Mr. Wren said. He listed Jack Kershaw of Nashville, chairman of the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Governments and Arthur Canada of Chattanooga, chairman of a society for maintaining segregation, as co-sponsors of the movement.

"We've got 40 cars already lined up to leave Memphis at 3 a.m. Tuesday to lobby the Legislature to pass laws to relieve the integrated schools in Clinton. We hope to get 100 cars." The group plans to visit the Capitol at 10 a.m.

Mr. Wren said he favors "an act requiring the commissioner of education to withhold and declare forfeited all state school funds due any county, city or independent school district in which white and colored children to not attend separate public schools."

Mr. Wren said he was going "as a citizen," and is not an officer of any pro-segregation organization. However, last July he was listed as a member of th eexecutive board of the Citizens Council.

Miller in the Federal District Court here on Jan. 21 approving the plan of the Nashville Board of Education for ending radial segregation in the first grade in the fall.

Judge Miller, however, withheld his approval of a provision in the school board's gradual desegregation plan which allowed the board indefinite time for completing desegregation of the city public schools.

Z. Alexander Looby, NAACP attorney who represented the colored children, said he did not know whether an appeal from Judge Miller's ruling is permissible.

The pertinent provisions of the school board's plan which he upheld are:

1. Compulsory segregation based upon race is abolished in grade one of the elementary schools for the school year beginning in September, 1957.

2. A plan of school zoning or districting based upon location of school buildings and the latest school census without reference to race will be established for the administration of the first grade and of other grades as they are desegregated.

3. Every student entering the first grade will be permitted to attend the school designated for the zone in which he or she resides, subject to regulations which may be necessary in particular instances.

4. Applications for transfer of first grade students from the school

Clement to Urge 'Moderation' In New Segregation Proposals

Atlanta, Ga.

Legislation Would Classify Schools As Strictly Local Responsibilities

14d(1)

Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 5—Gov. Frank Clement has decided to take the lead in the 1957 legislative approach to the school segregation problem in Tennessee.

The administration will have its proposed legislation ready for the Legislature early next week, and Gov. Clement tentatively plans to address the Legislature late in the week on the segregation proposals.

The governor's bill, according to reliable reports, will be a "moderate" approach, and will actually leave the governor's position still a matter of speculation or certainly "middle-of-the-roadism."

The proposed bill will be designed to authorize local school boards, city, county and special school district boards, to assign students to schools within their jurisdiction.

Basic Idea of Bill

The basic idea will be that schools are strictly local responsibilities and wholly under local controls.

Thus in counties or cities where integration might be favored, it can be accomplished. It can well be delayed for long periods in other areas, presumably.

The bill reportedly will provide for assignment to schools by the superintendents, with appeals from such assignments to the local school boards, and thence into the courts if necessary.

There will be no provisions for assignment on basis of race, creed or color—"or previous condition of servitude." But the latitude for rules and regulations will be broad, such as permitting restrictions under school zoning plans, fitness of students, educational standards between schools, student preferences and similar regulations.

Stresses Two Points

The governor is expected to emphasize two points, namely:

1. The U.S. Supreme Court's decisions is the law of the land.

2. The state's public school system must not be threatened in any way.

In effect, the responsibility for integration, segregation, or a mixture will be entirely a local matter, and presumably different in the 95 counties and several hundred cities, according to their individual viewpoints.

Thus the state will assume no responsibility for integration or for the preservation of segregation — except in the state-operated institutions of higher learning. Presumably as many lawsuits as there are school boards would be necessary to determine the legality of action in that area.

The State Board of Education has previously adopted, and has had approved by the federal courts, a plan for gradual integration in the state colleges, starting with the senior classes next fall and completing the plan through four years. The University of Tennessee Board of Trustees voted a similar plan at one time and then rescinded action and have taken no definite vote since.

The UT board is somewhat of an independent organization, with staggered terms that prevent a governor's control. The governor appoints the State Board of Education as a whole, however, and serves as chairman of both boards.

State administration leaders have polled at least a substantial part of the new Legislature, and report, unofficially, that a majority of the Senate and probably the House, favors a "moderate" approach to the segregation question — and will probably support the governor's program straight down the line on the burning issue.

There is some question whether the entire gamut of bills as proposed, and adopted in some other Southern states, will even be introduced. However, most of such proposals may well be bottled up in committee until after the administration bill has been passed, leaders predict.

By early consideration of the controversial question, the governor and his administration obviously hope to clear the way for concerted action on the administration program without the threat of the segregation fight hanging over the session.

The administration forces apparently will have the strength to organize both houses when the 80th General Assembly meets at noon Monday.

TENNESSEE GETS PUPIL-SHIFT PLAN

Clement Offers Proposals to By-Pass Integration by Assigning Schools

Thurs. 1-10-57

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 9—Gov. Frank G. Clement submitted to the Tennessee Legislature today a series of measures that would give local school boards "discretionary power" in resolving the public school desegregation controversy.

The Clement program was contained in five separate bills. At its heart was a proposal to authorize city and county school officials to assign pupils to particular schools on the basis of scholastic aptitude, sociological and psychological factors regarded as pertinent in determining "the best interests of the child and the community as a whole."

In a dramatic thirty-minute address before a special joint legislative session, Governor Clement outlined the complex of interracial incidents, political pressures and emotional fervor that has marked a hardening of the debate over public school desegregation in Tennessee in recent months.

Governor Clement was keynote speaker for the Democratic National Convention in Chicago last summer. His talk today was broadcast over a state radio hookup.

In impassioned language, the Governor defended his program as "honest and free of political quackery." He said that it was based on "sound constitutional principles" and that it would promote harmonious race relations while preserving "the efficiency of our public school system."

He stressed that he was strongly opposed to any amendment of the compulsory school-attendance law because such action would "likely lead to serious abuses." Elimination of compulsory attendance statutes as a "last resort" step toward eventual abolishment of public schools has been a featured segregationist plan in many of the Southern states.

Governor Clement declared that the long-troubled history of race relations in the South could not "be erased by judicial decree."

"But in our recognition of the existence of different backgrounds for white and Negro, we must not overlook the fact that the Negro is equal to the white in the eyes of the law and in the sight of God," he declared.

"When the Negro reads the Declaration of Independence," he continued, "when he hears our leaders speak of the rights of man, he knows that he is a man, he knows that he is an American, and he will never be content to be treated as anything less."

Clement Program Backs Tennessee Segregation

Evening Star Thurs. Jan. 10 1957

Washington, D.C.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 10 (AP).—Gov. Frank Clement recommended yesterday a voluntary pupil assignment plan for preserving racially segregated public schools in Tennessee.

In a speech prepared for a joint session of the Legislature—his first public stand on the issue—Gov. Clement said he is making a "moderate" approach to the problem.

"I for one, will not be a party to any action which would imperil or endanger the continued existence of our public schools," he said.

Thurs. 1-10-57

He recommended five specific acts he wants the Legislature to pass:

1. A law allowing local school boards to maintain separate white and Negro schools for children whose parents choose for them to "attend school with members of their own race."

2. A law permitting local school boards to "place, assign and transfer" the pupils in their jurisdiction. The heart of the plan, this act would provide that local boards would base their decisions on "sociological, geographical, physical, psychological, fiscal, educational and any other factors. . . ."

3. An amendment to the existing law authorizing pupils to be transferred from one school system to another.

4. A law permitting two or more boards of education to establish, maintain and operate schools jointly.

5. A law amending the present school bus statute to agree with the rest of the program.

Gov. Clement said he thinks local school boards already have enough power in hiring, assigning and dismissing teachers, and recommended no changes in these laws.

He also disapproved of any changes in the present compulsory school attendance law, because, he said, "any weakening of these laws is likely to lead to serious abuses."

Gov. Clement said he studied the actions and experiences of other States — where pupil assignment plans have been among the most popular proposals for retaining segregated schools—but that he did not try to adopt laws "foreign to the educational system and to the jurisprudence of our state."

His program, he said, "is in harmony with and strengthens our present laws. It envisions no radical changes which would lead to the weakening, if not the destruction, of our present school system."

Analyzing the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, the Governor said the court "did not purport to take over the administration of the public schools. It expressly left that administration where it has always been, in the hands of the local school officials."

He emphasized what he said is the importance of giving local school boards the right and power to settle segregation issues as they arise and then leaving the problem to them.

Gov. Clement said the legislators "must recognize that any school system we may develop which is based upon a legal foundation of compulsory segregation will . . . be held unconstitutional . . . by the courts."

He said "a new legal foundation for our school system" must be developed "based upon a recognition of the realities of our situation. While the law may be changed, the facts have not."

He spoke to a Legislature which opened Monday and which already had before it two resolutions attacking the Supreme Court's decision.

The first, submitted by Gov. Clement's top legislative aides denounced the decision as a usurpation of power by the court.

The second, introduced Tuesday by three Democrats, struck at the Supreme Court in more blistering language.

It said the school decision, the decision striking down State sedition laws and others are "a most grievous and deplorable disrespect for declared and established law . . ."

Clement's Solution: Let Parents Choose

Constitution Jnue. 1-10-57

Atlanta, Ga. P. 2

Would Allow Segregation By Local School Boards

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 9 (AP)—Gov. Frank Clement proposed a program today aimed at allowing local school boards to maintain racially segregated schools for children whose parents want them.

He asked the Legislature for legislation providing both for voluntary segregation and for pupil assignment authority based on any factor "material in the best interest of the particular child."

KNOW NEEDS BEST

He said his proposals would "allow the local school officials who are most familiar with the needs and wishes of their people to choose their own course "in meeting problems raised by the U.S. Supreme Court ban on public school segregation.

Clement listed six principles on which he based his plan:

1. Its basic purpose "must be the preservation and promotion of peaceful and harmonious relations between the races. Our new system must not deprive any minority group of its right to equal treatment but . . . must not inflict wrongs upon the majority."

2. It must "provide adequate education opportunities for all our children."

3. "We must give our people the opportunity of choosing without force or compulsion the course which best suits their needs or desires."

4. It must leave the control of local affairs in the hands of local officials.

5. Local officials "must have the fullest powers and descretion compatible with a democratic government."

6. The system must "provide those checks and balances . . . essential to the prevention of arbitrary action. . ."

ASSIGNMENT CONTROL

Clement proposed laws for setting up a school system in which parents would voluntarily choose whether their children would attend a segregated or integrated school.

They would allow local boards to operate such schools and permit the boards to assign students on sociological, geographical, psychological and other factors."

Other proposed laws would permit high school as well as elementary pupils to be transferred from one school system to another; allow boards to operate schools jointly; and change the school bus law to agree with the rest of the program.

Court Backs Nashville's Start on Integration

Atlanta, Ga. Jnue. 1-22-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 21 (AP) — Federal Judge William E. Miller today approved Nashville's "partial plan" for beginning school desegregation with the first grade next September but he called for a "complete plan" by next Dec. 31.

The portions of the Nashville plan receiving approval included provisions for transfers of students on a voluntary basis when desegregation would place them among a majority of the opposite race.

Judge Miller handed down his ruling in a suit by parents of 21 Negro and two white children seeking admission to school now reserved for the opposite race.

He approved five points of the Nashville school board's six-point desegregation plan, but he disapproved a sixth which called for "further study" of the problem by a committee directed to report next Dec. 31.

Of the sixth point, Judge Miller said:

"It is manifest that paragraph six makes the plan submitted partial and incomplete, and that is in effect simply a proposal for indefinite postponement of further desegregation, directly contrary to the mandate of the Supreme Court that full compliance with its ruling shall be accomplished with all deliberate speed."

Judge Miller approved other provisions of the school board plan, including:

1. Compulsory segregation based upon race is abolished in grade one of the elementary schools of the city of Nashville for the scholastic year beginning in September 1957.

2. A plan of school zoning or districting based upon location of school buildings and the latest scholastic census without reference to race will be established for the administration of the first grade and of other grades as hereafter desegregated.

5. The following will be regarded as some of the valid conditions to support application for transfer:

(a) When a white student would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving colored students only; (b) when a colored student would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving white students only; (c) when a student would otherwise be required to attend a school where the majority of students in that school or in his or her grades are of a different race."

Provides Transfers From 'Majority' Of Opposite Race

P. 1

NASHVILLE, Jan. 21 (AP)—Federal Judge William E. Miller today approved Nashville's "partial plan" for beginning school desegregation with the first grade next September, but he called for a "complete plan" by next Dec. 31.

The portions of the Nashville plan receiving approval included provisions for transfers of students on a voluntary basis when desegregation would place them among a majority of the opposite race.

Under the ruling Nashville would be the first city in Tennessee to schedule desegregation at the elementary school level and the second to desegregate below the college level.

Twelve Negroes were admitted to Clinton High School this year under a federal court order in action that has been followed by numerous incidents of violence.

Judge Miller handed down his ruling in a suit by parents of 21 Negro and two white children seeking admission to school now reserved for the opposite race.

He approved five points of the Nashville School Board's six-point desegregation plan, but he disapproved a sixth which called for "further study" of the problem by a committee directed to report next Dec. 31.

Of the sixth point, Judge Miller said:

"It is manifest that Paragraph six makes the plan submitted partial and incomplete, and that it is in effect simply a proposal for indefinite postponement of further desegregation, directly contrary to the mandate of the Supreme Court that full compliance with its ruling shall be accomplished with all deliberate speed."

The sixth pragraph of the Nashville School Board's proposal for desegregation reads:

"The instruction committee is directed to continue its study of the problem and to recommend by Dec. 31, 1957, the time of and the number of grades to be included in the next step to be taken in further abolishing of compulsory segregation."

Judge Miller approved other provisions of the school board plan, including:

1. Compulsory segregation based upon race is abolished in grade one of the elementary schools of the City of Nashville for the scholastic year beginning in September, 1957.

2. A plan of school zoning or districting based upon location of school buildings and the latest scholastic census without reference to race will be established for the administration of the first grade and of other grades as hereafter desegregated.

4. Applications for transfer of first grade students from the school of their zone to another school will be given careful consideration and will be granted when made in writing by parents or guardians when good cause therefore is shown and when transfer is practicable.

5. The following will be regarded as some of the valid conditions to support application for transfer:

(a) When a white student would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving colored students only; (b) When a colored student would otherwise be required to attend a school previously serving white students only; (c) When a student would otherwise be required to attend a school where the majority of students in that school or in his or her grades are of a different race."

Nashville school officials said in announcing their plan that it was designed to end compulsory segregation without instituting compulsory integration in its place.

Gov. Frank Clement has proposed legislation, already passed by the lower House of the General Assembly, aimed at a similar solution of the desegregation problem.

Clement's plan would specifically allow for voluntary segregation in addition to a pupil assignment plan based upon numerous factors "in the interest of the individual child."

Integration Foes March On Nashville

Herald-Tribune New York Wed. 2-13-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 12 (AP).—Segregationists calling for an end to racial mixing in Tennessee schools marched on the state capitol today.

P. 15

Nearly 100 state troopers were on hand when a motorcade of 200 Confederate flag-waving segregationists rolled up to the capitol to call for stiffer school segregation legislation. The demonstrators carried signs asking the Legislature, which was in session, to "save our schools" by enacting stiffer school segregation safeguards.

Jack Kershaw, vice-president of the pro-segregation Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, and other leaders of the motorcade tried unsuccessfully to see Gov. Frank Clement before the group swarmed into the Senate and House galleries.

Before entering the gallery, the segregationists had to leave their signs and banners behind. One placard asked "If Clement's (segregation) bill is good, why is Clinton still integrated?"

The sign referred to Gov. Clement's "voluntary" segregation package which was overwhelmingly approved by the Legislature. The plan gives county school authorities strong transfer and pupil assignment powers, and therefore puts integration on a local option basis.

'Race Strife' Workshop In Tennessee Described

ATLANTA, Oct. 4 (AP)—Georgia segregation leaders were told today that an undercover agent "infiltrated" a "racial strife" workshop in Tennessee which, it developed, was open to everybody.

T. V. Williams Jr., executive secretary of the Georgia Education Commission, reported to the legislature-created group that leaders of every recent major racial incident in the South since the Supreme Court's school integration decision gathered on Labor Day week-end at Highlander Folk School in Monteagle.

He added that the purpose of the Tennessee meeting was to discuss "methods and tactics of precipitating racial strife and disturbance."

Williams said a state employe, Ed Friend, worked as an "undercover agent who made contact and infiltrated" the four-day biracial meeting.

In addition to his own report, Williams placed in evidence some 50 exhibits including pamphlets and 35 pictures allegedly made by Friend at the meeting. They included pictures of mixed dancing and other social activities by some of the people present.

Later it was learned that newsmen who covered the Monteagle session reported the meetings were all open to the press. Accounts of the speeches and discussions were published at the time along with photographs of the integrated audiences.

Williams, however, insisted that the seminars were closed. He added that the meeting was opened to the press for photographs and interviews only at the start of the session.

"Our evidence represents coverage of the full meetings," he said.

Gov. Marvin Griffin presided at today's meeting. He heads the 21-member commission which is composed of top ranking state officials and political leaders. The commission was set up by a resolution of the 1953 Legislature and its primary function is to find ways to prevent integration in the public schools.

Williams said that "since 1928 there has been a history of relations between Communism and subversion and race relations in the South."

He said some of those present at the Monteagle meeting were "representative leaders" of the Tuskegee, Ala., bus boycott; the Tallahassee, Fla., bus incident, the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, the South Carolina-NAACP school teachers incident, the Koinonia inter-racial fare, Americus, Ga., and Clinton, Tenn. school incidents.

The commission officials said Aubrey Williams, publisher of a farm magazine at Montgomery, and one-time director of the former National Youth Administration, attended the Tennessee meeting. He identified Aubrey Williams as one of the executives of the Highlander school.

"Few people have done as much to stir racial tension in the South as has Aubrey Williams, the executive secretary said.

The GEC spokesman said others present at the Highlander meeting included:

The Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery bus integration-boycott squabble; Rosa Parks, a participant in the Montgomery dispute; Horton; Rev. John B. Thompson, chaplain of the University of Chicago; Maurice McCracken, affiliated with Neighborhood House, Cincinnati; Ralph Helstein, a labor leader; Abner W. Berry, a columnist of The Daily Worker; Donald L. West, Georgia native and longtime controversial figure in Communist investigations.

Sitting in on the commission meeting as "observers" were Mark Hawes, Tampa, counsel for the Florida Investigating Committee, and Alabama Asst. Atty Gens. Noel Baker and Joe Malone.

Bible-Quoting Governor

Man in the News

FRANK GOAD CLEMENT is a Bible-quoting Southerner. He says that he does not like to see whites and Negroes mix in schools. But he also declares that he took an oath as Governor of Tennessee to uphold the Constitution—and he has accordingly used troops to enforce school integration.

Yesterday Governor Clement left Washington, the last to depart of a team of four Southern Governors who are seeking to settle the dispute between President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas over the use of Federal troops in Little Rock's school integration dispute. Governor Clement was hoping and praying and offering suggestions—the voice of moderation and mediation.

Governor Clement has faced the race problem in border-state dimensions. West Tennessee is a pocket of the Old South, delta land and Memphis, that is oriented toward Mississippi and its last-ditch desire to daunt desegregation. But the remaining two-thirds of Tennessee is sophisticated, intellectual Nashville and the mountain country, segregationist by preference but prepared to compromise in practice.

A year ago, Clinton — in the mountain country—introduced integration in its high school. Governor Clement said the problem was one for local authorities. When this group had to appeal for state aid after outsiders fomented agitation, he sent state police and tank-led National Guardsmen to enable the Negro pupils to keep attending the white school. This year, first graders in Nashville integrated, with some friction, but the city handled the task on its own.

All-Out Orator

His role of conciliation might appear a bit startling to those who know him primarily for his fire-breathing keynote speech at the 1956 Democratic National Convention. On that occasion, he excoriated both Vice President Richard M. Nixon and President Eisenhower—"the vice hatchet man slinging slander and spreading half-truths while the Top Man peers down the green fairways of indifference."

Even then the welkin-ringing oratory of political combat had its characteristic Clement finale: "Precious Lord, take out hand, lead us on!" His friends consider him to be a devoutly religious man.

Last January, he sponsored legislation in Tennessee to authorize local officials to assign pupils by scholastic-aptitude, sociological and psychological factors. This was a paying of respects to segregation that has since been eyed askance in Federal Court.

But the Governor sponsored it with a statement that "in recognition of the existence of different backgrounds for white and Negro, we must not overlook the fact that the Negro is equal to the white in the eyes of the law and in the sight of God."

National Horizon Beckons

There are those who say his eyes are lifted beyond the end of his term in January, 1959. He cannot constitutionally seek re-election as Governor, but there might always be a national horizon and a possible vice presidential nomination in 1960.

Only 37 years old last June 2, he has earned a law degree, was a Federal Bureau of Investigation agent at 21—the minimum age is 23—and was a second lieutenant of military police in World War II. He was general counsel for the State Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, state commander of the American Legion and State chairman of the Young Democrats Club before being elected Governor in 1952 and 1954.

A handsome six-footer, he is married to blonde Lucille Christianson, who worked as a receptionist at a radio station to finance her husband's education. They have three sons, Robert, Frank Jr. and James Gary.

Governor Clement has confidence. In 1955, he opened an address at Olney, Ill., by praying for rain to break a long drought. Within five minutes, rain poured down on the parched prairie. The Governor went on reading his prepared text—from a waterproofed manuscript.

Tennessee Gov. Says: 'No Federal Troops!'

NEW YORK — (INS) Frank Clement of Tennessee has been classed a a "Moderate" in the battle over integration of schools in the South, said "The problem is one for the nation as a whole, not just the South."

The youthful Governor, who keynoted the 1956 National Democratic Convention, was asked whether he felt a "More sympathetic attitude in the North toward the South's racial problems" might aid in their solution.

"Chicago, Levittown, San Francisco, Detroit and other localities have proved," He said, "That the problem of mixed races living in a single place is not a Southern problem but a condition which demands the prayerful attention and consideration of all good Americans . . . every race, creed and color."

Asked how he though Southern governors could best avoid such federal-state deadlocks as developed in Little Rock this Fall, Clement would answer only for his own state, saying:

"Federal ttroops will not march in Tennessee. Law and order within the state of Tennessee will be upheld by Tennesseans."

The governor declined, in an interview with International News Service representatives, to comment on when he felt all of Tennessee's schools would be integrated

He then was asked what steps, if any, his office was taking to aid school districts of the state deal with the integration problem, and replied:

"I think that local officials should be given every opportunity to handle their own local problems on a local level."

The governor was in New York to make the principal speech last night at a dinner of the Citizens Traffic Safety Board, Inc.

Prior to the dinner he was asked what he regarded as the most effective steps taken by Tennessee to improve the state's safety record. He said that "primarily," he had "divorced the Tennessee highway patrol from politics." And he added:

"I have instructed them (The Patrol) that their first duty is not handling law enforcement problems normally relegated to local officials but, rather, saving lives on Tennessee highways."

Clement said he considered "The Most Appalling Thing" about the continuing high traffic death toll was "The Failure of The Public To Recognize the seriousness of The Traffic Safety Problem."

In Tennessee, he said, "I think we have communicated this seriousness to the public through the means of a dramatic safety program."

Cause and Effect

Post + Times Herald Washington D.C. Sun. 9-15-57

Although there is apparently no direct connection between the dynamiting in Nashville and the defiance in Little Rock, the two situations are nevertheless related. Defiance begets violence. Extremism is encouraged by example. Far from serving the cause of law and order, Governor Faubus' interference with the desegregation ordered by the Federal court in Arkansas has had the opposite effect. The bloodlusm in Nashville is not an after-the-fact justification for Mr. Faubus' action; it is, in the judgment of Nashville authorities, at least partly the result of his action.

Fortunately, Nashville police have moved quickly to identify the culprits who blew up a school where a single Negro child was enrolled in first grade. This sort of gangsterism must be repugnant to all thinking people of Tennessee, whatever their individual views. As the assistant superintendent of schools commented, "This is no longer a matter of segregation or desegregation. This is a matter of sheer lawlessness. We're up against thugs." It is noteworthy that outside agitators, including the familiar John Kasper, have been fanning emotions in Nashville.

The cumulative effect of the incidents and threats of racial violence in Tennessee, Arkansas, Alabama and elsewhere is to present a hideous picture of America, especially abroad—and more than half the population of the world is non-white. One can only give humble thanks for the quiet courage of the Negroes who have borne humiliation without retaliation, and for the compassion of the white persons who have refused to surrender their human sympathy and decency to mob spirit.

If the destruction in Nashville serves to shock sober citizens of the South into asserting themselves, there will be some gain. For a monster is loose in the land, the monster of mobism and violence. This monster was not created by the Supreme Court school desegregation decision of 1954; it has always existed, but it has usually been confined. When the 1954 decision was announced as the sequel to a long line of previous decisions which had been accepted, the initial reaction was moderate. Even Governor Stanley of Virginia, for example, looked toward compliance.

What fed and nourished the monster was the sops tossed it by supposedly responsible leaders. It is little wonder, when prominent men talked of interposition and massive resistance, when 96 members of Congress signed a manifesto excoriating the Supreme Court, when a Governor set himself above the law of the land, that mob rule got its head.

The mob of course is ultimately just as destructive of Southern interests and institutions as of the national interest. There is only one way to confine the monster. That is to uphold the supremacy of law, and this is the challenge to good citizens everywhere.

Steps to enforce the law of the land have been taken in Little Rock with the Federal court summons served on Governor Faubus. The Sept. 20 date for his appearance gives time for solutions if it is used constructively. The Department of Justice could wisely suggest a hearing before a three-judge panel, not to supplant Judge Davies but to broaden the effect of the court action. The Federal Government also could offer to help maintain law and order in a situation in which tensions are increasing. It could cooperate in every reasonable effort to assist the Governor in taking himself off the hook.

What the Federal Government cannot do is compromise on the basic issue. There can be no compromise with mobism; and school desegregation must proceed in Little Rock this fall on the basis of the plan established by the School Board and ordered by the court. The quickest way to halt the mob, in Little Rock, Nashville and wherever else, is to make it entirely clear that there will be no temporizing in enforcing the law of the land.

Freedom Of Choice And The Tennessee Ruling

Courier Atlanta Ga. P. 8 Tues. 10-8-57

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

U. S. District Judge William E. Miller's ruling that Tennessee's voluntary segregation plan is "clearly unconstitutional" casts a shadow of unknown size over Alabama's "Freedom of Choice" plan and its implementing laws. 14 d(1)

The similarities and differences are technical, but the intent is the same. Judge Miller didn't seem to weigh the specific provisions of Tennessee's law, holding simply that it was unconstitutional on its face. And there is little reason to suppose that Alabama's law—which gives children the freedom to choose to go to schools of their own race or not go at all—would impress him either.

This right to elect segregated schools, and thus make segregation voluntary rather than enforced, is only one feature of the Alabama plan. The defense range all the way to abolition of schools if deemed necessary.

But the growing number of adverse rulings of the Miller type suggests we are fooling ourselves if we think cleverly worded laws will preserve segregation.

Again, Alabama will be well advised to avoid as long as possible any federal court test of either the Freedom of Choice plan or the Placement Law. They are skillfully drawn measures. But, to repeat an eariler observation, the federal courts have shown no inclination to read laws of the type.

Thus the brilliant feints and parries may be to no avail.

Nashville Integration Proceeds by Injunction

Star Washington D.C.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 17 (AP).—Hundreds of Nashville children trooped back to elementary schools with integrated first grade classes today under protection of a Federal court injunction and vigilant city police.

There were no incidents whatever in contrast to those which disrupted the start of mixed first grade classes last week and which was climaxed by a school dynamiting. PA 5

Classes resumed after a long damage. Classes were being conducted on a morning and week end which included yesterday off to go to the State Fair. afternoon schedule in undamaged and hastily repaired classrooms. The one Negro enrolled there did not show up today.

Sharply increased attendance was recorded at the six integrated schools, where last week's violence kept hundreds of children at home.

Picket lines, which segregationists established at the schools last week, had disappeared.

Federal Judge William E. Miller issued an injunction late yesterday to prevent interference with orderly integration first grade classes as decreed by him several months ago.

The Federal injunction replaces a temporary restraining order Judge Miller issued last Thursday.

It forbids John Kasper and nine others or anyone acting in concert with them from interfering with desegregation of the first graders.

Negroes Back In School

Most of the 12 Negroes enrolled in mixed classes were in school today.

Back in operation was the Hattie Cotton Elementary School, where a dynamite blast last Tuesday caused heavy

Two Names Deleted

Judge Miller ordered two names deleted from an original list of 12 defendants.

He said insufficient evidence was presented to connect Wilson Lee Brown with the disorders, and James Jarrell had not been located or served with the temporary order.

Besides Kasper, those still named in the injunction are Fred Stroud, John F. McCurrio, Vincent A. Crimmons, Mrs. Margaret L. Conquest, Mrs. Mary B. Stinson, James Harris, J. A. Stinson, Paul McConnell and Emmett Carr. Jarrel and Carr were not present in court.

Kasper has been behind bars most of the time since last Wednesday and was fined $200 in City Court on four misdemeanor charges.

Can't Make $2,500 Bond

When that bond was posted, county officials put him in jail on a grand jury indictment charging him with inciting to riot.

He has been unable to make $2,500 bond. Court officials said he probably will be tried at the September term of Davidson County Criminal Court.

Conviction of inciting to riot carries a maximum penalty of 11 months and 29 days in the county workhouse, and $1,000 fine.

Kasper has twice been convicted of violating a Federal court injunction for his anti-integration activities at Clinton last year.

Defense lawyers strongly argued yesterday that specific terms forbidding boycott or picketing should not be included in the injunction, because this would violate rights of freedom of speech.

Judge Miller said these activities may be permitted under normal circumstances, but the court had a right to forbid them in the context of violence which accompanied admission of 15 colored first graders to five Nashville schools on Monday of last week.

The injunction, Judge Miller said, "in no way should be read out of context."

Beyond border states—

Only handful of Southern schools have integrated

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 5 —Slightly more than one-fourth of the biracial school districts in 17 Southern and border states were on a desegregated basis at the height of tension in the fourth school year since the U. S. Supreme Court decision, Southern School News reported here Saturday.

Of 2985 biracial districts, the publication said, 751 had begun or accomplished the desegregation process. All but 15 of these were in border states and the District of Columbia.

IN A MONTH which saw the first dispatch of federal troops to a scene of school strife and the first bombing of a public school building, West Virginia became the first state to end segregation in all its biracial school districts. Kentucky reported desegregation in six additional districts for a total of 105 and Oklahoma reported 214 of 243 biracial districts desegregated, two of them last month.

Seven states conducted all classes during September with public schools tightly segregated. They were Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia. Mississippi reported no school entry petitions or attempts, while one effort in Alabama resulted in violence.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS also noted withdrawal of some Negroes from desegregated schools, notably at Ozark, Ark., and at Louisville, Ky., and the failure of any Negroes to show up at Clay, Ky., newly desegregated school which was the scene of strife last year. Negro students also withdrew from a school in Charlotte, N. C., and a school at Deale, Md., under alleged harassment by white pupils or parents.

The stay of a court order in Virginia averted a showdown in Arlington County over the state's pupil placement law, and Southern School News reported that this action "also means that the showdown over the state's resistance policy may come in Norfolk, Newport News or Charlottesville (where court actions are pending) just as soon as in Arlington."

A SUMMARY of major developments state-by-state follows:

ALABAMA—Public schools opened on a segregated basis with an incident at one school in Birmingham where a Negro minister was beaten after trying unsuccessfully to enroll his two daughters.

ARKANSAS — Two districts desegregated their schools as planned, but a third tried desegregation and abandoned it, and a fourth called it off. The fifth district with desegregation plans—Little Rock—saw state troops at first block Negro pupils, then demonstrations following withdrawal of the militia, and finally federal troop enforcement of the desegregation order under President Eisenhower's direction.

DELAWARE — State school officials readied a desegregation plan for all segregated districts but said they would not release it pending a court decision.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA —The new president of the District's board of education said the one-year integration plan had made the changeover from segregation a success.

FLORIDA — Police barricades were erected around a Pompano Beach school after rumors that Negroes would attempt to enroll there. None appeared.

GEORGIA—Southern governors, meeting at Sea Island, arranged a conference of five of their number (one later withdrew) with President Eisenhower to discuss the Little Rock situation and school integration generally.

KENTUCKY — Minor disturbances occurred at Sturgis, where 18 Negroes enrolled under protection of state police and where, last year, National Guard troops were maintained for 18 days. The state now reports 105 desegregated districts.

LOUISIANA — Schools opened uneventfully—and segregated—with little tension and no violence reported.

MARYLAND — Whites and Negroes were reported attending classes together in 275 of the state's 1000 schools, while some disorders occurred at one school, and a lone Negro child was withdrawn from a second school.

MISSISSIPPI — Schools opened segregated and without any entry petitions being filed as a study showed a Negro population shift into Jackson, the capital city, with whites moving to the suburbs.

MISSOURI—A third-year integration study in Kansas City showed that shifts in school population largely followed the general housing pattern, as it in turn altered.

NORTH CAROLINA — The state's three newly-desegregated school districts were reported quiet a few weeks after schools opened, although one Negro girl withdrew from a Charlotte school after reported white student harassment.

OKLAHOMA — Two more school districts were desegregated—both as the result of court action.

SOUTH CAROLINA — Public schools opened peacefully —and segregated. A Negro college which had accepted a white Hungarian refugee lost acceptance of its graduates for teacher certification, reportedly because of the presence on the faculty of three persons whom the president had sought unsuccessfully to remove.

TENNESSEE — With three exceptions, Tennessee's school districts remained segregated. Schools opened without incident this year at Clinton, strife-torn in 1956, and a building was bombed in Nashville as first-grade desegregation was completed under police protection.

TEXAS—The Dallas school board voted to appeal court-ordered desegregation for the mid-Winter term.

VIRGINIA — A last-minute court order averted a showdown in Arlington County on whether schools would be closed to prevent integration. Use of the pupil placement law was restrained by a court in Richmond.

WEST VIRGINIA—The state became the first to end segregation in all its biracial districts when Hampshire County opened two of its schools to Negroes.

Nashville School Board OK's Desegregation Plan

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 4 (U.P.)—The Nashville School Board today approved a "parents preference" plan for complete desegregation of city schools.

The plan would provide for schools for whites, schools for Negroes and integrated schools.

The board said it would submit the plan to Federal Judge William E. Miller next week. Miller had told the board to submit a plan for complete school desegregation by Dec. 31.

Integration of the first grade got under way here this Fall. The board said the plan provided for "no compulsory segregation or integration."

Central part of the plan is a census to be conducted each year among parents. The census would determine "which parents desire their children to attend school with members of their own race and which desire that their children attend with members of another race."

The plan calls for three groups of schools of "equal standards and facilities" in accordance with the preference of parents.

Nashville Okays Segregated Plan

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 5 (AP)—A plan for maintaining segregated schools on a voluntary basis has been adopted by the Nashville school board.

The plan, backed by an organization of white parents, was adopted Wednesday by the board and will be submitted to the United States district court here.

The court has ordered the board to submit by Dec. 31 a plan for ending compulsory segregation beyond the first grade, following up the integration of 6-year-olds last September.

The adopted plan calls for rezoning school districts here so that every child could attend a school with members of his own race only or an integrated school, as his parents might choose.

The preference of parents—the proposed basis for maintaining both separate and integrated schools—would be determined through a yearly census.

Board chairman Elmer Pettit said after the adoption, "we feel that a lot of people support this plan, so we feel obliged to present it to the court. We will do whatever the court says."

The board last August asked Federal Judge William E. Miller to decide whether it could make use of 1957 state laws which provided for voluntary school segregation. He said the laws were unconstitutional.

INTEGRATION PLAN SET IN TENNESSEE

6 of 7 State Colleges Given Desegregation Program for September, 1958

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8—Desegregation of six of Tennessee's state-operated colleges next September was approved today by the State Board of Education.

The only state-financed institution of higher learning not affected by the action was the University of Tennessee, which is controlled by a separate board.

Acting under authority granted by the 1957 Legislature, the State Board of Education today empowered each college under its control to establish minimum requirements for admitting new students. The "selective devices," the board said, shall be used to limit enrollment to the capacity of the institutions and "shall apply equally to all prospective students."

The new plan replaces a program of gradual desegregation that was put into operation in 1955 but subsequently invalidated by the United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. That plan had required integration of one class each year, and would have resulted in full integration in the fall of 1959.

J. M. Smith, president of Memphis State University, said he would have new entrance requirements for his college ready to submit to the board in February.

Temporary Halt Seen

Quill Cope, chairman of the board of Education, interpreted the board's action to mean that there would be no further integration of the state colleges before next fall. Mr. Cope is also State Education Commissioner.

Two previously all-white colleges already have admitted a few Negroes to graduate classes. Also, two white students were admitted last year to the Agricultural and Industrial University, a previously all-Negro institution in Nashville.

Howard Warf of Hohenwald, chairman of the board's Committee to Draft a Desegregation Plan, submitted the plan to establish "selective devices."

"I have been advised by the State Attorney-General," he commented, "that this is the best we can do under the circumstances."

The board's action grew out of a suit brought by Negroes for admission to the Memphis State University. No Negroes yet have been admitted to the University, and Mr. Smith had said none would be before next fall.

The University of Tennessee had admitted Negroes to some of its graduate colleges, but undergraduate classes still are segregated. The university's board has taken no action toward adopting an integration program.

Effects of Desegregation Decisions Are Surveyed

Impact Spreads Beyond South, Schools

By PHILIP M. CARDEN

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 14 (AP) —The U. S. Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decisions set off the greatest constitutional crisis since the Civil War, with an impact which has spread far beyond the South and the schools in three years.

Prof. Paul H. Sanders of Vanderbilt University Law School, director of the Race Relations Law Reporter, documents these conclusions in a summary in the current edition of the Reporter of legal developments in the first three years of the new legal principle.

The article summarizes court cases, legislative action and other materials, most of which were published in full text by the Reporter as they occurred through the first three years of the crisis.

"The Supreme Court's proclamation and the action in many of the Southern states to avert the effect of the pronouncement," Sanders wrote, "have produced a Constitutional crisis of unprecedented magnitude in the period since 1865.

"Congressional debate over civil rights and even the controversial reception of other recent Supreme Court decisions are all parts of the larger pattern.

"The dynamism of the 1954 school decisions is demonstrated by the fact that the principle... has been applied... to invalidate legalized racial segregation in governmentally owned recreational facilities and in local as well as interstate transportation facilities.

"Whether the principle will be considered broad enough to invalidate... any racial distinction based on law or supported by governmental authority remains to be determined."

Overrides 1830 Will Aims

Sanders noted that the impact has also extended beyond the Southern states, citing the Pennsylvania case in which the new principle overrode the 1830 will of Stephen Girard setting up a fund for white male orphans, because the fund was administered by the City of Philadelphia.

He also cited school segregation cases in Ohio, California, New Jersey and New York which reflected the impact of the decisions.

"The decisions do not, of course, reach directly 'merely private' racial discrimination in such matters as employment or in the use of accommodations normally open to the public," he said.

"But added impetus has been given to enacting additional state statutes and municipal ordinances invalidating such discrimination."

Subsequent school litigation, Sanders noted, has clarified the picture with these points:

That the states are not required to mix the races, or require them to attend schools or deprive them of the right of choosing their schools, but merely forbids the use of governmental power to enforce segregation.

That state use of the police power label for its action does not in itself carry magic which will limit the effect of the principle.

That questions raised as to the validity of the 14th Amendment—the basis of the principle—is a political question which the courts will not pass on.

Sanders said none of the interposition resolutions passed by some Southern states has been used to defend segregation in court action. In fact, he said, the Virginia resolution had resulted in invalidating companion legislation which had been pleaded by the state.

Delaware, D. C. Cases

He cited the wide variety in the method and extent of implementation in the decisions by the lower courts even in the five cases immediately before the high court in the original litigation.

In the Delaware and District of Columbia cases immediate compliance was undertaken by the school authorities involved.

In the Kansas case which has provided general title for the consolidated group, Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka, a desegregation plan involving some delay and free choice was approved.

In the South Carolina and Virginia cases no time limit was set in the lower court decrees and no steps toward desegregation have been taken.

In other cases the courts have approved a variety of local plans for gradual or immediate desegregation. In some cases officials submitted no plan, immediate desegregation was ordered and in other requests for delays were granted.

Hoxie, Clinton Decisions

Sanders also noted the injunction actions taken in Hoxie, Ark., to protect school officials undertaking desegregation without court order, and in Clinton, Tenn., to protect officials acting under court order. These decisions provided precedent for the recent injunction in Nashville.

The summary of pupil placement laws allowing school boards to assign pupils on factors other than race showed sharply varying results in the courts turning on the wording of the individual statutes and the peculiar facts of individual cases.

Sanders said affirmative state action to resist the court's decree have included principally legislative and administrative moves aimed at curbing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

But the mass of litigation resulting from the segregation cases has brought no novel developments in court procedures, and most of the cases reaffirmed established principles as to the right to fair jury trials free of racial prejudice.

Nashville Airs Schools Plan

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 5 (U.P.) — The Nashville School Board's "parents' preference" plan of desegregation was ready today for submission to a Federal court.

The plan would provide schools in three classifications for whites only, for Negroes only, and for parents who prefer integration.

The board said a census would be conducted each year to determine which parents desire their children to attend school with members of their own race and which desire that the attend with members of another race."

The plan was worked out under an order from Federal Judge William Miller, who instructed the board to submit by Dec. 31 a plan calling for desegregation of all grades in the city schools.

Coy Ennix, a Negro member of the school board, was the only dissenter to the plan made public by the board yesterday. "I conscientiously object both as a board member and an attorney," he said. "The plan is unconstitutional."

The proposal was presented to the board in rough form by the Parents' Preference Committee, which claims 6000 members in the city.

"The plan conforms to the U. S. Supreme Court decision and is based on the 14th Amendment," the Committee said. "Liberty or right of choice, duly administered, is equally important to all citizens and the very heart and soul of the plan cannot be denied."

School Board temporary Chairman Henry Pettit said in his opinion the plan could be carried out without building new schools.

Nashville Board Votes Plan For Voluntary Segregation

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 5 (AP)—A plan for maintaining segregated schools on a voluntary basis has been adopted by the Nashville school board.

The plan, backed by an organization of white parents, was adopted yesterday and will be submitted to the U.S. District Court here.

The court has ordered the board to submit by December 31 a plan for ending compulsory segregation beyond the first grade, following up the integration of 6-year-olds last September.

The adopted plan calls for rezoning school districts here so that every child could attend a school with members of his own race only, or an integrated school, as his parents might choose.

The preference of parents—the proposed basis for maintaining both separate and integrated schools—would be determined through a yearly census.

Board Chairman Elmer Pettit said after the adoption, "We feel that a lot of people support this plan, so we feel obliged to present it to the court. We will do whatever the court says."

Nashville Negroes Cool To Mixing Plan

Daily News Jackson, Miss. Wed 8-28-57 p. 1

Negro and white pupil registration went off quietly in Nashville Tuesday with only 13 of 126 eligible Negro pupils signing up for first grade classes as the Tennessee city launched its "gradual" desegregation plan.

Kasper, who played a leading role in the Clinton, Tenn., racial [illegible] last year, addressed a [illegible] crowd on the steps of the Nashville courthouse following the first day of biracial registration.

School Supt. W. H. Oliver called Kasper "an intruder" and said he was "very pleased with the way things went today."

OFFICIAL PLEASED

"I am pleased so few Negroes sought admittance to white schools because I think this is an indication that the Negroes think pretty well of the schools the school board has provided for them," he said.

The 13 Negro youngsters registered in five schools, most of them in fringe neighborhoods. One white child was registered in an all-Negro school.

In other areas of the South, Negroes were registering at Clinton for the second year of mixed classes and in North Carolina in three large cities — Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem—scheduled integrated classes in the wake of legal maneuvering by protesting parents.

The Nashville integration of first grades was the city's answer to a federal court order to produce an integration plan. The court has until December to decide on a complete plan to comply fully with the Supreme Court's order for gradual desegregation of public schools.

PARENTS PROTEST

A few parents in Nashville told officials they would withdraw their children if Negroes enrolled in the schools, and a few others boycotted the registration. But officials warned that children over seven years old who do not show up for classes will be reported to the school board.

In other segregation developments, Marshall, Tex., voted overwhelmingly to sell its municipal swimming pool and parks to a private concern rather than end segregation as ordered by a federal court. The vote was a lopsided 1,758 to 89.

In Florida an official of the NAACP protested an award of federal money for nuclear research to the University of Florida. Robert Saunders said the award carried a clause specifying that the federal funds could not be used where segregation was enforced.

Ten southern colleges have received similar grants and Clemson College in South Carolina rejected $99,050 because of the covenant.

ONE STRONGHOLD WEAKENED

Nashville, Tenn., one of the segregated South's largest cities, began falling into line Tuesday with the U. S. Supreme Court order lifting the racial barrier in schools. Above, two Negro six-year-olds await their turn to register for school opening as a white first-grader signs up at a desegregated school. Strife Laid to Nashville's Ripe 'Climate of Opinion'

Courier-Journal 9-11

Parent Group, Governor, Club Get Blame With The Outside Agitators

Louisville

By ORA SPAID
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

Nashville, Sept. 11.—It takes more than dynamite to blow up a school. Tm 9-13-57

Behind the hand that sets the fuse converge many influences—personal and public. Whatever these influences are, they were painfully present in Nashville this week, when this Southern city's attempt to racially integrate some of its public schools was rocked by the dynamiting of a school and a chain of violent demonstrations.

And these influences apparently were absent last fall when Louisville integrated its public schools.

Blames John Kasper

Why should integration go so smoothly in Louisville and so roughly in Nashville?

The first answer you'd get from most Nashvillians was the immediate one given by William A. Bass, Nashville superintendent of schools:

"You didn't have John Kasper and his ilk in Louisville."

The role of the roving agitator is undeniablly important in what happened here. But Louisville did have John Kasper, only his venom didn't take there. He spoke to a handful of people at a meeting during Louisville's integration process, but nothing came of it.

Cites Added Notoriety

Dr. Albert Reiss, chairman of the department of sociology of Vanderbilt University here, feels the New Jersey racialist has added notoriety and technique to his efforts since the Louisville meeting.

"You have to make an agitator first," Dr. Reiss said, "and the Clinton situation made him." Kasper was twice convicted of Federal Court contempt for stirring up racial strife at Clinton, Tenn., a year ago. Both convictions are being appealed.

"His tactics and techniques have improved since then," the sociologist said. "He's getting more sophisticated about how to agitate."

There is great temptation in this pride-hurt city to make Kasper a scapegoat. But a few leaders look beyond the popular contention that "outside agitators" cause all the turmoil by admitting, as The Nashville Tennessean did Wednesday morning, that "voices of confusion and unrest were at work in this community long before these outsiders arrived. And it is a little late in the day for some of the home-grown hatemongers to be deploring the ugly turn of events and trying to shift all the blame to the interlopers."

'Had Favorable Climate'

Thoughtful men will tell you that "Kasper and his ilk" could never have made telling impact on this city if they had not had a favorable "climate of opinion" to work in. And this "climate of opinion"—of a different kind—was given great credit for Louisville's successful integration.

Superintendent Bass addressed himself bluntly to this point. "You in Louisville didn't have any parents-preference committee or any committee for constitutional government or any Kiwanis Club that got stampeded into demanding that the community repudiate its plans for integration." These groups all advocated segregation. The committee for constitutional Government requested the day before school opened that Governor Frank G. Clement call out the Tennessee National Guard to keep Negroes out of white schools.

Bass criticized Clement for a bill passed by the Tennessee Legislature that would have undergirded the parent preference idea. The bill was found unconstitutional by a Federal Court.

Newspaper Assailed

Several people, including Bass and Dr. Reiss, laid part of the blame for violence on the doorstep of The Nashville Banner. Said Bass, "The Nashville Banner ought to be ashamed. They aided and abetted in developing a spirit of rebellion."

It was The Banner that demanded in a Page 1 editorial the day after the bombing that Kasper be run out of town and offered a $1,000 reward for the bombers.

"That—that was something on top of all they have published," Bass said.

Was there not some attempt to get the people of Nashville ready for integration, such as the long campaign in Louisville?

Yes, answered superintendent Bass. He said he started with the Parent-Teacher Associations—making speeches in which he set out the view that the Supreme Court decision was the law of the land.

There were at least two workshop conferences on school desegregation, one addressed by Omer Carmichael, Louisville superintendent of schools. More than 500 people attended a two-day conference, from which grew a continuing organization known as the Community Relations Conference.

The Rev. Robert C. Palmer, Unitarian minister and board member of the conference, said there were some 26 civic organizations "constantly at work, trying to prepare the community for the onset of desegregation."

Nashville—hard in the heart of the Bible belt—is replete with churches and church institutions. Did they help prepare the way for integration?

Mr. Palmer said many ministers preached on the subject and the Nashville Ministerial Association tried to take the lead two years ago by merging with the Negro ministers' alliance. The joint association strongly urged support of the Supreme Court decision.

A lot of people think the situation in Little Rock, Ark., influenced the Nashville trouble. "You had there a Governor who showed signs of strength in resisting the Supreme Court," Bass commented. He felt this might have lent hope to segregationists here.

Integrated School Is Blasted as Nashville Tension Mounts

Times-Picayune Wed. 9-11-57 P. 1

Police Clamp Down on Race Demonstrations

New Orleans

By PHILIP M. CARDEN

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP).—A blockbuseter dynamite explosion smashed a newly integrated grammar school early today as racial tension continued to mount beneath an ironclad police clampdown on segregation demonstrations.

A total of 24 persons had been arrested by early evening. Among them was segregationist John Kasper who was taken into custody in city court as he sought to make bond for some of his followers.

Almost simultaneously with Kasper's dramatic arrest an added irritant to mounting tension was provided by the report that a Negro had raped a white businesswoman in her store in suburban Madison.

Police said Kasper was arrested on charges based on inflammatory statements he made at a series of segregation rallies, the last of which he conducted from the State Capitol steps Monday night.

He was charged with disorderly and offensive conduct, vagrancy and loitering. G. H. Aikens, whom police identified as Kasper's bodyguard, also was charged with vagrancy and loitering.

Police held demonstrators a block away from the six racially mixed schools as they opened to sharply slashed overall attendance at today's half-day session. All-day sessions begin tomorrow.

SEVEN FOR QUESTIONING

Times-Picayune

Seven of those arrested were held for questioning in the expert dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton school. Three were arrested when they refused to move from the vicinity of on of tehe schools. P. 15

Two others were arrested shortly afterward. Two teenagers were arrested this afternoon in a car answering the description of one reported seen speeding away from the scene of the blast this morning. Officers said dynamite detonating wire was found in the trunk of the car and in the homes of some of the others arrested.

The first three arrested, whose car was reported to have contained a detonating device, were held under $25,000 bonds on weapons charges.

The explosion, which stopped the school clocks at 12:34 a.m., followed a day of steadily mounting violence accompanying admission of 15 Negro first graders to formerly all-white schools.

ONE NEGRO PUPIL

Only one Negro child was enrolled at Hattie Cotton, which is in a predominantly white neighborhood of East Nashville. No demonstrations occurred there.

A couple of hours before the blast police broke up a shouting crowd of 500 segregationists at Fehr school, where thrown bottles and bricks had been smashing windows and windshields of passing automobiles occupied by Negroes.

Fehr was hardest hit both days as parental boycotts and fear of violence cut attendance sharply. Only two first graders showed up at Fehr today, both Negroes. Four Negroes enrolled there Monday.

School officials reported attendance off throughout the school system today, including all-Negro schools.

Nashville began first grade integration yesterday as the first step in court-ordered desegregation. A complete plan for eliminating compulsory segregation must be submitted to federal court by Dec. 31.

123 PUPILS ELIGIBLE

Under the new first grade zoning 126 Negro youngsters were eligible to enroll in 13 previously all-white schools. Most of these took advantage of voluntary transfer provisions of the court-approved plan.

There are about 3,500 first graders, including 2,000 whites, among Nashville's total enrollment of about 18,000 pupils.

Mayor Ben West flew back to Nashville Tuesday from a trip to Hartford, Conn., to take personal charge of an all-out investigation of the blast at Hattie Cotton.

"Every decent citizen abhors violence," West said. "The one who encourages and exhorts the fanatic runs the very real risk of endangering his own life."

W. H. Oliver, assistant city school superintendent, blamed the violence and destruction on "flames of hatred fanned by race agitators." He said school officials plan to continue with integrated classes according to schedule, adding:

"We are counting on law enforcement officers to continue to give us the fine help in the future as they have in the past."

BLAST AT KASPER

The Nashville Banner published a front-page editorial urging that if Northern segregationist Kasper "isn't locked up, run him out of town."

Kasper was twice convicted of contempt of federal court in connection with violence which accompanied desegregation of the high school at Clinton, Tenn., last year. Both cases are still in the courts.

Gov. Frank Clement visited the scene of the school blast within two hours after it occurred this morning. He declined to make any public statement.

Hattie Cotton, one of the city's more modern school plants, was built in 1950. It was named after a former school superintendent.

The first three to be arrested in connection with the blast were booked as Venson Albert Crimmons, 32; James R. Harris, 47, and J.B. Blackwell, 42. The other two were Carroll Crimmons, brother of Venson, and W. D. Hodge.

Venson Crimmons and Harris—a one-legged truck driver—were prominent among demonstrators at several of the schools on opening day. They carried American and Confederate flags and a "KKK" sign.

Woman Store Owner at Nashville Raped

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP) —A 43-year-old white woman reported she was raped three times in a suburban Madison store today by a Negro who held her at gunpoint for nearly three hours.

A report to police said the multiple assaults occurred in a rear room of the woman's retail store in the heart of Madison's business section.

Police squads launched a manhunt, throwing up roadblocks around Madison in search of a "short, stocky" Negro.

Police Chief R. R. Poe said he was unable to question the woman extensively because of her shaken condition. She was taken to Madison Santiarium.

The incident heightened tension in this racially torn Tennessee capital city which has been the scene of violence since irst grade school children were desegregated Monday. It was the latest of a series of rapes in Nashville area business establishments.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP) — The Nashville school superintendent says the desegregation crisis at Little Rock, Ark., "has sort of given the impression of possible victory to those people who would defeat the supreme court decision."

Supt. W. A. Bass made the statement after observing that the first day of classes at Nashville schools Monday "did not come off as well as I thought it would."

"We are in the backwash of a thing that's going on too close to us," he added, referring to the Little Rock trouble.

"The quicker the government of the United States reaches a conclusion as to its responsibilities and on ways and means of carrying out the law," he added, "the quicker the whole problem of racial desegregation will be solved.

Racial Tension Mounting; Police Take 26 Into Custody, Including John Kasper

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP)—A blockbuster dynamite explosion smashed a newly integrated grammar school early today as racial tension continued to mount beneath an ironclad police clampdown on segregation demonstrations.

A total of 26 persons had been arrested tonight. Among them was segregationist John Kasper who was taken into custody in city court as he sought to make bond for some of his followers.

Almost simultaneously with Kasper's dramatic arrest and adding to mounting tension was the report that a Negro had raped a white businesswoman in her store in suburban Madison, latest in a series of such crimes here in recent weeks.

Police squads immediately launched a manhunt, throwing up roadblocks around Madison in search of the "short, stocky" Negro who fled afoot.

The woman, who had been in the store alone at the time, was taken to a hospital.

Kasper was charged with disorderly and offensive conduct, vagrancy and loitering. G. H. Aiken, whom police identified as Kasper's bodyguard, also was charged with vagrancy and loitering.

Kasper made bonds totaling $1,000 and was immediately rearrested for parking in a restricted zone. He made another $250 bond and was released.

Police said he would be promptly rearrested if he repeated any of his "inflammatory statements."

Police held demonstrators a block away from the six racially mixed schools as they opened to sharply slashed over-all attendance at today's half-day session. All-day sessions begin tomorrow.

Seven of those arrested were held for questioning in the expert dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton school. Three were arrested when they refused to move from the vicinity of one of the schools.

Two others were arrested shortly afterward. Two teen-agers were arrested this afternoon in a car answering the description of one reported seen speeding away from the scene of the blast this morning. Officers said dynamite detonating wire was found in the trunk of the car and in the homes of some of the others arrested.

The first three arrested, whose car was reported to have contained a detonating device, were held under $25,000 bonds on weapons charges.

Mounting Violence

The explosion, which stopped the school clocks at 12:34 a.m., followed a day of steadily mounting violence accompanying admission of 15 Negro first graders to formerly all-white schools. No one was hurt but a large section of the building was demolished.

Only one Negro child was enrolled at Hattie Cotton, which is in a predominantly white neighborhood of East Nashville. No demonstrations occurred there.

A couple of hours before the blast police broke up a shouting crowd of 500 segregationists at Fehr school, where thrown bottles and bricks had been smashing windows and windshields of passing automobiles occupied by Negroes.

Fehr was hardest hit both days as parental boycotts and fear of violence cut attendance sharply. Only two first graders showed up at Fehr today, both Negroes. Four Negroes enrolled there Monday.

School officials reported attendance off throughout the school system today, including all-Negro schools.

Nashville began first grade integration yesterday as the first step in court-ordered desegregation. A complete plan for eliminating compulsory segregation must aides as meaning the governor can keep the Guard at Central High.

If Davies issued a temporary junction, Faubus still can appeal. If the governor wins his appeal, the situation is right back where it started.

If Faubus ignores such an injunction, or loses his appeal, Davies could cite him for contempt of court. He then could try Faubus for civil contempt and clap him in jail until he obeyed, or try him for criminal contempt and give him a jail sentence.

Other Possibilities

Suppose Faubus should ignore an injunction and not go to court or permit himself to be taken to face a contempt citation? The judge could still sentence him. But the Eisenhower administration would have to worry about what to do then.

(At his Newport, R. I., vacation headquarters, President Eisenhower said he was adopting a course of "patient watchfulness" in the Little Rock situation, and while concerned, he intends to leave the matter in the hands of the federal court.)

The North Little Rock School Board today denied the petition of the parents of seven Negro children to enroll them in the all-white high school. The board said tension is higher than on Sept. 3 when planned integration was postponed and warned of possible physical violence. Negro students were forcibly repulsed by white students when they attempted to enter this school. There was some rowdiness but no disorder at this school today.

No Law Condones Rule by Violence

Arrest of the notorious John Kasper and 10 Negroes in the Nashville, Tenn., school integration crisis should help to restore an atmosphere of reason among elements in the community which had threatened to get out of hand.

It is not necessary, of course, to go into details about Kasper. He is a professional rabble rouser and demagogue who has sought to make capital out of the race issue. Like others of his stripe, he would perform similarly in other situations which offered opportunity for exploitation.

No reasonable man would listen to Kasper. Unfortunately, there are those among us who do not understand or do not care about the sordid background of such a person.

Dynamiting of that new school in Nashville goes beyond the question of segregation or desegregation. Responsible people in either category will not condone such irresponsible action. The school dynamiting is lawless destruction of public property, action of an irresponsible few who always look for excuses to express their violent tendencies in destructive acts. At least five persons have been arrested for this crime and should be brought to speedy justice.

Some claim that the action by Gov. Faubus of Arkansas in calling out the National Guard in the Little Rock crisis has encouraged such actions. That may be true. He claims it was for the prevention of such—but the issue which the governor of Arkansas has raised is the old fundamental of which is supreme—state or federal law. Once again it must be resolved as it has had to be time and time again.

But violence and mob action is not condoned by the laws of any state nor those of the nation. If permitted to go unchecked, bloodshed and a state of anarchy are inevitable in such situations. All suffer from the criminal actions of a few.

The crackdown in Nashville by established police thus will be welcomed by segregationists and desegregationists alike. Putting all personal convictions aside on this issue, no one wants mob action substituted for law and order. Regardless of race, those who endanger the lives and property of others must pay the legal consequences.

Dynamite Wrecks Integrated School

Three Suspects Held In Nashville Violence

Daily News P.1
Jackson, Miss
Tues. 9-10-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UP) — The $500,000 Hattie Cotton School, one of seven in Nashville where first-grade integration began Monday, was gutted by a thunderous dynamite blast early Tuesday.

No one was injured, but police said the building was a total loss, although the exterior walls were standing. Nearby residents were knocked from their beds and windows were blown out over an area of several blocks in this east-side section.

Police arrested three men at another school this morning and held them for questioning in connection with the blast. Officers said a detonator was found in their auto. The men were arrested about an hour before school opened.

Officers blocked off the streets around most of the integrated schools today and said parents would be allowed to bring their children only as far as police lines.

The blast followed angry demonstrations and rock throwing at six of the seven city schools where Negro children were admitted to the first grade. The incidents continued into the night.

Police Chief Douglass Hosse said the explosion "very definitely is connected with all this trouble over integration." One Negro pupil attended Hattie Cotton Monday, but Hosse said there was no trouble there during the day.

HOME GUARDED

A police guard has been thrown up around the home of the Negro child, about six blocks from the school, Hosse said. The child was not identified.

Hosse said evidence leaves little doubt that dynamite was used to blow up the building. Police Sgt. John Irwin, one of the investigators, found a wire from a detonating cap at the scene.

Commenting on the explosion, Asst. School Supt. W. H. Oliver, said, "We're up against thugs." The fight is against lawlessness. This is the result of a flame that has been fanned by some local people and some outside agitators.

"I hope this will at last awaken the law - abiding citizens of this community to the problem we're up against."

LIKE WORLD ENDED

"It sounded like the whole world had ended with one big loud blast," said Policeman Joe Casey, who was awakened by the blast and rushed to the scene from his home a short distance away.

Investigators said most of the inside walls were knocked down by the blast and virtually all school equipment was destroyed. Portions of the outside walls were blown out.

About 390 white children and the Negro child were left without classroom facilities. Oliver said a decision would be made later today as to what to do with the children.

The school is several miles from the Fehr school, scene of most of Mondays demonstrations. About 25 parents remained there until late Monday night, after police had broken up a demonstration.

HIT BL ROCKS

At Fehr the crowd swelled to 500, throwing rocks and shouting threats. A policeman termed the group the "worst mob" he ever had seen.

Nineteen Negro first graders attended seven previously white schools Monday, touching off the incidents. One who was registered did not attend.

Three persons were hit by rocks Monday night as demonstrations at Fehr School continued until about 11:30 p.m. e.d.t.

Nashville Now All for Law, Order

Post & Times Herald P.21-a
Thurs. 9-12-57
Washington D.C.

By Eve Edstrom
Staff Reporter

NASHVILLE, Sept. 11—Today, in Nashville, it didn't matter whether one was for or against integration. All that was important was that one was for law and order.

The dynamite that transformed the Hattie Cotton School into rubble also changed the city overnight.

It blasted the city officialdom into action. They routed the rabble rousers, replaced chaos with calmness.

But whether the dynamiting of the elementary school, where only one Negro child was enrolled, changed anyone's view on the integration question was uncertain.

Just as in Tennessee last year, the dominant feeling appeared to be, "We don't favor integration, but we want lawlessness less."

Even so, there was some support for the belief that the community shock over the school destruction turned away some persons ready to join up with the race haters. And there also were those that believed more of the community's solid citizens would actively back such groups as the Community Relations Conference, which has been in the forefront of preparing Nashville for integration.

"We'll probably have some Johnny - come - latelys, and I hope to God we do—better late than never," said Dr. Hugh Morgan, Vanderbilt University professor of Medicine and a director of the Community Relations Conference.

The Conference, he said, has received numerous letters in the past from leading Nashville citizens who stated that the Conferences' efforts were not needed because "It could not happen here—there would not be any violence. Maybe we had a dose of dynamite coming to us," he said, "maybe people will have to be shown that when you play with dynamite, the dynamite can go off."

But, Dr. Morgan added, the "frightening of little children" by mobs that ringed Nashville's handful of integrated elementary schools Monday, was "far more shocking" than the destruction of a building.

"The school can be replaced," he said, "who can wipe the scars from the children?"

A totally opposite view was expressed by an officer of the Federation for Constitutional Government, which opposes integration but advocates that it be fought by legal means.

Jack Kershaw said the "immediate responsibility" for the school destruction can be placed with Gov. Frank Clement for failing to take "preventive" action like Arkansas' Governor did.

There were several individuals, though, who believed the dynamiting might solidify across-the-board support for compliance with the Supreme Court's ruling.

One such spokesman is a nationally prominent sociologist from Fisk University.

The sociologist, Preston Valien, and a number of others here, took particular note of the Nashville Banner's editor ial deploring the blasting of the school.

Because the Banner has been blamed in some quarters for contributing to the race dissension by fighting integration, Valien stated, its new editorial approach now probably will influence "either those sitting on the fence or those actively opposing integration to comply with the law of the land."

Valien commended police for their "strong law enforcement action" of Tuesday, noting that a similar crack-down on the day school opened might have prevented the mob from getting out of control.

The city's schools, while disheartened over the violence, were calmly and cheerfully on the job.

One principal, Stella Mae Grooms, said "whether one agrees with desegregation or not, it is imperative that American citizens abide by the law of the land. If I were unwilling to do so, I would quit. Teachers should teach students to respect law. One could not teach that without being willing to set an example."

'Get-Tough' Policy Quiets Nashville's Demonstrators

Dynamiting of Brand-New School Sets Off Chain of Official Action

By JOE HATCHER

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 14—Nashville's ideas of quietly integrating five of its city schools without incident exploded with a bang through the week.

But as the week drew to a close the "get-tough" policy of city police, county and federal officialdom appeared to have quieted the trouble considerably—and probably sidetracked Racist John Kasper of New Jersey for some time to come.

The midnight dynamiting of a brand-new $500,000 school in east Nashville, not even involved in the opening segregation disturbances, set off chain reactions by authorities toward smothering violence.

Arrested 3 Times

Kasper was arrested three times in one day, once on a state warrant charging inciting of riots. He was fined $200 in city court on charges of vagrancy, loitering, disorderly conduct, and offensive conduct, and sent to the workhouse when he was unable to pay the fine.

City officials and school authorities asked U.S. District Judge W. E. Miller, whose decision set up the integration, for an injunction against all interference with the integration program—with Kasper and a so-called "Bible Presbyterian" preacher as the main targets.

City police arrested 17 individuals, about equally divided Negro and white, at the schools, and all were fined, and some bound over to city court for carrying concealed weapons

Five men were held for investigation of the school dynamite blast, although not specifically charged with the crime. They were fined on disorderly conduct and weapons charges in city court, and bound over for further investigation. Bonds were set at $25,000.

All gatherings around school buildings were banned by police, and all segregationist or other meetings banned uptown. No unauthorized person was permitted on school property.

Gov. Frank Clement rejected requests by Parent Preference committee spokesmen to call state troops to prevent integration and preserve the peace.

TENNESSEE

The governor explained that under Tennessee law troops could be used only when local officials certified that local law enforcement was beyond control, and the situation acute—as was done at Clinton a year ago.

However, the governor offered a $5,000 reward for arrest and conviction in the school dynamiting case

But the highlight of the whole affair seemed to be the pressure on Kasper and his associates. He was able to make bond by professional bondsmen on his original charges, but was held without bond on charges of inciting to riot until committed to the city workhouse

Bodyguard Fined

Collections at his last meeting just outside the city limits amounted to $7.20, it was reported. It took a $500 bond to get his car out of police custody on charges of illegal parking while he was making bond His driver's license carried the word "unemployed," and was used as proof of vagrancy.

Police Chief D. E. Hosse warned that Kasper would be arrested every day he stayed in Nashville as a vagrant after his first conviction on that charge.

A twice - arrested husky "bodyguard" for Kasper renounced any connection with the self - designated "rabble rouser" in court, and attributed the trouble to the New Jerseyite. He was fined $5 in one case and $50 in suspended fines on two other charges, with warning that any further trouble would reinstate the fines.

Kasper's $200 fine means 133 days in the city workhouse unless the fine is paid. The court instructed that the fine be worked out or paid before he was released on the state charges.

Nashville School Bombing Rewards Now Total $6,000

Classes on Regular Schedule With Attendance Almost Normal

Constitution P 5E

By JOE HATCHER

Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NASHVILLE, Tenn.. Sept. 21—A mayor out of pocket almost upset all Nashville's carefully laid plans for quiet small-scale integration in five "fringe area" schools.

It took almost a week before everything straightened out, at least temporarily. Mayor Ben West was in Hartford, Conn., when dynamite wrecked the Hattie Cotton School. But he issued orders from there for the "get-tough" policy for police, and flew home immediately.

Atlanta.

With Racist John Kasper behind jail bars on multiple charges, the situation quickly eased, and led to the city school board securing the federal injunction against Kasper and a dozen others.

This week, the schools were back on schedule with some 90-per-cent normal attendance by midweek. 9-22-57

And it was not until midweek that Kasper got free of jail on a $2,500 cash bond put up by a Knoxville man, who represented himself as regional director of Kasper's Seaboard White Citizens Council.

And with his release, Kasper's local attorney announced that the New Jersey man would leave Nashville immediately, holding no further rallies here and returning only for his court trials.

Still Faces Trial

Kasper must return for his appeal of a city court fine of $200, or a 133-day workhouse sentence. He also must face trial in criminal court for inciting to riots.

The wind-up this week saw 10 Negro students in four formerly all-white schools. But all was not quiet over the state. Shelby County's board of education pondered the question of 10-million-dollar insurance against vandalism, although no integration has been asked as yet in Memphis except at Memphis State University.

Criminal Judge Raulston Schoolfield of Chattanooga, who ran unsuccessfully for governor on a pro-segregation platform in 1954, predicts that Chattanooga will show much stronger resistance to integration in any phase than did Nashville. In fact, Judge Schoolfield suggested that Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas should have instituted charges of "inciting to riot" against U.S. District

TENNESSEE

Judge Davies in Little Rock rather than accepting a subpoena to the federal court injunction hearing.

Rewards totaling $6,000 have been offered for information leading to the conviction of the bombers at the Nashville school. One "friend of Kasper's" told the FBI he helped Kasper hide a box of dynamite in a vacant house before the bombing, and that the box was gone the next day. Nashville police have been investigating the story, but indicate no supporting evidence upon which to base a charge against Kasper.

No Party Split

Tennessee politicos generally cannot see Gov. Faubus' clash with the integration problem as splitting the Democratic Party, or leading to a "third party" movement immediately.

U.S. Sen. Albert Gore, for instance, says the Democratic leadership with whom he has talked thinks President Eisenhower's indecision has more than offset any damage Gov. Faubus' stand might have done. The Republicans are hurting worse than the Democrats, so most Tennessee politicians seemed to think.

Gov. Clement will go to the Southern Governors' Conference at Sea Island, Ga., to argue that a Southerner can be nominated and elected President, despite the controversy over segregation and other issues.

The man's stature and his sincere beliefs will erase the differences, Gov. Clement says. He does not directly indicate he would be that man, but did tell a nationwide TV audience, in effect, that he was "available" for higher office at the national level.

At the same time, he reopened at least partially the possibility he might oppose Sen. Albert Gore in 1958 rather than Sen. Estes Kefauver in 1960, although committing himself to no definite future plans.

There's speculation in Tennessee that he may forego both Senate races and seek the vice presidential nomination on the Democratic ticket in 1960 as a middle-of-the-road Southerner.

Time Stands Still—When hate vandals shattered the Hattie Cotton Elementary School in Nashville with a carefully placed bomb they succeeded in stopping the hands of time from moving forward at 12:34 A. M. The concussion hurled the above clock across a classroom to a window sill. One Negro child had been registered in the school's first grade.—Wide World.

Kasper Attacks Desegregation In Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 9 (AP).—The city school board impassively heard John Kasper and six other segregationists demand that it junk its planned desegregation of first-graders next month. Then said it would continue to study the issue.

The board granted its instruction committee additional time to study an opinion of its lawyers—which said it has no alternative to the court-approved plan—and the demands of different groups of segregationists.

Kasper, a New Jersey native twice convicted of contempt of court in the Clinton, Tenn., racial disorders, appeared at the board's last regular meeting before schools open here September 3. One conviction is being appealed to the Supreme Court and a new trial motion is pending in the other.

Unless the board takes other action at a special meeting, it will desegregate the first grade under orders of United States District Court here and present to the court by December a plan for continuing desegregation to other grades.

Kasper presented a list of demands to the board in the five minutes allotted him. He was followed before the board by a minister, a Ku Klux Klansman, an official of the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government and three persons speaking as individuals. All had a five-minute time limit.

Kasper said he wants the board to:

1. Return to Federal court, resist its order "and go to jail if necessary for the people of Nashville."

2. Petition Gov. Frank Clement and Mayor Ben West to use their police powers to prevent what he said would be violence, race riots and bloodshed if the races are mixed.

3. Petition the State Legislature to close any integrated public school and sell it to its teachers.

The Nashville Battleground

The entire nation will be watching Nashville, Tenn. next month for the results of its integration effort.

Schools will be integrated in the first grade, the theory being that this age group is least affected by prejudice. But this theory, whether valid or not, will be of minor significance if the atmosphere is charged with the passions of extremists on all sides.

No sensible, responsible person could want the Nashville experiment to break into violence, but there are some not so responsible who do. John Kasper is there making speeches, calling for defiance, and there are undoubtedly some Northerners anxious to see events unfold that will prove their hate theory that the South is hopelessly depraved.

School Superintendent W. A. Bass is expecting a rough time of it. He recently had his phone changed to an unlisted number in anticipation of threatening calls and unsolicited advice. Somewhat sadly, Bass said he looked forward to the time when the city could return to the "main aim of our schools—teaching children."

Although Nashville's situation cannot be compared with that of the black belt regions of the South, it is still a far greater problem than other cities—like Louisville, for example — experienced. Nashville, 31% of its population Negro, has twice the Negro percentage that Louisville has and the city is much more Southern in character.

Whatever happens, it is regrettable, even tragic, that Southern education, already substandard and beset with heavy financial problems, should have to proceed in the years ahead under a cloud of uneasiness and fear.

The main aim, teaching children, may be lost in the power struggle.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE—Men identified as Pro-Southerners walked in front of East High School yesterday carrying placards criticizing Gov. Frank Clement shortly before the Governor spoke to a high school civics class. Those who identified themselves were (from left) James Klutts of 902 Carrolton Road, O. H. Carter of 782 Frayser Drive and Nolen Vaughn of 4299 Elaine.

Nashvillians 'Blame' U. S. Court for Bombing

Many Express Shock, Indignation at Violence, But Feeling Against Mixed Schools Runs Deep

By ORA SPAID
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

Wed. 9-11-57

Nashville, Sept. 10.—The dynamiting of an integrated public school here, while generally attributed to opponents of integration, did not appear to shake the deep-running feeling against mixed schools.

At the first news of the Monday midnight blasting of the $500,000 Hattie Cotton Elementary School, there were expressions of shock

City and police officials put out ultimatums to segregationist demonstrators "who do not intend to obey the law" to "get out of town or be subjected to immediate arrest."

Paper Offers Reward

The Nashville Banner offered a $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the bombing.

A segregationist group that Monday asked Governor Frank Clement to call out the Tennessee National Guard to prevent Negroes from entering white schools Tuesday deplored the explosion.

But as the first flush of indignation wore off, many Nashvillians turned to blaming the school dynamiting on the Federal Court-forced integration of public schools.

Says Kasper The Spark

The very general attitude about the bombing was summed up by a father who said:

"It was a pretty bad thing. I'm sorry that it happened. But what are you going to do about it?"

There seemed little doubt in the minds of many that rabid white supremacists were behind the bombing. And many here feel that Monday night's ranting of roving racist John Kasper touched off the violence.

"I doubt if it would have happened without Kasper," said a Nashville attorney. "He was the spark—the incendiary that set it off."

In Poorer Neighborhoods

Many persons pointed out that most of the six elementary schools where racial integration was to begin Monday in the first grade are in lower-income neighborhoods.

The catcalling and bottle-throwing episodes that disrupted the first day of school are attributed largely to people "who are not ready for integration." It was among this group that Kasper "poisoned the wells," in the words of one newspaperman.

The bombing may have shocked a few people away from the segregationist side.

But the "white-collar segregationists" found ways to explain the violence. Generally the feelin gthat ran wide and deep was that the school bombing would never have happened if it hadn't been for the Supreme Court's ruling on segregation.

Feeling Remains Strong

"I'd like to rub the noses of the Supreme Court justices in the rubble of Cotton School," said one otherwise-temperate man.

Some feel that, because of the violence by the "lawless element" of segregationists, open talk for segregation will be quieted for fear of identification with the extremists. But in private the feeling against integration remains strong.

Whatever effect the school bombing may have had in driving some people out of the segregationist camp may have nullified by the report Tuesday of the rape of a white woman by a Negro.

Courier-Journal

Such rapes are not necessarily new to Nashville, but this one was played under a six-column headline on page one of the afternoon newspaper.

'Won't Send Troops'

Wed 9-11-57

Up to this point, Governor Clement was staying out of the Nashville turmoil. He was up all Monday night during the bombing, but could not be reached by reporters Tuesday.

His press aide stated that "we are not going to send out troops—period." The Governor has taken the position he has no authority to send in troops because there is no evidence that law and order here have broken down.

In curbstone conversations on the integration problem the words "civil war" keep popping up.

Tennesseans speculating on the outcome of racial troubles seem to feel civil disruption in the offing. But it does not appear to be so much a North-South clash as a Federal Government-States rights controversy.

Such a clash now going on in Arkansas is credited with a role in fanning violence here.

Sympathy for Pupils

Here and there is concern for the ones most affected—the school children. On both sides of the racial issue there is general sympathy for both white and Negro children who are subjected to the fearful torment of besieged schools.

Attendance at the schools scheduled to be integrated fell of to almost nothing Tuesday. And parents vowed they would not send their children to school "until all this is cleared up."

You can find people who insist that whoever bombed the Cotton School—at night when no one was in it—would never have set off an explosion during the day when children were there.

But the sobering thought that somebody might plant a bomb in a school during classes lay behind many a parent's decision to keep his child at home.

NASHVILLE MAN SOBS IN COURT—Husky, tattooed G. H. Akins weeps in Nashville City Court when he is fined $50 for his part in integration disturbances around the city's elementary schools. His daughter Lily, 8, sobs in her mother's arms, while another daughter Barbara, 6, appears unaware of the drama.—AP Wirephoto.

Petition for Injunction Prepared at Nashville

F.B.I. Gives Police Custody of Man Linked to Blast at Integrated School

Sat. 9-14-57

By ROBERT ALDEN

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 13 — A suspect in the dynamiting of the Hattie Cotton school here was turned over to the local police force today by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The man, who was not identified, is a native of Nashville. He has been under intensive questioning all day. While it is not believed that he himself participated in the blowing up of a section of the grammar school early Tuesday morning, it is considered likely that the man has some information with regard to the blast.

Meanwhile, Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., said in Washington that the Justice Department had some information of "possible significance" concerning the dynamiting of the school.

The Attorney General said that in line with the desire of the Justice Department to be of all possible assistance to local authorities it was turning the information over to the Nashville police. Mr. Brownell's statement was the first indication that the F. B. I. was taking an active part in the investigation of the school blast.

Suspect Linked to Kasper

The F. B. I. suspect is said to be a follower of Frederick John Kasper, convicted segregationist leader. Even before the man was handed over to local authorities by Julius M. Lopez, special agent in charge of Tennessee, the police here had had the suspect under surveillance.

The known principal suspects in the case are: Venson A. Crimmons, 32 years old; James R. Harris, 47, and J. B. Blackwell, 42. They are also in police custody.

The police say that the three have a definite knowledge of the dynamite blast that did considerable damage to the $500,000 school. It is possible, the police said, that the three may not have participated in the bomb blast itself.

The three suspects have no regular employment although occasionally one or another had done tn odd job.

Meanwhile, vigorous police and judicial action resulted today in a considerable relaxation of tensions about Nashville's desegrated schools.

School Attendance Rises

School attendance was up markedly. For the first time more than 50 per cent of the enrolled children were in the classrooms of the integrated schools.

The police were able to reduce substantially the force on guard at the schools as demonstrators were not in evidence today.

Principals, teachers, school board members and the police were cautiously optimistic as they surveyed the school attendance figures. It had its weak as well strong spots.

Of the pupils 399 have not been able to attend because of the damage to the Hattie Cotton school. It will be a week or more before facilities will be made available for them.

The Clemons school with one Negro enrollee has been unaffected by threat or boycott and has had almost 100 per cent attendance since the beginning of school.

Tenn

Sat. 9-14-57

The Glenn School has an enrollment of 389 including three Negro children. On Tuesday 200 students were in attendance, on Wednesday 192, on Thursday 285 and today 335.

The Buena Vista School with an enrollment of 370 climbed from a low of thirty-eight on Wednesday to 104 today.

The Jones School, with an enrollment of 430, climbed from a low of seventy-five on Wednesday to 123 today.

The Fehr, which has an enrollment of 340 including three Negroes, had a low of eleven pupils on Tuesday. Today there were forty-two pupils in the classrooms.

Meanwhile, Kasper found his legal woes compounding themselves. A county grand jury handed up an indictment charging him with inciting to riot. Bail was set at $2,500 by Judge Chester K. Hart of Criminal Court.

If he is convicted, Kasper faces a maximum term of eleven months and twenty-nine days in the county workhouse and $1,000 fine. Forty-two witnesses were prepared to go before the grand jury in the case, but after hearing a considerable number of them the grand jury decided it already had enough evidence.

Charges Against Kasper

It handed up a true bill that said that Kasper had come to Nashville to prevent the attendance of Negro children in Nashville schools. It said that Kasper intended "to overawe and terrorize the civil authorities and inhabitants in Nashville, to oppose by force and violence" the attendance of Negro children in the schools.

The true bill said that Kasper had called upon persons attending his mass rallys to go to the schools "in gangs as rioters to place fear in the colored school children and their parents to so intimidate them as to force the withdrawal of such colored children from schools."

The grand jury's presentment cited thirty persons who had attended Kasper's rallys and subsequently acted in a disorderly way near the schools.

In his one appearance in court today, Kasper seemed grim and unhappy. City, county and Federal action have now been directed against him.

Most of the people in Nash- rallies now disclaim that they followed him. One man yesterday, Porter Freeman, a local feed dealer who has unsuccessfully run for office here, put up $600 bail on the city charges against him.

---

yesterday to the city workhouse after his third arrest within a 12-hour span.

Bond Revocation Sought

Mayor West said he also will seek to have Kasper's bond revoked in his first contempt conviction in the Clinton case. If the bond is revoked, Kasper must serve a year in Federal prison.

The latest charge against him, based on speeches he made in a series of meetings here, is inciting to riot. He was sent to the workhouse after he failed to pay a $200 fine for disorderly conduct, vagrancy and loitering. If he pays the fine, he will be returned to county jail for disposition of the State charge of inciting to riot.

First grades were integrated here Monday, under orders from Judge Miller in six schools. A total of 15 Negroes showed up for first-day classes, and racial flare-ups followed immediately.

Violence came to a climax early the next morning when a dynamite blast ripped open one of the integrated elementary schools. But officials of the damaged Hattie Cotton School offered hope that it would reopen Tuesday.

Six Men Picked Up

Six men have been picked up for questioning in the school dynamiting. Three of them were fined $50 each in city court for possessing weapons. They were bound to the grand jury on companion State charges and held in lieu of $25,000 bond. The other three were charged with vagrancy. All six have denied any part in the dynamiting.

In the other schools, attendance dropped sharply, running about 40 per cent of normal. Total attendance yesterday was 1,184 out of an enrollment of 2,912. Negroes were present at all but one school.

Meanwhile, a crowd of about 200, meeting in a suburban lot after police banned gatherings of more than three persons within the city limits, were urged last night to contribute at least $600 to help in Kasper's defense. Tuesday night Kasper himself reportedly collected slightly more than $7 from a crowd of about 300 meeting in the same lot.

The Rev. John Mercurio of Los Angeles told the crowd, "If John Kasper can get arrested on a charge of vagrancy for going around preaching to people, Jesus Christ could have been arrested on the same charge."

And another speaker, who did not identify himself, urged the crowd to remain peaceful and orderly. Deploring the school bombing, he said, "We are going to have to pay for that out of our own pockets. It didn't help anything."

A thunderstorm broke up the meeting after about an hour. The rain may also have served to supplement police action by putting a damper on further racial flareups.

Kasper was convicted in Knoxville in August, 1956, and again last July of violating United States District Judge Robert L. Taylor's injunction against interfering with integration of Clinton High School. Judge Taylor had ordered Clinton High to integrate last fall.

The first time, Kasper was adjudged by Judge Taylor criminal contempt of court and sentenced to a year in prison. He is appealing to the United States Supreme Court. The second time, last July, he was convicted of criminal contempt by an all-white jury and is awaiting sentence.

Clement to Urge 'Moderation' In New Segregation Proposals

Journal + Constitution Sun, 1-6-57 P.5-F

Atlanta, Ga.

Legislation Would Classify Schools As Strictly Local Responsibilities

By JOE HATCHER 14d(1)

Staff Writer, The Nashville Tennessean
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 5—Gov. Frank Clement has decided to take the lead in the 1957 legislative approach to the school segregation problem in Tennessee.

The administration will have its proposed legislation ready for the Legislature early next week, and Gov. Clement tentatively plans to address the Legislature late in the week on the segregation proposals.

The governor's bill, according to reliable reports, will be a "moderate" approach, and will actually leave the governor's position still a matter of speculation or certainly "middle-of-the-roadism."

The proposed bill will be designed to authorize local school boards, city, county and special school district boards, to assign students to schools within their jurisdiction.

Basic Idea of Bill

The basic idea will be that schools are strictly local responsibilities and wholly under local controls.

Thus in counties or cities where integration might be favored, it can be accomplished. It can well be delayed for long periods in other areas, presumably.

The bill reportedly will provide for assignment to schools by the superintendents, with appeals from such assignments to the local school boards, and thence into the courts if necessary.

There will be no provisions for assignment on basis of race creed or color—"or previous condition of servitude." But the latitude for rules and regulations will be broad, such as permitting restrictions under school zoning plans, fitness of students, educational standards between schools, student preferences and similar regulations.

Stresses Two Points

The governor is expected to emphasize two points, namely:

1. The U.S. Supreme Court's decisions is the law of the land.

2. The state's public school system must not be threatened in any way.

In effect, the responsibility for integration, segregation, or a mixture will be entirely a local matter, and presumably different in the 95 counties and several hundred cities, according to their individual viewpoints.

Thus the state will assume no responsibility for integration or for the preservation of segregation — except in the state-operated institutions of higher learning. Presumably as many lawsuits as there are school boards would be necessary to determine the legality of action in that area.

The State Board of Education has previously adopted, and has had approved by the federal courts, a plan for gradual integration in the state colleges, starting with the senior classes next fall and completing the plan through four years. The University of Tennessee Board of Trustees voted a similar plan at one time and then rescinded action and have taken no definite vote since.

The UT board is somewhat of an independent organization, with staggered terms that prevent a governor's control. The governor appoints the State Board of Education as a whole, however, and serves as chairman of both boards.

State administration leaders have polled at least a substantial part of the new Legislature, and report, unofficially, that a majority of the Senate and probably the House, favors a "moderate" approach to the segregation question — and will probably support the governor's program straight down the line on the burning issue.

There is some question whether the entire gamut of bills as proposed, and adopted in some other Southern states, will even be introduced. However, most of such proposals may well be bottled up in committee until after the administration bill has been passed, leaders predict.

By early consideration of the controversial question, the governor and his administration obviously hope to clear the way for concerted action on the administration program without the threat of the segregation fight hanging over the session.

The administration forces apparently will have the strength to organize both houses when the 80th General Assembly meets at noon Monday.

ASKS 5-BILL PROGRAM

P.1

Governor Tells Legislature Of Plan For Voluntary School Segregation

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Jan. 9. — Gov. Frank Clement recommended a five-bill legislative program Wednesday to help Tennessee cope with school segregation problems.

The Governor told a joint session of the Legislature it is his earnest conviction the program is necessary "for the promotion of peaceful and harmonious relations between the races and for the preservation and efficiency of our public school systems."

Key Measure In Plan

Key measure in the package proposal is an 11-page bill giving boards of education in each local school system the full power to place, assign and transfer pupils under its jurisdiction.

The others would:

1. Allow local school officials to provide separate schools for white and Negro children if their parents "voluntarily elect" for their school children to attend school with members of their own race.

2. Clarify and strengthen the law authorizing transfer of pupils from one school system to another.

3. Authorize two or more local boards to operate schools jointly.

4. Amend the School Bus Transportation Law to make it conform "to the program herein outlined." The amendment deletes all mention of race, a provision which might otherwise make the present law unconstitutional.

Not A 'Panacea'

The Governor was quick to say that his program is not a "panacea to cure all our ills," but he called it an "honest program" which is not "compounded of the medicine of political quackery."

Governor Clement emphasized that the key point of his entire program is that it is voluntary rather than compulsory, a fact which he felt would make the legislation constitutional and give local boards greater latitude in handling their own affairs.

On the basis of the United States Supreme Court opinion the Governor said, state laws compelling segregation have been held unconstitutional by the Tennessee Supreme Court and all three Federal District Courts in Tennessee.

"Whether we condemn these decisions or praise them," he said, "whether they were right or wrong, we must face the fact that the highest courts of our nation and of our state have held that any statutes compelling segregation of the races in the public schools is unconstitutional."

Commercial Appeal

The Supreme Court did not "deprive individual parents and children of their rights of voluntarily choosing the schools they wish to attend," the Governor pointed out but instead, "expressly" left administration of the schools in the hands of local school boards.

P. 3

Principal Features

Principal features of the five bills are: 14d(1)

1. Pupil assignment — Pupils presently enrolled in a school will continue to attend it until graduation unless they move or are transferred by the board.

In determining schools to which pupils are to be assigned, boards may consider "social, psychological, fiscal, geographical, physical" and numerous other factors in determining what is best for the children and the community.

Parents or guardians who are dissatisfied with action of the board may appeal first to the board, after which hearings will be held and further appeals may be made to Chancery Court and the state Supreme Court.

This system differs from a somewhat similar statute by North Carolina which has been held invalid in that the appeal system is not compulsory.

In conducting hearings, the board is given authority to issue subpenas and compel attendance of witnesses and production of documentary evidence.

Pupils would be assigned individually and any appeals or court action would have to be taken on an individual basis rather than as a "class action."

Voluntary Segregation

shrdlu shrdlu shrdlu shrlsetao

2. Voluntary segregated schools — Boards should be authorized to maintain segregated schools on a "voluntary" basis for children whose parents, legal custodians or guardians voluntarily elect that their children attend school with members of their own race.

A Federal District Court ruling, recently upheld by the Fourth District Circuit Court of Appeals, held that the Supreme Court has not decided that the states must mix persons of different races in schools or must deprive them of the right of choosing the school they attend.

Presumably this law would be used as an escape valve in event a Federal Court ordered a school board to admit Negroes to any particular school.

Boards would be authorized to maintain schools where both white and Negro students would attend. The integrated schools would be at the discretion of the school board.

3. Transfer of pupils — Local boards would be given board discretion for transfer of pupils from one school system to another.

Present law makes it mandatory that per capita school funds shall be transferred to the system where the pupil attends. The proposed law would leave this to discretion of the local school boards.

4. Enable boards of education to establish, maintain and operate schools jointly.

Under this act, several counties could operate a school jointly. The school would be an integral part of the school systems of each board which was a party to the contract under which the school was created.

Proponents of this type legislation have pointed out that officials of Anderson County had no school to offer Negroes now attending Clinton High School if they had preferred attending school with members of their own race.

5. School Bus Transportation Law—The proposed amendment takes out all mention of race as a determining factor in the provision of transportation to school children.

This provision, if allowed to remain, might make the law unconstitutional under the Supreme Court's degree.

Applicants For Teaching Withdrawn In Nashville

Wed 4-10-57 P. 4

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Two applicants for teaching jobs in the Nashville public school system withdrew Thursday because of the approaching integration of pupils.

City school superintendent W. A. Bass said he expected some 200 Negroes to seek admission to the previously all-white Davidson County School' first grade classes in September. He urged the parents teachers association to cooperate in every way with the new program.

Bass said however that teachers must concentrate only on teaching this fall, and not on racial issue. He pointed out that public schools exist for all children, who must be given equal opportunity.

Bass said that group desegregation is not a matter of "compulsory

Stateland Elementary School Is Dedicated; County Notables Attend Colorful Program

Nashville Tenn

Dedication services for Stateland Elementary School, one of Davidson County's newest school buildings, were held at the school Sunday, April 14, with an imposing array of County educational leaders on hand for the occasion.

Nicholas T. Lowry. Vice President of Nashville Products Company, delivered a timely dedicatory address to the large gathering, which turned out for the services, while J. E. Moss, the Superintendent of the Davidson County Schools, dedicated the school, and delivered the charge to community, the pupils, and members of the school staff.

Acceptance speeches were made by he following: For the Community, Henry Cartwright, president of the School PTA; for the Students. Raphael Jolley, Stateland School Student Council; for the school, Prof. H. A. McClaron, principal.

Mr. Lowry, the principal speaker, was introduced by A. E. Wright, assistant superintendent of Davidson County Schools, while the platform guests were presented by Mrs. C. M. Denny, supervisor, Davidson County Schools.

The program was interspersed with musical selections by the Stateland School Band, under the direction of Prof. W. H. Abernathy, along with the School Chorus under the direction of Mrs. L. H. Turner. The invocation was offered by the Rev. H. M. Spence, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Hopewell, while the benediction was given by the Rev. T. E. Sweeney, pastor of Mt. Vernon Baptist Church, Madison.

Followng the program, the guests were taken on a tour of the school.

Modern Plant

The new structure is modern throughout, and is featured by its simplicity and functional design. A consolidated school, it serves Old Hickory, Madison, Evans Hill, Scotts Hollow, Hermitage and Stateland Communities.

Situated on a 9 acre plot of ground, it is constructed of concrete block and brick veneer. In addition to other standard features, it contains 7 modern class rooms, library, cafeterium, clinic and teachers' lounge. An asphalt court, o well equipped play ground and softball field provide more than adequate space for a physical education program for boys and girls of all ages, school officials pointed out.

Officials stated also that the building was designed and constructed for use by the community as well as for a school. It is built to allow construction of additional classrooms should the need arise.

Superintendent J. E. Moss had this to say concerning new school: "The Davidson County Board of Education labored many years to acquire the site for and erect the beautiful structure which we are dedicated to day. We are not only pleased with this fine building, but we are gratified with the excellent progress that has been made during the first year of the school existence.

"This achievement could not have been obtained without the cooperation of the principal, faculty, parents and stulents.

"We salute Stateland School with the hope that it will continue to grow and serve this fine community during the years ahead."

Prof. McClaron Heads Capable Staff

Prof. McClaron himself a product of the county schools, came back to work as a teacher in these schools following his college education. The popular young school executive has ingratiated himself to the people of the communities where he has taught prior to his position at Stateland. The same can be said of him in his present position.

Aside from Prof. Abernathy, he is ably assisted on the faculty by Mrs. T. H. Knox, fourth grade teacher; Mrs. M. W. Harrison, first grade teacher; W. M. Jackson, physical education; Mrs. E. W. Wilkins, second grade teacher, A. E. Lockert, fifth and sixth grade teacher; Mrs. L. H. Turner, seventh grade teacher; and Mrs. Malvina Shockley, third grade teacher.

The school staff and student body, along with the community, left no stones unturned in their efforts to make the dedication a huge success Another outstanding feature of the affair was the artistic souvenir program, which was published for the occasion. An attractive creation printed by the Hemphill Press, the 11 x 8 inch 16 page affair showed long hours of creative planning by both school staff and printers.

The front cover page is printed in Maroon, gold and black, with a full size picture of the school centering the page. Page two of the cover has a picture of Superintendent Moss, his message, quoted earlier in this story, a brief description of the school plant and the names of men on the County Board of Education. Page three of the cover carries a full page advertisement, while the Sunday program is printed on the back page of the cover flanked on each side with a maroon and gold tint, with gold letterings.

The first four pages of the inside are devoted to a picture story of the principal, faculty and student body. An idea of the esteem in which the school is held by citizens of Davidson County may be gleaned from the nearly 500 patrons listed on two full pages of the program, plus the ten pages of display advertising which finish out the enticing three-color masterpiece.

Flowers for the dedication program were furnished by Doug Houry, florist.

Tenn Gov Seeks Anti-Integration Legislation

Informer P. 20

Sat 1-26-57

Houston Texas

NASHVILLE, Tenn. —(NNPA)— Governor Frank Clement Wednesday urged the Tennessee Legislature to pass four bills to help the state to keep its public schools segregated.

The bills he recommended would:

1. Give school boards in each local school system the full power to place, assign and transfer pupils under its jurisdiction.

2. Allow local school officials to provide separate schools for Negro and white children if their parents "voluntarily elect" to have their children attend schools with children of their own color.

3. Clarify and strengthen the law authorizing transfer of pupils from one school system to another.

4. Authorize two or more local boards to operate schools jointly.

5. Amend the School Bus Transportation law by striking out all mention of race, a provision which might otherwise make the present law unconstitutional.

On the basis of the United States Supreme Court decision, compelling racial segregation have the Governor said state laws been held unconstitutional by the Tennessee Supreme Court and all three Federal District Courts in Tennessee.

"Whether we condemn these decisions or praise them," Governor Clement said, "whether they were right or wrong, we must face the fact that the highest courts of our nation and of our state have held that any statutes compelling segregation of the races in the public schools is unconstitutional."

He added, however, that the Supreme Court had not deprived "individual parents and children of their rights of voluntarily choosing the schools they wish to attend."

SENATORS APPROVE SEGREGATION BILLS

Three School Actions Sent To Governor—Two Will Be Changed Slightly

By JAMES EWING

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

Jan 1-23-57

NASHVILLE, Jan. 22. — Gov. Frank G. Clement's five school segregation bills cleared the final hurdle Tuesday with overwhelming approval by the Senate.

Memphis, Tenn

Three were sent to the Governor for his signature. Minor clarifying amendments were added to the other two and the amendments must be concurred in by the House before they can be signed into law.

Two Key Bills Cleared

The Pupil Assignment and Voluntary Segregation Acts, key measures in the five bill package, went to the Governor without amendment. The Administration leaders defeated several attempts to change them.

The senators approved the Pupil Assignment Bill by a vote of 27-3 with two senators present and not voting. They approved the Voluntary Segregation Bill 27-4 with one senator present and not voting.

The bill amending the School Transportation Law to omit any mention of race was approved 30-0 and sent to the Governor without amendment.

Approval By 31-1

Approval by a vote of 31-1 was also given the proposal to authorize local school boards to transfer pupils from one system to another. A minor amendment was added to make it conform to present law allowing children to attend public schools if they will reach their sixth birthday before Dec. 31.

The measure to allow two or more boards to build and operate schools jointly was approved 30-0 after deletion of a provision permitting the school boards to levy taxes.

Senator Clifford Allen of Nashville led the unsuccessful fight to make major changes in several of the bills.

Representative Wayne Hunt of Fruitland sought to strengthen the Pupil Assignment Bill to provide that the Compulsory Attendance Law not apply to children who would otherwise be forced to attend an integrated school.

Commercial Appeal

Administration leaders successfully opposed the amendment on grounds it is not covered in the caption of the bill and might make it unconstitutional.

Voting against the Volnutary Segregation Bill were Senators Allen, Hobart Atkins and E. B. Bowles of Knoxville and R. L. Peters Jr. of Kingsport. Senator Edward C. Murray of Lafoyyette was listed as present and not voting.

Senators Allen, Atkins and Peters voted against the Pupil Assignment Bill and Senators Murray and Ernest Guffey of Athens were present and not voting.

Senator Peters cast the only vote against the pupil transfer bill and Senator Murray again wa slisted as present and not voting.

Senator Ross Dyer of Halls, Administration floor leader, led the successful floor fight for the bills.

He said he is opposed to school integration and experssed the belief it is "against the manifest best interests of the white and Negro children of Tennessee to integrate the schools at this time."

He said top legal officials have found all five bills constitutional and that they are necessary for the best interest of children faced with "the greatest social change in the history of our state."

SUMMER SCHOOL SET FOR RURAL NEGROES

Opening Date Is June 15 In Shelby County

Commercial Appeal — P. 15

CONSOLIDATIONS TOLD

The annual summer opening of county Negro rural schools, held so that pupils may help harvest crops in the fall, has been tentatively set for July 15.

The date was approved yesterday by the Shelby County Board of Education after George Barnes, superintendent, advised a late crop may necessitate a later opening.

If crops develop normally without delay because of weather or other conditions, the schools will close about Sept. 14. A pre-summer Negro school teachers' conference has been set for July 8 at the Shelby County Training School.

Sea Isle Transferred

Mr. Barnes discussed preparatory steps with the school board involving the transfer of Sea Isle elementary school by July 1 to the city Board of Education. The school, near the White Station Road and Sea Isle intersection, has six grades and about 600 pupils. The site has been annexed by the city.

The land and building cost about $300,000 and were occupied by the county Jan. 9, 1956. It has 16 classrooms and a combined cafeteria-auditorium.

Mr. Barnes announced the consolidation of 10 Negro rural schools, the majority of which are two-teacher schools. Six schools with a total attendance of about 400 pupils will be consolidated into the new Mt. Pisgah 16-classroom school.

The new building is on Mt. Pisgah Road about a quarter mile north of Macon Road. The schools consolidating are: Moore's, Augusta Rosenwald, Morning Grove, Pierce Chapel, Cordova, old Mt. Pisgah School. The new consolidated school is scheduled to open for the summer term.

New Classrooms Ready

About 200 pupils at St. Paul and Williams Chapel Schools will be consolidated with the E. A. Harrold School at Millington. Eight new classrooms will provide necessary accommodations.

Noah's Chapel School pupils will be divided among A. E. Harrold and Barret's Chapel Schools. Walsh School pupils will go to E. A. Harrold and Woodstock Training School.

Mr. Barnes said the consolidations will reduce the number of county Negro rural schools to 33. Eventual aim of the school system is further consolidation of three to five more small rural schools, Mr. Barnes said, to complete the program of county Negro school centralization.

SEGREGATION LEADER WANTS LAWS TESTED

Commercial Appeal

Memphis, Tenn.

New Measures Would Block Nashville Integration

Times 6-11-57

NASHVILLE, June 10.—(UP)—A segregation leader told city school officials Monday they should use new state laws instead of ending segregation in the first grade this fall.

Donald Davidson, state chairman of the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, urged officials to use new laws allowing "voluntary" segregation and giving school officials broad powers of pupil assignment.

Dr. Davidson said the school board had a "legal duty" to use the laws, passed by the 1957 Legislature.

Racial segregation in the first grade in Nashville schools will end this fall in compliance with a Federal Court ruling. School officials have until Dec. 31 to come up with a plan for complete desegration.

Dr. Davidson said the new laws are "valid unless and until decision."

they are ruled invalid by court

One law allows school boards to maintain separate schools for children whose parents "voluntarily elect" to send them to school with members of their own race.

The other gives school boards power to assign students for a variety of reasons. The assignment laws does not mention race.

The laws were part of a five bill "package" school program proposed by Gov. Frank Clement.

City school officials were not available for immediate comment on Dr. Davidson's proposal.

W. H. Oliver Is Rated Splendid Man For The Job

Nashville, Tenn. P. 1

Number Of Principals And Teachers Have Visited His School On Special Occasions And Say Civil Treatment Was Accorded Them; To Take Over As Successor Of W. A. Bass On January 1; Pledges Fair Desegregation Policy

While there had been many rumors going the rounds as to how long Supt. W. A. Bass would retain his position as head of the Nashville city schools, it is possible that no one knew the superintendent was ready to "call it quits," so soon Tuesday, May 21.

But that is what he did, and the fact that he did tender his resignation on that day and it was accepted by the City Board of Education, along with the board's prompt announcement of Mr. Bass' successor created the biggest stir in educational circles here in many years.

Prof. William Henry Oliver, principal of East Nashville High got the appointment as Mr. Bass' successor.

Mr. Bass was in Vanderbilt Hospital when he made public his resignation. He was there for a checkup, it was stated. However it has been noted by his teachers for several months that the superintendent seemed not to be in the very best of health.

The superintendent's best friends had been saying that poor health could be the cause of Mr. Bass' bad humor exhibited toward his colored teachers for the pass month or more. It still is not known whether the action of the city's lawyers in refusing to resist desegregation had anything to do with the superintendent's sudden resignation.

Still the rumor has been that the superintendent would never play any part in ushering in a system of mixed schools in Nashville. Apparently he not only was in agreement with the majority of the city's parents and patrons in being against desegregation, but he probably would not submit to promoting desegregation, to comply with the Supreme Court edict.

The superitendent not only was confronted by the decision of the special attorneys appointed to defend the action of the board in refusing to register some twenty colored children who had tried to enter white schools and had been turned down.

The city's lawyers had conceded the validity of the Supreme Court's decision outlawing compulsory segregation. Apparently Supt. Bass also had conceded. But apparently it was a "bitter pill' to do so, because his public statements about desegregation and the plan submitted to desegregate only primary children at the opening of school in September appeared strange to many commentators. The order of Federal Judge Miller to the board is to submit a plan for further desegregation by December 31 of this year drew from Supt. Bass a number of pleas to his teachers, to parents and to patrons of the school for their cooperation in making desegregation work.

There was another ugly situation which disturbed Supt. Bass. Persons purporting to be members of the Ku Klux Klan had threatened him with dire consequences if he carried out any desegregation of Nashville schools. He confessed these threats had him disturbed.

Supt. Bass has been designated by the board to hold on as an advisor to the new superintendent. It has not been stated whether his tenure as advisor will continue until next September or not.

What the reaction of the large element of colored teachers is to be in the new regime that will begin after December 31, under Supt. Oliver can be guessed by the remark made by one well known leader.

He said, "Well, at least the new superintendent is 'one of us.'" That remark revealed plenty as to what the thinking of colored teachers has been toward Supt. Bass—a feeling that he, being a West Tennessee educator did not have the same liberal attitude toward colored teachers as an educator of Nashville or of middle Tennessee would have.

Many of the teachers have come in contact with Mr. Oliver during the time he has been at East High. Some principals have carried student to his school for special affairs. His attitude toward colored teachers and pupils has been quite civil, and likewise that of his pupils, it is reported. The belief is that the board made a wise selection in Mr. Oliver and that he will be able to promote the desegregation program in a satisfactory manner.

Colored and white teachers have begun to act quite favorably toward the pleas for cooperation with him as have bee n made by Mr. Oliver. He is a full-fledged Nashvillian, but a native of Indian Mound, Tenn.

Mr. Oliver comes to the superintendency, it is stated, with the full endorsement of Mayor Ben West. That is quite satisfactory with the colored parents and teachers. The Mayor, himself has made a "big hit" with the colored citizens in the attitude he has shown toward the colored schools and pupils. He has attended every commencement at Pearl High since he became Mayor in 1951.

The new superintendent was educated at Vanderbilt University and Peabody College where he received both his Master of Arts and Master of Education degree. He received his bachelor degree at Vanderbilt. Colored citizens here enjoy fine public relations with both the educational institutions from which Mr. Oliver graduated and count on seeing their liberalism reflected in the attitude of Supt. Oliver.

He is an ordained minister in the Free Will Baptist Church and a baritone soloist in the Episcopal Church. He has been in the Nashvill school system for more than 20 years and has the necessary board experience to fit him admirably for the big job he is to assume next January 1.

He admits that he and Mayor Ben West have been personal friends for a number of years and even before the Hon. Ben West became mayor of Nashville. Yet Mr. Oliver says there was no pressure brought and no political reason can be attached to his appointment by the board as superintendent.

Mr. Oliver is in full accord with the plans outlined already to desegregate the primary schools. He will be on hand when the plans for future desegregation are submitted to the District Federal Court of Middle Tennessee.

Mr. Oliver says prove satisfactory there is not likely to be any further litigation over desegregation. Nashville it appears is going to outdistance the other cities of the state in getting its desegregation problem solved.

Ideas In Sen. Allen Bill Ignore Some Rights Of Courts

Nashville Tenn. Banner 1-4-57

Partiality Shown White Principals And Teachers Despite What Record Shows As To General Training And Ability of Most Negroes In Teaching Profession; More Litigation Forecast If Bill Passes And Colored Students Sent Out of Town

The United States Supreme Court, on May 31, 1955, had quite carefully heard "both sides" in arguments as to how the states should go about carrying out the decision it had handed down on May 17, 1954 with regard to abolishing discrimination in public schools in the nation. Therefore Chief Justice Earl Warren and each and every one of the Associate Justices were prepared to lay down specific rules and regulations to all concerned as to the proper way to put desegregation into effect.

It is quite clear the Court believed that none of the states would plan schemes, not for CARRYING OUT the Court's decision, but for evading it. The Supreme Court and various Federal Courts cannot avoid being impatient with all and sundry persons and officials who are disposed to tinker with the law of the land.

On May 31, 1955 the Court after hearing arguments from Southern States asking for unlimited time in which to "readjust" to non-discriminatory schools, ruled that the Federal Courts would be the agencies to whom it would look for decisions on whether the various states IN GOOD FAITH were complying with the law. They did not expect states legislatures to attempt to try hands at making laws to effect the changeover from compulsory segregated schools to non-discriminatory schools.

Sen. Allen's Untitled Bill

Whether not all concerned are going to respect the mandate of the Supreme Court, just "smoke over" what Senator Clifford Allen of Nashville has in his "untitled" bill. He seems to ignore the authority of the Federal Courts, including the Middle Tennessee Federal Court, presided over by our capable and conscientious Judge Elmer D. Davies. The Allen hill says:

WHEREAS, this (Tennessee) General Assembly recognizes the racial tensions prejudices, and possible social conflicts that are inherent in the very nature of the problem to be met by those officials charged with the responsibility and duty of implementing this decision of the United States Supreme Court, and that the school boards should and must have certain powers in keeping with their grave responsibilities in order to keep these tensions, prejudices and conflicts to a minimum."

Now with regard to the Allen bill which apparently seeks to clothe the legislature with superior power and authority over public school matters, let us refer to what the U. S. Supreme Court Justices said UNANIMOUSLY on May 31, 1955:

"These (five) cases were decided on May 17, 1954. The opinions of that date, declaring the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional are incorporated herein by reference. All provisions of federal, state, or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle. There remains for consideration the manner in which relief is to be accorded."

Order Spelled Out

This 1955 ruling, in which was spelled out to the proper authorities what was expected of them, the Court said, it had been made clear after hearing from a number of states—all the states that had accepted the Court's invitation of the Court to come forward and help as to how they should go about putting a non-discriminatory system of education into effect, the Supreme Court said in effect, that persons concerned might adopt what they thought was compliance to the law of the land, which had overturned the 1956 Plessy v Ferguson that had been handed down back in 1896 and ruled that the 14th Amendment was to go into effect everywhere in the future, laid down the rule that school boards might try their hand at writing new rules but they would be required to submit same to the District Federal Courts in their jurisdiction, which would formulate decrees for the guidance of the school authorities. Specifically, this was what the Supreme Court said on Monday, May 31, 1955:

What High Court Said

"In fashioning and effectuating the decrees, the courts will be guided by equitable principles. Traditionally, equity has been characterized by a practical flexibility in shaping its remedies and by a facility of adjusting and reconciling public and private needs. These cases call for the exercise of these traditional attributes of equity power. At stake is the personal interest of the plaintiffs in admission to public schools as soon as practible on a non-discriminatory basis. To effectuate this interest may call for the elimination of a variety of obstacles in making the transition to school systems operated in accordance with the constitutional principles set forth in our May 17, 1954 decision. Courts of equity may properly take into account the public interest in the elimination o'such obstables in a systematic and effective manner former Senator George H. Cate, Sr. But it should go without saying that the vitality of these constiutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them."

Now it is quite clear that Senator Allen is well informed on what the Supreme Court said as to steps to be taken to effectuate compliance with its 1954 decision and the instructions it promulgated in 1955. He knows that nowhere in the decisions nor instructions was any authority given any state or local authorities any other latitude but to draw up ways and means to comply as expeditiously as passible with the general challenge to get rid of compulsory racial segregation in public education.

Certainly, Senator Allen is aware of the fact that regularly the Federal and sometimes state courts have been handing down decisions insisting what the Supreme Court has ruled must be obeyed in letter and spirit. He knows that if this be not done, the Courts will set aside any of the political macinations indulged in by state legislators.

School Board Burden

But in the arrangements our senator has made in his bill, he seeks to clothe school boards with authority that the Supreme Court has delegated to the District Federal Courts. Take for instance a few of the multiplicity of words he has in his arrangements. Take the one dealing with pupils and what kind of schools they may be required by school boards to attend. He says:

"No white pupil or persons shall be compelled or required to attend any school or class in said school that is attended predominately by Negroes and no Negro pupil or person shall be compelled or required to attend any school or class of any school in which the majority of pupils or persons enrolled or attending either the school or said class are white pupils or personcs except . . . in counties where separate schools are not provided for Negroes. But where objection is raised by any pupil so assigned and so far as practicable and feasable, it shall be the duty and responsibility of the respective school boards and superintendents in each such case to reassign such pupil or person to the nearest or most convenient school which has sufficient space, facilities and accommodations, wherein the majority of pupils are of his or her race.

Elsewhere in his arrangements the Allen Bill, there is a command that no white pupil will be compelled to attend a school or class of which the principal is a Negro but this harsh provision, the Senator seems to feel is made palatable by saying further down the line that no Negro pupil shall be compelled to attend any school or class where the principal or teacher is white. But farther down, he says no white person can be compelled to attend a school or class in which a majority of the pupilsh are Negroes and no Negro pupil can be compelled to attend a school where the principal or teacher is white. But farther down, relief is provided in "emergency" cases. It says where no "competent" Negroes are available for school teaching, such school or class may be staffed by a white principal or teacher. The assumption seems to be that any white person, whether competent or not is good enough to teach Negro children.

Competent Negro Teachers

This, despite the record which shows Negroes, well prepared to teach are available everywhere whereas white persons with ability to teach are scarce because they are able to get much better pay than they can get teaching and also get a pay check every month in the year.

That one looks like a "haymaker" for eleminating Negro school principles while at the same time white persons who are given special permits to teach will have to "suffer" under the requirements of trying to drill knowledge into the heads of colored children.

Another Allen Bill provisor ignores the fact that the Senator's fellow townsmen fought through lower courts, on up to the U. S. Supreme Court to get colored students admitted to the white high school in Clinton, Anderson County. It was Attorney Z. Alexander Looby. After five or six years he won his case and colored children began attending their home school at Clinton. When a few Scofflaws up there got too "uppity" and tried to set aside the law, Federal government stepped in and further "explained" the law by lodging the lawless in jail. Latest reports is that the white principal and faculty at Clinton and likewise the mixed student body are getting along as well as could be expected.

License To Filibuster

And so, except for the fact, that "filibustering" has not been outlawed by the congress or legislature, we may be bothered with something for the statute books as ridiculous as the bill of Senator Clifford Allen. The RFD colons are bound to surmise that if a member of the legislature representing the Athens of the South offers a bill to get rid of equal justice under the law for colored citizens he must have just what the doctor ordered. And if Gov. Frank Clement comes along belatedly, after leaving an impression in the minds of a great host of colored folk that he was a modern edition of Abraham Lincoln, and shows that he too has a plan for heading off desegregation for a period of two years, that will force colored Tennesseans to go to court again as they did up at Clinton.

But somebody here ought to express confidence in the advice President Eisenhower has recommended for getting rid of any harshness connected with putting desegregation into effect.

Somebody, for instance, like former Senator George H. Sate, Sr. He is suggested the correct formula —that of obeying the law that has sounded the doom of compulsory segregation in transportation on busses in Nashville.

Rocks Hit Two Negroes, Police Inspector As 13 Colored Pupils Attend White Schools

Tues. 9-10-57

From Wire Dispatches

Nashville, Sept. 9.—Angry whites reacted to integration of first grades at Nashville Monday by heavily boycotting some schools and by rock-throwing that continued at intervals into the night.

At least three persons—a Negro mother, a Negro woman motorist, and a police inspector—were hit by rocks. None were believed badly hurt.

During the day 13 Negro children, bewildered by the events outside, sat at tiny desks with white pupils in five schools.

Crowds Stay at Fehr

Crowds stayed at the Fehr School, scene of most of the excitement, long after the half-day session ended in confusion, and began tossing rocks at any Negro motorists who happened to pass.

One rock struck Catherine Sanders, 27, on the head as she drove past the school. Two Negro men, Joe Donald, 25, and Ernest Patto, 47, said their automobiles were pelted as they drove home from work.

These incidents took police to the scene. The rock-throwing stopped, but when the police left after nightfall the rock-throwing resumed.

The auto of the school's janitor mysteriously caught on fire.

Stones and sticks were thrown at Negro mothers and their 6-year-old children as they arrived at school Monday morning.

Pulls Paring Knife

One Negro mother leading two children away from the school at the end of the school session turned on her white antagonizers and, pulling a small paring knife from under her dress, challenged any of them: "Come and jump me now."

She was arrested, as were two white women, one of whom had thrown a pop bottle, the other a wooden board at Negroes.

Hundreds of frightened white parents, many of them not on one side or the other as far as integration or segregation was concerned, took their children out of their classrooms. They were frightened by the furor outside the school. They feared their children might be hurt.

Kasper Talks to Parents

Agitator John Kasper, who has led the fight of the extremists against integration here, told the parents to keep their children out of the classrooms "until all the "burr-heads" are out of the white schools."

A more moderate group fighting integration, the Parents School Preference Committee, called on Governor Frank G. Clements and urged him to use the Tennessee National Guard to stop Negro children from attending white schools "in order to prevent violence."

The Governor, as he has done before, refused their request on the grounds that he has no authority to use the National Guard until municipal authorities inform him that the situation has got out of hand.

Bass Is Disappointed

Superintendent of Schools William A. Bass said he was disappointed with what happened Monday.

He estimated 25 to 30 per cent of the pupils had been taken out of the five schools that had integrated their first-grade pupils. He said that, in all, 13 Negro first-grade pupils had attended integrated schools.

"We are caught in the backwash," Bass said, "of something going on too close to us. The Little Rock situation has given the impression of possible victory to those who would like to defeat the Supreme Court decision.

Courier-Journal

"The quicker the Government reaches a conclusion as to its responsibilities and ways and means of carrying out the law, the quicker the whole problem of racial segregation will be solved," Bass said. P. 14

Police Watch Crowd

By 7 o'clock Monday morning, crowds, ranging in size from 50 to 150 white people, gathered outside the five schools where the Negro children were to attend classes with white children. Police watched the crowd and escorted three Negroes into one school.

Times. 9-10-57

The men were in shirtsleeves, youths in denim, and women in cotton frocks. They carried signs reading, "Keep Your Kids Home," and, "Keep Our White Schools White." They carried Confederate and American flags.

At 8:15 at one school, the first of the Negro pupils—two little girls wearing braids and neat green dresses—arrived. They were accompanied by their parents.

They were met by angry shouts from the women: "Here come the niggers," and, "Pull their black curls out."

The little girls seemed bewildered, but almost oblivious, to what was going on around them. One of their mothers burst into tears.

The children and the mothers passed into the school, where they were met by the principal. "Why don't you kiss the niggers," someone shouted at the principal.

Segregation Group to Picket as Classes Begin Today

Mon. 9-9-57
New York

By ROBERT ALDEN

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 8—The threat of violence and boycott hung over this one-time Confederate city today as it prepared to hold its first integrated classes.

Tomorrow, Negro children are expected to attend the first grade at five of Nashville's previously all-white schools.

The police have warned that they will tolerate no disorder or intimidation.

Today about 150 white men and women gathered in the back yard of a ramshackle house on Nashville's east side.

A speaker on the broken-down porch told them:

"Remember that our country was born in violence. Tomorrow is the day. Our white schools must remain white. Every blow that you strike will be a blow for freedom."

The crowd shouted its approval. The chairman of the meeting was Frederick John Kasper, a professional segregationist.

This fringe of Nashville's white population is calling on parents to stay away from their jobs tomorrow and to keep their children home from school.

The group, the Tennessee White Citizens' council, is planning mass picketing at all of the schools. The motto of the pickets is to be: "They shall not pas."

Times P. 1-6

The police here make no bones about the fact that they will not tolerate violence. "Anyone who is disorderly or who attempts to intimidate anyone else will be arrested," Police Chief Douglas E. Hosse said today. Mon. 9-9-57

"As long as the picketing is orderly it will be all right," Chief Hosse said. "But if there is any disorder or if anyone gets up on the schoolgrounds to create disorder or intimidate anyone they'll be arrested on the spot."

The chief said that parents can have every assurance that their children will do so with safety.

But no one really knows what is going to happen here tomorrow. No one knows how much support the segregationists will be able to muster among the general white population of Nashville.

Nashville as a whole does not want desegragation. But at the same time it is by nature a law-abiding city.

Bus Compromise Reached

When the issue of bus segregation threatened to bring discord, a compromise was reached. The signs in the buses requiirng Negroes to sit in the rear were removed. But everyone still sits pretty much where they sat before.

The school authorities here are counting on the average Nashville citizen's civic pride and his law-abiding nature to prevent serious violence even more than they are counting on police protection.

The Mayor, Ben West, has said that he will not tolerate any disorder as a result of desegregation.

But authorities here are more afraid of a boycott of the schools than they are of violence.

Today a group that has a much wider basis of support than the Kasper group urged white parents to keep their children out of all grades in protest of the segregation steps.

Will Ask U.S. to Enjoin Leaders—Kasper Is Jailed Again—School Areas Quiet

Thurs. 9-12-57

By ROBERT ALDEN

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 11—City officials here decided today to seek a Federal injunction against "twenty to twenty-five agitators" who are trying to block public school integration here.

Federal District Judge William E. Miller immediately issued orders instructing the Department of Justice to assist the city officials in making their application. They hoped to make the application tomorrow.

The city's decision came after a meeting between Mayor Ben West, United States Attorney Fred Ellidge Jr., William H. Oliner, assistant school superintendent, and city attorneys. During the meeting frequent telephone conferences were held with Department of Justice officials in Washington.

Meanwhile the police kept a heavy guard around the six elementary schools that had been integrated. Ten Negro children were in attendance at five of these schools today.

10 More Are Arrested

Although ten further arrests were made, order around the schools was good. Agitators, where they appeared at all, were moved away quickly. However, many parents, intimidated by earlier violence and continuous anonymous telephone threats, kept their children away from schools.

The principal agitator, Frederick John Kasper of Camden, N. J., was again in trouble with the police. A city judge called Kasper "the worst vagrant we have ever had in Tennessee" before fining him $200.

When Kasper was unable to pay the fine or raise bail pending appeal he was sent to the city workhouse.

Meanwhile, Mayor West, angered at the troublemakers who have dynamited one of Nashville's integrated schools went to Mr. Ellidge's office before 9 o'clock this morning and stayed there until almost 4 o'clock this afternoon without a break for lunch.

When he came out he said "we intend to see that no one interferes with the education of our children * * *"

He explained that city officials were drawing legal papers to present to Judge Miller applying for an injunction immediately "against all persons who have sought to prevent the school board from carrying out the orders of the Federal court by gathering in front of the schools or otherwise."

Expects Papers Today

He said htat he hoped that the papers would be ready tomorrow. Mr. Ellidge said that he had already received his oral instructions from Judge Miller to assist in drawing up the papers and expected written instructions tomorrow.

Mr. West said that Kasper and Fred Stroud, also a segregationist, would definitely be among those against whom a Federal injunction was sought.

Mayor West said also that he would ask the Federal court in the Eastern District of Tennessee to revoke the bail bond of Kasper, already twice convicted by Federal courts of violating Federal injunctions. Kasper is now appealing those convictions.

Kaasper has held nightly rallies in this city or in its outskirts telling his followers that integration must be stoped by "shotgun, dynamite or the hanging rope if necessary."

Kasper was given the severest treatment in city court today when he was brought up on four charges — vagrancy, loitering, offensive conduct and disorderly conduct. He was fined $50, the maximum amount possible, on each of the counts.

Kasper Is Denounced

At the end of the hearing City Andrew Doyle said to Kasper:

"You are the worst possible kind of vagrant. You have come here to cause trouble. If any blood is shed on the streets of Nashville it will be you and your kind that are responsible.

"We do not care for your presence here. The people who follow you are the iresponsible, the uneducated, those who have a hard time making a living. We hope we may never see you or your likes again."

The ten arrests made today were all Negroes. They were at the home of one of the Negro children attending an integrated school. Several weapons, including shotguns and pistols, were reported to have been found in their possession.

The police continued to question the three principal suspects in the dynamiting of one of the integrated schools. No further progress in the case was reported.

Negroes Held in Alabama

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 11 —The police here were holding seven Negroes for questioning late this afternoon after seventy-six Negro high school students had been taken from a bus and questioned in rock-throwing incidents.

Seventy-two of the original seventy-six students were released, but the police later went to all-Negro Parker High School and brought back two girls and a boy from those released.

No charges were lodged immediately.

The rock-throwing incident was reported to the police this morning by three white men, who said the missiles had been hurled from a chartered Birmingham Transit Company bus as the vehicle was crossing a viaduct near the downtown section. The bus was headed toward Parker High.

A motorist said he had been hit in the face by two rocks and his car damaged when the stones were tossed from the bus. Another said his car had been hit but he was not struck.

A passenger said Negroes on the students' bus leaned from a window and cursed as the two buses passed each other and a rock struck a window near his seat.

Meanwhile, white high school grounds were quiet as students returned to classes after holding noisy demonstrations yesterday.

Nashville Court Bars Acts to Halt Integration

Star P. 1 Fri. 9-13-57

Federal Order Also Forbids Boycotts Of Mixed Schools

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 13 (AP).—City officials armed Nashville police today with copies of a broad Federal court order prohibiting any interference with school integration here.

Besides banning acts intended to keep Negroes out of racially mixed first - grade classes, the order specifically forbids boycotts of the newly integrated grammar schools. Six schools end their first week of integration today, after two days of surface calm.

United States District Judge William E. Miller issued the temporary order yesterday at the request of city and school officials. They asked for it to bolster a police get-tough policy in dealing with racial flare-ups since 15 Negroes reported for classes along with about 2,000 white first graders Monday. Judge Miller ordered the integration.

The order is similar to one under which northern segregationist John Kasper was twice convicted in last year's integration disturbances at Clinton, Tenn. But attorneys said its legal language was closer to an injunction issued at Hoxie, Ark., in 1954.

Names Kasper

It also names Kasper, the Rev. John McCurio, itinerant preacher from Albuquerque, N. Mex., and 10 Nashville area residents as defendants. In addition, it strikes out broadly at "other persons now or hereafter in active concert with them" — that is, others who conspire with the named defendants.

Judge Miller has ordered a hearing for both sides at 1 p.m. Monday on whether to replace the stop-gap restrainer with a temporary injunction. In the interim, Mayor Ben West said all city policemen will get copies of the restrainer and read them to any crowds gathering "in front of or near the schools."

Kasper, released on $600 appeal bond from the city workhouse yesterday, promptly landed in Davidson County jail where he is held without bond on a State charge of inciting to riot, based on his anti-integration speeches here. He was sent to the workhouse after failing to pay a $200 fine on disorderly conduct, vagrancy and loitering charges.

School Blasted

McCurio, who has preached to Kasper-led segregationist rallies, also was arrested last night on the same city charges. He was held in city jail in lieu of $200 bond. He was booked at the jail as John Mercurio, however, aand police said this was correct spelling of his name.

Whereabouts of the other defendants named in the injunction was not known.

Violence reached a high point here early Tuesday when a dynamite blast damaged Hattie Cotton School, one of the integrated grammar schools. In seeking the injunction officials read 18 affidavits relating to this and various other incidents of violence, threats and intimidation designed to halt or hinder integration.

Among anti-integration activity cited:

Threats to principals and other officials of the integrated schools.

Threats of personal violence to parents "if they send their children to school."

Mass meetings by "an almost uncontrollable mob" of robbed Ku Klux Klansmen on school grounds.

"A boycott being attempted and conducted by threats and intimidation (with) children being held out of schools by reason of the activities of organized agitators."

Attendance Still Low

In the wake of the blast and other incidents, attendance at the remaining five schools fell sharply. It picked up slightly yesterday, but still ran less than 50 per cent normal. Eleven of the Negroes were present at the various schools.

The half-million dollars Hattie Cotton School, built in 1950, won't be restored completely for about 90 days, but classes are expected to resume next Tuesday.

The school board, meanwhile, called off—at the request of Police Chief Douglas E. Hosse—such school activities as picnics which had been scheduled over the week end.

Boycott Meets School Mixing

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UP) — Negro pupils mixed with whites in the first grade here today under protests from segregationists and some white parents began withdrawing their children from school.

News P1

A boycott movement by white parents began shortly after a scattering of six and seven-year-old Negroes were seated in classrooms with white pupils in Nashville's gradual integration plan.

Jackson, Miss

Police patrolled the streets in front of the schools where integrated classes were scheduled for the first time. Pickets paraded nearby, carrying signs reading, "God created segregation."

The pickets and other membrs of crowds that gathered near the schools jeered at the Negro youngsters as they and their parents filed into the previously all-white schools.

At Glenn school in East Nashville, pickets tried to block the progress of Negroes into the school but police quickly broke up the crowd.

Mon 9-9-57

At the Fehr school, a white woman ran inside the building, saying a Negro woman inside had "made a face at me." Five policemen chased after her, brought her out and released her.

About 25 or 30 parents at Glenn withdrew their children from the classes and boycott attempts were in progress at other newly - integrated Nashville schools.

Large crowds were on hand at most of the integrated schools and remained outside even after classes began.

Court Orders No Interfering On Integration

U. S. Judge Restrains Kasper And Others From Opposing Desegregation at Nashville

From Wire Dispatches

Nashville, Sept. 12.—Federal Judge William E. Miller issued a strongly worded temporary court order Thursday forbidding interference with officials carrying out his orders to desegregate Nashville schools.

Nashville City and school officials asked for the temporary restraining order to strengthen their hands against violence, which has accompanied desegregation of first grades here.

The Clinton-type order forbids 12 individuals, and anybody else acting in concert with them, from interfering with school attendance in any manner.

The defendants include Northern segregationist John Kasper, who has already been convicted twice of violating similar injunctions during school-integration violence in Clinton, Tenn., last year.

Uneasy Calm Exists

The move in Federal Court came during the second day of uneasy calm that has replaced the violence accompanying the admission of 15 Negro first-graders to six formerly all-white schools Monday.

The violence reached its peak early Tuesday with a dynamite blast that ripped open one of the newly desegregated schools.

The Negro first-graders were admitted in the first step of a desegregation plan approved by Judge Miller.

Kasper could never have made a telling impact on Nashville if he had not had a favorable "climate of opinion" to work in, Ora Spaid writes on Page 11. President Eisenhower and Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus will confer Saturday, a story on Page 3 says.

The plan made 126 Negroes eligible to enter mixed classes, but most of them elected to transfer to Negro schools. Nashville has 3,500 first-graders, including 2,000 whites, among a total enrollment of about 18,000.

Judge Miller set a hearing for 1 p.m. Monday on whether an injunction should be issued to replace the restraining order.

Affivadits Introduced

Eighteen affidavits relating incidents of violence, threats, and intimidation were read in court in support of the injunction petition presented by School Board lawyers. Attorneys filed sample copies of Kasper handbills and 67 pictures of meetings he addressed here recently.

Judge Miller commented, "The facts as presented here literally cry out for issuance of an injunction at this time."

The order forbids the defendants from "further interfering, by acts of trespass, boycott, or picket, with the free operation of schools within the City of Nashville."

It also forbids them "from in any manner deterring the attendance at school of children" or "threatening or intimidating the school children or their parents" or "school officials or employees."

Forbids Many Actions

And it forbids "any actions of any kind whatsoever which seek to compel by force, intimidation, threats, or violence the violation or defiance of the judgment of this court."

The injunction that Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville issued to back up his Clinton-integration decree resulted in the conviction of six persons besides Kasper on charges of criminal contempt of court.

The other six, who were not named in the injunction, were convicted of conspiring with Kasper to violate it. Kasper was named as a defendant.

Kasper has appealed a one-year sentence he got in his first trial, and new-trial motions are pending against all seven in the second case, which was tried last July.

Mayor Ben West, who joined Assistant School Superintendent W. H. Oliver and City Attorney Raymond Leathers in signing the Federal Court petition here Thursday, has asked that Kasper's $12,000 bond on his first conviction be revoked.

Courier-Journal
Fri. 9-13-57

Other Defendants Listed

Other defendants named in Thursday's petition here included:

The Rev. John F. McCurrio, Albuquerque, N. M., who identifies himself as a nondenominational minister and who has been a frequent speaker at Kasper's segregationist rallies here.

The Rev. Fred Stroud, pastor of Bible Presbyterian Church here, who also has been closely associated with Kasper's activities here.

Vincent A. Crimmons and James Harris, who were arrested here Tuesday and held for questioning in the dynamiting.

Others were Wilson Lee Brown, James Jarrell, Emmett A. Carr, Mrs. Margaret L. Conquest, Mrs. Mary B. Stinson, J. A. Stinson, and Paul McConnell. All but Kasper and McCurrio were listed as Nashville-area residents.

Other Developments Given

Elsewhere in the South:

1. Dorothy Geraldine Counts, 15, daughter of a Negro theology professor, withdrew from Harding High School in Charlotte, N. C. She said she was spit on, pelted with an eraser and a sharp-pointed piece of tin, and was pushed in the halls Wednesday.

2. At Birmingham three Negro boys and two girls admitted tossing rocks at automobiles carrying whites. They were held for court action. Negroes are seeking to enter two Birmingham high schools, but no court order has been issued for their admission.

3. At Alexandria, Va., U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan promised to rule "within the next few days" whether Arlington County schools, in the Washington residential area, must admit Negroes immediately. The State of Virginia is attempting to keep them out under a State pupil-placement law despite Bryan's integration order.

'Rabble-Rouser' Kasper From Workhouse to Jail

News & Observer
Fri. 9-13-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 12 (AP)—After lunching on cabbage and cornbread, roaming segregationist John Kasper of New Jersey was turned out of the City Workhouse today on a $600 appeal bond.

His freedom ended a few moments later, however, behind the County Jail bars where he was held on a state charge of inciting others to riot.

The city and state charges stemmed from Kasper's recent anti-integration activities here.

Bond Posted.

The appeal bond was posted by Porter Freeman of nearby Nolensville, a feed merchant and frequent candidate for local offices. Kasper spent 24 hours in the workhouse after being fined in City Court.

The lanky segregationist spent this morning wiping workhouse bars with a dusting rag. Shortly before noon he wailed:

"I want to see the chief of police. This can't go on."

City officials said they will seek revocation of Kasper's $13,000 appeal bonds on two previous federal court convictions for anti-integration activities last year at Clinton, Tenn., High School.

The self-described "rabble-rouser" went to the workhouse yesterday when he couldn't pay a $200 fine in City Court.

He was fined $50 each on charg of disorderly conduct, offensive conduct, vagrancy and loitering for his part in demonstrations against integration of first-graders in Nashville's elementary schools.

The 27-year-old Kasper was fined $200 on four counts in city court Wednesday afternoon, then sent back to jail to await a hearing on a charge of instigating a riot that would take him into the state court.

MOVE FOR INJUNCTION

A short time later, city officials and the U. S. Attorney announced jointly they will seek an injunction today to keep Kasper or any one else, from interfering with the peaceful integration of some of the city's first-grade classes.

Violators could be prosecuted for contempt of federal court.

At the same time U. S. Attorney Fred Elledge, Jr., said he will ask revocation "with all possible speed" of two bonds on which Kasper was freed following convictions at Knoxville, Tenn.

The injunction process is patterned after that used in the Clinton, Tenn., integration disorders of last year and in the current Little Rock, Ark., controversy.

MAYOR'S POSITION

Mayor Ben West said, after a seven-hour closed-door conference with the Federal attorney and city school leaders, "we intend to see that no one interferes with the education of our children and we ask all law abiding citizens to help us."

The action against Kasper on so many fronts came in the obvious belief that if this glowing ember is stamped hard, the Nashville school integration fire might be put out altogether.

There was some evidence of the truth since a shaky calmness settled over the city after Kasper's arrest Tuesday, in sharp contrast to the violence that marked the beginning of racial integration in seven of the city's elementary schools Monday.

FOUND GUILTY

Vagrancy was one of the counts of which Kasper was found guilty by City Judge Andrew Doyle and given a choice of a $50 fine or 30 and 1/3-days in jail. Similar assessments were levied on two charges of disorderly conduct and one of loitering.

The dark-haired Kasper was then sent back to county jail where he is being held on still another charge of instigating to riot, for which he was arrested early Wednesday.

Judge Doyle snapped at the defendant:

CALLED AGITATOR

"It is such agitators as you who have caused the trouble we are having. I wish we could take you by the seat of your britches at the nape of your neck, and throw you as far out of Nashville as possible."

Kasper, acting as his own attorney in the hour-long hearing in a crowded and very hot courtroom, declared at one point:

"I refuse to stand trial on grounds of my constitutional rights are being violated."

He said he had no time to get a lawyer, nor to study the charges against him, nor to call witnesses.

Meanwhile, a few blocks away, Mayor Ben West and city school officials were closeted with U. S. Dist. Atty. Fred Elledge, Jr. they reportedly were seeking a federal injunction against Kasper to prohibit him from interfering with the integration of about 15 Negroes in six of the city's schools.

Mayor West also was to ask if Kasper's appeal bond from two earlier federal convictions for interfering with school integration at Clinton, Tenn., can be revoked.

OTHERS INVOLVED

The city's crackdown on other persons involved in the violence in Nashville continued swiftly. Judge Doyle found 20 persons, in separate cases, and handed out fines ranging

Kasper Arrested Among Terrorist Groups In City

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — New Jersey segregationist John Kasper was jailed in Nashville Tuesday as city police made wholesale arrests to thwart integration — sparked violence highlighted by the destruction of an elementary school.

Twenty-eight persons were arrested.

Federal Judge William E. Miller, who issued the order for integration of Nashville schools, asked for a conference with the U. S. Attorney and FBI Agents. Persumably the conference would deal with a study of whether pro-segregationist actions in Nashville might constitute interference with the court order.

Atty. Gen. Brownell informed President Eisenhower at his Newport, R. I. vacation headquarters that Miller had asked for the conference, and presidential press secretary James Hagerty said late Tuesday he thought the meeting had already been held.

The Hattie Cotton school, a $500,000 fifteen-room structure, was shattered by a huge blast early Tuesday. It was unusuable. Students of another school, also among the seven which admitted Negro students yesterday for the first time, were evacuated on a bomb scare.

Nashville Mayor Ben West flew back from Hartford, Conn., to take personal charge of the investigation into bombing of the school, and warned Nashville citizens:

"Lawlessness must go. Law and order must prevail, or one's life will be safe."

Kasper was booked on two counts of disorderly conduct, growing out of a pro-segregation rally he held in downtown Nashville Monday and for his visits to talk to crowds gathered at integrating schools Tuesday. He was also charged with vagrancy and loitering.

New crowds gathered at each of the six integrated schools which operated Tuesday and police who set up barricades to keep paths near school buildings clear for students arrested 28 persons, mostly on disorderly conduct charges.

Those arrested, including a 16-year old boy, were picked up on suspicion in the Cotton scshool bombing. Three of the men were arrested from one auto, which bore the sign "K.K.K." and in which police found blackjacks, mallets and lead wire which could be used to discharge explosives.

BLAMED GOV. CLEMENT

John Kasper, blamed by Gov. Frank Clement for roits which accompanied integration of the high school at Clinton, Tenn., last fall was taken into custody as he sat quietly in Nashville's city court. police chief Douglas Hosse made the arrest.

Kasper was hustled into an office at police headquarters, presumably for questioning.

BOMB WRECKS INTEGRATED SCHOOL: Nashville detectives inspect the Hattie Cotton School, which was destroyed by dynamite. The school was one of six in the city attended by both Negro and white first graders on Monday.

Segregationist Kasper Silent On Bomb Charge

Daily News Jackson, Miss. Sun. 9-15-57

By BENNO ISAACS

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 14—(INS) Segregationist— John Kasper clammed up for the first time in his race-baiting career today after an informant, seized by the FBI, reported he and Kasper secreted dynamite three days before an explosion shattered the Hattie Cotton school.

The New Jersey-born racist who once boasted, "I've never been afraid to talk," sat silently in a county jailhouse as Nashville Police Chief Douglas Hosse declared: "We are on the threshold of cracking the dynamite case wide open."

Hosse questioned the informant — Charles Reed — in the Tuesday bombing of the $500,000 new-ly-integrated elementary school. Reed was turned over by FBI agents Friday who were quoted by police as saying the witness "might crack the five-day-old dynamite dilemma."

Reed related, authorities said, that Kasper stored dynamite in an old vacant building. But the explosives later disappeared. No charges have been filed.

ARRESTED TWICE

Kasper was arrested twice the day of the dynamiting, released on bond, and picked up by county lawmen who had him charged and indicted for "inciting to riot."

A federal court order, issued by Judge William Miller, restrained Kasper, 11 other named persons and "their agents" from participation in disturbance of the peaceful integration of the city's first-grade classes.

Kasper failed to meet a $2,500 bond on the inciting to riot charge, and consequently, remains in jail.

The FBI presented Reed to police Friday, and advised the city officials the witness "might crack the five day-old dynamite dilemma."

Police Chief Douglas Hosse agreed, and said: "We are on the threshold of cracking the dynamite case wide open."

Chief Hosse added however, that Reed "just isn't telling everything he knows." Reed has only fingered Kasper, while police still have six other suspects in the school dynamiting.

71% of Nashville Children in Integrated Classes Kept Home—Kasper Booked

New York

By ROBERT ALDEN

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 10 — An explosion early today heavily damaged a $500,000 newly integrated school here. The Hattie Cotton grammar school was empty at the time of the blast.

One Negro child had reported for a class yesterday at the opening session of the school year along with 388 white children. Today their school was a ruin. Walls and windows were smashed. Splintered desks, torn books and broken blackboard slate lay scattered in the rubble.

Mothers and teachers wept as they viewed the debris. Police Chief Douglas Hosse said that there was no question but that the blast was connected with the racial strife here because of the integration of schools.

The blast galvanized the police into action. Twenty-five or more persons, almost all of them white, were arrested, five in connection with the school bombing. Frederick John Kasper, segregationist leader, who has advocated violence in speaking to crowds, was among those arrested.

Because of the bombing and the physical clashes around the schools yesterday fear has gripped this city. Seventy-one per cent of the pupils in the six desegrated schools were not in their classrooms today.

Times 9-11-57

Within seven hours of the blast the police had three primary and two secondary suspects. The three principal suspects were alleged to have had detonating wire in a car in which they had been riding. The police also said they had several weapons, including bolo knives, a weighted club and two wooden mallets. They are being held in $25,000 bail each.

The three were said to have been driving around from place to place in Nashville since the integration crisis began. Their car is adorned with Ku Klux Klan signs and a picture of a Negro boy kissing a white girl.

The schools resembled beleaguered fortresses. The police blocked off the crowds so that they could not approach the entrances to the schools. Whenever there was defiance, motorized squads of police stationed at headquarters rushed to the scene and arrests were quickly made.

Mayor Ben West said that law and order must prevail here or no one's life would be safe.

"Every decent citizen abhors violence" Mayor West said. "Every decent citizen wants law and good order. The one who encourages fanaticism endangers life."

Police Chief Gives Warning

The Nashville police seemed determined that Federal intervention would not be necessary in this city. Chief Hosse issued the warning that "those who do not intend to obey the law had better get out of town."

His police today kept the shouting and screaming crowds a block or more from school entrances. Streets in school areas were blocked so that traffic could not pass through.

Those who defied the police—men or women—were put in police vehicles and driven away.

When one woman protested the actions of the police one policeman explained:

"Look, lady, they've taken knives, blackjacks and almost every kind of weapon from women at one time or another. When they kill you they kill you as dead as anyone else."

The same policeman explained to the crowd, neighbors of his:

"Somebody has got to enforce the law. If we are not able to do it Federal troops will. It might as well be us."

Fred Elledge Jr., United States Attorney here, said that at the present he saw no grounds for Federal intervention. He said that the Nashville police were giving protection to the Negro children going to school and only if they failed would Federal action be proper.

However, because of the bombing of Hattie Cotton school parents kept their children out of school today. In all, 1,081 children, about ten of them Negro, attended the integrated schools today, while 3,710 stayed home on on the sidewalks near the schools.

William A. Bass, school superintendent, said that in all but one school fear was the principal factor in keeping the children at home. Prejudice in the mixing of the races in the schools was only a secondary factor in the case of most of the parents who kept their children at home, he said.

Much of the blame for the violence stirred here has been pinned by local citizens on Kasper. He already has been convicted twice of contempt of Federal courts in integration cases. His convictions are being appealed.

In Nashville he has been speaking nightly to crowds. He has told them that it might be in order for them to use shotguns, dynamite or hanging ropes to keep their schools from being integrated.

Kasper, who comes from New Jersey, was booked on charges of vagrancy, loitering, disorderly conduct and offensive conduct.

On each charge he posted a $500 bail bond. But as he set his foot on the sidewalk again as a free man the police promptly arrested him for a parking violation. He had to post a fifth $500 bond.

When he came out of police headquarters this time he hurried away in the car of a friend without comment.

At the home of one of the secondary suspects a large amount of detonating wire was said to have been found. These two are being held in $250 bail each.

The police have been questioning the five almost continuously today.

The Hattie Cotton School was seven years old, but newly improved.

Mr. Bass said that from now on the schools would be under twenty-four-hour police guard.

"It will take a generation to get over what has happened here this morning," the 69-year-old superintendent said. "I was in World War I and I never saw any more terrible destruction. And now this had to happen—and in Nashville."

The explosive, probably dynamite, had been placed against one wall of the school building. It blew in that side of the building and did widespread destruction all through the structure. The building may be put in use again but will require extensive repairs.

The United States Attorney here said that if the explosive had been stolen it was probably taken from a local contractor not a Federal agency. The Federal Government could not intervene on those grounds, he said.

12 Are Named As Trouble-Makers In Integration Issue

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 9-13-57

By ROBERT H. DENLEY

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — John Kasper and 11 other persons, including two preachers and a Ku Klux Klan leader, were barred by a federal court order Thursday from interfering with peaceful de-segregation of Nashville schools.

P. 1

Dist. Judge William E. Miller issued the temporary order, on petition of the city, with the comment: "I am clearly of the opinion the facts literally cry out for issuance of an injunction."

He warned that the court has not armed itself with power to protect its original de-segregation order under which a handful of Negro pupils began attending previously all-white first grade classes this week.

BASIC TROUBLE-MAKERS

The order made clear that the city considered the 12 persons named as being the basic trouble-makers in integration violence, but it also applies to "others unknown."

Kasper, the New Jersey-born segregationist who pops up regularly throughout the south to preach racial separation, was busy cleaning cells in the city workhouse as the petition was presented across town in federal court.

Named with him in the petition were the Rev. Fred Stroud, a Nashville Presbyterian who has urged a boycott of integrated schools and who marched in school picket lines Monday, and the Rev. John F. Mercurio, an itinerant preacher whose home was given as Alberquerque, N. M.

NASHILLE AREA

Also listed was Emmett A. Carr, who attempted to revive the K. K. K. in the Nashville area after the city made plans for de-segregation earlier this year.

Atty. Edwin H. Hunt asked Judge Miller to issue the injunction "for the purpose of maintaining law and order and safeguarding the education of the city of Nashville."

The petition pointed out that attendance at the integrated schools has dropped "alarming and abruptly," and expressed a belief that this was caused by threatening telephone calls to parents.

School officials said they wanted the 12 persons named "and others unknown" barred from trespassing on school grounds or from picketing them, from threatening or intimidating parents and teachers and from taking "any action whatsoever to seek, force or impel violation," of the court's original order to de-segregate the schools.

Presented as evidence, along with the petition, were 18 affidavits from school principals and police officers and 67 photographs of the riotous crowds that blockaded the schools Monday and Tuesday.

Also named specifically in the petition were Vincent A. Clemmons, Wilson Lee Brown, James Carroll, Margaret L. Conquest, Mrs. Mary Stinson, J. A. Stinson, James Harris and Paul McConnell.

Crimmons and Harris are among the six persons arrested in connection with the bombing of one of the integrated schools earlier this year.

Kasper, this afternoon was released from the city workhouse on a $600 appeal bond, but was immediately taken in custody by county officials on a charge of inciting to riot.

The grand jury is expected to make a presentment concerning that charge tomorrow.

A feed merchant, Porter Freeman, posted the bond which released Kasper from the workhouse where he had spent the day on cleanup assignment. He had been confined there in lieu of paying fines of $200 for vagrancy, loitering and disorderly conduct.

The New Jersy-born segregationist, who has popped up regularly in the south to preach racial separation, has already twice run afoulof federal laws.

Nashville School Crisis Laid To Segregationist

Wash. Post Sat. 9-14-57 Birmingham, Ala.

By ROBERT H. DENLEY

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Nashville officials, supported by federal officers, moved swiftly Wednesday to wipe race agitator John Kasper out of the city's turbulent school integration picture.

The 27-year-old Kasper was fined $200 on four counts in city court Wednesday afternoon, then sent back to jail to await a hearing on a charge of instigating a riot that would take him into the state court.

MOVE FOR INJUNCTION

A short time later, city officials and the U. S. Attorney announced jointly they will seek an injunction today to keep Kasper or any one else, from interfering with the peaceful integration of some of the city's first-grade classes.

Violators could be prosecuted for contempt of federal court.

At the same time, U. S. Attorney Fred Elledge, Jr., said he will ask revocation "with all possible speed" of two bonds on which Kasper was freed following convictions at Knoxville, Tenn.

The injunction process is patterned after that used in the Clinton, Tenn., integration disorders of last year and in the current Little Rock, Ark., controversy.

Nashville violence struck triple blow

News Sept 13 Thu 9-13-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 13—(AP)—Federal and state authorities struck a triple blow today at violence which disrupted the start of public school integration here this week. B'ham, Ala.

The Justice Department announced in Washington it is turning over to local authorities information of "possible significance" gathered by the FBI in the Tuesday dynamiting of $500,000 Hattie Cotton School.

Another arm of the Justice Department, the U. S. District Court, clamped on a broad court order against further violence.

SIMULTANEOUSLY, the Davidson County Grand Jury indicted Segregationist John Kasper on a charge of inciting others to riot. The Kasper indictment was based on statements he had made at various pro-segregation meetings here.

The FBI here gave no further details immediately of its activities in the case.

Criminal Judge Chester K Hart of Davidson County (Nashville) set Kasper's bond at $2500 and an attorney said he would attempt to post it later.

MONTAGUE S. ROSS, Nashville lawyer, said he had been employed tentatively to represent Kasper, who was brought into court from County Jail, where he has been held since late yesterday.

He spent the previous 24 hours behind bars at the City Workhouse while trying to raise an appeal bond from fines of $200 in four misdemeanor cases.

If convicted Kasper faces possible County Workhouse sentence of 11 months and 29 days, and a $1000 fine.

HE AND NINE OTHERS were notified officially this morning of a district federal court order against interfering with orderly integration of first grade classes. Two others could not be located.

Kasper, released on $600 appeal bond from the city workhouse yesterday, promptly landed in Davidson County Jail where he is held without bond on a state charge of inciting to riot, based on his anti-integration speeches here. He was sent to the workohuse after failing to pay a $200 fine on disorderly conduct, vagrancy and loitering charges.

WHEREABOUTS OF THE OTHER defendants named in the injunction was not known.

Violence reached a high point here early Tuesday when a dynamite blast damaged Hattie Cotton School, one of the integrated grammar schools. In seeking the injunction, officials read 18 affidavits relating to this and various other incidents of violence, threats and intimidation designed to halt or hinder integration.

Among anti-integration activity cited:

—Threats to principals and other officials of the integrated schools.

—Threats of personal violence to parents "if they send their children to school."

—Mass meetings by "an almost uncontrollable mob" of robbed Ku Klux Klansmen on school grounds.

FBI Enters Blast Probe At Nashville

Post-Herald Sat 9-14-57 B'ham, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 13 (U.P.)—The FBI moved in today on the investigation of the dynamiting of an integrated school and promptly delivered to local authorities a possible witness in the case.

At the same time, the Davidson County Grand Jury indicted roaming Segregationist John Kasper on charges of inciting a riot.

Under the shield of a U. S. District Court injunction against further interference with integration, children began drifting back to classes in five schools where a total of 11 Negroes were on hand.

Integration had been interrupted at a sixth school, where the transfer papers of three Negroes were ruled improper, and at a seventh, Hattie Cotton, which was wrecked by dynamite early last Tuesday.

Absenteeism by white children still was heavy, however, School officials believed because this was the last school day of the week many parents would start their youngsters out afresh on Monday.

Attorney Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr., announced in Washington that the FBI was supplying Nashville officials with information of "possible significance" about the Hattie Cotton blast. It was the first formal disclosure that the FBI was studying the sabotage of the $500,000 school.

A short time later, a man was hustled into Nashville police headquarters for questioning. Police Chief Douglas Hosse disclosed that the man had been picked up by the FBI in Memphis and brought here by federal agents. His name was not disclosed.

As a concerted crackdown by local and federal authorities stamped out disorders in Nashville, the South's integration picture elsewhere showed:

—ARKANSAS Gov. Orval Faubus was leaving Little Rock by plane for Newport, R. I., and his conference with President Eisenhower on the integration stalemate in the Arkansas capital. The discussion will be held at 9 a.m. (EDT) tomorrow.

—DOROTHY COUNTS, 15, Negro, had withdrawn from Harding High School at Charlotte, N. C., saying jibes and threats by white classmates made her life there unbearable. Post-Herald

—THE BLOUNT COUNTY school board at Maryville, Tenn., 15 miles south of Knoxville, voted to study a school integration proposal by a Negro group. Maryville is about 25 miles from Clinton, Tenn., where integration is in its second year.

Bond for Kasper, who has been in Nashville jails most of the week, was set at $2500 on the inciting to riot charge.

The grand jury indicted Kasper by "presentment" rather than waiting for him to be bound over from General Sessions Court, thus putting his case into Criminal Circuit Court where he could draw a heavier penalty.

[illegible] at Nashville schools today were incomplete, it appeared that about half of the 2038 enrollment of the five integrated schools were present.

F.B.I., U. S. Court, Grand Jury Act To Halt Nashville Trouble

Sat. 9-14-57 By The Associated Press

Nashville, Sept. 13.—State and federal authorities moved in from three directions Friday on troublemakers responsible for school-integration disorders here.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States District Court, and the Davidson County (Nashville) grand jury all acted to prevent a repetition of the violence that erupted with this week's start toward integration of Nashville's elementary schools.

Attorney General Brownell announced in Washington the F.B.I. is turning over to authorities here information of "possible significance" in Tuesday's dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton Elementary School.

Within minutes after Brownell's announcement, F.B.I. agents here turned over to police an unidentified man who "might have a bearing" on the dynamiting.

Marshals Serve Papers

U. S. marshals served papers on 10 of 12 individuals named in an order Thursday by Federal Judge William E. Miller restraining further interference with peaceful integration of first-graders in City schools. Two of those named could not be located.

The County grand jury indicted Northern segregationist John Kasper for inciting to riot.

A profile on Judge Miller is on Page 7, Section 2.

Kasper, already fined $200 on misdemeanor charges for his activities here, remained in jail in default of $2,500 bond.

These developments climaxed a week of riotous anti-integration demonstrations. A total of 39 persons — 13 Negroes and 26 whites—was arrested in and around the six elementary schools where Negro children were enrolled for the first time.

Attendance Increases

Acting on orders of Judge Miller, mixed first-grade classes started Monday. Under the approved plan, 126 Negroes were eligible to attend integrated classes, but all except 12 elected to transfer to Negro schools.

Nashville has approximately 3,500 first-graders in all, including about 2,000 whites.

White attendance, which fell off as much as 70 per cent at the elementary schools earlier in the week, showed a continuing increase Friday. All 12 Negro first-graders were in the mixed schools Friday, except one enrolled at badly damaged Hattie Cotton school. Hattie Cotton will resume classes next week.

Conviction on the grand-jury charge returned Friday could put Kasper away for 11 months and 29 days and subject him to a $1,000 fine. The five-page indictment charges him with advocating force and violence to prevent integration.

Sending Affidavits

District Attorney Fred Elledge said he was sending several affidavits on Kasper's Nashville activities to federal authorities at Knoxville, where he has been twice convicted for pro-segregation activity at Clinton, Tenn., High School last year.

Elledge's action indicated federal authorities are considering revoking Kasper's appeal bonds in those cases.

The man turned over to police by the F.B.I. appeared voluntarily at the F.B.I. offices Thursday night and said he had some information about the dynamiting. Police Chief D. E. Hosse said it was being checked out.

Police emphasized the man had not been charged. It was understood, however, that he is a known associate of Kasper and had been sought ever since the blast.

McCurrio Tongue-Lashed

Six others picked up for questioning the day after the dynamiting are still in custody.

John McCurrio, also listed as John Mercurio, an itinerant preacher among the 12 listed in Judge Miller's restraining order, was fined $200 on misdemeanor charges in City Court Friday afternoon.

Judge Andrew Doyle, who sent Kasper to the workhouse Wednesday, tongue-lashed McCurrio, who says he joined with Kasper in Washington last year.

"We have reached another milestone in this trouble," Doyle said in fining McCurrio. "The head of the horse went into the workhouse day before yesterday and it looks like the tail is going to follow."

Hosse said FBI chief agent Julius M. Lopez, Jr., in Memphis had advised him the man had "some information" about the dynamiting.

CHARLOTTE CASE

As a concerted crackdown by local and federal authorities stamped out disorders in Nashville, the South's integration picture elsewhere showed:

Dorothy Counts, 15, Negro, had withdrawn from Harding High School at Charlotte, N.C., saying that the jibes and threats of white classmates made her life there unbearable.

The Blount County School Board at Maryville, Tenn., 15 miles south of Knoxville, voted to study a school integration proposal by a Negro group. Maryville is about 25 miles from Clinton, Tenn., where integration is in its second year.

$2,500 BOND

Bond for Kasper, who has been in Nashville jails most of the week, was set at $2,500 on the inciting to riot charge.

The grand jury indicted Kasper by "presentment" rather than waiting for him to be bound over from General Sessions Court, thus putting his case into Criminal Circuit Court where he could draw a heavier penalty.

The skinny, New Jersey-born wanderer now has a long list of items to settle in the state of Tennessee. He has twice been convicted of violating a federal injunction, similar to the one issued here yesterday, covering the integration of Clinton High School. He is appealing a $200 city fine levied this week in Nashville and now faces the riot count in Circuit Court. He was acquitted of a riot charge that grew out of the Clinton disorders a year ago.

"SCANDALOUS REMARKS"

Today's indictment charged that Kasper "did suggest and call for violence to prevent enrollment of . . . colored children."

It said he made defamatory remarks against public officials, scandalous remarks against citizens who held opposite views and incited 32 citizens to riot that the jury knew of, plus "hundreds of others unknown to your grand jury."

Although figures on attendance at Nashville schools today were incomplete, it appeared that about half of the 2,038 enrollment of the five integrated schools was present.

A few policemen still patrolled the schools but reported the city appeared to be "quieter than it has been all summer."

In Easton, Md., a seven-foot fuse fizzled out today six inches from 10 sticks of dynamite in front of the home of two Negro boys who attend a newly integrated primary school.

Segregationist Kasper Indicted On Riot Charges

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Sat. 9-14-57

By ROBERT H. DENLEY

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — The FBI turned over to Nashville police Friday another suspect in the bombing of one of the city's elementary schools which was integrated this week.

This was the first public disclosure of FBI activity in the week of turbulence and violence.

First mention of the Federal investigative body's work came when Julius M. Lopez, special FBI agent in charge of the Memphis, Tenn., office, announced in Nashville that 'information of possible significance' was being turned over to local police.

NASHVILLE RESIDENT

Identity of the suspect was not made known immediately, although police chief Douglas Hosse in confirming that the man had been turned over to city detectives yesterday afternoon, said he was a Nashville resident.

Six other persons were arrested earlier in the week by city police in connection with the dynamiting.

Earlier, John Kasper, the New Jersey-born segregationist, was indicted by the Davidson County grand jury on a charge of inciting to riot. Bond was set at $2,500. For the lanky agitator who has been in one Nashville jail or another since Tuesday night.

The true bill said that Kasper "unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, intentionally and premeditatedly did incite to riot citizens of Nashville."

$1,000 FINE

The charge carries a maximum penalty of a $1,000 fine, or eleven months and 29 days in jail. Kasper has already been convicted of four city charges and given his choice of $200 in fines or 33 1/3 days in jail. He is appealing that conviction.

Daily World Atlanta Ga.

The city's five integrated elementary schools closed out the first week of the school term on a much quieter note than they had started.

Special police detachments were reduced at the schools and barricades, which had been used to keep crowds away, were removed. Police who had been on 12-hour shifts all week went back to normal working hours.

Sat. 9-14-57

Attendance at the integrated schools was still far below normal, but had increased over preceding days.

City school Supt. W. E. Bass said: "By next week, I believe we'll be in high gear again."

Bass expressed the belief that the federal court injunction would alleviate fears of violence, which he credited with keeping many white students at home.

The Hattie Cotton School, closed down by the dynamite blast which was the worst incident of the week, was expected to reopen next Tuesday, although repairs on part of the half-a-million dollar building will be continuing for some time.

The New Jersey-born segregationist is in Davidson County Jail here on a state charge of inciting to riot, based on a series of speeches he made recently in Nashville.

Kasper has declined all comment on information which Police Chief Douglas Hosse said was related to him by an FBI informant that the informant and Kasper hid some dynamite three days before an explosion damaged Hattie Cotton, one of six integrated schools, last Tuesday.

IN A NATIONAL television interview yesterday ("Face the Nation," CBS) Gov. Frank Clement told interviewers the blast, marking the peak of violence last week, did more to hasten race mixing here than any integration.

"It shocked the conscience of this city as I never knew anything else to shock its conscience. It put decent people who wanted to oppose integration in a position where they would not do so."

THE GOVERNOR, who said he personally favors segregation, added that he would not hesitate to call out the National Guard if local law enforcement breaks down in the state. But, he said, it has not broken down here and he has no intention of intervening in Nashville as he did at Clinton last Fall.

Under questioning, he said he resented Northern implications that race relations are wholly a Southern problem, and cited examples of racial violence in Illinois, Detroit and Levittown, Pa.

"If we are going to wash the dirty linen," the governor asserted, "let's lay aside the hypocrisy and all go to the laundry together."

Nashville Lets Schools out: Tension eases

News p. 1 Atlanta Ga.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 16—(AP)—Nashville school children, both white and Negro, took off today for a holiday at the state fair after a week of violence and tension at newly-integrated schools.

School officials expect to resume classes with desegregated first grades tomorrow without trouble, and police planned to drop some of their emergency precautions at the schools.

THE ONLY BIG reminder of last week's disorders, in addition to a hole blasted in the side of Hattie Cotton School, was today's scheduled federal court hearing on whether an order banning interference with desegregation should be continued.

U. S. Dist. Judge William E. Miller ordered Segregationist John Kasper and 11 other defendants to show why the restrainer shouldn't be continued.

Seek Court Order To Halt Interference

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UP) — Federal and city officials today worked on getting a federal court injunction to halt interference with first grade integration in Nashville schools.

U.S. District Attorney Fred Elledge Jr. joined Mayor Ben West in seeking government aid in stopping violence that included the bombing of a previously all-white school which has been integrated.

The injunction was expected to be granted today by Federal Judge William Miller, West said.

West also announced he will ask federal authorities to revoke segregation leader John Kasper's bond in previous convictions for contempt in connection with integration disorders last year in Clinton, Tenn.

Kasper was arrested and locked up in the city workhouse Wednesday after city Judge Andrew Doyle found him guilty on five counts concerning disorders that have kept Nashville in turmoil since Monday.

PHONE CALLS

Officers at the workhouse reported Kasper received several anonymous long - distance calls Wednesday night but was not permitted to answer them.

There was a marked decrease in segregationist activity around the integrated Nashville schools Wednesday, but school attendance was down more than one-half.

"I wish we had enough police in Nashville to take you by the seat of the pants and throw you out of town," City Judge Doyle told Kasper after finding him guilty of crowd-baiting.

Kasper wouldn't have gone free even if he had paid the fine. Bond still has not been allowed on a breach of the peace charge filed against him by Davidson County.

FEDERAL AID

Word of the petition for injunction came from a conference between Elledge and city officials. Elledge said after the meeting he "advised Mayor West that the department of Justice is prepared to give any proper assistance to the federal court if requested to do so."

Three Negroes and three whites also were convicted Wednesday on weapons charges filed by city police in a crackdown on demonstrators, and fines totaling $300 were levied. Through Wednesday 34 persons had been arrested.

Less than half of the 2,000 enrolled showed up Wednesday at the six integrated schools, and of the 19 Negroes who attended Monday, only seven were in school. Six of the 19 have transferred back to Negro schools.

any crowd gathered outside a school. That would make them subject to Federal law, Mayor West said, and they could be brought before Judge Miller if they defied the order.

Mayor West told the school board that it was clear that Judge Miller would not be lenient with anyone who defied the order.

Meanwhile, the integrated schools remained under heavy police guard. Attendance although slightly improved was still less than 50 per cent of normal. Telephone threats to parents warning them against sending their children to school were believed to be the principal factor keeping the children at home.

U. S. Court Orders Curb On Agitators in Nashville

By ROBERT ALDEN
Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 12—The Federal District Court here issued today a restraining order effective immediately aimed at the principal agitators and their followers who have been fighting integration of Nashville schools by threat and violence.

A petition signed by Mayor Ben West and the city school board and supported by eighteen affidavits and sixty-seven photographs painted a dark picture of chaos and fear created by segregationist rabble rousers here.

After reviewing the evidence, Federal Judge William E. Miller said that "the facts literally cry out for injunctive relief." The only discussion he held following the hearing of the evidence with the petitioning attorneys was to determine whether they were requesting broad enough restraining powers against those causing the unrest in Nashville.

Mayor West, at a meeting with the school board following the issuance of the order, said that every city policeman would be supplied a copy of the Federal order and would read it to agitators from taking any action of any kind that seeks to compel by "force, intimidation, threats or violence" the defiance of the Federal court judgment abolishing compulsory segregation in the first grade of Nashville's elementary school.

A hearing for the granting of a temporary injunction will be hel din Federal court on Monday. The present restraining order remains in effect until a temporary or permanent injunction is issued or denied.

The petition presented today and its supporting affidavits gave a grim picture of conditions in the Nashville schools since partial integration began here on Monday.

It said that at all the integrated schools there had been threatening crowds, organized boycotts, acts of violence and picket lines.

"At the schools affected by such unlawful activities," the petition read, "crowds of persons in some instances numbering hundreds congregated upon the school grounds or near the entrances and walkways, molesting students and especially threatening the Negro students and their parents when they sought to enter or leave the schools."

The petition said that white people were urged in defiance of a state compulsory attendance law to withdraw their children from school and that "abusive language had been used and continues to be used toward the principal and teachers of the schools, toward the pupils" and toward the parents who accompany their children to and from school.

Acts of Violence isclosed

Mayor West and the school board told the court that there had been acts of physical violence committed by persons in the crowds assembled outside the schools. It informed the Monday night of the Hattie Cotton Elementary School.

"The attendance at the Nashville schools where Negro pupils have been enrolled for the first time has declined alarmingly and abruptly," the petition said.

It pointed out that Kasper and the other agitators had made it clear that it was their purpose "to disorganize, disrupt and close down the schools of Nashville in every case where white pupils and Negro pupils are enrolled in the same school."

The eighteen affidavits supporting the petition came from city detectives, uniformed policemen and school principals.

The affidavits gave specific instances of threats of death and other violence made by the agitators and of the fear the threats had struck in the hearts of parents who wanted to send their children to school.

Kasper, 11 Others Ordered to Leave Integration Alone

NASHVILLE, Sept. 12 (U.P.)—A Federal judge issued an order today restraining 12 persons and any others who might act with them from interfering with the orderly integration of seven grammar schools in Nashville.

Heading the list of those restrained was segregationist John Kasper, already in jail here and twice convicted of violating a similar federal court order at Clinton, Tenn.

U. S. District Judge William E. Miller, the same judge who ordered integration here, signed the temporary restrainer at the request of Mayor Ben West, Assistant School Supt. W. H. Oliver and City Attorney Raymond Leathers.

"The facts literally cry out for relief." Miller said in issuing the order. It becomes effective at once. He set 1 p. m. Monday as the hour for a hearing on a temporary injunction which could be made permanent in later proceedings.

Besides Kasper, the restrainer named the Rev. Fred Stroud, John F. Mercurio, Wilson Lee Brown, James Jarrell, Emmett A. Carr, Vincent A. Crimmons, Margaret L. Conquest, Mary B. Stinson, J. A. Stinson, James Varris and Paul McConnell.

Stroud is segregationist pastor of a Nashville church and Mercurio is a West coast minister and associate of Kasper who pinchhit for the imprisoned agitator at a rally last night.

From 18 affidavits and 67 photographs or other items of evidence the names of the others were selected as having been active in the disorders around the seven schools.

One of the schools was blown up by dynamiters early last Tuesday after it admitted one Negro with 390 whites. One of those named in the restrainer, Crimmons, was arrested later for possession of blasting equipment. He was fined in city court and awaits state charges.

The restrainer also applies to "other persons in active concert of participation with (those named) in seeking to disrupt the orderly first grade desegregation."

They were restrained from "in any manner deterring the attendance at school of children in Nashville." This included acts of trespass, boycott or picket, threatening the children or their parents, the Board of Education, the school superintendents, principals, teachers and even school janitors.

Nashville schools were integrated in the first grade only Monday in partial compliance with Miller's earlier order. The School Board must present him with a full integration plan Dec. 31. Those restrained will have an opportunity Monday to say why they should not be enjoined.

Segregation leaders spoke of "quiet resistance" replacing crowd action in the integration crisis and hundreds of white parents kept their children out of school for the third straight day of a boycott.

At only one schools, the Clemons school, did integration appear to be working out in a normal pattern. Of the 510 children enrolled, 505 were present today, including one Negro. Elsewhere attendance was off from 50 to 80 per cent. A total of 11 of the 19 Negroes who enrolled Monday were present in class. Three had transferred back to Negro schools.

U. S. Plans Peace Order In Nashville

Post-Herald Birm, Ala. Thurs. 9-12-57

Uneasy Quiet Sets In; Kasper Goes To City Workhouse

NASHVILLE, Sept. 11 (AP) — Federal and city officials moved today to clamp a federally-enforced peace in Nashville's integration situation similar to the one which eventually halted disorders in Clinton.

A federal court injunction against any persons interfering with peaceful desegregation of Nashville first graders was planned even as city court action sent John Kasper to the workhouse.

Mayor Ben West also asked U. S. Dist. Atty. Fred Elledge Jr., to ask revocation of Kasper's appeal bond in his first contempt of court conviction in the Clinton case. This would mean Kasper would go to the federal penitentiary to serve a one-year sentence imposed by Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville.

Mayor West announced, after an all-day meeting in Judge Elledge's office, that an all-inclusive injunction similar to that Kasper was convicted of violating in Clinton would be asked from Federal Judge William E. Miller.

Meanwhile, an uneasy peace already had settled on the city as hard-boiled police kept all demonstrators away from the six affected grammar schools.

Officers patrolling the school desegregation front have been quick to make arrests and added 11 to their total today, as they cracked down on violence which included the midnight blasting of one grammar school Tuesday.

Kasper was sent to the workhouse after he failed to raise a $200 fine for his part in intergration demonstrations here. He was fined $50 on each of four city charges. They included vagrancy, loitering, disorderly conduct and offensive conduct.

City Judge Andrew Doyle told Kasper, "If I had the authority, I would instruct police to take you by the seat of the britches and the nape of your neck and throw you out of town."

Kasper still faces state charges of inciting to riot. He is under $25,000 bond on these charges.

The disorders began Monday morning when Nashville took its first step toward desegregation under Judge Miller's orders by opening 13 schools to 126 Negro first graders. Only 15 have been enrolled in mixed classes. Ten were in school today.

In addition to the city and federal actions, the Davidson County Grand Jury began an investigation of Tuesday's dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton School, where one Negro child was admitted Monday.

Police have arrested a total of 39 persons — 26 whites and 13 Negroes — since the pre-dawn blast ripped the building.

Three white men, arrested for questioning in the dynamiting, were fined the maximum $50 in city court today on charges of disorderly conduct. They are still being held under $25,000 bond each for grand jury action on state charges of unlawful possession of weapons.

They are Venson Albert Crimmons, 32, J. B. Blackwell, 42, and James R. Harris, 47.

Kasper, arrested here for the third time in 12 hours, was held in jail without bond for a preliminary hearing.

He was charged with inciting to riot in inflammatory speeches here earlier in the week.

School authorities, said overall attendance picked up slightly today, as pistol-toting policemen kept curiosity-seekers and demonstrators away from school grounds. Roadblocks kept outsiders at least a block away from each of the integrated schools.

Despite the outward calm following the arrests, police said they are investigating rumors of continuing threats to several white parents whose children are enrolled in integrated schools.

Officers said some parents reported telephone threats that their homes would be bombed unless the youngsters are kept home.

Associated Press

Thanks to mild weather, students of Hattie Cotton school in Nashville are able to study outside while the school building undergoes repairs after being dynamited Tuesday. Officials hope the building can be used again by Sept. 17.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE
GOVERNOR FRANK CLEMENT

Says Governor Clement

Bombing to Hasten Integration

News & Observer
Raleigh N.C.

By BILL RAWLINS

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 15 (AP) —Gov. Frank Clement said today the bombing of a grammar school here last week did more than any integrationist to hasten race mixing in Nashville schools. P. 2

Clement, who had refused any comment on Nashville's violent school situation all last week, told questioners on a national CBS-TV program—"Face the Nation"—he won't hesitate to call out the National Guard if local law enforcement breaks down.

Mon. 9-16-57

It has not broken down in Nashville, he said, and he has no intention of intervening here as he did in Clinton, Tenn., a year ago.

On the bombing of the grammar school last Tuesday, Clement declared: "No one who favors integration could do as much to bring about integration as the man who set off that dynamite at Hattie Cotton School. . . .

"It shocked the conscience of this city as I've never known anything else to shock its conscience. It put decent people who wanted to oppose integration in a positionso they would not."

Clement dodged questions about Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus ordering National Guardsmen to keep Negroes out of Little Rock's Central High School despite a federal court order for desegregation.

Pressed for comment on Faubus' action, Clement said: "I think it would be highly indiscreet for the governor of a neighboring state to comment on the action of the governor of Arkansas." He did say, however, that he thought racial violence over integration has hurt the South's quest for new industries.

Reminded of President Eisenhower's assertion that patience was needed in dealing with civil rights problems. Clement declared: "I certainly do feel that patience is the answer, but I think from time to time we should ask ourselves whether we are using patience as a substitute for indecision."

Asked if he felt the President was undecided, he answered: "tonight, I see no reason to offer any criticism of the President of the United States. If the shoe fits, we'll just have to let everybody wear it (sic)."

Clement said he personally favors segregation and believed most National Guard and police officers do also.

He evaded comment to repeated questions about his political ambitions. The governor, keynote speaker at last year's Democratic national convention, is not eligible to succeed himself as governor in 1958. He has been mentioned as a possible candidate for a Senate seat.

"I am not running for any office; neither am I running away from any," Clement said.

Clement's TV appearance came in the midst of a weekend calm on Nashville's school integration front. Classes will not resume until Tuesday because tomorrow is Students' Day at the State Fair.

Among the schools reopening Tuesday will be the Hattie Cotton which was dynamited last Tuesday. Students will be taught in portions of the building which were not structurally damaged by the blast—including the cafeteria.

School and police officials said they thought the city was "over the hump" in quelling violence. They expect no resumption of disorders which accompanied admission of 15 Negroes to mixed classes under federal court order last Monday.

Supreme Court, Judges Have Created Crisis In South, Governor Declares

Mon. 9-16-57

By JAMES EWING
From The Commercial Appeal
Nashville Bureau

Memphis Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 15. — Gov. Frank G. Clement told a nationwide television audience Sunday the United States Supreme Court and some Federal judges have "created a crisis in this section of the country." P. 1

Declaring there is such a thing as making "haste too quickly," the Governor said there are some sections of the South where "you just can't have integration any time soon. It just won't work."

Appearing on the Columbia Broadcasting System's Face the Nation, Governor Clement gave straight-from - the - shoulder answers to questions from three Washington newsmen in a reversal of form from a year ago, when he was accused of dodging questions about integration on Meet the Press.

Will Uphold Law

Some of his statements were the strongest he has made on the subject. He told the newsmen he was born and reared in Tennessee, educated in segregated schools and that "I cannot honestly deny that I like segregation."

He emphasized, however, he was sworn he will uphold the Constitution and he intends to see that law and order prevail in Tennessee.

The Governor carefully refrained from any criticism of Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, who called out the National Guard to stop integration at Little Rock.

He said it would be "highly indiscreet and improper" to pass judgement on the Governor of a neighboring state when he did not have first hand information about what prompted the Arkansas Governor's decision.

Under questioning by Griffin Bancroft of CBS News, the moderator, Governor Clement conceded his position had been made harder by Governor Faubus' actions and said there's no question but what many people in Tennessee thought he should have duplicated Governor Faubus' tactics.

He emphasized, however, that he was in no way being critical of the Arkansas Governor, who must think of his own responsibilities first.

Kasper Called 'Rascal'

The Governor repeated previous assertions he has no authority under Tennessee law to call out the National Guard in the Nashville school integration controversy. He pointed out that he sent troops to Clinton only after law and order had broken down and local officials requested his help.

Commenting on the dynamiting of Hattie Cotton Elementary School early last Tuesday, Governor Clement said no one could do as much to speed integration or to abolish segregation as "the man who set off that dynamite."

"Violence destroys the very thing it sets out to accomplish," he declared.

Asked for his opinion of John Kasper, the Northern racist who has helped incite violence at both Clinton and Nashville, Governor Clement said, "I've never dignified the rascal by calling his name."

Commercial Appeal

Asked if the disruption caused by the school integration controversy might slow down the state's industrial development, the Governor said, "Unrest, violence and indecision in any section of the country does not attract the cold cash dollar." P. 2

Northern Trouble Cited

The Governor also took advantage of his nationwide forum to point out that the South by no means has a corner on race problems.

In Chicago, he said, it took more policemen to guard one house where a Negro lived "than we've got guarding 8,000 miles of highways in Tennessee."

Asserting the South is "the most malaigned section of the country," he contrasted the furor caused when a Negro family moved into Levittown, Penn., to the peaceful manner in which thousands of Negro families live in Memphis and other Southern cities.

Concerning his political ambitions, the Governor repeated assertions he's neither running for nor away from anything.

Newsmen quizzing the Governor were Don Whitehead, a former Tennessean who is now chief of the Washington Bureau of New York Herald Tribune, Wells Church of the CBS news staff at Washington, and Warren Duffee of the Washington Bureau of the United Press.

26 Arrested After Blast In Nashville

Advertiser p. 1
Wed. 9-11-57
Montgomery, Ala

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP) — A blockbuster dynamite explosion smashed a newly integrated grammar school early today as racial tension continued to mount beneath an ironclad police clampdown on segregation demonstrations.

A total of 26 persons had been arrested by early evening. Among them was segregationist John Kasper who was taken into custody in city court as he sought to make bond for some of his followers.

Almost simultaneously with Kasper's dramatic arrest an added irritant to mounting tension was provided by the report that a Negro had raped a white businesswoman in her store in suburban Madison.

FROM CAPITOL STEPS

Police said Kasper was arrested on charges based on inflammatory statements he made at a series of segregation rallies, the last of which he conducted from the State Capitol steps last night.

Police held demonstrators a block away from the six racially mixed schools as they opened to sharply slashed overall attendance at today's half-day session. All-day sessions begin tomorrow.

Seven of those arrested were held for questioning in the expert dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton school. Three were arrested when they refused to move from the vicinity of one of the schools.

Two others were arrested shortly afterward. Two teen-agers were nabbed this afternoon in a car answering the description of one reported seen speeding away from the scene of the blast this morning. Officers said dynamite detonating wire was found in the trunk of the car and in the homes of some of the others arrested.

The first three arrested whose car was reported to have contained a detonating device, were held under $25,000 bonds on weapons charges.

The explosion, which stopped the school clocks at 12:34 a.m., followed a day of steadily mounting violence accompanying admission of 15 Negro first graders to formerly all-white schools.

p. 3-a

Only one Negro child was enrolled at Hattie Cotton, which is in a predominantly white neighborhood of East Nashville. No demonstrations occurred there.

A couple of hours before the blast police broke up a shouting crowd of 500 segregationists at Fehr school, where thrown bottles and bricks had been smashing windows and windshields of passing automobiles occupied by Negroes.

Fehr was hardest hit both days as parental boycotts and fear of violence cut attendance sharply. Only two first graders showed up at Fehr today, both Negroes. Four Negroes enrolled there Monday.

School officials reported attendance off throughout the school system today, including all-Negro schools.

Nashville began first grade integration yesterday as the first step in court-ordered desegregation. A complete plan for eliminating compulsory segregation must be submitted to federal court by Dec. 31.

Under the new first grade zoning 126 Negro youngsters were eligible to enroll in 13 previously all-white schools. Most of these took advantage of voluntary transfer provisions of the court-approved plan.

There are about 3,500 first graders, including 2,000 whites, among Nashville's total enrollment of about 18,000 pupils.

Mayor Ben West flew back to Nashville today from a trip to Hartford, Conn., to take personal charge of an all-out investigation of the blast at Hattie Cotton.

"Every decent citizen abhors violence," West said. "The one who encourages and exhorts the fanatic runs the very real risk of endangering his own life."

W. H. Oliver, assistant city school superintendent, blamed the violence and destruction on "flames of hatred fanned by race agitators."

NO CLASSES TODAY . . . This demolished classroom at newly integrated Hattie Cotton School at Nashville was just to the right of a corridor where a dynamite blast occurred early yesterday. The concussion knocked out walls, caved in part of a ceiling, and shattered all windows in the school, where one Negro pupil enrolled.

26 Arrested After Blast At School

Courier Journal Louisville, Ky. Wed. 9-11-57

From Wire Dispatches

Nashville, Sept. 10.—Police cracked down on segregation demonstrations Tuesday and arrested agitator John Kasper for "disorderly and offensive" conduct.

They moved swiftly after terrorists dynamited a newly integrated grammar school early Tuesday. A total of 26 persons was arrested.

Within 7 hours of the blast that wrecked the $500,000 Hattie R. Cotton School, police had rounded up three primary and two secondary suspects.

One Side Blown In

The explosive had been placed against one wall of the school building. It blew in that side of the building and caused widespread destruction throughout the building.

Kasper was arrested in City Court as he sought to make bond for some of his followers. He was charged with disorderly and offensive conduct, vagrancy, and loitering. Police said the charges were based on inflammatory statements he made at segregation rallies.

Kasper harangued a crowd of 500 in downtown Nashville Monday night a few hours before a dynamite bomb wrecked the Hattie Cotton School, which was integrated with the enrollment of one Negro child Monday morning.

Bodyguard Arrested

G. H. Aikens, whom police identified as Kasper's bodyguard, also was charged with vagrancy and loitering.

Kasper made bonds totaling $1,000 and was immediately rearrested for parking in a restricted zone. He made another $250 bond and was released.

Police said he would be promtly rearrested if he repeated any of his "inflammatory stateemnts" at a segregation rally scheduled on the Capitol Square Tuesday night.

Police Clear Square

However, a large force of policemen in cruisers and motorcycles moved onto the square 15 minutes before the meeting was scheduled to begin and cleared the square of the few knots of people that had begun to form.

"There will be no meeting here tonight," one officer said.

Police held demonstrators a block away from the six racially mixed schools as they opened to sharply reduced attendance for Tuesday's half-day session. Fearful mothers kept hundreds of children away. All-day sessions begin Wednesday.

The three principal suspects in the dynamiting had detonating wire in a car in which they had been riding around. They also had several weapons, including bolo knives, a weighted club, and two wooden mallets. They are being held in $25,000 bail each.

The three—one of whom has a peg leg and a second, a goatee—have been driving around from place to place in Nashville since the desegregation fight began. Their car is adorned with Ku Klux Klan signs and a large picture of a Negro boy kissing a white girl.

Questioning Almost Continuous

At the home of one of the other two suspects a large amount of detonating wire was found. These two are being held in $250 bail each.

Police have been questioning the five almost continuously.

Courier Journal

The explosion, which stopped the school clocks at 12:34 a.m., followed a day of steadily mounting violence accompanying the admission of 15 Negro first-graders to formerly all-white schools.

Hattie Cotton is in a predominately white neighborhood of East Nashville, where no racial mixing had been expected. No demonstrations occurred there.

Wed 9-11-57

Crowd Broken Up

A couple of hours before the blast police had broken up a shouting crowd of 500 segregationists at Fehr School, where bottles and bricks had been smashing windows and windshields of passing automobiles occupied by Negroes.

Fehr was hardest hit both days as parental boycotts and fear of violence cut attendance sharply. Only two first-graders showed up at Fehr Tuesday, both Negroes. Four Negroes had enrolled there Monday.

Withdrawn for Safety

Of the white children, about 70 per cent were absent. Many parents withdrew their children when the Negroes first appeared, but many others kept them home Tuesday because of fear for their safety after the dynamiting.

The 390 whites and one Negro from the Hattie Cotton School had no place to go. School officials said they would be assigned to other schools when the confusion abated.

Mayor Ben West flew back to Nashville Tuesday from a trip to Hartford, Conn., to take personal charge of the investigation of the blast at Hattie Cotton.

Blames Agitators

"Every decent citizen abhors violence," West said. "The one who encourages and exhorts the fanatic runs the very real risk of endangering his own life."

W. H. Oliver, assistant City school superintendent, blamed the violence and destruction on "flames of hatred fanned by race agitators." He said school officials plan to continue with integrated classes according to schedule, adding:

"We are counting on law-enforcement officers to continue to give us the fine help in the future they have in the past."

Police Chief Douglas Hosse told his men at roll call Tuesday:

"We've taken about all that we can be expected to take. Those who do not intend to obey the law can either get out of town or be subject to immediate arrest."

Kasper was twice convicted of contempt of federal court in connection with violence that accompanied desegregation of the high school at Clinton, Tenn., last year. Both cases are still in the courts.

Clement Visits Blast Scene

Governor Frank Clement visited the scene of the school blast about 2 hours after it occurred Tuesday morning. He declined to make any public statement.

Hattie Cotton, one of the city's more modern school plants, was built in 1950.

The first three to be arrested in connection with the blast were booked as Venson Albert Crimmons, 32; James R. Harris, 47, and J. B. Blackwell, 42. They are the principal suspects. The other two were Carroll Crimmons, brother of Venson, and W. D. Hodge.

28 Arrested After Blast In Nashville

Advertiser P. 1 Wed. 9-11-57 Montgomery, Ala.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10 (AP)—A blockbuster dynamite explosion smashed a newly integrated grammar school early today as racial tension continued to mount beneath an ironclad police clampdown on segregation demonstrations.

A total of 28 persons had been arrested by early evening. Among them was segregationist John Kasper who was taken into custody in city court as he sought to make bond for some of his followers.

Almost simultaneously with Kasper's dramatic arrest an added irritant to mounting tension was provided by the report that a Negro had raped a white businesswoman in her store in suburban Madison.

Police later picked up a young Negro man for questioning and late tonight said the man was preparing a statement admitting he committed the act.

A special detail of 12 to 15 state troopers was sent to the home of Gov. Frank Clement tonight as a result of reported threats on the governor's life.

This was reported by an official who declined the use of his name. Clement said he had not been told of any threats on his life.

The reports reportedly came from prosegregationists dissatisfied with Clement's failure to use National Guardsmen to prevent school desegregation here.

Clement has offered a $5,000 reward in the school bombing.

Police said Kasper was arrested on charges based on inflammatory statements he made at a series of segregation rallies, the last of which he conducted from the State Capitol steps last night.

Police held demonstrators a block away from the six racially mixed schools as they opened to sharply slashed overall attendance at today's half-day session. All-day sessions begin tomorrow.

Seven of those arrested were held for questioning in the expert dynamiting of the half-million-dollar Hattie Cotton school. Three were arrested when they refused to move from the vicinity of one of the schools.

Two others were arrested shortly afterward. Two teen-agers were nabbed this afternoon in a car answering the description of one reported seen speeding away from the scene of the blast this morning. Officers said dynamite detonating wire was found in the trunk of the car and in the homes of some of the others arrested.

The first three arrested, whose car was reported to have contained a detonating device, were held under $25,000 bonds on weapons charges.

The explosion, which stopped the school clocks at 12:34 a.m., followed a day of steadily mounting violence accompanying admission of 15 Negro first graders to formerly all-white schools.

Only one Negro child was enrolled at Hattie Cotton, which is in a predominantly white neighborhood of East Nashville. No demonstrations occurred there.

A couple of hours before the blast police broke up a shouting crowd of 500 segregationists at Fehr school, where thrown bottles and bricks had been smashing windows and windshields of passing automobiles occupied by Negroes.

Fehr was hardest hit both days as parental boycotts and fear of violence cut attendance sharply. Only two first graders showed up at Fehr today, both Negroes. Four Negroes enrolled there Monday.

School officials reported attendance off throughout the school system today, including all-Negro schools.

Texas School Board Ace TV Attraction

Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.
Sun. 11-10-57

By IRWIN FRANK

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 9 (AP)—Thousands of Houston residents will tell you that the greatest unrehearsed television program is their own school board in action.

For the past two years complete school board meetings have been televised twice a month. The shows have attracted as many as 250,000, viewers. Some of them staying up past their bedtime to see the sessions close, often as late as 1:30 a.m.

Why do the actions and words of seven school board members draw such an attentive and loyal audience?.

* * *

HERE ARE EXCERPTS from letters received at television station KUHT, believed to be the first educational television station in the nation, which carries the meetings:

"Please continue these (telecasts) even if taxes must be raised again. . . ."

"It had everything, comedy, drama, human frailty, ham acting, serious public service."

"More exciting than mystery or wrestling—the low blows were real."

Conflict seems to be the main ingredient that draws people to the school board meeting telecasts.

The board, split with what are called "liberal" and "conservative" groups, has offered plenty of conflict on such hot issues as integration and on such usually mild topics as which textbook to use.

* * *

DURING MEETINGS this year in which racial integration of the city's school was heatedly debated, an estimated 100,000 of Houston's 400,000 television sets were tuned to KUHT for all or part of the meeting, said Roy Barthold, acting manager for the station.

Barthold, who said television officials estimated 2.5 persons watch each set, said about 250,000 persons saw the meeting.

The latest rating made by an independent organization estimated that the July 8 meeting, concerned only with administrative details, was seen by 10,000 persons.

Mrs. Frank Dyer, board president, says: "The general public knows a great deal more about school board work as a result of the televising of the meetings."

She does not think board members "play to the audience."

* * *

"AT TIMES some of it (grandstanding) happens, but after the opening minutes you forget you are on the air and conduct the meeting as though you were not."

She thinks her school board is no more controversial or exciting than other big city school boards and she suggests some other cities have "hotter" meetings.

The Houston school board pays $130 an hour to the television station for broadcasting the meetings. They do this partly because the board and the University of Houston, which actually operates the station, are listed as co-owners and operators of the station. By paying for the broadcasts, Mrs. Dyer said, the board helps meet part of its obligation of supporting the station.

Meetings are held the second and fourth Mondays of every month and the station carries the entire meeting. Students studying television operate equipment, which lowers operating costs and allows students to gain experience.

* * *

CONSTANT telecasting of the meetings is believed to be a key factor in developing a large audience. First, it keeps the program in the viewer's mind and develops a pattern of watching.

Secondly, it enables people to draw up sides in controversies and to identify certain board members with certain issues. This creates an interest in next week's session.

Houston is ordered to integrate

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 10-26-57

HOUSTON, Texas — Ordering local school officials to lay plans immediately for integration, Federal District Court Judge Ben Connally, Tuesday, set no time limit but told the officials he would be watching.

The judge ordered the local system integrated "after such time as arrangements can be made with all deliberate speed." He added that he would keep the case on this docket and watch the board's progress.

* * *

"ANY REASONABLE delay will be warranted if the board immediately comes to grips with its problem," Judge Connally said, adding:

"A court of equity will not countenance inordinate delay or evasion where the enjoyment of a constitutional right is involved although its recognition and enforcement be difficult and unpopular."

The ruling was reasonable and fair and "shows an understanding of our problem," said Mrs. Frank Dyer, school board chairman. She added that the board will meet with lawyers as "soon as possible" to discuss the court's decision.

Judge Connally declared unconstitutional provisions in the Texas constitution and three civil laws which require separate school facilities for colored and white pupls.

Texas Solon Filibusters For Integration, Loses

Defender, Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 11-30-57

AUSTIN, Tex. — (INS) — A lone state senator filibustered past the 20-hour mark last week in a vain effort to block action on twin proposals aimed at stemming the tide of public school integration in Texas.

Sen. Henry Gonzalez, of San Antonio, collapsed into his chair from exhaustion after speaking continuously to an almost empty senate chamber.

Subject of his talkathon was a bill authorizing the attorney general to assist local school districts in defending state segregation laws.

When he sat down, it was approved on second reading by a voice vote, and the senate stood at ease to take up the real target of his attack — a bill permitting the closing of schools threatened by violence needing troop occupation.

The latter proposal was submitted to a special session of the legislature last week by Gov. Price Daniel, but as introduced in the senate it carried an extra provision requiring school boards to provide "out of classroom" instruction for the pupils concerned in a school thus closed.

Gonzalez branded this an out-and-out segregation bill aimed at thwarting the 1954 desegregation order of the U. S. Supreme Court.

He called it a "legalized hookey, school-child lockout bill," and declared it "sets a school wrecking precedent" for the reason that it would not only close schools but permit the use of public funds for outside instruction for some pupils.

His voice was reduced to a bare whisper as daylight broke on his lonesome filibuster before a gallery which contained a dozen Negroes at one time.

He took small sips from a water glass and periodically chewed on lemon-halves as his petite wife sat solemnly nearby and listened to his tirade.

On the section of the bill providing that the school boards may close schools after the governor issues a proclamation saying violence is imminent, he declared:

"It may be that he envies the governor of Arkansas the publicity he has received."

As Judge's Integregation Decision Awaited, Compliance Pattern Set

Judge Ben C Connally, Federal judge on whose desk rests the school integration case for Houston Public Schools has called in lawyers for both sides primarily to discuss legal technicalities involved in pleading of the case before his court. Judge Connally would not commit himself as to the time of his decision concerning the integration of Houston Public schools. However, it is known that a call meeting was issued for the school board members to meet their attorney Monday after this conference with Judge Connally. Unconfirmed are reports that the school board meeting had been called off.

There is great speculation as to just what the Judge did discuss with the lawyers. Opinion has it that the judge will rule against integration due to the length of time passed in rendering a decision. On the other hand, optimists say this lengthy withholding of the decision will weigh heavily in favor of early integration. Some point out that the decision in Dallas by Judge Atwell, the decision in New Orleans by Judge Wright and finally the crucial decision in Little Rock, Ark by Judge Davies have set patterns of compliance and integration. Thus speculation mounts heavily concerning a decision, ruling integration in mid-term 1957.

At the end of the trial in May, each side presented their briefs and the judge is well acquainted with the desires of each side. However the time requested in the briefs submitted by lawyers for the Negro children was 'the school year beginning September 1957, a time well past. Thus to render a decision in their behalf would mean integration ordered to begin in mid-term of the 57-58 school year.

Up to Monday no members of the school board with the exception of Mrs Dyer, the chairman, have received information from their lawyers. This is based upon the fact that no member of the school board has admitted knowledge of what would be discussed in Monday's call meeting of the school board.

In the conferences held in the spring with the opposing parties present in Judge Connally's chambers, the judge was reported then to have seemingly wanted the parties to agree. The school board would not agree to a compromise or to anything of a compromising nature that would lead to integration.

However, the judge is going to rule, and soon. He has reopened discussion so we can expect him to issue a decree in the near future. Most Negroes believe it will be to order integration, sooner or later.

Peaceful Integration In Pleasanton, Texas

Courier-Post 11-9-57

(Special to the Courier)

PLEASANTON, Tex. — Pleasanton High School integrated nine Negro students here Friday morning amid peacefulness and well-wishing. Not a sound or gesture of protest was noted as the historic integration went off like a well-timed parade.

The students were met on the steps of the new $550,000 school by Supt. J. D. Klingeman, Principal D. C. Baldree and Janice Slomchinski, president of the student council.

"We're happy to have you here this morning," Baldree told the new students in a friendly voice.

EACH OF THE nine youngsters was given a chance to respond to the welcome and then was led to classes by a member of the Student Council.

Pauline Jackson, a junior said: "It sure is nice to know that they want us to go to school here. I know we will get along just fine."

Timothy Winers, 6 foot 2-inch sophomore and an outstanding basketball prospect, said, "I'm awfully glad to be here."

Other students integrated are Clarence Cole, Dorie Monroe, Annie Ruth Johnson, Elroy Woodson and Leo King, freshment, and Paul Winters and Hedy King, seniors.

THERE WAS a slight nervousness noted in both Negro and white students because of the attention given the integration.

A score of members of the nation's press, radio, television and newsreel companies were on hand to record what Baldree termed the "Christian-like" integration.

Several ministers, civic leaders and many of the pupils milled outside the school before classes started. There seemed to be no opponent to integration present.

Valmo C. Bellinger, publisher of the San Antonio Register, a Negro weekly, told Klingsman and Baldree it was one of the "greatest demonstrations of Americanism I have ever seen."

Pleasanton residents had voted 342 to 88 to integrate their school.

THE ELECTION was the first held in Texas under a new law passed by the last State Legislature which requires approval of a majority of voters in a special election before a school can integrate.

The law, which was urged by pro-segregationists in an effort to slow down integration, has not been yet tested in courts. However, the Dallas School Board, under Federal Court to integrate, has asked for a Federal Court ruling on the constitutionality of the state law.

There are a total of 37 Negro students in the Pleasanton School districts, which has 750 white students. The Texas-Almanac shows the population is 49.9 per cent Latin-American, 48.9 per cent Anglo-American and 1.2 per cent Negro.

THE REMAINING Negro students are in the elementary school and will not be moved to the white school until this week. They will be taught in segregated classes in the white school by Negro teachers until those teachers' contracts expire in January.

Approximately 125 school districts, covering approximately one-quarter of the state's scholastics, had voluntarily integrated earlier without incident. They have been principally in West and South Texas where the percentage of Negro population is low.

'Not through,' say Texas filibusterers

Afro American Sat. 5-11-57

AUSTIN, Texas — "I intend to fight every one of them to the last ditch."

That is what State Sen. Henry Gonzalez of San Antonio said Friday in discussing the two-man filibuster that he and Sen. Abraham Kazen Jr. waged against a school segregation bill which was approved by the State Senate shortly after the pair was prevailed upon to stop their bitter fight against the bill after delaying its passage by a 36-hour and 2-minute talkfest.

The two senators pledged themselves to a firm fight against eight other segregation bills, pending in the Texas body.

THE BILL Gonzalez and Kazen attacked as unconstitutional for almost two days, would allow school boards to assign pupils to any school in their jurisdiction, thus by-passing integration if the board did not want it.

Senator Gonzales, whose constituents are to a large extent, colored or of Latin-American descent, charged that the "assignment" bill was worse than all the Communist agents and provocateurs that had been rounded up by the FBI.

"The string of segregation bills that follow this are even more devastating than this one," he declared again and again.

One of the bills would forbid employment of any member of the NAACP by all government agencies in Texas, including the public schools.

"IS TEXAS liberty only the liberty of Anglo-Saxons?" Gonzales asked as he charged that the school assignment bill could lead to a new effort to legalize segregation of Latin-Americans in Texas schools.

That the fight of the two integrationist senators is not a lone one is evidenced by the support they have received from various organizations in the state.

Afro 5-11-57

The pro-segregation measures have been opposed by the Texas Council of Churches, labor groups, an interfaith council composed of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergymen and laymen as well as the NAACP.

Negro Pupils Win High Court Ruling

Herald Tribune 2nd Sec

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Supreme Court today let stand an order directing a federal district court to keep on its docket the suit by Negro children in Wichita Falls, Tex., for admission to public schools nearest their homes.

New York Herald Tribune 4-22-57

The order, issued by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans, was appealed by the Wichita Falls school board. The board said the Negroes had been granted their request and their case was "moot" (no longer having a live issue.)

The U.S. District Court for Northern Texas agreed with the school board and dismissed the Negroes' complaint but the circuit court directed it to retain jurisdiction. The circuit court said that while the Negro children had been admitted to the public school nearest their homes "it is by no means certain that they had the same free privilege of transfer to or attendance at any school of their choice as was accorded the white children."

In appealing to the Supreme Court, the school board said the circuit court decision compels the district court to act "as a super school board in overseeing the day-to-day administrative action of the duly elected board in the conduct of the public school system."

Texas Stalls On Integration

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

The Dallas Morning News

SEGREGATED schooling is the program preferred by the vast majority of white citizens. It is probably the preference of a big bloc of Negro citizens. This is the incentive behind the fairly rapid progress of the five measures, intended at least to retard integration, in the lower house of the legislature. In all probability, the current session will produce legislation that will be effective so far as Texas people and Texas courts are concerned. Insofar as there is a considerable time element involved in federal court actions, delay will be achieved. But there is serious question whether any thing the legislature does in line with majority Texas thinking will be able to weather the rigid thinkinig, or perhaps emotional trauma, of the present U.S. Supreme Court.

Take the proposal for the state to assist scholars to attend private nonsectarian schools, if no segregated school is available. This has implicit in it the question of racial discrimination, so far as Supreme Court standards can be gauged. If the "separte but equal facilities" doctrine has no standing, it is difficult to see how this can stand up, if challenged.

Our top court will be hard put to it to advance reasons to strike down the Duff and Ferris bills, both phases of the pepper-and-salt plan. Each would facilitate choice between white, Negro and integrated schools. And no federal issue can be presented possibly in state action to end compulsory schooling where integration is concerned.

But in previous antisegregation rulings, the U.S. Supreme Court has never been at a loss to frame words to what it terms its reasoning. It would be an unsafe bet that the Texas legislature can devise any law on the subject at variance with the court's sociology that the nine men could not rule out of order.

Supreme Court's Action Allows Negroes' Suit to Stay on Docket

New York

WASHINGTON, Apr. 22 (AP).—The Supreme Court emphasized again today that it expects Federal District Courts to keep tabs on steps toward eliminating racial segregation in public schools.

It did so in denying without comment an appeal brought by the Wichita Falls, Tex., school board.

The board had appealed from a decision by the United States Court of Appeals in New Orleans directing a district court to keep on its docket a suit by Negro children for admission to public schools nearest their homes.

The school board contended that under its policy of desegregation of all schools, the Negroes' request had been granted. The District Court for Northern Texas agreed with the board and dismissed the complaint.

The Court of Appeals, however, directed the District Court to retain jurisdiction in the case. It said that while the Negro children had been admitted to the public school nearest their homes, "It is by no means certain that they had the same free privilege of transfer to or attendance at any school of their choice as was accorded the white children."

The school board said in its apeal that the apellate court's decision compels the District Court to act as "a super-school board in overseeing the day-to-day administrative action of the duly elected board in the conduct of the public school system."

In its May, 1955, decision calling for the end of racial segregation in public schools "with all deliberate speed," the Supreme Court directed that "during the period of transition, the (district) courts will retain jurisdiction in these cases."

School Board Silent On Late Session

Houston Post p.1

Houston, Tex.

Sat. 5-18-57

HOUSTON — Houston School Board members have shut up like "clams" on what happened in the secret graveyard shift session, following Monday's regular meeting called to discuss integration.

Forced by Federal Judge Ben C Connally to come before him a few days with desegregation plans, the five conservatives and one liberal member, Mrs A S Vandervoort, put their heads together with school attorneys at a secret meeting in Supt W E Moreland's office in attempt to knit some kind of desegregation plan that would fit approval of the United States Judge Connally.

Mrs Frank Dyer, board chairman, said in last week's special meeting that she did not know after the board had accepted the integration committee's report whether or not part or any of the instrument would be adopted by the board.

Houston Tex.

During the meeting Monday which lasted until near 11 p m two of the board members who are considered the most rank of the conservatives, Stone Wells and Mrs Earl Maughmer were handed telegrams.

Also there was some going and coming on the part of Mr Wells and James Delmar who left the board table for sometime, one at a time.

Mrs Maughmer, one of the telegram recipients, have stated she would go to jail before she would agree to integrate the schools.

Enters Court Minus Desegregation Plan Despite Directive

Informer Sat. 5-25-57

Houston Press p1

HOUSTON—Monday's hearing in the school case brought out the fact that the board has no plan for integration and has ignored the judge's directive warning them that they must come up this year with a plan.

The majority of the members of the board, elected to a platform to keep segregation in the schools, have steadily resisted the obligation to put in motion a plan.

Monday the lawyer for the school board suggested that the judge would have to order integration or let the matter dangle in the delaying tactics of the board. Then the lawyer added that the board would appeal an order of the judge for integration.

So like "dog-in-the-manger," the board won't integrate and tells the judge that they'll keep him from integrating.

The suit, filed by the parents of Delores Ross, Beneva Williams et al, Dec 26, 1956, seeking to break down segregation in Houston, was first heard last January in Judge Ben C Connally's court.

Hearings re-opened Monday, attracting large crowds of both white and Negro spectators. Testimony was continued until 4:30 P M at which time court adjourned until 9:30 A M Tuesday.

Attorney Bert Tunks, counsel for defense, stated the issue as of this moment is whether or not in view of evidence presented the school board is proceeding in good faith and with good speed in complying with the Supreme Court ruling.

When Judge Connally queried, "if I understand you, you are not denying the fact, that you concede that desegregation is inevitable in the district," Mr Tunks stated, "We are making no issue, we are bound by the Supreme Court - - - segregation is unlawful".

Mrs Frank Dyer, board president, was the first witness called. Her initial testimony leaned on the housing problems, saying there would be a tremendous problem due to the overcrowdedness of the schools, if Houston schools were mixed at this time.

Mrs Dyer claimed social activities would have to be abolished.

On cross-questioning by Attorney Henry Doyle, Mrs Dyer admitted that during the day, white and Negro children did ride city buses together without incident, although she had testified if the school buses integrated it would create a situation.

Because health had been mentioned by the board majority from time to time, Attorney Doyle asked the board chairman if there were health problems among Negro children, if the board was attempting to do anything now about it since it would be just as harmful to Negro children to be with un-healthful children as it would be to white pupils.

Mrs Dyer finally told the court there was no plan for desegregating Houston schools other than the resolution filed Monday morning with the court.

Delores attends Crawford Elementary School and Beneva is a student at E O Smith Junior High School. Both live near schools they tried to enroll at this current semester. They were turned away on reasons of color.

Attorney for the plaintiffs are Henry E Doyle, Francis Williams, and Huellan Hotl

The only near scene doing the day between the races came when a white woman became disgruntled because two Negroes sat down where she had been sitting. Spectator had been warned by the bailiffs if they move they stood chances of losing their seats. The woman complained to the baliff that every time she moved some 'damn n---" would deliberatlely sit in her place.

The other two witnesses called Monday were Dr W E Moreland, supt, Houston Public Schools and Joe Kelly Butler, chairman, integration committee.

18-year plan for Houston schools

Afro-American Sat. 6-1-57

Baltimore, Md.

HOUSTON, Texas—Attorneys introduced a surprise witness on the stand in behalf of the two girls suing the Houston School Board. He was Dr. Ellis O. Knox, professor of education at Howard University, a member of the committee which studied desegregation 40 systems, including Washington, D.C.

Dr. Knox's testimony said that careful planning by school administrators, and with the blessings of the school board, would insure smooth integration in Houston and without serious incidents.

* * *

SCHOOL BOARD attorneys did not cross examine Dr. Knox as he was presented out of turn, but concentrated on displaying a chart showing graphically how colored pupils lagged behind white children on achievement tests in Houston's schools.

The charts were explained by Dr. Alexander Frazier, Houston curriculum expert.

"In every case," he said, except third-grade spelling, tests in reading, arithmetic, and language showed colored children to be from 9 months to 2 years and 5 months behind the whites.

UNDER CROSS examination, Dr. Frazier said the colored children's academic lag would greatly intensify administrative and instructional problems should schools be desegregated at this time.

Mrs. Jewel Askew, director of elementary schools, testified that a pioneer study is underway in 8 colored schools to develop an adequate remedial program. She indicated that it is a long-term program and would be complicated, if desegregation is made immediate.

The next witness for school board was Dr. L. C. McDonald, school census director, who estimated that from 8,000 to 9,000 colored students and probably 15,000 white pupils would have to change their schools if required to attend schools nearest their homes under a desegregation program.

Dr. McDonald stated that most schools would be affected to some extent by integration, except three junior high schools and 10 to 15 white elementary schools.

* * *

BECAUSE SCHOOL board attorneys played up disastrous effects of "complete" and "enforced" integration, Judge Connally stopped the proceedings to explain that there is a difference between "force integration" and racial desegregation.

While addressing Dr. McDonald, Judge Connally emphasized that the Supreme Court does not prohibit a liberal policy of transfers for parents who do not want their children to attend mixed schools.

ATTORNEYS FOR the plaintiffs sought to discredit the Houston test scores by contending that nationally standardized tests were not designed for use in segregated systems of education.

Dr. Frazier admitted, under cross examination, that the national test samples did not include 25 per cent colored pupils which is about the percentage of enrollment in Houston.

HOUSTON, Texas — A desegregation plan submitted by the Houston School Board for the "integration" of the South's largest segregated school district was termed "vague and flimsy" by appalled Houston residents upon its presentation to the courts on Monday.

The plan, submitted as the result of a court order issued on Jan. 18, calls for integration to be started in the first grade of the district's schools "not later than 1960" and to be completed 15 years later at the rate of one grade a year.

It was submitted at a hearing before U.S. District Judge Ben Connally at San Jacinto and based upon the majority report of a citizens' committee named last January 14.

The court order for a desegregation plan followed the filing of suits on Dec. 26, 1956 for the admission of their daughters to white Houston schools by the parents of Beneva Williams, 14, of 5524 Farmer St., and Delores Ross, 9, of Elysian St.

Their petition requested a temporary injunction requiring their immediate enrollment in white schools which were much nearer their homes than the colored schools which they were then attending.

Their petition also asked the federal courts to declare null and void Texas constitutional provisions and statutes requiring segregation in the schools of the state.

AT A PRELIMINARY hearing on Jan. 18 it was agreed that the school board would be given until May 20 to present a plan of integration.

The plan submitted to the court on Monday was released to the public two weeks ago by the citizens' committee as its majority report.

At the same time a minority report was released by Dr. Henry E. Lee, a 77-year-old physician and former official of the Texas NAACP.

The minority report declared that the school board already has had "a reasonable period of time" to institute integration and recommended "the enrollment of pupils without regard to color by September of this year."

The minority report was ignored by the Houston School Board, which placed its chairman, Mrs. Frank Dyer on the witness stand at Monday's hearing in effort to show that the board has "acted in good faith" and has proceeded toward integration "as far as it was practical."

In support of the board's contention, Mrs. Dyer said that it has:

1. Set up ROTC units in the colored high schools at the District's expense, and that these drill units compete in drill contests with white ROTC members;

2. Appointed a bi-racial committee to study every aspect of problems involved in desegregation;

3. Conducted meetings of white and colored school staff members on an integrated basis;

4. Developed a strong remedial program to enable colored pupils remove their deficiencies and bring themselves up to standards set by white pupils;

5. Paid all teachers equal salaries since 1949 and placed the same textbooks and curricula in white and colored schools;

6. Appointed an integration grievance committee.

7. Adopted the majority report of the Citizens' Committee as its plan for desegregation.

The court recessed until Tuesday following Mrs. Dyer's testimony.

Gradual Integration Urged for Houston

Pittsburgh Courier Sat. 5-25-57

HOUSTON, Tex., May 2 (AP) A citizens committee appointed by the Houston School Board has recommended adoption of a 12-year gradual school desegregation plan.

The committee suggested the first grade be desegregated not later than 1960 and that the program be extended one grade each year until there is complete desegregation for all 12 grades.

Federal Judge Ben C. Connally has scheduled a May 20 hearing on a petition filed by several Houston Negroes asking that desegregation begin immediately in Houston. In setting the hearing, Connally indicated the School Board must come up with a plan for desegregation or face a court order.

Orders Houston School Mixing

HOUSTON, Tex. — (INS) — Federal District Judge Ben Connally ordered Houston schools integrated "with all deliberate speed."

Connally handed down his decision on a suit brought three months ago by two Negro girls who had been refused admission to Houston public grade schools in September, 1956.

Mrs. Frank Dyer, president of the Houston school board, was not disturbed by the ruling. She said: "The decision shows an understanding of our problems."

Houston Gets U.S. Order to Mix Schools

HOUSTON, Tex., Oct. 15 (AP)—Federal Judge Ben C. Connally today ordered Houston public schools to integrate "with all deliberate speed" but did not set a deadline.

Connally's order called for integration "after such time as arrangements can be made with all deliberate speed." The order warned that the court will watch the school board's efforts.

Parents of two young Negroes had asked the court to order an immediate end of segregation in the 142,000-student system.

"The ruling shows an understanding of our problems," said Mrs. Frank Dyer, school board president.

School board attorneys had asked the court for time for further studies and for completion of a 30-million-dollar school construction program now under way.

Police Enough

AUSTIN, Tex., Oct. 15 (AP) — Texas' Gov. Price Daniel today said he had enough Texas Rangers and state police to stop any racial trouble in Texas.

"As long as I'm governor of this state there will be no federal troops walking up and down the halls and campuses of our schools," Daniel said in obvious reference to the Little Rock school struggle.

He made the statements at a caucus of East Texas prosegregation legislators.

Houston Public Schools Told To Integrate

Federal Judge Fails To Set Mixing Deadline

HOUSTON, Tex., Oct. 15 (AP) — Federal Judge Ben C. Connally today ordered Houston public schools to integrate "with all deliberate speed" but did not set a deadline.

Connally's order called for integration "after such time as arrangements can be made with all deliberate speed." The order warned that the court will watch the school board's efforts.

Connally used stronger language however, in a memorandum of findings of fact and conclusions of law as filed with the order.

"Any delay will be warranted if the board immediately comes to grips with its problem," he said. "A court of equity will not countenance inordinate delay or evasion where the enjoyment of a constitutional right is involved, though its recognition and enforcement be difficult and unpopular."

Parents of two young Negroes had asked the court to order an immediate end of segregation in the 142,000-student system.

"The ruling shows an understanding of our problems," said Mrs. Frank Dyer, school board president.

School board attorneys had asked the court for time for further studies and for completion of a 30-million-dollar school construction program now under way.

Mrs. Dyer said the board will meet as soon as possible with the attorneys to discuss Connally's ruling.

The suit was filed Dec. 26, 1956 by Marion Williams, on behalf of his daughter, Beneva, and Mrs. Mary Alice Benjamin, on behalf of her daughter by a previous marriage, Dolores Ross.

The parents alleged their children suffered hardship because they had to travel great distances past schools assigned to white children.

The school board contended it has acted in good faith in preparing for compliance with the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

U.S. Orders Mixing in Dallas, Too

Judge Switches, Rules Reluctantly

From Wire Reports

U.S. District Judge William H Atwell Thursday reluctantly ordered public schools in Dallas, Tex., to start integration after the Christmas holidays.

Judge Atwell said, "It is difficult for me to approve this order but this is a land of law and it is my duty to do what I have been ordered to do by a higher court."

Thursday's order was for the start of integration at midterm. About 20,000 Negro students would be integrated in Dallas' sprawling school system of 120,000 students.

Atwell had been reversed twice in allowing more time for study of school integration problems. The suit was brought by parents of 23 Negro pupils in 1955 against the Dallas Independent School District. In the latest reversal, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans ordered the schools to integrate "with all deliberate speed."

Gov. Price Daniel said no court order would resolve the integration problem in Texas.

"I still believe each school district can handle its own affairs, and we will not have complete integration in Texas for many years to come," he said.

125 DISTRICTS

Only about 125 of the state's 1,845 school districts have integrated. San Antonio is the only one of Texas' four largest cities which has ended segregation in the schools.

Dallas school officials were undecided on their next legal step. They expressed fear of losing state funds. A state law, just enacted, would deny state funds to schools that integrated without first holding a local option election on the question.

In a previous decision favorable to the Dallas system, Judge Atwell said: "If there is such a thing as civil rights, there are civil wrongs. It would be unthinkable and unbearably wrong to make white students get out of Dallas schools so as to let in colored students."

STURGIS NEGRO ENROLLS

At Sturgis, Ky., another Negro joined the 17 already attending classes at Sturgis High on the third day of nonviolent integration. There was scattered heckling and catcalls from a small crowd as state police cleared a path through white pupils who jammed the entrance.

In Arlington, Va., eight Negro applicants attempted to enroll at four white high schools. An orderly crowd of curious white pupils watched as school officials turned them away under Virginia's pupil assignment law. The statute has been held unconstitutional by a U.S. district judge but an appeal is pending.

ENTERS REAR DOOR

Winston-Salem became the third North Carolina city in as many days to enroll Negroes to previously all-white public schools.

A 15-year-old Negro girl used a rear entrance to Reynolds High School to avoid a crowd of about 500 gathered in front of the building. She entered the school auditorium for orientation, then walked to her classroom without incident.

Charlotte, N.C., police rounded up two groups of juveniles Wednesday night for hanging a Negro in effigy and carrying anti-Negro placards on their cars. They were sent home with reprimands.

FINED FOR ASSAULT

But Liston Flowers, 18, was fined $18 in police court for an assault Wednesday on Dorothy Counts, 15, the Negro girl who did not return to Charlotte's Harding High Thursday because of a "sore throat."

The Charlotte school board allowed 21 white children to transfer from an integrated school.

A White Citizens Council organized in Greensboro, N.C., last week by roaming segregator John Kasper discussed setting in motion the machinery for setting up privately endowed all-white schools.

Two sign-carrying pickets and a man who used profane language were arrested at Easton, Md., where eight Negro children entered two integrated schools.

Negroes in Lake Charles, La., continued their boycott of a Negro school 10 miles away in an attempt to attend a white school in their own neighborhood.

At Maryville, Tenn., five Negroes, three boys and two girls, sought unsuccessfully to enroll Thursday at all-white Maryville High School.

The Negroes appeared at the school at the noon recess but were denied admission by Principal J. P. Stewart who told them:

"Under instructions I have there will be no integration of Maryville schools this year."

The Negroes turned away peacefully. They said they were seniors at Hale High, a Negro school here.

Reluctant Judge Orders Mixing

Reverses Decision On Dallas Schools

DALLAS, Sept. 5 (AP)—A federal judge who doesn't agree with the U.S. Supreme Court on racial integration told Dallas school officials that integration in public schools is the law of land and they must end segregation after the Christmas holidays.

The 87-year-old jurist, William H. Atwell, said:

"It is difficult for me to approve this order, but this is a land of law and it is my duty to do what I have been ordered to do by a higher court."

Twice Judge Atwell had ruled that the Dallas School Board should be allowed more time to study the problems of integration. Both times, he was overruled by the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans.

Today's order was for the start of integration at mid-term. About 20,000 Negro students would be integrated in Dallas' school system of 120,000 students.

Gov. Price Daniel said no court order would resolve the integration problem in Texas.

"I still believe each school district can handle it own affairs, and we will not have complete integration in Texas for many years to come," he said.

Only about 125 of the state's 1845 school districts have integrated. San Antonio is the only one of Texas' four largest cities which has ended segregation in the schools.

Dallas school officials were undecided on their next legal step. They expressed fear of losing state funds. A state law, just enacted, would deny state funds to schools that integrated without first holding a local option election on the question.

In a previous decision favorable to the Dallas system, Judge Atwell said:

"If there is such a thing as civil rights, there are civil wrongs. It would be unthinkable and unbearably wrong to make white students get out of Dallas schools so as to let in colored students."

Today, he said:

"There are approximately 119,000 children in the Dallas independent school district, one of every six of whom is a Negro.

"The school buildings are completely filled. White children would have to be displaced to let Negro children in."

Pleasanton, Texas Integration Is Peaceful Affair

PLEASANTON, Tex. — Nine Negro pupils have been admitted to Pleasanton High School with a welcome by white students who joined in to implement peaceful integration.

It was the first integration under a new Texas law requiring a local option election. The new law, which was urged by prosegregationists in efforts to slow down integration has not been tested. However, the Dallas School Board, under a federal court order to integrate schools, has asked for a federal ruling on its constitutionality.

But this had no effect on the Pleasanton School district which consists of 750 white and 37 Negro students. Integration was brought about after Supt. J. D. Klingeman, the high school principal, and the principal of the student body revealed a canvass had been made of white students and no opposition to their entrance was found. Both officials welcomed Negro students when they attended school for the first time.

The remaining Negro students in the town are elementary school pupils, and will be moved Monday to former white schools where they will be taught by Negro teachers in separate classes until contracts for those teachers expire in January.

Texas Town To Integrate

Hearst Courier

PLEASANTON, Tex., Oct. 29 (AP) —This southern Texas town of 5,000 is planning to quietly integrate its high school Friday in contrast to the racial struggles elsewhere this school year. P.6 A

"We want to show the world it can be done in a Christian-like way," said the high school principal, D. C. Baldree.

Voters approved integration 323-88 last Saturday in a local option election — the first under a new Texas law. This law requires a favorable vote before any school district in the state can integrate. The penalty for noncompliance is loss of state aid and accreditation.

Baldree said no special preparations are being made for the enrollment of between 15 and 25 Negro pupils in classes with 312 white students at Pleasanton High School. NW 10-30-57

He said he was mentioning the move to pupils in talks over the school public address system daily but no special assembly was planned.

"It's not necessary to do anything else," Baldree said.

The elementary and junior high schools will be integrated later.

The population of this farming and ranching town 33 miles south of San Antonio is only 1.2 per cent Negro. There are about 1,476 pupils in the entire school system, and obout 35 Negroes.

Baldree said the town appeared ready for integration.

"Of course some were not in favor of it as recorded by their votes. But the community spirit is for peaceful integration," he said.

The only question, he said, is whether the Negro pupils will be able to keep up with the students in their own grades, "having been in a school that wasn't on an equal basis with this one."

School Supt. J. D. Klingeman said the prime reason for calling the integration election was because the Negro schools were substandard and the district faced loss of accreditation on that basis.

Baldree said if any Negro pupils appear backward in any subject, special coaching will be arranged.

He said most of the pupils appeared ready to welcome the Negroes. Some were outspokenly in favor of it.

Timonthy Winters, 16, a basketball star for the Negro high school, is one who will enroll in Pleasanton. He stands 6 feet 4.

"Boy, we're just tickled to death to have that big boy come over here," said Frank Tudyk Jr., 17, a senior basketball star for Pleasanton.

Texas Community Votes Integration

Farmer, Houston, Texas P.7

Sat. 11-2-57

PLEASANTON — Citizens in this South Texas town went to the polls Saturday and voted with an overwhelming margin to desegregate Pleasanton public schools. Ballots counted totaled 343 for immediate integration and only 88 against.

Thus, Tuesday morning, in keeping with this civic gesture to obey the law of the land, thirty-six Negroes began attending classes side by side with white students and at presstime there were no incidents reported. The Pleasanton School Board met Monday night and officially approved the desegregation of all their public schools.

The Satuday election was held in compliance with the new Texas law which requires that citizens go to the polls and make known their acceptance of integration before such a move can be affected.

The state law was passed by Texas legislators last spring. The statute stipulates that any school district which goes ahead with segregation without the approval of its citizens at the polls would not be eligible for state aid and accreditation would also be withheld.

Only a few Negro families are included in the Pleasanton population of approximately 5,000 white and Latin citizens. Located in Ataccosa County in South Texas, there are about 1,475 children attending school in Pleasanton.

J D Klington, school superintendent, had this to say about the election: "Our Negro facilities are inadequate and have been declared so by the Texas Education Agency."

Texas Daily For Gradual School Desegregation

DALLAS, Texas — (ANP) — The Dallas News, local daily which has for several years, actively resisted any attempts to integrate city schools, has done an about-face and is now advocating gradual integration of the school system.

In this about face, which is important locally since a federal judge has ordered integration at mid-term, observers see a close relation to President Eisenhower's use of troops in Little Rock.

Kansas City

Recent editorials, the first of which appeared in the newspaper on Oct. 3, signify the change in the paper's advocacy on the school issue. The paper's plan for gradual integration envisions one "which can reasonably be made the basis of a consent decree . . . to arrive at an intermingling of the races in the school system . . ." and exemption of school districts that integrate upon federal court orders . . . last legislature's law denying state funds to schools which integrate with local elections and a law to give the governor power to close schools taken over by federal troops.

Should Not Face Dilemma

The initial editorial, entitled "What Shall Texans Do Now?", argued for the eemption of court-ordered integraton from the new state law, and said that Dallas school authorities should not have to face the dilemma of "going to either a federal or state jail," nor the school system should not be fined for an action "it is compelled to take." Fw. 11-8-57

In urging integration, the paper said: "Dallas leaders of both white and colored parents most concerned in integration should take quiet steps to arrive at a plan whch can reasonably be made the basis of a consent decree, outlining precisely what may be done and what shall be done to arrive at an intermingling of the races in the school system under conditions most likely to gain cooperation from students and parents and least likely to prevent racial clashes, violence and destruction of public policy."

The editorial found in favor of the "consent plan," the fact that the local federal judge "knows the facts of life in Dallas" and "believes in law and order under the constitution of the United States," that Negroes have practiced "prudence and patience," and will come up with leaders favoring "gradual" plans rather than "agitation," and a growing public sentiment for a compromise which will authorize a beginning of integration on a limited geographical basis.

Fw. 11-8-57

Somethings's Got To Give

Another editorial in the paper said: "With a court at Washington saying one thing and a legislature at Austin saying another, something has to give." It ended with the observation that "something has got to give."

On President Eisenhower's use of federal trops to enforce compliance with the law, one editorial said that "faced by that commitment (of the President to use troops in certain circumstances), it is the duty of the legislature to authorize the governor to close a school . . . occupied by U. S. troops."

However, it added: "A school board whch is faced by court order to integrate should not be compelled to face state criminal penalties for having done so."

D.C. prof testifies in Tex. school case

Afro-American Sat. 6-1-57

Baltimore Md.

HOUSTON, Tex.—In an effort to discredit the school board's argument that integration of colored students in the public schools would lower academic standards, Attorney Doyle called to the stand Dr. Harry J. Walker, sociology professor at Howard University.

Professor Walker said that after studying the effects of desegregation in Washington schools, he found no lowering of standards. "On the contrary there has been great improvement in the performance of colored students," he said.

Dr. Walker intimated that tests such as those administered by Houston were useful tools in diagnosis and therapy but "they had to be used very carefully." He said that they cannot be used to show one group superior to another.

UNDER CROSS examination, Professor Walker said the Stanford Achievement Tests used in Houston were unfair since they were standardized for a northern area and not a dual system of schools. Persons who devised these tests "warned against this."

School Board Attorney Bert Tunks undertook to prevent Walker from coming to the stand. Having failed in this, he tried to get Dr. Walker's testimony stricken from the records.

Judge Connally ruled that Dr. Walker's testimony was relevant. However, Tunks said that the school board did not want to get involved in a discussion of the sociological problem.

* *

TUNKS TRIED to make a point that Dr. Walker was not familiar with local geography and problems. He even suggested that the Ford Foundation sent him down to Houston.

Dr. Walker replied, "Why that's ridiculous, since my motives are entirely altruistic."

But Judge Connally contented that Walker's testimony was relevant.

He said, "He is not qualified solely as a sociologist, but he has made a study of desegregation in Washington and I believe, Baltimore, and he is qualified to tell us what the experience was in those cities. That's about all he has testified to."

* * *

THE DAY'S hearing next concerned itself with the testimony of Glenn Fletcher, administrative assistant to Superintendent Moreland, who presented details about the school building program designed to keep pace with growth in the city's population.

He said he was hopeful that the current building program would be completed by the end of 1959.

With his presentation, the school board rested its case.

School Integration Briefs To Be Filed Here Thursday

Informer Sat. 6-8-57

Houston, Texas

HOUSTON — Counsel for plaintiffs in the integration suit are slated to file briefs Thursday showing United States Judge Ben C Connally why Houston Public Schools should be desegregated now.

The briefs are based solely on evidence contained in school board minutes sworn in as evidence during the hearing two weeks ago in the federal court, by counsel for the plaintiffs, Delores Ross, Beneva Williams, et al. The girls are seeking entrance to schools near their homes, where they have been denied admission because of their color.

Defense attorneys for the Houston School Board are taking the same sets of board minutes to prepare briefs showing the court that school board members have acted in good aith and are showing reasonable speed in complying with the Supreme Court's ruling on desegregation of public schools.. The number one defense stipulation is that the board has acted in good faith and should be allowed time to complete its current building program.

Final briefs will be filed Thursday June 20 in order to give either side a chance for rebuttals. The law suit was filed Dec 26, 1956 by parents of the girls and the preliminary hearing was conducted last January in the United States District Court. It was during this hearing, Judge Connally ordered the Houston School Board to return to court May 20 with some definite desegregation plan or else have the court give instructions on how and when to integrate Houston schools. The board did however, return to court without a definite plan.

The hearing which began Monday May 20 continued to Thursday morning May 24. When Attorneys Henry Doyle, Francis Williams and H Lott, introduced 24 sets of school board minutes as evidence Thursday morning, Judge Connally recessed court and ordered both sides to hold an elimination conference to weed out everything that they could agree upon, and then prepare their briefs.

There are to be no more oral arguments and Judge Connally will hand his decision down sometime after the final briefs are filed Thursday June 20.

Mr Connally is the federal judge who handed down the order that Negroes could not be barred from eating in the Harris county court house cafeteria.

TEXAS NEGROES WIN APPEAL

Court Orders Dallas To Integrate Schools

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 7-24-57

NEW ORLEANS, July 23 (AP)—

Houston school board rapped as 2 try to end racial bars

Afro-American Sat. 7-13-57 p. 8

Baltimore Md.

HOUSTON, Texas — Attorneys representing the two girls in their lawsuit to gain admission to a segregated school here last week took the school board to task for its attitude.

The brief filed by Geneva Williams and Delores Ross' lawyers said one school board member's manner, who stated she would go to jail rather than "have" school integration is the attitude of the school board majority.

In his brief the school board attorney requested that desegregation be started in Houston "from and after" such time as arrangements for it are made.

* * *

"THE BOARD has refused to present a plan for desegregation . . . or show that it will do anything but bicker and delay the granting of the plaintiffs' civil rights," the girls' attorneys said in their brief.

Previously the board's attorney cited the inability of the present board to make decisions binding on future boards as a reason for not setting a date to end compulsory segregation.

In answer to this argument, the plaintiffs attorneys' brief stated, " . . . corporate bodies have the right to make binding agreements even though the constituents of the body may change from time to time."

The girls' attorneys asked that a definite date be set to end racial segregation in the Houston public schools because "the board will not make a plan unless ordered to do so by the court."

Briefs were filed in the federal district court presided over by Judge Ben C. Connally.

The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, reversing a decision by an 87-year-old U. S. District Judge today ordered Dallas, Tex., desegregate its schools.

But the court did not set a time limit. Attorneys representing 28 Negro children had asked that the schools be integrated "with all deliberate speed," and the court so ordered.

In a decision written by Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., the circuit court said that "at least 16 that much they are certainly entitled."

U. S. Dist. Judge William H. Atwell of Dallas, had dismissed the Negroes' suit "in order that the school board may have ample time, as it appears to be doing, to work out this problem."

But Judge Rives, noting the good faith of the board, said: "Faiths by itself, however, without works, is not enough."

The Dallas School Board, while admitting integration must come to Dallas, said it needed more time to work out its plan. The Negroes, however, said the plea for time was a delay rather than a start.

In arguing the case before the court of appeals, an attorney for the board said ". . . it is to be hoped that the aftermath which occurred in Mansfield will not be similar in Dallas." Judge Rives said his court noted that statement "with appreciation."

Mobs of white persons surrounded the school in Mansfield, Tex., last fall and prevented Negroes from attending.

Dallas Is Ordered To Integrate Its Public Schools

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 7-25-57

The "slow but sure" crumbling of the South's "separate but equal" school systems was indicated recently when Dallas, Tex., and Miami, Fla., were ordered to integrate their schools.

The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, La., ordered Dallas to integrate its schools Tuesday, but failed to set a deadline for the move. The decision was delivered by Judge Richard T. Rives who said that faith without deeds was not enough on the part of the Dallas School Board.

U. S. District Judge William H. Atwell had previously dismissed a suit filed by Negroes on the grounds that "the school board may have ample time, as it appears to be doing, to work out this problem."

Other school districts in Dallas County are expected to delay integration as long as possible, according to school superintendent L. A. Roberts. He said they would not integrate "without a court order."

Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Rives also said that a federal district judge would have to hear a suit filed by Negroes to enter all-white schools in Miami.

The federal district judge, upholding a contention by the Miami school board that a complaint filed by Negroes was not justifiable because the Negroes did not seek to enter any specific school, was in error when he dismissed the case filed by the Miami Negroes Rives said.

Negroes are not required to make application for admission to a specific school, according to Judge Rives.

The school boards of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem, all in North Carolina, voted separately to assign a total of 12 Negro students to all-white schools. Integration is expected to take place in September.

cause it did not set a definite time to begin integration.

Dr. Edwin L. Rippy, president of the school board, told newsmen before the board integrates its schools "we must find out our relations with the state law. We can not afford to lose funds."

He referred to a new Texas law that denies certain state funds to districts that integrate without holding a local option election. School officials estimate they would lose slightly more than a million dollars this year if they integrated without first holding an election.

Rippy also said that the state law provides fines for officials and loss of accreditation for schools.

Dallas Schools Defy U. S. Court On Integration

DALLAS, Tex., Aug. 15 (AP).—The Dallas School Board, ordered by a New Orleans Federal Court to integrate its schools with all due haste, voted unanimously last night to continue segregation for the coming year.

School Board President Edwin Rippy said the decision was a result of the board's failure to see how the Supreme Court ruling against segregation and a recently passed state law could Both rulings were reversed by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

The case stems from an attempt by 21 Negro children to enroll in white schools exactly two years ago today.

Last July the Circuit Court of Appeals, for a second time, ordered Dallas schools integrated "with all deliberate speed." However, no definite time limit was set.

One new issue is a newly enacted Texas law which prohibits further integration without a favorable local option election.

The law prompted the Dallas School Board to appeal for a rehearing of the July decision. The Circuit Court of Appeals, however, turned down the request last week.

Texas Passes Troop School Closure Bill

AUSTIN, Texas -- A bill whereby the governor will be permitted to close any school whenever it appears that troops will be ordered to enforce racial integration, was passed last Tuesday by the Texas Legislature.

The bill was passed overwhelmingly by the House that also passed a measure assuring an offer of legal aid to any school district that becomes involved in a suit on integration.

Earlier, both the bills had been approved by the Senate

The Legislature that passed the measures in special sessions, was called specifically to approve segregation laws.

However, in efforts to pass a law whereby members of the NAACP would be required to register members, a snag was encountered, and the session was unable to adjourn.

Governor Daniels, in a statement, expressed the hope that Texas would never have to experience the closing of any school, but added: "I believe that temporary closure is preferable to attempting to educate our children....in the atmosphere of rifles and bayonets."

The Governor has said repeatedly that he would call upon State Police and Rangers in any integration order that local law officers couldn't handle.

The school closing bill was passed 115 to 26. Attempt at amending it were beaten down by large majorities.

HOUSTON SCHOOLS TOLD TO INTEGRATE

HOUSTON, Tex., Oct. 15 (AP) — Federal Judge Ben C. Connally today ordered Houston public schools to integrate "with all deliberate speed" but did not set a deadline.

Connally's order called for integration "after such time as arrangements can be made with all deliberate speed." The order warned that the court will watch the school board's efforts.

Parents of two young Negroes had asked the court to order an immediate end of segregation in the 142,000-student system.

"The ruling shows an understanding of our problems," said Mrs. Frank Dyer, school board president.

School board attorneys had asked the court for time for further studies and for completion of a 30-million-dollar school construction program now under way.

Mid-Term Integration Ordered For Public Schools in Dallas

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 9 (AP) — Federal Judge William H. Atwell today approved a plan drawn by Negro attorneys which would admit Negro students to Dallas public schools on the same terms and conditions as whites.

The order is effective with the beginning of the midwinter school term, Feb. 3, 1958.

Andrew J. Thuss, attorney for the Dallas School Board, said he had a "strong conviction the order was not consistent with the mandate of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals" and announced he would appeal the order to the Circuit Court.

Judge Atwell, who twice before had granted the Dallas School Board delays in carrying out integration only to be overruled by the Circuit Court, rejected an integration plan submitted by Thuss bebe reconciled.

The Texas Legislature last session passed a law providing no public school could integrate unless such a move first was approved in a local election. Failure to comply would mean loss of state funds and accreditation.

Court to Hear Case in Dallas

DALLAS, Sept. 5 (AP).—Federal Judge William H. Atwell ordered the long-smoldering Dallas segregation case brought before him a third time today.

The 87-year-old jurist twice has ruled the Dallas independent school district should be allowed more time to study the problems of desegregation.

ries of such attempts in order to test legislation designed to continue segregation in the city's schools.

Sutton Elementary School Principal Geneva Carl said the Negro girl arrived accompanied by a Negro man. Neither the girl nor the man was identified.

"I talked to them," Miss Carl said. "She was not registered."

Miss Carl refused to say how the incident was handled.

Appeals Jurist Is Critical Of His Colleagues

Sun. 1-27-57

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 26. — (UP)—A United States Appeal Court judge Friday criticized two fellow judges for overruling a Federal District Court in a Wichita Falls, Texas, school segregation suit.

Memphis, Tenn.

Judge Ben F. Cameron said when the court majority ordered that the Texas suit must go to trial they charted a course which "in my opinion (was) a strategic mistake of real magnitude."

The suit involves a demand by Wichita Falls Negroes upon the Wichita Falls Independent School District for rapid desegregation.

When the Negroes asked for an injunction, the Federal District Court of Texas (Northern District) turned them down saying integration was being achieved.

On appeal the New Orleans court ruled the district court was in error and ordered the lower court to reconsider the Negro demand.

Judges Richard T. Rives and Elbert P. Tuttle wrote the majority opinion with Judge Cameron dissenting.

Judge Cameron said the United States Supreme Court favored letting Federal District Courts handle segregation suits because they have the "feel" of local tensions or attitudes.

He said the appeal court heretofore had been willing to permit school boards to act on their problems until all administrative remedies had been exhausted.

"There can be no doubt that the Supreme Court intended that the responsibility for legal action in these cases should be vested with the judges of the district courts who had intimate knowledge of local conditions," Judge Cameron said.

"I think it is a mistake for us to attempt to sit in too close chaperonage upon what the district judges do," Judge Cameron said. "Unless we are to be given some peculiar powers of divination, we cannot possibly approach the insight which is theirs by reason of their intimate contact with the conditions confronting them."

The majority opinion was delivered about two weeks ago.

Negroes File Integration Suits in Texas

Eagle P. 1-a Thurs. 1-3-57

Tulsa, Okla.

HOUSTON, (Tex.-(ANP)--An integration suit, seeking a federal court here to issue a temporary injunction restraining the Houston School Board from refusing admission of any child to this city's schools because of race, was filed here last week in behalf of two Negro girls.

Attorney Henry E. Doyle filed the long anticipated petition seeking to bring about integration in Houston's schools in favor of Delores Ross and Beneva D. Williams.

Miss Williams earlier had attempted to enroll at an all-white school, but was refused admission after being intimidated by white students, who upon one instance wielded knives.

Named as defendants in the suit were School Supt. W. E. Moreland, the Houston School District and seven members of the school board.

San Antonio Catholics KO Bias In '54; Others Follow

SAN ANTONIO— proclaimed the "national cleanest city" in its population category for 1952, 1953, and 1955 and awarded the National Grand Award for 1954—cleaned up for itself and erased ugly color lines by desegregating its schools, parks and playgrounds in 1955.

School desegregation was done, however, on a "gradual" plan. One third of its elementary, junior and high school levels were integrated. That is, the first and second grades, the seventh grade, and the 10th grade were the ones affected, Miss Inez Foster, assistant superintendent of San Antonio schools explained.

Presently there are 147 Negroes in 17 former all-white elementary schools; 19 Negroes in seven formmer "white' junior high schools and 31 Negroes in four former all-white senior high schools.
